A horizon of thought poured into the matrix of a new horizon of thought, the easy certainty of a reprehensible victory, a short-term and unexciting success, which sooner or later reaches a dead end. Like a roll of the dice. A fatalistic resignation of wisdom. This is the result of your intervention in the reality of a world that believes in nothing. Do not try to give birth to a theory, an idea, an intrigue, a credible story, if you are not prepared to bear an antipathy, an image of the type: "An empty perspective".

To create the condition of an existence to transform into destiny means to use your spirit of observation, everything that makes available to you the nature, the circumstances, the situations you are facing, everything that by virtue of chance you had to learn, to create the premises of a "Go Forward" type event that marks the beginning of a new stage of evolution in other people's consciousness.

And by raising the hazard to the rank of creation is understood that proximity to the "mysteries of the future world", having as substrate a transformation of the concept of "the surprise of tomorrow", by which you use the inspiration, the vision, the broadening of the perspective of handling life as on a testimony of the revelation subject to the objectivity that people expect.

Such a revelation on feelings and reason, even being able to extend the concept of the world to the level of "a priori knowledge", aims at generating a new philosophy of existence, such as: "Everything you invent can become reality, provided you are not hit by reality at a given moment".

The Emphasis Given In Leadership are seen in the formulation of the purpose born of a vision, by the power to encapsulate the story of an existence that reaches a single justification: it is not the events that matter, but only what triggers them.

So, two highlights attract our attention: the way you relate to the situations you go through and the perception you have of them.

Empire Of The Magician

On November 24, 2010

Create a powerful effect of resonance, by a closer approximation of those reference elements, which give essence and influence to your leadership.

At a magic show. I was imbued with the idea that would be exciting - and even was - I enjoyed a glowing ambiance, full of emotions, where the exuberant fantasy combines with exciting interpretation.

The magician looked like a being detached from the novels of Raymond E. Feist. He intrigued me more than anything because he radiated a strong stance like "I'm exactly what you see." He was tall, stately, with burning eyes. He did not wear masks as other magicians. However, I think no one could penetrate his true nature, was not the kind of guy who reveal easily his secret thoughts and feelings.

I do not want to tell about his moment of appearance on stage - quite unusual bearing the rod of "justice" in his right hand and in the other a golden ancient amulet, very special, in the form of the Eye of Horus. But at a time, towards the end of the show, the magician's powerful voice disturbed the silence, yet full of refinement, inspiring a good feeling, a positive energy, but also a sense of power combined with enormous confidence in his own person.

The magician looked for a moment at those from the first line, then climbing down on a metal box, fixed his eyes to the ceiling as if he wanted to say a prayer - a prayer that is said only standing, standing firm. He raised his hands, as if he would exalt his pray to God, and then said: "Ego sum qui sum", meaning "I am who I am".

Then, like magic, the magician disappeared, vanished like a shadow in the darkness that suddenly enveloped the scene.

Leadership: Do you constantly extend your experience to confront with the significance of the role that you interpret around a character?

The systematic integration of personal experience, with all its updates, in the reality that only you alone are actively building, accepting both the positive and negative part, is in harmony with the devotement you show to the culture of permanent self-appreciation – that powerfully contributes to achieving a superior authority in name of the role's authenticity.

Is a some kind of stimulation of one's own thought and own creation, transposed in a physical plan through a superior and surrealist impulse that's coming from the inside and needs to prove itself pleasant to the crowd. This impulse is characterized by the following parameters: high value, the supreme criteria of value, ascension time and downfall time.

We can say that a leader reaches the peak value of performance (usually negatively perceived) when he is engaged in the bet of excess subjectivity and productive insufficiency of "something else", overcoming that critical phase when he put himself in the content of an advanced science, inaccessible to usual knowledge.

The supreme value criteria, given by the quality-reliability ratio, leads to the creative activity of the leader, showing him how constructive a perfect and absolute relation can be. A leader that is fully adapted to the unmovable requirements of the hidden, impenetrable self can't dodge the obligation to be aware of the limits of his competency.

A leader has to offer only those originality bonuses for which he is "qualified" through the experience of handling things on his own and through the experience of confronting with the significance of the part that he interprets around a character.

As for the ascension and downfall time, these are the two phase constancies that we have to always keep in mind when trying to support the necessity of change, by repositioning ourselves on our evolution courses. The ascension time refers to that moment in the beginning that triggers the meeting of the conscious state with that dimension of your personality that you are willing to show to the world.

The downfall time is the final moment of the challenge to innovate and make your personal creation a masterpiece of leadership that is when you realize you have to stop in order for a real change to take place and the guaranteed maximum impact to be produced.

Your leadership is part of a meticulously planned game, by turning the probable into the determined?

Are you enjoying the highest honor? Are you able to interpret a big role?

It is a great honor, someone once observed, to be told: "He is a man". But it is even a greater honor to inspire people a renewed confidence through your grace, through the miraculous power and full of inspiration that radiates from your whole being, from your entire soul. People to jump at your every gesture with a vague emotion, but pleasant, a thrill of that makes you high and makes you live more intensely, a thrill that once embraces you never leave you, traverses your entire body and gives you a significant dose of good humor and energy needed for the whole day.

All were a part of well-planned game of the magician. At his sign, all presents in the room were like hypnotized - it was odd, they were all filled with an unusual feeling, restless, yet charming because everyone liked challenges.

The magician exuded a purely professionalism that deserved all the respect, touched all expectations. He was not a man of stone marching and frighting, but rather a man without a name, which surpasses his limits when it comes improving his service. After each number of magic that he performed, giving an overall impression of power and force, the audience looked at each other, as they would have said: "He is special ! "

Who is the man with full powers who, like a magician, can influence people more and more, interpreting the role of the Almighty with total dedication, with an indescribable mastership? Nobody knows his secrets and the perfect means by which he manages to enhance the charm and personal magnetism. The fact is that everyone passes, miraculously, in his possession.

The role you play in a show starts from the idea that you do not always have objective criteria at your disposal to check, at least immediately, the degree of adequacy of the resulting characteristics, including the dynamics, related to the ratings and estimates of delivering a more realistic image that accelerates magic.

Empire of the magician includes all the necessary elements, both professionally and personally, by which an individual can exercise and maintain their influence over other people. To dominate those around you need to manipulate things, to surround yourself by an ambiance full of meaning, to create and maintain a certain state of mind, creating yourself an image of power and control. You must conclude a tacit agreement with people by which your position of leadership will be recognized and you should prove much skill during the "show" in your mastery of disguising sometimes your true feelings and mood.

Just as a magician, to be revealed as a master of the show, people should resonate with all his loads of magic - and so, if you want to be revealed as a leader, if you want for people to resonate with your own "representations" and to accept the effects that are produced by your leadership – you must inspire a sensation of force combined with an enormous confidence in your own person.

With your skills, the power that you've been invested and the quality of interpersonal relationships that you promote you could, like a magician who has control in the empire of magic to create your own "empire" in which you have total control. This is possible by manipulating things in your favor, increasing your power and control over others, but without becoming a dictator.

Create a powerful effect of resonance, by a closer approximation of those reference elements, which give essence and influence to your leadership.

Empire Of The Soul

On November 26, 2010

Reach inside your own being and listen to your conscience in order to stimulate the capacity to fit in the context of your superiority effects.

Before going away from the city where he was born, the city on which he had returned with one goal: to get revenge on those who sent him to prison, where he had been stayed for 14 years, the Count of Monte Cristo set out for alleys Meilhan, with the thought to review for the last time the little house in which he often, in his youth, was dating his girlfriend, Mercedes. Reached on the threshold, he heard a sigh which resembled to a groan. He looked toward the place where the groan was heard and under a canopy of jasmine with dense leaves and purple flowers he saw her, Mercedes, sitting bowed and weeping.

Mercedes raised her veil and lifted her eyes at the Count's sight which submitted to her.

- Mercedes – said the Count - I do not have the power to bring you happiness, but I can give you comfort: do you want to get it as coming from a friend?

- I am really very unfortunate, replied Mercedes, ranging from a deep sadness. Look at me, Edmond. There are not the times when I smiled at you while you waited for me up, at the window of this attic, at which your old father lived. I do not blame you, Edmond, no; I do not hate you, my friend. I blame and I hate myself ! I had been punished ! I had faith, innocence, love, these three gifts of angels, and I've doubted God...Everyone else that harmed you was prompted by hate, greed, selfishness, only I behaved so out of cowardice. They wished, I was afraid...Here, the suffering bleached of my hair. You, on the contrary, Edmond, you left still young, still handsome, so handsome and still proud. That's because you've kept your faith that you had power because you trusted in God and God has helped you. I was a coward, disowned my love, and God left me, and here I am !

Leadership: Does the strength of character consist of the power of the will to represent yourself as an enclosed micro-universe in continuous pulsing or as a painting you want to give life to?

The heart ascends you, the heart descends you. Mercedes burst into tears. Her woman's heart was broken in front of memories.

Monte Cristo took her hand and kissed it with respect. But she felt that his kiss is cold, like achieving a marble statue. She knew, felt in her heart that the one Edmond Dantes that she once loved will no longer be able to love her just because instead of waiting for him, instead of always remaining faithful to him she reached her hand to his rival while he was moaning at the bottom of a cliff.

- I believed you are dead and I had to die too because of what I had to wear forever mourning in my heart, said Mercedes with deep sadness. I really ought to save you, no matter how guilty you were? But I let you die. I helped at your death through my lack of feeling, by my contempt, by my ignorance, not wanting to remember that for me you had this perjury and traitor ! Now, tell me goodbye, Edmond, and we split up !

After the Count left, her voice, though unwillingly, at all slowly whispering: Edmond, Edmond, Edmond !

Leadership: Do you have the power to protect your full freedom against the beliefs of others?

In order to understand leadership we must direct our attention towards the evaluation criteria for men, analyzing the beginnings and causes of his ascension, thus the rhythm and symmetry of his evolutionary way in a space isolated from normal life in a framework isolated from the rest of the world.

In order for us to understand a person led by their superiority spirit, we have to understand first his repeated and impetuous outbursts that indicate a gathering of the fires of hate and lack of consideration towards other people, which after they have gotten out of control enforce fear, fascination or regret. We have to take into account the internal fail and the external betrayal, as fundamental resorts of exclusion from the parameters of social life and compromising internal cohesion against extending our own potential and our necessities to assert ourselves.

Friedrich Wilhelm Nietzsche, the most important philosopher of the 19th century attributed to the "Übermensch" the mental attitude expressed as follows: to defend your full freedom against the beliefs of others.

Thoroughly analyzed, the inner world of man is better discovered in its true depths and beauties, but most of all through a perfect agreement between the thoughts and emotions experienced in relation to others. A kind of mathematical ratio of some predominantly small formations that later on take the shape of an equation with conditional variables: "the parts must execute their assigned obligations ! "

Leadership has the origin of claiming to know you from the point of view of the assumed obligations at that time of life that contains a painful lesson that is hard to forget.

The equality of acceptability chances regarding some elections that could decisively influence the long term orientation by invoking friendship and moving others, means, first of all, equal access to the resources of reason, conscience and real authority that manage the evolution of these traits built as predictors of an efficient behavior – they shape the profile of an efficient leader. This equality is characteristic that directly affects the results that interest you, revealing which people are truly important for you and which not, giving you an advantage in the sense that you don't have to be stuck in the position of a man deceived by appearances, consumed by a reality that can't be controlled.

Do you believe in the coercion "freedom" of leveling individuals in the name of your ideal, living with the moral imperfection acquired in solitude? Or do you believe in full "freedom" against the beliefs of others?

In order to stimulate your capacity to fit in the context of superiority effects, first of all you have to win the people through a new and full understanding of you essence, inoculating in their minds the image of a life you've been dreaming to have and the way in which you want to live it, seeing yourself as a conscious thought of their wishes, an instrument of their aspirations.

Leadership: Can you die on the inside while you are alive?

Who was the only person from the world who knew to recognize Edmond Dantes, who could really understand and who admired him until the last minute? Who was the person who had the power to touch his feelings, to urge him to act so hard, to take action when his whole world was gray? Who was this person because of whom he could not ever have peace, and who had a decisive influence in his life?

None other than Mercedes, his youth lover whose heart was broken in front of the memories, in front of her own mistakes. How much influence could have this woman on him, however, her own heart, imbued with a sense of shame, crossed by a humiliating emotion due to her own fault that smashed all her future, exhausted all her energy and all the enthusiasm to her dreams.

The Count forgave Mercedes and even tried to help her and her son - as a friend, but her own conscience would not let her accept his help. The only solace of her soul was finally to be as far away from him, to whom she has been unfaithful. Her soul was too saddened by what happened, too full of sorrow and suffering. Her decision to break up with the Count was the result of her own direct or indirect actions and which have damaged her own image.

As the wind rises the bird above the desert, so the conscience filled with remorse pushes the human to the brink of negative emotions as the feeling that there is nothing to do. Yes, you can die on the inside while you are alive.

To die on the inside while you are alive means to get attached to the forgiveness you give to man, without allowing him the luxury of getting close to what fulfills you.

Empire of the soul is an emanation of your own personality - a personality that supports both the ups and downs of life and has every chance to live the joy of fulfillment, satisfaction, success; or a person who forgets their roots and who destroys their credibility and ability to generate hope to others.

The empire of soul tends to crumble in many harmful "pieces" if you are not at peace with yourself, with your own consciousness with your past, your accomplishments, and especially with those near you. Enter within your own being within, look at you face to face and see if you can find a friend to whom you can shake hands with joy.

Conclusion: We are what we are and what we have created over time connected with us-concerning our conceptions in thinking and action, our feelings and our education.

We have created an "empire of the soul" that is unique in its own way, but may be permanently reshuffled in a more or less proportion, this depending strictly on ourselves. To make the best decisions we have to dive into this empire of our own being that is within ourselves, and after a proper analysis to take action.

Endless Clouds Of Imaginary Possibilities

Identify the primordial element, where the thirst for understanding what you are, is perfectly combined with a dimension of superior knowledge, so that trust in your evolution will be complete.

I was trying to enter a space where time didn't exist, like a traveler that never stopped searching for a place of his own. And I wasn't content with that. Because man dominated by imaginary, someone who persists in considering all the unknowns, wanting to understand the quintessence of a superior thinking, ventures deeper and deeper in his fixed vision, looking, no matter the cost, at the ray of light that works its way through the thick smog of the inexplicable.

Stars appeared one by one, from another time, like gold in an unexplored deposit. Their number counted too less. Because only a few grams of that precious glittering body was enough to extract the quintessence of a life matter or substance, that could have filled the temporal space of my reflection, the only goal of searching.

But the combination of vital elements that ensured the cohesion of matter was difficult. Often, they were catalyzed by some as an unstable and very reactive intermediaries. Meaningfulness and meaninglessness. I had to give direction to this journey to a different time before the meaninglessness and the absurd would fixate their contorted roots in my mind. Precisely in this lies my greatness !

Leadership: Can you put yourself in the position of becoming a "hostage" of the need to return to things outside your own reality, without becoming servable in the face of matter that captivates you through its ability to self-organize in more and more complex structures?

Mainly I was trying to exalt the necessary vital force to overcome the intellectually admitted understanding, rarely used only by highly spiritual people with a superior way of thinking. Stimulating the energy that fundamentally transformed space and the people I had contact with, to save and secure it in the future update of my own existence. It had to take effect on the long term, if I wanted to reach a superior level of knowledge.

I needed a more accurate instrument, a structure of forces that would reduce any suspicion related to me. And identifying the primary, philosophical element when the thirst for life combines perfectly with the dimension of superior knowledge, finding that attraction force that could move Universe and time became all the more difficult. A new conscience had to be discovered. Another dimension of life and time, where I would have finally had the power to do the things I was created for: to be a creator, the demiurge of my own figments.

A reflex of the pleasure to imagine all sorts of fantastic things, mentally creating all sorts of abstract connections between the visible and the invisible, between the divisible and indivisible, had completely contaminated me. It was obvious that the most complicated thoughts had taken a hold of me. But my greatness lies precisely in there, in the fact that I had allowed my thoughts to chain me to the beautiful and endless clouds of imaginary possibilities.

Since then, I have learned to believe in my evolution and in the future.

Leadership: Can you turn a life condition into a navigational experience in an abstract imaginary without expanding and deepening your knowledge between two distinct instances: "master" and "prisoner"?

Do the most complicated thoughts take a hold of you? What is your greatness? Does a new conscience need discovering? Do you have the strength to do the thing you were created for?

Leadership doesn't mean only the specific dimension of developing perfection in order to reach a leading position, but also the personal study of the interpretation you give to any experience you live when you proudly climb the very long stairs to excellence. Because inevitably, right now, you start feeling the pressure of your framework, respectively, of the unity of your own being comprised of two different instances.

The first, that of the scientist that needs to grip, by favorable simplifications, a strict logic from certain points of view or from a sophisticated thinking template, or from a much ampler and complex cycle of insufficiently grounded ideas. The second, that of the creator, a man dominated by the imaginary, who, in the attempt to perceive hidden things, wanting to perceive the quintessence of a superior thinking, is caught deeper and deeper in his fixed vision until he drifts away from his reference point.

Hence, we can say that in a way, leadership resides in an experiment that reunites, in carefully constructed combinations, the two instances that don't have to repel each other. Usually, the two aspects fight each other, shaping two distinct dimensions: "master" and "prisoner". It would be indicated if this was included in a sole clear vision, giving a certain authenticity to the basic characteristics of the individual.

It's clear that by suppressing the connection between the two dimensions, especially losing control over them, in lack of a better coordination of the building and finishing process of "creation", it will gradually accelerate regression in discovering new resources that ease access to superior knowledge.

And simplifying and harmonizing the attempts to reach superiority in leadership are the healthiest preparations in view of limiting the negative effects of the tight connection between the two instances.

Leadership: Could you develop your force structure to reduce any suspicion hanging over your science, even if the way you relate to the mental image of itself is anchored to the demands of reality?

Reaching scientific superiority is a rather complex process, in which the extraordinary combines with the insignificant, thus callously unmasking and denouncing the vices of leadership, overvaluation or undervaluation. And the changes that happen when it comes to ability, when the value of the creation and creator is tested, seem easy to accept if you feel useful to your own individuality.

An American author and speaker once said: "Listening creates trust, the foundation of all lasting relations." If we could do a correlation, then it's also about the way in which you, the leader, serve science, without falsifying the relations between the two above-mentioned instances.

In order to obtain superiority in leadership, you need a structure of forces that would reduce every suspicion about your science, such as: the ability to present new constructions of reality, the ability to believe in the fiction you assume, the ability to create a connection between what happens outwardly and what is happening inside, the ability to change the public perception, the ability to think on your own to discover the world around.

Trust in your evolution would be complete only if you manage to identify the primordial element, where the thirst for understanding what you are is perfectly combined with a dimension of superior knowledge. What are you? A master of science? Or its prisoner?

It depends on your greatness; it depends on how much you allow your thoughts to lift you to the beautiful and endless clouds of imaginary possibilities. And foremost, it depends on your ability to avoid being controlled by it.

Leadership is what you add to your exploration experience of spaces with multiple possibilities for broadening horizons, so that you can perfectly reproduce the beginning of a new world from the point of view of causality and the truth that must be taken on its word.

The Endless Clouds Of Imaginary Possibilities are about the possibility to put into practice, with beneficial results, every creation of the imagination spurred by your science and knowledge. And this imaginary game based on strict rules can bring you the crown of victory or painful penalties.

Enigma

How you observe yourself in a temporary setting determines how you perceive reality in a context of absolute certainty.

In a cloudy night, full of reddish moon, I fell asleep with difficulty. The thoughts, stirred by the lyrics of the song "TNT For The Brain", searched for hidden meanings in the images that followed each other like pearls in a string, to make up memories. Once I entered the world of dreams, from a point far removed from reality, I found myself in a half-dark room, alone, desolate, surrounded by an atmosphere of mystery. Crossed by deep and restrained feelings, I was trying to figure out where I was, why I was here, when suddenly my gaze fell on the five doors in front of me.

The doors, latched only by a vain imagination, seemed to hide deep secrets, a situation where I didn't know which to choose, each with a distinct design, but I felt an unearthly connection, an irresistible attraction to the middle door. Superstitious, oscillating between fascination and rejection, looking through its visor, I witnessed a bizarre scene: a theater and magic show in which all the actors wore masks. They all seemed to sense my presence, staring intently at me with pleading eyes, as if waiting for me to join their strange, bloody living game. The strange smell of the room and the piercing eyes of those beyond the door aroused my curiosity and desire to explore this unknown world.

I had to go all the way ! Smell your skin, Feel your breath, You on my side, I couldn't resist...

Leadership: Are you able to capture and accentuate those unique aspects of your own individuality, revealing a new dimension of existence where dream and reality intertwine?

In that moment of illumination, time standing still, I felt that I was in the middle of a dangerous game, a mixture of film, paintings, images, music and, of course, history, in which the eyes, like windows wide open to other horizons, towards other worlds, were the central element of a secondary narrative thread. The eyes of the actors, the eyes of the masks, the eyes that gazed ardently at me through the peephole of the door - everything seemed to invite me to take part in the mystery that surrounded me.

I hope I'll understand some day, What's the meaning of this crazy game. It is real and pure, TNT for the brain...

When your eyes show you the path of the dream, the dream illuminating your confused and tormented mind, you enter an Urfedia Oidesopt Elixavia , a universe that pushes you to the limits and forces you to jump beyond imagination. Intrigues, hidden pleasures, forbidden loves, some masks and quickly changed roles in a variation of models and forms. Take courage and enter the hidden world of the unseen, and you will clearly see that there is no real contradiction between this abstract and this bewildering, crepuscular concrete.

Exactly like in the novel "The Dervish and Death", by Mesa Selimovic. Something in me was drawing my attention, intensely repeating the words of the main character:

"The trouble is that you do n't dare to think , you know . You are afraid , you don't know where the thought would take you . Everything is revealed in you , but you eyes still closed , you hold on to the unknown path . You were brought here for a specific reason , which you do not know , even if you look , because you Make peace with human guilt . You think it 's a joke . Maybe it is . If you could get a philosophical thought out of it , no less than others . , at least it would have a beautiful application , you would like everything that happens to you . On the contrary , yes they would let you go, you would die quickly , of grief , and everything would be fine . But what would happen if you stayed here ? The world above is yours, as well as theirs, and they still do n't want to get you out of it."

Leadership: How does the discovery that "What shapes you here, will reflect you there" resonate in your soul, in the context of a revelation that opens up new perspectives on your own existence?

A crystal globe with many angles of reflection was displayed in front of me, imposing, futuristic, undulating, like a kaleidoscope of time. Six feminine arms, on which dragons and snakes entwined, lifted him towards the moon, and the globe pierced the sky bringing him close. Nearby was a dervish lost in contemplation, isolated in the solitude of the moment. A joker was trying to juggle the playing cards, following their paths like a spider's web.

In this whole place, death was watching me from the corner of its eye, a tear dripping down the edge of the crystal, causing a number of magic to unfold that all the lights went out at once, for a few seconds. Jesus was completely missing from the middle of the game, here being accepted only the discrepant sin - the sin of being different, in a variation of unexpected, endless isolation.

I'm with you, just lead me. I'm ready to play !

Leadership: Does the revelation in the pronounced close-ups of the visual images that captivate you open the way to an understanding of your inner self, beyond what shocks you at the moment?

When I awoke from the dream, completely changed by the revelation I had, as if the spirit of Aurus had succeeded in igniting me, I realized that beside me, on the bedside table, were a key and a theater mask, tangible evidence of the dream unknown, ambiguous. These objects seemed to be brought from the dream world into reality, making me wonder about the connection between the two worlds. It was quite similar to Coleridge's fantasy: a man dreams that he crosses paradise and is given a flower as a reward. When he wakes up, the flower is next to him.

The key can be interpreted as symbolizing the possibility of opening the doors to the unknown, to the mysteries we encountered in the dream. I wonder why this dream, why all this happened exactly on the night of resurrection, the year 2024. Perhaps this key gives me a chance to further explore hidden aspects of my own mind, to discover unseen parts of my inner life.

Or, perhaps, it is a coded message about what the true resurrection of Jesus Christ is. I still don't know the answer, but surely something unseen, but powerful, led my hand to tell the dream. It's not a coincidence. No, not at all. It is only a charade, a wandering imagination, una sorta di gioco di illusioni . This inability of mine to see properly is perhaps the effect of the shadow that the great darkness casts over the world.

Jesus would approve of this: "I am the means by which life records its endless suite of variations." I think all that matters is the dream turned into reality. Or rather, the journey towards that self-transformation that defines your destiny in two worlds: in heaven and on earth. What shapes you here will reflect you there.

Leadership facilitates the revelation that will change your outlook on life. It amplifies the effect that the perception of reality has on the intensity of your experiences, revealing through a kind of "enlightenment" a deeper reception of the direct or indirect relationship with God.

The Enigma is the puzzle you have to decipher, like a dream's answer to reality, to reveal the hidden side of your being. In fact, exploring dreams as a means of accessing hidden truths can provide new insights into one's own life and beliefs. Moreover, the interaction between dream and reality can open new perspectives on the limitless possibilities of accessing universal consciousness.

Enjoy The Silence

On October 19, 2017

We are all equal to the virtue of bringing together the inner reality with the events of the world in a coherent whole called "reflection between content and form".

When the silence inspires you more than ever, you only have to tie yourself in its memories, with distorted images of the lost age, to feed your dreams washed by the expectations and strains of the creative will, just to bring them to life on the improvised stage of a phenomenon surprisingly subtle and deep: "Words are very unnecessary". Which lacks the chiaroscuro of all things.

Only then do you feel what it means to live in the consciousness of a destiny emanated from eternity, exalted with one step closer to God, this being the escape, a form of freedom of the spirit that, behold, it gives birth the desire to hide from a trivial life that has already passed through a lot. "Pleasures remain, So does the pain."

Once again it happens that I am building the tonal unity given to the visible fact, but ignored, as a variation of the hidden observer technique: to see only what I am prepared to see in a setting unrelated to the world. The intriguing present and the shadowy past intertwine in a psychological whole with a literary subject that governs the message "Internal Error".

The hidings of an unbeatable mystery, which covers God's crucible, catch me in a vulnerable, naive, sensible moment, holding me prisoner until the end of the ephemeral prayer. Slowly, they infiltrate the questioning of relational art with the theories of language and subjectivity that seem to confess an impossibility, painful to me, while re-reading in my mind the book of Mystery: a creative fantasy is always following me, the reaction being one of the leveling of an ineffable world.

Leadership: How much can the capturing of the experience lived in a different way than the original version of your form of manifestation mean to you?

There are so many interesting songs, so deep, full of something to help you feel cherished, with the possibility of recovering the eternal beyond matter, pieces that only consume the rhythm of the esoteric distinction, of secret access to a shore not found on any map.

Nor is this a coincidence, just as neither the eternity hidden in a moment is not a succession of endless transformations, rather a present filled with the unforeseen, in which "Words are meaningless and forgettable". Without deciphering the components of the overall picture, of the great scheme of things, it leads to the breaking of the tonal-emotional unity specific to a subtle organic plastic design enriched by a wide range of aesthetic effects.

Silence, the state of unity with the self, the initiation of an inner dialogue, the general who sends to the world the mystery of my being, is a reception of reality through the fantasy of the mind transformed by the regaining of tranquility through the geometry of the "second" space specific to the framing of thoughts and suppositions in upper area of the game called COMPOSITION, where the rules remain theoretically unchanged.

Retiring to your inner world is to give yourself the prerogative of creative thinking under the conditions established by the dialogue called "call to an unlimited power", highlighting the customized version of a new way of approaching reality and life.

Time stands still, measured in the tick-tock of expectation and unrelenting confidence, but in a strange way, as when the sand clogs in the hourglass, feelings are intense, identifying here two types of motivation: the adventure of searching for what is beyond the appearance of things and the scope of what is not seen with the naked eye, but only with the eye of the mind.

John Fowles' "Collector" at one point remembers a funny mouse trap he had once seen. As soon as the mouse stepped in, something was set in motion and things could no longer go back to the way they were, rather, they had to go forward, stepping into traps one more elaborate than the other, up to the end.

Life goes by so slow at times, at least for me, that the tranquility I feel in the story of a certain exile, so often pushed into a world different from that for which I had been destined, with the bitterness of the inability to overcome the blindness that makes me confuse good with evil, resembles a kind of trap used to catch small rodents. A labyrinth of impossible, arbitrary, endless constraints, from which I feel I cannot escape. "Break the silence. Come crashing in / Into my little world ! "

Nothing is repeated in the silence contained in oppressive isolation, where only God has the word, which becomes a vigil or a trap without exits, at one point considered forgotten and remembered by the fantasy of the mind, through a geometry of the space called finding yourself again, to be broken with the hands of interpretation of an experimental result.

The experiment called "life" is a dialogue with yourself, from which you first have to extract the essence: the respect of the idea of living through faith, not yielding to what is seen, but to what is felt.

Leadership can be translated as follows: we are all equal in the face of the virtue of bringing the inner reality of world events into a coherent whole called "reflection between content and form".

Enjoy The Silence has as a support the ability of the self to discern, listen and weigh everything that you experience in a present that is both a distant future and a distant past.

If you have the feeling that you're trapped in a trap of silence, unable to reach beyond what you see, what you know, any judgment or point of view, means that you are not yet ready to take on the commitment to break free from all the trials and experiences of life.

To feel means to discover the world beyond the tangible reality that connects all things.

Enough Room To Shelter Your Mind

On December 26, 2017

Find a place in the whole of reality same as the artist finds himself in the space of imagination.

The world was revealed to me as an absurdity, of which I was sure I would not be able to control, bearing it through the fact that it justified a hope for me that I had to preserve even when logic was questioned. The causal relationship between the antecedent and the consistent, remaining valid in the context of plurality of the possibilities of commitment to a cause that only exists somewhere in the future, focused on a reality that is hard to penetrate. Certainly, I was beginning to experience the feeling of a blockage, a captivity I could not get out of.

Except with the cost of an eventual gradual elimination from all spheres of content of the absurd, accessible to me by two losses: loss of confidence and loss of trust in others, it was better to live with a certainty in which I seemed completely engaged: that if you make a firm decision on the art of creating a world out of nothing, I will never succeed in serving an impossible mission, such as constantly seeking a personal relationship with God.

I had decided to discover that guidance that is even now taking me to those left behind, something that totally changed my vision, a lucid perception of totality and of the individual as an organic part of the ensemble. Perhaps and because, for the most part, it appeared as a black and white rehearsal of the same thematic obsessions that I had encountered only in the paintings of Salvador Dali. Thus, I had the privilege to see the depiction of an artist who deliberately builds a scenario suitable for an endless space, full of philosophical questions about deities, creators and gods.

Basically, I would abolish my abandonment of the possibility of expressing myself as an individual, one who tries to clarify in vain a matter of intelligence, especially within the limits of material purgation with which operates the drawing of a new world, the sincerity of a compromised art. Everything was owed to the struggle to attempt a jump over a construction of ice as is the reality of a world created against the laws of my mind, similar to the belief in a Creator distinct from its creation.

Leadership: Can you find your place in the world by exploring the acquisition of ideas of effect for the representation of reality by projecting yourself in the imagined creations?

In such cases, you begin to carefully investigate your attitudes and beliefs, in the light of a flame that extinguishes itself within you, but creates a certain availability, sensitizes you, invokes your feelings, opens your eyes, prepares you for a journey that leads towards an alternative slope: the beginning of a new life stage. Just follow your own way / Don't give up and use the chance.

When the individuality of man is crushed in contact with the power of fascination of the mystery of creation – the life and the torments of becoming, it is revealed to us the transcendent void of the mind in which the dreamer is isolated, as if you are face to face with a new beginning. My potential to capture another side of the world view, or to capture something I did not really expect, adding to this a strange clumsiness of the drawing called "the open end of the tunnel", supported the thematic obsession of all of my writings.

To be neglected by divine inspiration is a kind of faithful reproduction of the real world as seen by an artist who is inside his work, merges into it, and yet, personally, stays away from it under a concept appreciated as erroneous, regarding the existence caught in the gaps of passing obsessions. This is the illness of thinking to ask of yourself more than you can obtain.

An imagined creation indicates the symbolic presence of another reality in which only you and God are in a constant dialogue and in a work that few can manage to experience in everyday life.

In the relations between reality and the questioned world, which contradict common logic, are however, alive and with the same power of suggestion, all thoughts, revelations, and symbolic projections that my art still contains. They point to Salvador Dali's "The Path of Enigmas", which seems to express that part of experience extracted from things, meanings, and values, on which there is an advanced consensus, suggesting the possibility of connection at any distance with a borderless space.

All of which are attributable to the lessons of evaluation of uncertainty in which we were engaged, giving way to a world of questions and searches, challenges and anxieties, it highlighted a refusal to accept reality as it is.

My place in the world was the same as an artist in the space of imagination: I, at the same time, had to reveal the secret geometry of form and background, of shadow and light, but at the risk of losing myself in embracing an unbelievable life story.

Being original means to follow your way of experiencing life in art, without excluding the feeling of absurdity from the results of seeking a new vision of reality.

Enough room to shelter your mind exists where you try to logically explain things or to find all kinds of discrepancies between fiction and reality, between art and life, without giving up the pleasure of viewing an abstract painting.

Enthroned As Jesus On The Golgotha Of Cinema?

A true artist can maintain the intensity of the revolutionary breath, avoiding accommodation with mediocrity that weakens the creative spirit and innovative energy.

I'm afraid, very afraid. And yet the facts are on my side. It is about the fact that we stop being frondeurs . We become travelers. I have the impression that the great breath of 1917, which launched our cinema, is beginning to disperse... We are becoming classics. Bleeding wounds are healed – there is no more opportunity to utter the shrill cries that tear apart the traditions of the film! Whipped cream torches – symbols of sweet reconciliation – instead of dismantled hate! We lose our teeth. We stop being fighters. We become rentiers. Very cheap and very small! We lose our teeth because we no longer need them: you don't need to chew what comes out of your mouth! And it's very hard not to throw up when the current is taking you to the island of the "fair medium".

This fair average, these "almost" instead of YES and NO. I stir your blood. It turns your insides out... If you tell me that you are enthroned as Jesus on the Golgotha of cinema, I, for my part, feel no less hanged next to you. As a good or bad robber - that I cannot say. (It will be seen: if I succumb, it will mean that I was the bad one.) But, in any case, with a pierced chest!

Leadership: How can a creative body regain the energy of the original struggle, even as the artistic system becomes more tolerant and less combative?

The great revolutionary breath of cinema goes through phases of aggression and mitigation, like the immune system. In the active phases, the artistic reaction was violent, with shrill cries that tore apart traditions and bleeding wounds that mobilized creative energy. Over time, this reactivity dissipates, the artistic system becoming more tolerant, less combative - we lose the teeth of fighters. As I said earlier, this adaptation to fair media stirs the blood and overturns the creative bowels, indicating a weakening of the capacity for revolt against the agents of conformity.

In the same direction, the pierced chest of the artist becomes a symptom of this excessive tolerance, where succumbing to mediocrity represents the final diagnosis of a creative organism that has lost its ability to reject compromises.

Yes. There is a deep fear in any creative field of reaching a stagnation, where the facts confirm a loss of the original impulse, that breath that gives birth to warriors of the promulgating idea anew. Instead of innovators, we become travelers who indulge in safe habits, losing the intensity and lifeblood of the beginnings. More and more traditions emerge to replace the brave and bleeding roots of creation, and the cries that once tore the boundaries are replaced by conformity. Certainly, this transformation erodes us, leaving us classic, devoid of vigor, almost like rentiers, reconciled to silence and without open wounds.

As the industrial environment turns innovation into routine, the just average becomes a force that absorbs the extreme and loses its sharp edge. Creativity is affected, and although the body remains, the soul seems to be hanging, feeling pierced. Thus, there is a risk of succumbing to these pressures, becoming smaller and more docile, as if the ideals of the past are being swallowed up by a current of conformity. It is an inner struggle between accepting this state of dead equilibrium and remaining true to a living creation, even if the price is to succumb to the attempt.

In leadership, the creative force opposes currents of compromise, joining the dynamic of a continuous struggle for artistic authenticity. In fact, creative leadership maintains its contestatory force by systematically opposing the standardization tendencies that dilute art.

Enthroned as Jesus on the Golgotha of cinema? This is the question that all these artists who have strayed from their original vision must ask themselves, because any artistic compromise is a betrayal of the revolutionary spirit, by diminishing the authenticity of the creation. I say this amid deep concern for the future of art, as mediocrity begins to become the norm – a phenomenon adjacent to a general loss of creative courage.

Try to shape the material reality according to the inner vision so as to increase the relationship between aesthetics and the elegance of being unique.

In everything I did, it seemed to me that I was led by the power with which someone believes in something that does not exist, as if I had discovered a possibility of sinking into a magical world, where good always defeats evil and where art replaces the needs of the soul with increased interest in the sensational.

Objects, images, the environment, everything gained a hallucinating look, like one of Jim Warren's landscapes that completely changes reality when you're imagined as the projection of an axis mundi of a world in which symbolically reigns the mystery, the magical potions and the fantastic as an absolute sovereign.

The perception of any single thing around me is changing with the glowing effect and luminosity of green-red-yellow matchings, like an oil painting which came to life or that would come to life on canvas. It is here that beauty gains a new meaning, it is the commemoration of the moment in which I went out on a new road, the unity of a new determination of the world seen through the eyes of the artist, in which, without ambiguity, pulsates the meaning of a pictorial revolution started in Impressionism.

Far from the madness of a suffocating world, no artist speaks to the whole of this new spatial formulation springing from the life of a fiction full of power and exuberance, but each assigns a particular significance, giving the impression of a paradise suggested with a lyricism full of overturns of form and color separations.

Leadership: Do you direct your attention to the creation of a unique style of creating art, in the context in which the true measure of your value is obtained by comparing yourself with yourself?

All these visions, conceptions, as well as the attempts to interpret them most beautifully, determined me in a quite unusual way to appreciate that in the space of the relations between the material and the spiritual, between plastic shapes and the colors of an exceptional reality there is a language of the separation from the past, a language of the early Eden beginnings. The form of expression of a writer is the result of the madness of giving meaning to a hyper-reality without finding another compensatory one.

The eyes of anyone who dared to understand me through the wisdom of the heart and of a soul thirsty for purity, slowly but steadily changed their shape or color, with the exception of when a visual contact with the reference drawing had not been established beforehand. Every time someone interrupted the contact, the eyes changed again.

So it is now as well. If you will endeavor to penetrate my art, with the look of the eternal soul that is the unmistakable diamond of self-love, you will come to an expression of passionate intensity that will disarm you against the reinforcement of the analytical spirit. Better to evaluate the literary value of an unfinished work than to try and discover all the defects of its author.

Constantly, the practical sense urges me to direct my attention to the creation of a unique style of art, in the context in which the true measure of my value is obtained by comparing myself with myself, because I am the maker of the world of which I claim to belong fully, to which I attribute a myriad of meanings and grant it each time, when I express myself as an artist, a part of my heart.

Leadership: Are you able to get involved in the process of perfecting art and gain more respect for yourself by giving up terms such as "likeness", "comparison" or "feedback" from the get go?

With obvious emotion, I remember how the writer Mary Balogh characterized her character (art professor Joel Cunningham) as though she was trying to capture some of the artist's personality that defined me:

"He was not always a good observer when he only looked at everything from his perspective. He could not make analogies and references. Often, he would not see people clearly until he began to sketch them and paint them and draw inspiration from what he had intuitively felt about them. But he always managed to paint his models as they were when they stripped of all afflictions, defenses and masks."

I myself made an unforgivable mistake, a less elegant way to connect with the world, which I especially reproach to myself by the fact that I have always put others on a pedestal, considering myself below their level. In fact, there was a time when I would always relate to the judgment and opinions of others, evidence of a much too narrow opening towards an integral personality, knowing that the development of art involves giving up on terms such as likeness, comparison or feedback from the get go.

To gain trust, I had to find a way to reverse the effects of the future configuration of the world, missing for a while from the décor of her theater, and later appearing under another identity, with another line of thought.

I began to talk about myself as a being endowed with perfect penetration and perfect intelligence, following the path of originality in expression, especially attributing to the artist within me an eternal mission: to take over the energy discharges, the inner tensions of his models, as is happening in the area of expressionism.

Art is the meaning of such a great achievement, symbolically called an "energy revolution", dedicated exclusively to the life of color and transformation into a new image.

Leadership: Can your creation give the feeling of a reality experienced in a dream, tailored precisely to an artist who knows how to express his vision according to the idea that from every mysterious adventure a new beginning can be glimpsed?

In art, as in life, it is very important to study the meaning of a great achievement not only from the perspective of what you are, but also from the perspective of what you could become within a framework of magic power and stories of beauty, which the imaginary lends to reading some realities beyond the natural material barriers.

Nicholas Urfe of John Fowles' novel went through the same situation as me when he confessed: "I did not know where I was going, but I knew what I needed: a new language, another perspective, an attitude in which diversity is celebrated. Although I could not define it in words at the time, I needed a new mystery."

The mystery of my life consists of the miracle of a never before encountered hocus-pocus, in itself of actual effect. Unfortunately, I did not know at the time that artistic reality is a form of manifestation of the soul on the broad corridor of symbolic content in the exploration of a spacious but unfamiliar room for those in whom the inflammatory element does not predominate: the intelligence of matter.

Between painting and writing, there is a boundless connection, a heavenly indulgence towards my powers to reconstitute from lines, colors, shadows, shapes, contrasts, relationships, a world of dreams on the canvas of fusion between aesthetics, knowledge and ingenuity. The mask I was supposed to wear was designed to capture the shadowy face of an artist who expresses his interiority outwardly, but which the world will never know well enough.

The avant-garde effect of writing had to be replicated by the way the mask was designed through the perspective of a fictional identity that can overcome the creators of the universe. Therefore, my connection with art had to give invitation to an imaginary reverie outside of time, into a space of floating magic, influences and interactions between different forms of expression and perspectives of visual interpretation of affective feelings seen as breaks – openings in the cosmic mantle through which another path, a new beginning can always be glimpsed.

In the view of a world-maker, the art of the portrait integrates the creation procured from the material reality according to its inner vision, highlighting the essence of a strong, able, stable and consistent character that has been modeled starting at the Bottom, not at the Top.

Everything that he captures and synthesizes in an unparalleled way finds a correspondent in the feelings of the viewers who have the chance to understand the visual journey contained in the literary text or the painting of an exceptional artistic destiny.

Episode 1 Of Magic Beyond Art captures the connection between the authenticity with which you present reality in a particular way and the expressiveness with which you present in the smallest detail the features of a true writer who knows how to experience a magical tale that can inspire a good quality literature according to the idea that art does not necessarily reflect what is beautiful and exalting, but what creates a strong emotion.

Learn to force life to bend according to your will, respecting the natural and logical rules of an artistic composition that expresses the connection between two worlds: virtual and that of a writer.

In my heart, I was hoping to get a visual result complementary to a work that experiences through itself a colorful and mysterious story of history and legend as if you are looking for a small glimmer of hope, no matter how temporary and frail, but one that would guide you from the inside to the heights of the infinite sky of true art.

Everything that appeared around, especially unexpectedly, was an addition of dark or light nuance to the vision of a new existential condition of the man of art. If on this space-screen of reality observed depending on a certain subject I would've traced a graphical sign (a line or a geometrical shape), maybe I would've more easily obtained the reversibility of relationships: form – matter, figure – background, aesthetic judgement – cognitive judgement.

Filled with curiosity, trying to penetrate all things from the angle of detail viewing, enriched with a powerful reading effect at first glance, I managed to always find a coherence, an order between things and deeds, to assimilate all those superficial impressions that few include in a leadership book, with an emphasis on art.

Only a book of an ostentatious artistic erudition, written in burning fiery letters in a dream without boundaries, could have provided a true and complete account of what exactly fulfilled me at the level of aspirations.

The basic rules of an artistic composition that express the connection between the virtual world and the writing world are as follows: to see beyond your line of sight and to express through mysterious emotions more than an objective image can offer you.

If you want to see a star at night on the celestial vault you have to look up, meaning, to move your head in one direction or another, your eyes penetrating the darkness to enter the world of dreams. But many do not really notice the visual elements that appear at this stage of the view from the earth to the sky, being the ones that make the difference between form and substance, between living and representation, between reality and the threshold of the fantastic world, between contemplation and creation.

Here, precisely in this dynamic of attention to the immenseness of a point, is hidden the mystery of the great art that I assume as a discovery of unlimited knowledge, while justifying the idea of virtual space depth.

I could enumerate a wealth of things that can transform a static image into a dynamic one, and thus give life to a visual expression of the abundance offered by the experience of the joy of living in the "now", which in turn becomes the subject of a response or of reactions from the observer.

As a detective would say: "the more thorough the research, the better the results."

Leadership: Does your art denote the reflex of a passionate configuration of images in accordance with the exigencies of a stimulating activity of great finese that loads you with imagination, but holds you prisoner under the guise of an absolute experiencer of symbolizing experiences?

The visual is a clairvoyance that comes from the experience of life. Being on the level of everything that is made to look natural, to express sincere emotions, to absorb the deepest thoughts. But in the fiction of a psychic device connected only to beauty, everything translates into pastel colors, vibrant, but sometimes also in neutral colors if the amplification of the sensation of mystery is desired.

The highest art has to take the value of a hint that draws attention to the need for realism and at the same time is touched by the artificial of an area full of mystery.

Thus, the visual can be linked to the reflection of a profound inner reality seen through the novelty of a strange beauty that mirrors the highest feelings of which the human heart is capable. But no reality is the same in the images of one's own reflection in the subtle space of the most mysterious thoughts.

Mesa Selimovic's hero of the novel "Dervish and Death" tried to decipher the language of art, but he was always halted by that same completely illogical request: where can inspiration be found? He confessed with an emotion that was completely natural in this context:

"I pointlessly awaited something unusual, something out of the ordinary, something that would amaze me. Suddenly, the world has become a mystery to me, and I myself one to the world. We sat face to face and gazed at each other with amazement, we no longer knew each other, we no longer understood each other. I had to float above the true sense of writing, approaching it and hiding it under a pseudonym that would protect me from any despair, same as the painter transferred his idea into a visible but difficult to interpret symbol."

Improving expression through artistic force, because art is the engine of emotional expression of each of us, is specific to the confession of a mask (as an additional means of protection against despair, tilting at windmills), but which propels you among the most well-known writers of the new generation.

Leadership: Can you capture in a particular way the moment when the perception of an art form overlaps the image of a world that presents new perspectives of interpretation of your hidden experiences?

I thought that if I sink into the use of relations between writing and painting, I will succeed, like an artist of the passing world, like a narrator who appears and disappears at the key moment of an a priori Big Bang, I will reveal the meaning of my passage through time, just like when you forget to look at reality from the perspective of "That's all".

The first of the arguments I would bring in favor of novelty in the use of expressions, techniques and procedures of art, is the discovery that from a perceptual point of view there is no picture so grand that the soul would extend to the ends of a false universe. But there is only a parallel life of the same expedition to a place of refuge, hidden language of the soul, a different side of the same suffering: disagreement with the objective world.

So find the feeling ! The only chance for me to endure in the phenomenal race with myself was to feel my life in a painting meant to announce the expressionist hue that would become the coordinator of the universe investigated later, not only from the perspective of a form of objectivity in the analysis of the artistic image but from the point of trying to give as much as possible to a frontal image everything I knew about myself. Power, intelligence, destiny. An aesthetic of the elegance of being unique.

If someone had asked me to confirm a hypothesis about the force I was led by in life, towards where I myself didn't know, and if only a pencil were put at my disposal to write the future, as is the case with the artists who trace the initiating path of a world of nostalgia and dreams, I would probably have started my story through a self-portrait achieved from the perspective of the passing of time.

I would probably try to illustrate a piece of my soul with that color of sincerity and inexhaustible openness, drawing and continuing, in a mathematics of time, the signs of a poetic destiny of a narrator who looks at art with the eyes of a magician of words full of dream and fantasy.

Art that resists time can be correlated with a deepening of expressions able to create a unique universe, which you traverse with the emotion that indicate the state of inner spell illustrated only by a painter in a vivid, warm and expressive color gamut.

Episode 2 Of Magic Beyond Art captures the artist's quality of moving forward to the moving sands of the miraculous or the fantastic, and to give life to an exciting and attractive image that will make the average person think: "Look, this can be my world ! "

Essentiality In Leadership

On December 26, 2016

He who sees reality as it is presented to him through a gradual highlighting of shapes and colors of everything around will make decisions based on what he sees and not based on what is happening to him.

I was traveling from one place to another, for the umpteenth time, cradled by the thoughts of the need of surpassing myself, on the apparently intricate ways of self-perception in relation with the mystery of an untouched and gentle peace, and of a serene calm. A perception stemming from the very image full of details of things, their spread and form being susceptible to variation, things in which could be read the satisfaction of the mind that sees logical connections between pieces of information, in explaining a theory of everything around. In the dimension of the purpose of a life dedicated to the endeavor of understanding the wonders of creation.

Because the solidity the enlightened talk about cannot exist without spread or form. Things are seen clearly, without them everything would turn into immense chaos: a universe without forms, colors or life. And yet, the expression of "order" has its roots in "disorder". Because in the time constants of the transition from one state to another, in the will of an unsuspected power of exterior transformation, in an always repeated movement, matters produces through reactions and catalysis a force of gravity, vibration, energy, spirit.

Every second of every glance casted into one direction or another is a review of things given by the perception of the visual system before being witness to an "inexplicable" obscurity. In a second, my gaze turns to the beauty of the unseen, at least not everyone succeeds in this performance, or is given by the inexplicable revision of the visual system provided by the perception of an image of the invisible perpetuated by dependence on deductions, analogies, abstractions, assumptions, comparisons and generalizations.

Leadership: Can you share your unique experience of mirroring yourself in the things around you, by capturing an image of the observed object and presenting it in the form of creative impulses?

Often, I thought of forgetting all I see, all I feel, all that was between me and everything around. To try and leave myself in the company of a gallery of images without color, but reproduced based on a picture whose details had to be framed in the ongoing of events. It would've meant that things would become shadows of a nameless reality, undertaken in the conditions of a lack of form and essence, just as a book is experienced when it is read, it is consumed with every word, and it comes to the point that no one cares about it eventually, no matter how good it was.

The wavelength that determines the chromatic tone, that is, that property through which colors distinguish themselves from one another, would've had to correspond to the point in which I myself would reflect in things around, relating to the absolute value of a language understandable only to me. And this language, which I would have much to say, can be found in the writings of esthetician Cornel A. Ailincăi, as follows:

"The perceived object is given the artistic appearance by means of formal means, and the formalization – the transcription in sensitive pictorial matter – gives rise to a reality different from the perceived one, his pictorial image will say something other than the tree perceived in nature. The shaped tree evokes the real one – it becomes its symbol – but at the same time it loads it, intentionally or not, with an additional value that evades the final comprehension, breaking the iconic abundance in encountering a meta-meaning."

Leadership: Do you conduct a review of things given by the perception of the visual system before being witness to an "inexplicable" obscurity?

The presentation of an image in the form of creative impulses is done by representing reality in the form of subjective impressions. What broadens your perspective is an emanation of timeless attention, a test of the attention you pay to things and events around you – glimpsed only through subtle details. A scene from the novel "Duma Key", written by Stephen King, recently caught my eye:

"Imagine again the girl that fell from the carriage. Hit her right temple, but the left side of her brain was the one that suffered the most – the countercoup, remember? In the left side is located Boca's area – not that anyone would've known this in the 1920s. Boca's area is responsible for language. If you hit yourself there hard enough you lose your language, sometimes for a very short while, but other times forever. But – although they are closely related – speech is not the same as sight.

Details, details, the truth is in the details. The girl still sees. And does sight desperately call for speech, even in a disturbed mind? A wounded brain? Oh, certainly, certainly. I wonder which is the first word from this part of the bad thing?"

Who sees reality as it is presented to them through a gradual essentializing of forms and colors of everything around will make decisions based on what they see and not on what happens to them. The obscurity to which we often all bear witness is given by the misinterpretation of the details that reality gives us, that what we observe is not the same as the depth of observation experienced by the followers of realism. The details betray an inquisitive spirit, doubled by a completely remarkable power of observation and analysis, while the darkness is the consequence of the play of light and shadow that only a perfect artist can follow from several angles.

And the one who fully answers to a perspective of reception connected to the meanings of events, hearkening the fundamentals that curdle everything around, like the connection between things, phenomena, and their context, through logical argumentation, is a man able to propose a new approach to the attitude towards what needs to be done in the interval between choice and happening.

Leadership: Is your perception of the world, rooted in the meaning of life, the result of thoughts and feelings born of various associations with the elements of the surrounding reality?

The perception of the world, with a spread on the meaning of life, is the result of thinking and experiences born out of various associations with the elements of surrounding reality, actually expressing the captivity of man through sight and hearing. This captivity can only be overcome through an acceptance of the changes that occur as a result of findings made in contact with a consciousness that doesn't cry for sound and movement, color or form, but one that demands clarification on what is not right and for what reason – of all that is happening to you.

At a level of interpretation and up to a certain point the man who spreads out his observations within the range of consciousness never perceives himself from the perspective of the color "Life is beautiful ! ". And neither from the perspective of shapes undertaken by things of the type "Big Data."

The priority objectives of such an individual correspond with the tendency of promoting changes essential to the evolutionary process from the perspective of the projections of the desire to escape, to break the barriers of the conventional that are reflected in "that happening."

Obscurity is quite an avoided phenomenon in the tendency of treating effects and not causes. It means to not perceive the landscape (an overview) due to the lack of sight and hearing, due to the high volume of surrounding things to which we attribute value and meaning. But what is most often ignored is the very possibility of a happening that occurs unexpectedly, even of sight and hearing are kept clear.

The meaning you attribute to life is directly proportional to the way you look at things that are out of sight of those who, in the pursuit of small individual advantages, for the moment, forget the feeling of reality.

Essentiality In Leadership has as a reference point the reality that develops through the assessment and usage of things that happen, that are imposed, and are under the power of man, of things that are observed only through an intervention of personal remodeling and repositioning.

Eternal Flame

Inscribe your creation in a new model of approaching the notion of image, accepting your existence from the point of view of the appreciation that a rational being nurtures for all that surrounds it.

A rose openly confesses its sympathy for the great teachings of life, a demonstration of such a miracle of a spiritual nature, as if it were experiencing an unforgettable moment of life through a human being that differs, in a way, from the rest of the world. As a predestined arrow to extend the length of history, undoubtedly belonging to distant times, it assumes this transient role, from nature to culture, a transition from mortal to immortal, as an intermediate between two similar worlds through the passion of creation that only the mystics experience.

It is not the first time that I feel one with a human being, so much so that I can only mark a parable about the fragility of life, everything being reduced to the acceptance of a reality resembling the world of artists who give memorable interpretations to their masterpieces. From me, from that part of nature that encompasses me fully in the perfection of an astral moment, hence the courage to be unique, there comes a voice of enveloping warmth and ingenuity neighboring the magic of a hot coffee on a rainy day: from where does it spring and where does the impression of greatness end?

The other flowers bow to the sun. Nature protects them with an abundant beauty, a classic process of nature exploration through the ability of the art to seduce the taste of admirers. The sun's rays provide sweet sustenance. I am greeted by the temptation of man to interfere in God's work of salvation, in his image and likeness, through the synergy of creation, of all humanity, but especially by status, by the right to express himself in one word: superiority.

Leadership: Can the greatness that surrounds you from the basic features of Creation form comparisons with the two auxiliary words "more" and "most"?

I realize that I am not the human being capable of awakening ample feelings and immediate certainty, I am not the game of a magician who leads public attention in the labyrinths of a much wider mind. But I am the supreme flower of a creation called "space-time", a transient one from concrete art – to a Surrealism seen as a state, as a way of life. I still feel as part of a painting placed in an atmosphere of longing, in which the frontal plane is attached to the symbolic expression of an unshakable trust in the existence of an absolute reality, recording the image of the being over time, in a lively and exciting portrait.

Every reality has its story. From poetry to visual arts, as in many other respects, I am admirable through the blend of colors and romance. Permanent as an event that repeats itself along an intellectualist novel, full of the sensational, I carefully keep behind the décor that urges you to dream so many wounds that still leave traces, an area of existence in which I experience with a perfect spirit the experiment of a flame found inside another flame, a thinking understood through a circumstance above his will.

Any other flower, as the centerpiece of an artistic creation, inspiration and symbol, embraces the necessity of nature to articulate the context of change. There is an exception, of course. At the same time, a creation of nature is the fall in the midst of a reality that transcends the plan of the immediate manifestation. Her basic peculiarities lie in the mystic ecstasy, not as a magic act of deceiving destiny but as a source of spirituality, but also in the contemplation of the infinite moment called "Now".

I do not know where the fears of a being that does not even have a scientific name come from. But the humiliation of being retreated into a world of its own, in a chimera-filled atmosphere, in a discreet and honorable manner, away from the happiness of experiencing a vision of reaching a new understanding, becomes a sort of prison in which you are free to look at reality as you wish, but still accepting it as a gift from God.

Leadership: Are you able to create a different view of the possibility of existing as a creative being, through the extrospection of a privileged alterity that evolves from image to symbol?

The creation of an artist can form the degree of comparison with the two auxiliary words "more" and "most" when it comes to approaching a theme designed to become the symbol of a universal artistic movement. "More" is the beginning of a construction meant to change things, while "most" is an overlapping of meanings attributed to the forms of reality with which the consciousness of immanent transcendence, the light of spiritual exaltation, comes into contact.

I am not just a red rose, full of sensitivity. I am the color of the sacrifice brought by the Son of God for the salvation of mankind. Life is a bit harder with those who accept the Lord's challenge of living and dying after His Word in the glory of a moment that enriches its graceful content by paying tribute to beauty that is also kindness. Sometimes you have to give up something of yourself to leave behind a memory, a pleasant impression, a stage that has been enormous for the evolution of mankind to a higher level of consciousness and spirituality. It is to leave behind a creation of genius, in order to fully receive a glorious eternity.

This is the case when you try to fit into the space of an overview on a theme that the artist dedicates to the painting that will become the symbol of a universal artistic movement. A logic filled with common sense, is not it?

All I have left to do in this wonderful summer day is to bless the moment when I was given special attention because of the need to place myself at the forefront of understanding a gesture full of gratitude. This morning, someone wanted me more than ever, that my master was trying to break a part of me, a bud who was about to flourish. Thus, I rose to the height of a thought of great human depth; it is called love.

A writer of my master's level would have framed this sublime moment in a struggle with the power of suffering, of love: it is as if I would give my left hand to someone who doesn't have one, thus giving myself a new chance to be someone else, clinging to every minute of the hope of a miracle, feeling it and experiencing it truly, exhausting it... and I would not give it back until there was nothing left of it.

Leadership: What value do you give to the life experiences and the urge to put yourself in the position of being able to live in a work that while imperfect is still so amazing?

Perhaps I am only an extension of a complex personality whose work encompasses and correlates in an original way with aesthetic intervention in the thread of life. As an artist of a total artwork, I have mastered the merit of shocking viewers through the mixture of innovation and banality, preparing the conscience of the world for the encounter with an illusionist space in which are exerted forces of knowledge difficult to perceive with physical eyes, only through spiritual science.

The period of spiritual transformation begins with the acceptance of existence in terms of the appreciation that a rational being nurtures for all that surrounds it. In this regard, I find myself in the words of an earthly man, that glorious Egyptian in the novel of Mika Waltari, who has the most expensive and strongest soul experience meant to bring the long-awaited spiritual rebirth:

"For I, Sinuhe, have lived in every man who lived before me and live in every man who will live after me. I live in the weeping and joy of every man, I live both in the goodness and even in the wickedness of every man, I will live in the righteousness and unrighteousness of man, I live in his weakness and his power. I do not want my name to remain immortal, like a memory that you can hardly give up, because I will live eternally in every man by the idea of comparison to a story whose reality escapes regular observation, but which demonstrates fluidity and the difficult to predict evolution of events."

I am the king of my kingdom. When I am in the midst of other flowers, the world is witnessing the return of a beauty that feeds on the life of an artist with immeasurable intelligence and spirituality, demanding of the intervention of nature a key to understanding the mystery of a world that awaits to be nourished with comfort, gentleness, warmth, compassion. Even if we are dealing with the most basic spatial orientation, which is symmetry, rigor and frontality of the painting that glorifies the union with God, always overwhelming in any style and form, my traits – defining for art – are only visible to those willing to recognize them, to acquire them, to feel them as being theirs.

To my life experiences I give the value of an image that, in a simulated reality, in itself being able to be contained in another simulation, often succeeds in defying the viewer's intelligence.

At a revealing reconsideration from the perspective a genius masterpiece, someone would pick me up from a garden carefully maintained with a house-keeping passion, thus feeling that I am carried towards sweet immortality, while a poet would dedicate an admirable ode to me with spirit and truth: "Teach me to believe in people again, teach me to believe in dreams again. So I can be your humble hero forever ! "

The true masterpiece to which leadership relates is the experience with which you support the novelty of creation from the existence of an artist who assumes the role of mediator between man and nature.

Eternal Flame is an extension of hope in an enormous source of inspiration necessary for the artist to acquire immortality. It is what you see when you feel the pulse of life as a rose that chooses to be wrapped more in the nets of a fascinating narrative deployed in the artistic plane than in the nets of a purely romantic aspiration.

Evelyn's Decision

Build yourself a strong attitude in leadership by your attachment to other people, and by the commitment towards the mission that you assume.

Towards the end of the movie "The Mummy Returns (2001)", when the powerful Scorpion King is defeated, the temple of Abu Simbel starts to crumble. Rick O'Connell, as well as the frightful priest Imhotep (who had lost his powers in the meantime) suddenly find themselves thrown into an abyss. They both succeed in clutching with their hands to its edges, but the spirits of the dead are pulling them in the earth's abyss, to hell. Rick barely breathes, his heart was beating so hard, that he was just like a man that was dying and could barely get a hold of his last powers. Inside him, he had almost resigned.

Evelyn, Rick's wife, and her rival, the reincarnated Queen Anck Su Namun, nailed to a safer spot were helplessly looking how the rocks furiously crumbled from the ceiling all around them. It seemed as if nothing could save the two, who were trying with their last powers to get a hold of the edge of the abyss.

A decision that meant death or life. Evelyn suddenly understood that only her energy and determination could save Rick. She probably said to herself: "I love you, Rick. I won't leave you here. Not after everything you have done for me. I don't want to have you on my consciousness. I would never forgive myself if anything would happen to you." So she decided to act.

Filled with impatience and tumult, but armed with great courage and an extraordinary will, she ran to Rick, without worrying about the rain of rocks all around her. Once near him, she grabbed his right arm with both her hands, breathed deeply and full of determination, she started pulling him towards herself with an unalterably obstinacy. With a supreme effort, she succeeded in getting Rick out of the abyss.

Leadership: Does your personality analysis address that kind of psychological intervention that takes into account many perspectives of addressing a task that puts you in need of justification for sacrificial power?

All people are capable of incredible things when they really want something, but few have the courage to risk their lives for someone. Behind Evelyn's initiative was a powerful sense of affection and attachment. She proved that she can take over initiative specific to leadership, being stimulated by powerful feelings towards her husband, exposing herself to dangers with the utmost daringness.

She had a huge amount of energy and trusted her instincts when she had to take important decisions. She covered the ground that separates incredible from credible. Without doubt, Rick has been blessed to have a wife, a partner such as Evelyn – with a lively and energetic spirit, brave and tenacious.

Sacrifice is what you get after you have faced your fears and took your fate into your own hands as you are forced into a life-threatening reaction. When a man gradually defines himself as a "sacrificial hero", building a tendency to manifest himself as a catalyst that propels the transition from experience to faith, he corresponds to that universal tendency towards unity, that work accomplished by the spirit to justify a conception about love, about God, about what is good and what is bad.

Leadership: How do you appreciate the importance of your value as a judge in an evolution of motivation based on the severity of the consequences, in relation to the situational pressure that you feel "from outside" your own will?

Seeing that Evelyn went with such an enthusiasm to save Rick, the high priest Imhotep, desperately asks his lover Anck-su-namun to help him. Even so, she, with her eyes looking over the fire and the rocks falling from the ceiling, fearing for her own life, turns and runs away, hoping to save herself. In other words, she avoided endangering her life for her lover, like Evelyn did for her husband.

Poor rich girl. Charming, but coward and unfaithful. Only in the last hour, when he needed the most help, Imhotep realized this great truth: that a man who doesn't dare, doesn't truly love. That a coward lover is not at all a loving woman, but rather a traitor. The man weak in character reveals his vulnerable side in critical situations.

Filled with a deep sorrow, which tore his heart apart, the high priest Imhotep, with a numb will, with tears in his eyes, struggling for a few moments between anger and pain, gave up fighting and accepted deaths embrace. He jumped in the abyss of eternal damnation. The late disappointments are the strongest poisons.

Nothing can relieve his suffering, nothing can restore the peace of heart of the one betrayed by the person he put all his trust in. The high priest Imhotep put all his hopes in Anck-su-namun, but she betrayed all his expectations. Just like a poker player, who, by betting everything on one card, loses absolutely everything (his house, his car, his wife), so Imhotep, for putting all his hopes in the one who he promised a queen's destiny, lost any resource of his soul and preferred to die.

To assume the role of a judge in a permanent growth of your importance in the sphere of greatness is similar to reading with appetite from a book with dramatic content: first you must bear the same situation as the characters that make you suffer, then it must justify a certain conception that you have of God and therefore justify yourself in the situation where the main character is you.

Along with the relatively developed individualism in turbulent life periods, selfishness and a state of exasperation slowly appear among those who want at all costs to belong to something or someone, waiving any right mindset for the context. This position adopted without thinking, founded only on emotions, causes man to create his own reality, ambiguous by its interpretability, which can be regarded as a chain explosion and with immediate effect of neutralizing the strong "shield" of leadership.

Affection, friendship, appreciation, self-sufficiency, kindness – must be managed very carefully, before the apparition of that highly contagious, sometimes fatal form, of a too generous, sometimes even unconscious service, in the name of friendship and unity.

If you lead a team, you must know that people weak in character avoid taking responsibility in situations requiring improvisations, in the face of eventual obstacles and dangers that might arise. Furthermore, they always prefer to walk on beaten tracks than to expose themselves to risks, than take the measures they have to take.

When you have many of such people in your team, uncertain and coward, the probability of not reaching the proposed goal is great, and, in this case, it's nothing but a group which can break down anytime.

The situational pressure that you feel "from outside" your own will happens when your conscience obeys rules other than those you have cleared and taken as alibi in most cases.

Your consciousness heads toward a whole called the "state of final correction" when you realize that what really matters is not what happens to you, but what you are willing to sacrifice when you know that your time is limited.

Evelyn's Decision brings a single saying: build yourself a strong attitude in leadership by your attachment to other people, and by the commitment towards the mission that you assume.

Even If You See, Take A Good Look At What You See

On February 13, 2024

What you see is part of a Self that transcends time and space, expressing itself through its continuous interaction with the universe.

I perfected a view meant to absorb the colors and shapes beyond the canvas, in the presence of a vast horizon, such as the clear blue sea, which seems to add vibrant colors to a unique painting. I hardly remember a moment, there was not even a shred of reality on which I did not focus my gaze, with a kind of firm consistency, in which I was not working on a painting, portrait or anything related to the visual world.

And I still live those moments, with longing, with melancholy, with a kind of Shinyos Ostriaursum , with a kind of nostalgia for the present, for the moment that will never return, for the states that I will never experience the same again. It is difficult for me to recommend it, but any memory of the sea is a fragment of reality that we should all be aware of, because the sea, the symbol of successive persistence, has a special way of manifesting itself as an infinite source of inspiration because it offers always new shapes, colors and movements that can be reinterpreted and translated into art.

And perhaps the most important thing about the sea, as it is, full of life, full of spectacle, full of the dreams of those who look at it, is the fact that it conveys feelings and moods, a kind of Ahelarios Esdras Ontagasantri , the revelation of the self by divine grandeur. Because there is in its infinite scope that harmony between the soul and the universe, between the two worlds, the material and the spiritual. In other words, you really have to be an artist to understand this: "Everything you see with your eyes turns into into a part of your experience , deepening your connection with the world around you."

Leadership: Can you experience an endless horizon through the prism of a "Self" multiplied in the mirrors of time, to the extent that your permanent reality is reflected in the sphere of artistic creations?

Every detail perceived by trying to encompass an endless horizon becomes an important part of my story, an invitation to explore, an unlimited canvas on which I can express my creativity unhindered, appearing as well-defined fragments of an ongoing painting. This careful and contemplative observation, derived from my addition of perspectives, gives me a greater understanding of the world and self in relation to the sea, as my moments by the sea seem to maximize the art of contemplation.

More than that. Through this immeasurably expanded awareness, which I myself must feed upon in order to become a visionary, I can enrich my perception of life and live with more presence and depth in the expression of art. In other words, the way I express my ideas and feelings in front of what I create, beyond shapes and colors, depends on what I translate into artistic language.

It is like in that vision of Borges: "An infinite duration preceded my birth ; what was I during all this time? In a metaphysical sense, it could be answered like this: "I was always me; in other words, all those who said I during all this time were none other than me ".

So what is the artist who experiences an endless horizon? The artist is an "I" multiplied in the mirrors of time, to the extent that his permanent reality is reflected in his creations. And if I dream of a unique painting that I can create by myself, just looking at the sea in its vastness, all that remains for me is to overturn the relationship between human and divine, in a lively confrontation with aesthetics, so as to obtain the identity of a ME that it gets confused with infinity.

Leadership: How do you see yourself reflected in a work of art while experiencing a vast vision of creation and a deep sense of connection with the universe?

Have you ever thought about the power of images to transport you into a world of creation as you reflect on how you relate to reality and the universe? For example, in Aben-Abubeker Abentofail's novel, Istetul, Son of the Clever, is content to eat the abundant fruits and fish on his island. But he is always concerned that no species be lost, so that the universe does not remain diminished because of him.

Everyone carefully observes the world around them and interprets it in their own way. While Istetul is responsible for the preservation of nature, the painter is moved by its beauty, specifying that nothing should escape his sight during the short time allotted to the contemplation of the sea. And if the sea were in my place, and looked upon me as a perfect creator whose existence cannot be denied before the majesty of all creation, she would probably be more pleased to reflect on these words: "What the painter sees with his eyes , the creator feels with his soul, and the painting becomes the transcendent mirror of his existence ."

The painting is an art of colors, shapes and light highlighted with soul in a painting that seems to capture the sea in all its splendor and mystery. And it can express a variety of emotions, ideas and concepts, but it can only be truly profound if the universe is enriched with a Self that contemplates and transposes its essence in every brushstroke and every shade. So when I look at the sea, when I think about all the mysteries that lie in its depths, I'm not just captivated by its beauty and the way it can make me feel, I really feel like I'm part of a vast painting of the universe. It is through this awareness that I myself become a profound experience that highlights the connection with nature.

A Creator's perception of how he finds himself in a work of art is that he himself becomes a part of the work, expressing his essence and vision in every aspect of the creation.

Even If You See, Take A Good Look At What You See, for the only way to bring a work of art to life is to outline a Self that existed in the past and will exist in the future, interconnected in a direct relationship with the vastness of the universe.

Events Create Intended Emotions In Viewers

Creative leadership in directing is the ability to construct images that reflect the emotional pulse of the story so that the tension is felt deeply by the audience.

Beyond clarity, Eisenstein pursues certain compositional effects in the montage, even in this scene of the Teutonic attack, for example. This episode, even in its smallest details, is "listening" to that moment when the heart, in reaction to the approaching danger, tightens and pulsates in the throat. All the details of this event are reproduced in the series of images... These pulsations determine the rhythm of tension intensification, caesuses, acceleration or deceleration of movement. Fluctuating heartbeats also dictate the rhythm of the horses' trots. If we look at the pictures, we see a cavalry charge. If we look at the composition, we also perceive the pulsation of a heart agitated at its peak. From the point of view of the result, both - painting in images and compositional construction - merge into the image of the premonition of the beginning of a life and death struggle.

On the screen, events unfold on the basis of the most varied pre-planned emotions, which create in the spectators also foreseen emotions (this is how Eisenstein's experience in the field of mounting attractions so far breaks down). This is the secret of the sincere emotional effect of true composition. Any composition that can detect the sources of human emotions can also give rise to these emotions in the viewers.

An intense and authentic experience of directorial leadership can be achieved through the attractively planned montage, which creates a connection between the physical action of the characters and the emotional tension of the spectators.

Cinematic montage is one of the fundamental methods in modern filmmaking, as it allows the manipulation of narrative time and space. This involves measuring and interpreting the pace and tension of a film's scenes to the extent that they create emotional and narrative coherence. In general, visual composition and compositional effects are the techniques most used to determine the narrative structure and emotional impact on viewers, revealing the subtext and deep themes of the film. Especially since, in an editing room, the filmed material is exposed to repeated viewings and the clarity and emotional pulsation of each sequence is measured. Therefore, each type of scene has a specific frequency of impact, which absorbs the viewers' attention at distinct moments in the narrative.

A visionary leader in film knows how to synchronize the rhythm of the images with the heartbeat of the viewer, creating a deep and authentic emotional experience.

Always, the director uses improvisation in the editing to identify points of support and alternate phases of the film. Close-ups and wide shots are like the functional groups of film structure, each with its role in painting the story. This allows the construction of a coherent and moving narrative.

A vision that detects and amplifies the sources of human emotions, giving viewers an intense and authentic experience, helps intensify the impact of the narrative that resonates deeply with their experiences and reflections.

It should also be added that the process of cutting film is similar to adjusting the absorption spectrum, where the director removes or emphasizes certain elements to achieve the desired effect. The acceleration or deceleration of movement in the frame acts as the vibrational frequencies of the emotions, creating a rhythmic pulsation that resonates with the viewers.

In the end, the montage becomes a spectroscopic analysis of human emotions, where each caesura, each moment of tension, contributes to the creation of a complex and captivating "emotional spectrum". This approach allows the director to create a deep and authentic cinematic experience that vibrates in unison with the sensibilities of the audience.

A visionary editing leader knows how to control pacing and composition, using visual details to amplify emotions and build gradual narrative tension within key scenes.

So editing a film requires careful preparation of the composition. First, watch the raw material twice as long as the final desired length. Blend footage with compositing effects to enhance clarity and narrative tension. Place the key fulcrums, making sure the phase alternation is at the right rhythm level. Fill the narrative structure with a combination of close-ups and general shots, gently pushing the boundaries of perception to eliminate monotony. Revise well after the first cut. In the early stages of editing, keep the emotional pulse steady but not saturated. Cut the vertices of scenes to encourage speeding up or slowing down motion. Observe viewers' reactions regularly for signs of waning interest or confusion.

Improvisation in editing is like cultivating emotions in the film garden. The director must take care to weed out the unwanted elements, like the weeds, while preserving and nurturing the scenes that contribute to the painting of the narrative. Caesuses act as rest periods for the viewer, allowing for the assimilation of previously planted emotions. The final construction of the film should be as harmonious and balanced as a well-tended garden, where every element has its role in creating a complete and satisfying experience.

The double perception of the scene - as a visual representation and as a compositional construction - creates a complex image of the foreboding of a life and death struggle.

The events create predictable emotions in the audience as the action reaches points of maximum intensity due to the dynamics of the characters against the background of the increasing narrative tension. I say this because the emotion generated goes beyond mere visualization in an effort to deeply engage the audience by activating both visual and emotional stimuli.

Everyone Sees What They Want To See

On December 10, 2022

If you do not see yourself in what you are looking at, it means that you are looking without seeing.

Before my eyes suddenly appeared several television sets, arranged in parallel, where the images were repeated chaotically through the complete rotation of a cycle of dilations and compressions of time. A parallel time, of forgetting and finding, of memory and eternal silences, which no longer had the patience to deepen the secrets of my "impenetrable". Moreover, no other view in the world, even humanized according to the images shown by any of the televisions, could have conditioned the perception of the succession of colors and shapes that inoculated in my mind the idea of the simultaneity of small events taking place.

And, as the gaze tried to focus on only one television, by devising some methods of slowing down the image detected by the grace of the eye to create side lighting, or by a process extrinsic to the eye, I was able to divert my thoughts from to their natural course and not to lose myself among enigmatic whispers, among realities that I do not understand. Now, just as in art one should not look for the imitation of things, but rather the way they are represented, in the same way my vision should not focus too much on a means of psychological "pressure", but should re-edit my thoughts, feelings, impressions, so as to operate an emotional-imaginative transposition.

Only in this way, looking at an image with light-colored eyes, without synchronizing the television screen with the optical path of my subjectivism, could I have modified the image of time that becomes relentless and intolerant? And if my vision was simply distorted by the distorted images of the television, taking the form of an illogical inverted yield curve, beyond what is seen, wouldn't my eye need a little distance from reality to penetrate into the world of a utopia called "Odyssey of the Despairing Mind"?

That's when I understood the true purpose of televisions that scroll images without any apparent connection to the realm of the real or the existent: that what I see keeps changing and, in many cases, doesn't stop generating virtual reality experiences.

Leadership: Can you conceive your self-image according to an object proposed to be observed, extending the duration of the observation to the level of an experience that is not consumed?

The adventure in the "connected tv devices" room is not over yet. My eyes, full of curiosity, sensitive to the presence of mystery in everything, open to the enigmatic dimension of every situation, still wanted to find a wider meaning to what was seen, under the cover of a fiction to be taken as reality, one that goes beyond the natural framework of things. I could choose to experience this fiction as a kind of continuous state of mind, and combine it with the abstract art of the painter Gianfranco Chiavacci who also approaches optical art and kinetic art, still having the freedom to leave it at any time.

So I went back to the same dark room, devoid of natural light, where the televisions continued to rapidly scroll color images, but without meaning. The visuals felt like a geometry-based puzzle game that had me tapping all sorts of squares and other geometric shapes on the screen to fill in numerous areas of color. Slowly, but surely, I realized that each image of each television provided a sequence from the traps of the mind, from the exile of my heart from a "repeated forgetfulness" in living, as in a nostalgic look at the past, recovering fragments of time and memory capable of giving me back a part of my twisted destiny, worthy of a thriller.

In this way, a permanent connection was made between what is known and unknown, by introducing my mind into a space of encounters with otherness, where I myself became the image of another image whose perception depended on the direction of the gaze. Yes, that's right, the televisions seemed to assault my mind with images in rapid succession, full of movement and intense action, as if I myself existed in a moving picture painting that seemed to come out of the screen, and the painting seemed to be smarter than me, as it reproduced my reality with excellent chromatic color accuracy.

Leadership: Can you consider "osmosis" as characteristic of your inner world, through the interpenetration of those real images that have the quality of transcendence and timelessness?

In the end, to explain an abstract, symbolic, surrealist art, I have to declare that I have observed myself in some images that seem very real, but do not correspond to anything in reality, being a kind of strange hallucinations, random reconstructions of the cortex. Like some dreams dreamed before, linked in time and spent in the same space. In this context, only the artist manages to create a series of images, of situations that can bring a person to a certain state or to a certain gesture, and I think that the three-dimensional images of the television were themselves projections of ideas projected by my mind outwardly. Projections of a self-seeking mind.

Compared to these means of projecting increasingly schematized images, tending towards symbols, signs and mathematical forms, with which I was trying to familiarize myself, I found myself permanently between knowledge and ignorance, because beyond what I directly observed was a series full of unknown properties and relationships, and not understood by me.

This is included in the accounts of the famous psychologist Paul Popescu Neveanu, who once said: "Osmosis, the interpenetration of images of various kinds, is characteristic of the artist's imaginative inner world. Every artist has developed the gift of synesthesia to a high degree. He translates into its specific language of visual, auditory, kinesthetic, verbal values impressions of another kind. In connection with this one speaks of a colored audition or of sound colors, of strident movements, of moving sounds or of strange images full of high contrasts, thus amplifying the feeling of repetition."

Leadership is oriented towards the essence of two images observed in a dual plane: a real one that best describes you, and another (biased towards differentiation) that suggests that part of you that comes to the surface only through an imaginary projection externalized in creation.

Everyone Sees What They Want To See in the things around them, especially if they are a pure projection of the mind. It goes without saying that an incursion into the space of a setting full of obscurity, assaulted by a particular game of lights, can only take possession of fragments, snapshots of a reality more suspected and intuited than concrete and palpable.

Reality that, however, harbors the traces of a metaphorical destiny with immense potential for transcendence towards another self-image that gives the impression, for a few moments, that there are no boundaries between me and reality, but only a figment of the artist's mind.

Everything Has A More Expressive Secret Of Its Own

A path to beauty can only be carved through an inner look, identifying what is external to us with the help of a pre-existing archetype in our interiority.

I'm sitting on a bench in a big garden full of flowers. But I'm not completely alone. Because I am spiritually related to the matter of nature, I have at my disposal the sight of what is truly above all that is, so I am inextricably bound to my power of relating to art. The art of enlivening the wood from which the bench is made, of giving it shapes with the help of thought and artistic procedures.

I finally found something I like at the moment, even if my interest is just a childish whim.

And if the wood from which the bench is made is a little rotten in places, it can be seen that it is still quite resistant, it has kept its sanctity intact. And even if the paint that covers the wood is erased by the passage of time, making a great effort in kneading the pictorial matter, I could still present the wood in all its brilliance, in a picture with thousands of colors, all put together, or in the pages of a biographical book.

Let me, therefore, leave this consideration of seeing being sight, and walk on the thin thread of some double possibilities of reflection, because the artistic sense will guide my steps. I wonder, however, if the perceptions of some character in my life story have been affected by the presence of this attractive, living material, in vital communion with the environment, from which the bench is made.

Leadership: Can you make a subjective observation near the place that invites you to introspect, so that the image you project on your own being is a vision of what you are in relation to the outside?

Wood is truth and mercy, in the space of the transition from an objective empirical understanding of the human realm, to one that emphasizes subjectivity and the interpretation of aesthetic models, such as those from Romanticism to the Avant-Garde, in a Mannerist century that proved, beyond restrictions and fears, a real stylistic, visionary, creative success.

And how do you think I look at this wooden bench? Not with a distant view of the world, not as a sacrifice of my time dedicated to my passion, but as a being enlivened by the spirit of beauty and the joy of freedom, the field of painting being conceived as an intensive exploration of blue-green colors.

As such, I feel how the wood vibrates in turn, and if this subtle, evocative vibration, raised in the sphere of poetry, has attached a deep feeling charged with a sincere experience, then the recipient of this vibration, the graceful artist, dramatist, prose writer and painter, a sense unaltered by time, by the dawn of a world in transformation. Yes, I feel the wood as a personality that wants to impose itself, causing me heightened feelings of emotionality and awareness of the finesse present in every surrounding element. Obviously, the book of my life imagines its characters before giving them life.

That's the way things are. The wood does not let me lose the thread of the story in which a painter, sitting down on the bench after a careful observation of the surrounding things, tries to create a painting by increasing gestural freedom in the treatment of the pictorial matter, but with all that it cannot achieve itself in painting. Because that would mean passing twice through the experience of the Self that could manifest itself externally, in the visible and in the invisible at the same time, proving to be more than an "intermediario nella connexione tra due persone"– haunted by elective associations between various styles (romanticism, symbolism, realism, expressionism, etc.).

Leadership: Can you register its presence in the place of observation, so as to establish a proper relationship between the object of perception and the visual acuity that is activated from a certain distance?

In relation to the outside, so face to face with the wooden bench, I am like an artist experiencing otherness, while my painting is preparing to gradually become a symbol full of deep meaning.

In addition, at the moment when I sit on the bench, I realize with great emotion that I have configured an impressive leap towards another level of plastic language (creatively translated into a small work of art). This fact appears as a transition to an artistic expression (Antraghosys– the emotion of a plastically expressed thought) which I do not perceive very clearly yet, but which implicitly has the character of imminence of the feeling of unity, a fact that leads me to talk about it.

Also, the wood the bench is made of has witnessed a lot of events that relative to a fixed reference event, is simultaneous.

And even now, when I sit on the bench and reflect on various ways of creating images, so understanding exactly that painting offers much more freedom than photography, I think that wood has kept its personality unchanged, recognizing as if a priori, with much emotion, all the aesthetic interventions that will be done to him over time, by numerous other artists. In the eyes of wood, I am a stranger, but I don't even think that it would look at me as a stranger if it could better regulate its vision by freeing feeling from the leash of reason.

Behold then, the wood and the bench can acquire human features. They can acquire the faculties of the senses and the imagination to fully capture and eternalize the miracles of creation, as long as the artist displays his excellence in a technique or artistic mastery that indicates a message: "A path to beauty can only be made through an inner look, identifying what is external to us with the help of a pre-existing archetype in our interiority."

The visual acuity that the artist activates from a certain distance refers to the impact that other surrounding elements have on the object of study (perceived as an independent power, or as a structure abstracted by sensations).

Everything Has A More Expressive Secret Of Its Own if we consider the fact that a wooden bench can denote a "void" populated in a balanced way with fullness. This, if the unitary message of its image keeps close to the flexible vision of a reality ignored by all the others. As such, the wooden bench sends me a single message: "Never deny your eye the pleasure of creating another reality from what surrounds you, simultaneously with the experiences you associate your person with."

As can be seen, the preexisting archetype in my interiority is the tendency to represent a reality that transcends what is transient.

Everything Is Coming Up Roses

Learn to support with all the force and expressiveness of your creation the movement of the world through time, as an extension of the soul of Man to the infinite intelligence of nature.

I walk through the garden, through this wonderful oasis of relaxation and peace in which the chirping of the birds turns into a miraculous concert, where the fresh smell of the spring rain makes you drunk, a morning breeze like a slight flap of the wings of earth butterflies. I pause to think for a moment. I look upon the splendid Double-Delight, gladly look at this dew-filled rose and I feel enveloped by the comfort of a particular culture, the charming chains of an undisguised spell that traverses the path of reality from the boundless and hidden world of dreams.

The limitlessness of a fragment of what femininity, refinement and elegance mean makes its way through the garden's attractions. We are like brothers, enriched by the overflow of a world that slowly opens a gate towards the absolute of an endless fullness; the one we find in the power of the wisdom that has lasted for thousands of years, in the face of the suggestive capacities of the word full of mysteries, used as a way of interrogating the capabilities of painting and visuality.

This rose, my favorite, is the masterpiece of a confrontation on the track of the intellect inscribed on the coordinate of a higher soul, detached from a story with wonderful simple words and unexpected meaning. It falls into the category of a writer's subject of elevated ingenuity, where it is possible for reality to meet with imagination from all points of view.

Probably, in a painting painted in Titian's favorite colors, my rose could appear as a permanent beauty of life lived through the grace of an eternity of the present, a spread of the open-minded idea in a splendid combination of yellow and red, elegance and finesse, character and destiny.

Leadership: Do you feel able to approach an image of what the imitation of nature means, thinking about the endlessness of a man's life through a comprehensive, varied symbol?

First of all, I believe that leadership should weave its entire interpretation through a comprehensive, varied symbol that best characterizes a state of mind called "peace", quietness, perseverance, spiritual finding, self-reconciliation, vigil.

The rose is the subtlety of a simple description, without exaggeration. I will now add a little fiction to it. Looking at you with the eye of an artist, like any lover of beauty and nature, I uncover the strength and genius needed to build a work made to last for centuries as a reminder of an earlier earthly life designed to keep us united in consciousness and feelings, in a divine symbol as an expression of a perfect beauty.

It is like touching the mystery of a being built from a single particle of the universe that always urges you to virtue, to surpassing yourself, thinking, meditation, suggesting a closeness to an absolute goal or a hidden order of things governed by superior intelligence, but rewritten by such a vibrant soul, of such a keen consciousness in the service of a noble ideal.

Painting is the habit of the mind to analyze the beauty of a living body in which a higher individuality is reincarnated.

The rose seen as a model of inspiration. I do not paint you as I would a geisha with a smirk on her face and holding a fan that has no practical role other than being mere decoration. I will not put a necklace around you to awaken the feeling of value in a knightly theme of great interest, or by reducing your value to a retro concept. I will not paint you with dead eyes, as a Nefertiti, by resorting to unnatural perfection of the features and complexion. But I will let you shine in prolonging a research on the imaginary, whose stakes are: the symbolism of memory and parallel universes.

Leadership: Can you determine the height of an artistic image by comparing what the journey of life can bring to you and what keeps you in a certain attitude towards the values of millennial spirituality?

I used to say that today is like tomorrow. All the horizons of my life are lost in the infinity of one world, all roads lead to you. I talk to you and listen to you with much interest, because I know how you feel at every touch, with every petal that falls to the ground, or when you shake it all down, when you drop down, when you shower me with a woman's scent.

Your thorns, the passing pain that caresses an ultrasensitive area of my memory, the suffering of a past that now only exists through the force of the present frees me from any enclosure within myself. You don't understand it. I can tell it by your smile.

Often, I recognize your image trapped in memory after every word, a bright red that changes its color visibly into a pale yellow, with a scent of the ephemeral. From a simple contemplation of the static image, a spatial metaphor capable of evoking a "close" and "far away" is born, between which is hidden the existence of an infinite vibration, of an eternally creative pulsation.

Significantly, I see you again with the spirit of a writer, one who knows how to value the sublime moment of a meeting with a special friend, Cella Serghi, from a picture of her memory, welcome at all times and in all circumstances:

"With how much lack of consciousness I allowed you to enter my life ! I have removed, I have mercilessly struck everything that tied me, everything that stood in your way. After how selfish I was, after how uncaring I was of certain pains, which my change brought on, I understand today how happy I was back then. For a long time I have not loved you... I loved your momentum, your jealousy, your desires and worries, gathered around me, your need to always see me. Everything you said had a new sound, it was original because you thought differently than anything else I'd heard before. I loved your ability to be passionate, concerned for me."

The values of a woman who often allowed words to lead her life, values such as sincerity, wisdom, maturity, resistance to change, modesty, discretion, freedom, are also the values of a spirituality that rose shared this morning with me, a short conversation which, I hope, will always remain in the memory of the world and of the universe.

The height of an artistic image captures the causal link between what gives meaning to your life and what inspires you when every second of life is an experiment of language.

If something is sometimes lacking in my life, as the artist often lacks the right conjuncture to capture a look that says everything, this is due to the lack of dialogue with the earth element. Let us keep looking for the optical center of the main scene from a much larger landscape created by the intervention of a creator of art, despite the chaos of shapes and colors that dominate it.

The rose, a symbol of the creation of the world and of man in Persian writings, inspires a certain resonance that persists long after the viewer ceases to look at it. It helps me focus my whole writer magic on a single scan of the human universe, and until I find the opportunity to break the time, and the transparency of paintings with such diverse themes, I can gather a little fiction, twists, mysteries, suspense and two stories in one.

He loved the roses so much because they reminded him of her life, her soul overlaid over a landscape portrait polished with astral energetic vibrations, with the language of the universe, transiently shaded by white clouds. They especially liked the confessions that say everything, that disarm, warns the future, adding life to the most agitated of years.

Moreover, she also flirted with the desire of being loved, admired, as beautiful as possible, and to give love, so much that she used to be remarked by the force of prose devoured by lyricism, by the symbolic knowledge of the beauty of the roses in his garden.

I should have known it now, but now Everything is coming up roses.

Leadership, seen as a symbol of a unique literary creation, is especially justified as the insertion of a life story in the memory of the world, both true and false at the same time, fictitious and effective, but always as wonderful as the contemplation of a rose, Double-Delight.

Everything Is Coming Up Roses when you understand that life is a contemplation of nature that wants to be eternal in a creation made all around the Creator.

Everything Is In The Eye Of The Beholder

Only when we understand the cause that led to a certain manifestation of the present can we change our way of seeing things and reality.

The sun was just setting. A few clouds had appeared in the sky, but I don't think they were bringing precipitation. Spiritually cradled by a winged dream, I watched the light drain from the expanse of sea and sky, wondering if the decision to leave the coast was a good one or not. Something was pushing me to go home, far from the seaside, something else was urging me to stay there, close to the feeling of a summer vacation, in the midst of the thrill of experiences, aspirations and emotions that animate only brilliant artists: they love life and show how beautiful it is.

A spark of joy had appeared in my eyes, discreet but effective, just as the reddish sun lit up the horizon for the last time. After all, the most telling proof of understanding art, sensing fidelity to nature (in a work of art) is to observe a phenomenon that gives you the chance to really be someone else, to get emotionally involved in a circumstance that can be appreciated as extremely important, triggering the act of remembering a past day, full of melancholy.

And if it is true what someone said, that the artist must be in his work just as divinity is in creation, invisible and all-powerful, that is to be felt everywhere, but nowhere seen, then I believe that I felt a superior power in me: the power of being inspired by the experience of the present, the power to merge with EVERYTHING around, far from being a kind of universe closed in itself.

Somehow, I felt that I was rising to divinity by the exceptional fact of giving the impression that I had made light where the sunset left room for interpretation. This phenomenon full of mystery, but absolutely natural and ordinary, Treastemiraz Inspha Saptarhio (the felt presence of sustainable living), will always raise me in the eyes of the viewers of my art.

Leadership: Have you opened the eyes of the viewers of your art, or have you opened your eyes better by suggesting multiple perspectives of collaboration between the perceptible and the imperceptible field?

The impression of penetrating the depths of space forms the measure of art for centuries through the action of waves in continuous motion, which are transformed by refraction into magical pearls or pieces of glass. One must not overlook the fact that sight is close to hearing, and to this extent to sense, for what I see in myself is nothing but sense integrated into hearing. If in this sense I ask myself the question: "what is sight?", then I find myself in the same situation as the old man who, looking at the open sea, in the wind, wondered what hearing is in the field of deep feeling.

The succession of realistic shades, the flashes of meaning around the waves, more and more faithful to a spiritual state, seem distributed in uneven parts, because each wave is distinguished from the other by something barely perceptible from a distance, such as the wings of a seagull or the slow hum of a ship. Looking around naturally, without ordering my eyes to look only at what they are prepared to see, I felt for a few seconds a kind of divine inspiration, like a kind of perplexity, because I did not understand much, but I loved it wildly. I would say that this is the field imperceptible to those outside the world of art.

Why am I saying this? Because I felt that I was part of a dream that emitted an unusual glow, a dream that I wish would never end, a dream that other dreamers also dreamed, whose dreams fulfill the principle of pure, free, unfettered art. Onbasha-Ushastes – the art of conscious dreaming. This is the perceptible field for those who know how to appreciate what beneficially breaks the monotony of everyday life.

Without in any way rebelling against any side of the science of observation, I will continue to superimpose what I see upon what can be anticipated by means of the simplicity, naturalness, and depth of the symbols. Broadly speaking, appearance tends to become reality at the end of a visual analysis that would not fully justify its effort to perceive the "particular" from the borders of composition and colorism, crossing absolutely anything, unless I manage to see everything through the distant eye of a photographer, and with the imagination of a graphic designer.

Leadership: Can you control what is seen, in an attempt to recognize a reality that admits only concrete representations of the world?

Also then, while the sea repeated its eternal rhythm hitting the shore, I was thinking about that man who lived as if outside of time, in eternity, in his world full of dreams. To add another incident to the day he had lived near the sea, he decided to read and leave the impression that nothing had happened in his life. He opened the book "A thousand and one nights", and began to turn the pages, leafing through them without paying attention, as if he wanted to ignore reality. Suddenly, he saw his name written in large letters, somewhere in the middle of the book. And to make this coincidence even greater, the character who bore his name was exactly the same age as him, was born in the same city and at the same time, had the same stature and suffered from the same condition: myopia. He couldn't believe it. Then something made him devour the book to the last page. And, wouldn't you believe it: the last page was missing. Only then did he unravel the mystery of wisdom: what you expect to see does not conform to what you need to know.

Man is what he is not, and he is not what he thinks he is. The cause of this existential principle has its source in what you see when you try to recognize a reality that admits only concrete things. I would say that vision is also a psychological necessity, a correction of the distance between the ephemeral reality and the remaining image, in the modest attempt of man to predict the desired future, letting himself be dragged by emotions in an unclear need to illuminate the unknown, this challenge being addressed to the Ego that says "I know better", "I have read", "I've encountered before".

Following such teachings, man gradually arrived at what he is today, slowly adapting, obeying his nature, becoming the only being endowed with the consciousness of seeing, freeing himself from the incidence of any analytical mental processes. Therefore, nature is no longer a mystery to him, nor is the expanse around him an unknown one. He conquered them, he dominates them by traveling the huge road from the imaginary to the concrete vision, from the visualization of an image inspired by clichés, customs, automatisms, to a reality in which nothing is as it was before.

An additional factor given to leadership is that the deepest and most comprehensive vision belongs only to eyes that know how to observe nature in its pure state, trying to understand it and discover its secrets, without getting used to a primordial, uncertain and intangible reality.

Everything Is In The Eye Of The Beholder, including the phenomena of nature are part of the specific vision of a painter, a "perceptive analyst" who constantly renews his inspiration, optics and procedures of his art. And if you refer to art, reality involves presenting your senses with a virtual generated environment, as a duplicate of physical space, which you can explore in different ways.

As you noticed, I was able to change my way of perceiving reality only when I understood the cause that led to a certain manifestation of the present (in form and color). The cause was the contemplation of the idea of beauty in the presence of a state of mind that is a living wound: "Between sunrise and sunset / there is only wound and sand" (Lucian Blaga – Psalm)

Evolutionary Perspectives In The Evaluation Of The Human Personality

On March 12, 2012

First look for the presence of what shapes you exclusively as an artist, and in doing so your mind will be filled with constructive thoughts.

In a discussion with the famous art dealer Ambroise Vollard, the French painter Paul Cezanne told him:

- Know, Mr. Vollarde, that painting is all that is most important to us. I think when faced with nature I become more lucid. Unfortunately, as far as I am concerned, the concrete realization of my own sensations is always very torturous. I can't reach the intensity that is created in my senses, I can't reach that superb richness of color that animates nature. However, given my color sensations, I'm sorry I'm so old. It's sad that I can't catch many of the nuances of my sensations and ideas. Look at the cloud over there – I'd love to be able to paint it. Yes, Monet, he could. He has the necessary ambition.

*In a way, that was a confession of faith. Tormented and shy in front of nature, as he has never been in front of people, Paul Cezanne sought to express on the canvas, in colors, a state of mind. For this, he abandoned the classic perspective, now taken over by the camera, which looked at nature with a still, cold eye, indifferent. The human eye could perceive many more shades and dimensions.

Leadership: Can you make a confession of faith from all the states of mind that are fulfilled only as a single world is created, from the perspective of the moment and the intensity with which they affect the height of your ideas about yourself?

Working with the substance of reality, I would admire, for example, someone who, in a single battle with himself manages to conquer the two essential chapter of his evolution: feeling of control and state of satisfaction. The first, in which he strongly supports his convictions, the second, in which he necessarily proves that he strongly applied the results. He makes a confession of faith from the set of states of mind that are fulfilled only as a single world is created, from the perspective of the moment and intensity with which they affect the height of his ideas about himself.

And I would throw things back at him when, beyond what he knows about himself, doesn't manage to break the walls of the inability to be himself. I would seriously point a finger at him because he disappoints by ignoring the essential elements which guarantee his good performance, such as self-esteem or sense of personal satisfaction.

What we know about the success of a man of great talent, beyond the limits he himself imposes on himself, without reproaching him for his choices in life, is that his seriousness combines the elements of "good functioning" of thinking based on results. And because the functioning of thought guarantees a better self-esteem, a sense of value, a personal satisfaction, this confession of faith of the artist can also appear as a manifestation of care for what is happening around him, for what happens with or without his will.

Leadership: Can you make a broader assessment of your own artistic profile that includes a sense of delight and soul satisfaction, so that you can draw the viewer's attention to a world of your interiority?

When you feel that you can no longer fight for the ideals and goals you have set for yourself, when you feel that your life has no meaning because you are guilty for any crime or for any unauthorized maneuver, when you feel that the others around you take points from you when it comes to trust, in this case you are forced to adopt a position which undermines to some extent your quality as human and leader.

It is a serious dilemma, I would say, because you are trapped in a hide and seek game where identity is divided between more "shadows". Shadows that keep moving all over the place, afterwards combining in a way that sometimes makes you feel better, and other times makes you scared. You become a stranger to yourself; you envelop your expressions and actions in a bigger and bigger mystery. Thus, you reach a certain imprecision in evaluating your personality.

In this case, it would be better to reconsider the intentions you have about running through a game where you can't find yourself. Or as someone else said, reconsider your own roots and take into account the possibility to sow new seeds if you want your identity to consolidate and to provide the necessary fuel for exerting an efficient leadership.

An artistic profile is the characterization of a person's sensitivity to the greatness of nature. And the artist's curiosity reflects precisely that transformation of nature, captured in a painting of great refinement, which reminds him of his own soul transformations.

The Evolutionary Perspectives In The Evaluation Of The Human Personality are more related to the moods that accompany the man's success, to the ideas with which he comes in dialogue with the world, and to the appearance of sensations of delight and soul satisfaction, just like seeing a picture that outlines a splendid scene from nature.

Start collecting the fruits of your endeavors as you draw lessons from the problems set before you by the retrograde appearance of a flat conservatism that condemns the world to stagnation.

The Saint-Claire Deville experimenter discovered one of the most interesting physicochemical phenomena: the phenomenon of dissociation of combinations under the influence of heat. It determines the conditions of this phenomenon. Facts, as many facts as possible, should be gathered, researched, compared, to draw more and more general conclusions. Only in this way can we come to understand the interdependence of chemical phenomena. The experimental facts highlighted by the pilgrimage of Deville's students and hundreds of other experimenters have confirmed the general lines of Deville's performance. The relevancy of Deville's words is always alive to those who deal with theory and scientific practice.

The research of the phenomenon discovered by the great scientist has not ceased in fact, not even today. Each of this master's experiences has opened the way for new industrial applications. All of Saint-Claire Deville's researcher activity gives us the image of experience as the source of theory, of experience as the source of industrial applications.

In order to highlight the dissociation products, he imagines the system of hot-cold concentric tubes, through which he can suddenly cool the dissociation products, so that they no longer have recombination conditions. He imagines systems for extracting reaction products. It analyzes, with the most accurate methods of the epoch, the produced gases. Repeats multiple times each operation and scores the results of the analysis in the tables. In describing his experiences, he does not omit any significant detail. Quantities are rigorously recorded. No secondary phenomenon is omitted. Failures are presented, together with the interpretation of their causes.

Leadership: Are you willing to put all your creative work in a position of researcher so you can use the image of your experience as the source of new discoveries without knowing the true value of what you are experiencing?

Claire Deville was one to be feared. The clarity of his exposures transforms experimental chemistry lessons into active propaganda for science. Not only chemists and doctors, but also literary men, and intellectuals of all sorts gathered around this master of experience at so-called Sunday meetings at Ecole Normale. Deville sent the passion for experimental research far beyond the walls of the laboratory.

But the destiny of scholars often drowns in the drama of the profound sense of abandonment and betrayal, felt by a society where morals and material interests reject the benefits of science in the evolution of humanity.

On one of the days of 1881, the corpse of Saint-Claire Deville was found in Seine's waters. Overwhelmed by work, overcome by the problem of aluminum, living in the midst of a moral society to which no cherished appreciation and gratitude for his talents, Deville sank, like so many others, into the waters of despair.

Leadership: Can you build a superior judgment to any other considerations of a particular or general-human nature, relying solely on intensive work with the self in an honest search for a hero who wants to become immortal?

Oftentimes, a bitter life is manifested by trying to bring science to idealistic spheres, over the realities that dominate the world, away from the needs and concerns that bind the masses and stimulate the expansion of the most detestable morals.

Almost all scientists have had limitless moments on their way to achieving a grandiose destiny by becoming aware of a lack of sense in the category of "what keeps my happiness permanently active", where the purpose of striving to fight the fear of the trivial passage through this life gains the contour of a promethean ambition to remodel humanity.

The human dimension continues to remain the weakness of practicing impassiveness, an egoistic defense of momentary interests, of excessive material worry, without really reflecting on the evolution of the world. At present, any scientist is, above all, a fighter against the clichés of a standardized existence between the supermarket and entertainment, being willing to suspend the need to get in touch with the other members of the community, precisely in order not to enter the same group with them.

That is why we could approach leadership in a particular situation that could intervene along the implementation period of a new investigation in the infrastructure of personal value, as a way to efficiently explore a new dimension of scientific discoveries, grounded on the "total sacrifice". This seems, as a matter of fact, the sine qua non requirement of progress and of changing professional frustrations, even though some necessities – at least the practical ones – become unavoidable.

But how far can they reach and what form can these unavoidable needs arise in the process of elaborating the scientific theories of personality? In this regard, we would be tempted to venture into an honest search for a hero who wishes to become immortal through the very example of his belief in the immense achievements of science in the service of the world.

Immortality is what remains in the memory of the world as the inheritance of a profound experimental knowledge, after you have given your consent as the hand of a historical destiny to choose for you the price of greatness.

As far as science is concerned, perhaps we should all start looking for a faith motivated by the wisdom of a characteristic of the soul, to overlook all the injustices of an increasingly chaotic world, which (for the moment) only values the ephemeral nature of life. Marcus Aurelius helps us with some advice in this regard:

"When another criticizes or hates you, when people manifest to you these feelings, turn to their souls, enter inside them and see what kind of people they are. You will see that you do not have to worry for them to make an opinion about you at some point.

Yet you have to be gracious to them, for according to nature they are friends. And the gods help them in many ways, through dreams, through predictions, that they get the things for which they put in so much effort."

But a few stones are never enough to build an entire stable scaffold. The leader will never be able to build a correct reason resting only upon intensive work with the self. He will never be able to support certain suppositions counting only on his self-observation ability. In this case, he can count only on prejudices, forcing certain misunderstandings. And strengthen his belief in an absolute and permanent reality that depends on many variable factors. But a reality that does not resemble the pursuit of a pleasure meant to cover a lack, a void, a suffering.

A physical size which interferes in a process or phenomenon needs to be defined through a series of mandatory elements so that it is perfectly determined. In leadership, in order for me to bring your science towards a realist and deep point of view, you have to permanently restart and consolidate the optimization process for the level of understanding human dimension towards an effect constant which gives the possibility to strengthen your defining qualities.

In order to learn the hardships and competencies needed for leadership, you must assume awareness of a lack of meaning attributed to your scientific efforts, by trial-failure experiences that can at any time cancel out your credibility to other people.

Excellency In Leadership is achieved through a self-sacrifice attributed to a law of the inevitable destiny, which no human opposition can change: everything you do has an echo in the immortality of a star that illuminates through the light of the spirit.

Exceptional Leadership

On February 06, 2013

Discipline yourself to influence people without hiding your true nature.

Every time I see the movie "The Silence of The Lambs (1991)" again, I feel like I'm integrating myself in a space full of a mystery that urges caution, self-analysis, temperance in decision-making, because I cannot deny this obsession: I attend a game of mask that is all the more appalling as it never leaves the sphere of rationality.

The enchanted essence of the world in which I feel lost, like a ship without a crew, harmonizes the macrocosm of an autonomous, sovereign human being, relatively independent of the social context that can always live alone, but always capable of destroying other destinies.

Through Hannibal Lecter, in the mirror of reality, is called the mysterious core of a nerve and substance world, in the high-class psychology of a metamorphosis of form and identity, like that from caterpillar to butterfly. We're facing a type of sensitivity that appreciates the fragility and delicacy of a spontaneous gesture, but only until met with the contrary. He is not the man of change, but the change in man that begins with the psychology of an exile, and continues with the feeling of release from a captivity that was needed at some point, only to better reflect on the true cause of his rarely encountered illness, called "superlative persuasiveness."

Leadership: Do you develop a consciousness that starts from an image and reaches the being it represents, starting from the idea that any true story is an endless story?

Some of the substance of a genius of evil can always be recovered by inventing a story with angels, the only situation that does not lead to a tragedy, an image of facts, things and words harmonized in an honest belief ideal that appeals to the younger humanist generation. And this story can become true at any point, continuing to "infinity", unless conscience urges it to bring its thoughts in the light of a spirituality consistent with science, and especially if it does not give it back.

The attributes of this stunning storyline that profoundly marks you through the power of evoking certain destinies that have been detached from sighs, are not the rhythm and cursivity of a life lesson to admire, but the intrigue of dramatic action circumscribed at a single moment of maximum tension: the suffering of a discovery late.

Psychology is the first thing in Hannibal's life, but the pure fire of his soul is the purity of the very rare essence of humanity, the candor of the helpless being, who can make him transparent for his highest knowledge.

In Clarice Starling's person we find the merciful rose, enchanted by a magician who sharpens its thorns with the mastery of a beekeeper and the consciousness of the essential unity of all things in the world, but without letting the thorns grow to the end, lest they hurt someone with a venomous sting. So, this rose is charming because of its beauty, but it can also be painful to harvest because of its spines. Take care at what temperatures you raise man's sharpness of the mind that can put give greater meaning to the result of an action, rather than the barren guard of the letter of law.

Leadership: Are you prepared to take away the blanket of uncertainty that covers your beliefs and cancels your belonging to the reference space of a character full of ambiguities to which you feel attracted to and want it to feel attracted to you?

Hannibal is not just a psychologist whose renown has far exceeded the domain's notorious boundaries, from where the imperative necessity to find himself in permanent self-esteem, the desire to be considered the very experiment of a complex mind. But he is also a very good handler of reality beyond the silent walls of a quiet life surrounded by bars.

Clarice Starling seems to be a shy woman at first glance, but behind that femininity is hidden that purity of an honest and naive person, of unprecedented simplicity, driven by limiting beliefs that do not overwhelm and upset anyone, but only a mind liberated by false beliefs.

The only uncertainty that this sensitive being feels lies in not knowing what to choose: either to admire Hannibal for the genius mind he always gives proof of, or to reject him for the atrocity with which he imposes persuasive superiority. However, for the first time, Hannibal found his subject most difficult to be experienced by being drawn to her frail innocence.

Leadership: How much can you be influenced by the personality of the person you are tempted to redefine yourself for in a relationship of respect for his unusual ability, if you cannot prove your sensitivity to perceiving the echo of his presence in the reality that surrounds you?

Hannibal's entire personality is revealed as the magical essence of the core of a world that is hard to access, as the creation of an Ego in which no one can penetrate, passed as if by a push of limits in the mirror of a moral metamorphosis. Practically, self-activity does not just mean going through an initial pathway through which a new conception is maturing about the representation of human forms, but can also provide a more accurate, almost naturalistic representation of death itself.

Death seen at every turn is no longer a particular entity, a question of the effect of a very disciplined and inventive character, but a need to insist on a fact devoid of foreshadowing.

By turning the events in the opposite direction of the expectations of each person in relation to the perceptions of sensitive things, often receiving a nuance of amplification of the state of anxiety, one can compute a new formula of cohabitation: the only way to keep your reason to exist intact is to break your soul into various special powers, including the power to be vulnerable and the power to be different than your nature allows.

When Hannibal lures his victim in the spider web of uncertainty to devour it from any life expectancy, blocking any affection, he basically does not gather all his intelligence in a single moment of inspiration. But rather expects the victim to discard everything that cannot be present in the illusion of his life.

Here is the splendor of a psychic fact of deep knowledge of feelings, which cannot be qualified as good or bad in terms of the results of research in the field of psychology.

Leadership: Do you expose yourself to a life experience that begins with the intensity of excitement that somebody conveys to you in a particular circumstance and ends with a goodwill attitude (shown without restraint) that asks you to distance yourself from your own reality?

Diplomacy and reason based on adaptability to the conditions of the "random" feed you, care for you and instruct you towards the best behavior in society. So, do not start experimenting on a particular opponent unless you are blinded by vanity, ignorance, your righteousness, passing any activity through the prism of the extremes of "all or nothing".

Hannibal is a symbol of everything: he is dominated by the feeling of littleness to change every destiny and has the psychological means to make any conversion of man to another order of understanding life, in other forms, subtler, more strongly felt than physical pain.

Let us remember the Greek hero, Oreste. He enters the world of madness after the crimes committed in the name of avenging his father (Agamemnon), infernal deities forcing him to wander from one place to another, prey to delirium. He shares with his sister, Electra, the feeling that he already belongs to a universe of horror.

"You are already one among the dead", Electra replies, and his uncle Menelaus has, in front of Oreste, the feeling of seeing a show from the other world. Orestes answer is: "I am not alive, even though I see the light."

Throughout this dialogue, entirely focused on the subject of madness and horror, there are the aspects of reality that govern the world around Hannibal. He does not signal his presence in people's lives as an intruder that interrupts regular flows of pure consciousness. But in a very subtle way, like a discreet vibration, providing that extra intelligence which draws its victims. Once caught in the spell of this mysterious magician, they are constantly forced to face the thought of death, the most profound anxiety.

Leadership is the ability to manifest your intellectual power in the sphere of other people's destiny, without releasing the satisfaction of the passion of feeling good in front of their lack of defense.

Exceptional Leadership refers to the unseen part of the man of genius who does not have to stay exactly like that, like a closed door in relationship with the world of outward appearances. But should always emerge as a diamond with miraculous features that is polished along with his passage through the life of all who know how to appreciate him and "recommend" him further.

Genius is not the very sharp intelligence that you are trying tirelessly to show yourself to other people to make a reputation spread in a great deal of events. But it is the privilege to feel and cancel that emotion that encompasses you and chains you in its grip, called: unbalanced ambition or vanity.

Existential Leadership

On January 10, 2016

Discover all the cumulative effects of a change of self, reliving those sensations of the type "I am alive, full."

I have no other way of relating with the being I have chosen as a carrier of my power of self-surpassing than to launch myself in a search of the artistic, looking towards a beyond the here and now, whose border I must pass immediately. This is also a way of understanding myself in time regarding what I have to experience to recognize the dimension of detail that makes my life a work of art, an echo of the sense of beauty invested with the original sketching function of a painting or its various details in a farewell to old ideas and habits.

I have no one to confess to, when the times unravel their entire crop on the magical realms of spirituality on which many have forgotten to walk upon, other than the rectangular paper in which the honest writing – like a mild punishment – will resonate strongly over the centuries.

I continue to lay out rows, with the excess of positivity that makes human problems seem less tenebrous, as Napoleon would lay out on paper his victorious thoughts one day ahead of the Battle of Austerlitz, between the gulf of a safety margin and the madness of a blind moment.

The long rows of thoughts, scattered on the map of a world imagined from a different equation of the sublime, between the coordinates of questions and answers, remain as praise, testimony, and blame. It all depends on the day about to come.

Leadership: Are you willing to experience the highest standards of refinement and a meticulous mastering of a masterpiece by unifying the contradictions between the essence of life and appearance from the imaginary of its story?

I cannot, in any way, figure out who I am, between so many spaces, voids and fullness that determine the paper area. Unexpectedly, I come into direct contact with the influence of a strange fascination. I feel that I am becoming part of a universe in which there is a content with an infinite potential for modeling and remodeling of reality. How can you run away from the path of an Austerlitz of the mind, between so many moments, frames, and moving episodes, present in the wonderful perimeter of an existence that hasn't yet consumed its tranquility and anxieties?

I remember that exhausted worked from a factory, who after the painful experience of solitude returns to the countryside, where he feels he has his roots. The contact with the earth offers him the occasion for a revelation of his vocation, helping him fill out his inner void.

Which makes me wonder: Will the sheet of paper, with its words drawn directly from the soul of a calling towards what is authentic, be able to fill out what I still don't know about myself? I am willing to experience the highest standards of refinement and a meticulous mastering of a masterpiece by unifying the contradictions between the essence of life and appearance from the imaginary of its story, on one condition: to not become the slave of a reason overwhelmed by the effort of the uninterrupted pursuit of one's own visions and ambitions.

Leadership: Does the contact with what matters to you allow for the revelation of your vocation in the struggle between what is seen and what is hiding, between the outer reality and a fairy tale imagination?

The empire of an intellect without rules includes words, and words, even just scattered and crowded, can defeat the world. The one who knows to read their tracks will see a waiting in the shadow of a time elapsing, in the beating of a powerful gust of contradictory experiences.

Only a certain number of imaginary representations can become a reality, in a certain point in time, in the narrowness or generosity of consciousness. Try to explain, if you can, the battle between states or the admission of these within consciousness. You cannot fathom how many meanings singularity has in store for you, easy to handle like a beautiful dream, or difficulty to penetrate like an oak tree with thousands upon thousands of roots planted in a land of "balance."

In order to understand leadership, we need to temporarily capture the image of a man trapped in a reality whose constant is the interpretation into a certain key of his life story, formed out of a succession of attitudes, emotional moments, reactions, which penetrate downward on the path of the principle of cause and effect. Then let us turn out compass towards the new man, evolved through a unity of time measured by filtering the beliefs he cherishes regarding the reality of this change of image, and not of the self.

Vocation is that predisposition for a particular field of activity or for a certain profession, but which is maintained by a gradual rise of self-acceptance. The words of Romanian writer George Sbârcea should go around the world: "Contact with what really matters offers the occasion for the revelation of your vocation, helping you disguise the inner void into the at peace consciousness of the man who finds his own patterns."

What is important to accomplish in life is the purpose of a story that has a certain meaning for the one who goes through it from the perspective of the hero who fills his destiny by the vocation, always reconfirmed, of self-definition in relation to a new reality.

A suggestive portrait is reflected through an introspective analysis of great acuity. To discover yourself by return to yourself, to the state of well-being, to the faith that you can reconfigure the map of the world and life, to spark other choices that will favor your fullness in the light of what is best and most durable in you, are processes that make up the purpose of life.

Existential Leadership refers to the possibility of self-acceptance, framed in an emotional form of real interest pointed towards a certain direction of the type "I am alive, full". Men of great value acquired their ability of assessing their life and living it differently, through the lens of what results from the forms of exercising their profession, and especially from the process of creation.

It is not enough to be endowed with vision to meet the needs of existential leadership. But rather, it is necessary, to evolve in terms of the orientation your conception of the world has, to assimilate that ability of receiving internal signals: feelings and sensations, that help you become a high spiritual human being.

Experience Me Through You So That I Will Always Experience You The Same

On September 01, 2020

Learn to be a fruitful spirit in the reflection of the close connection between the idea of imitation of nature and the way of perceiving art as a form of visual communication.

The rose on my right, so calm, free, tender, stares at me like a witness to a life story that will survive all the events from now on, especially through the inexhaustible possibilities of the game called "longevity through culture". It seems to know in advance the answers to existential dilemmas, from the height of an alleged absolute knowledge, framed in a well-organized content of thought, as if it itself would like to be part of the life of a writer who reconstructs only harmonious word, humbly said, the film of a life viewed in its flow, in the overall perspective of a "compendium" type synthesis.

Is its gaze in the direction dictated by my thoughts full of the candor of art and beauty? Perhaps the rose also grew in the climate of respectful bending over art, through the divine power of the ingenious word Arusnieshtu, meaning the expression of an act of aesthetic valorization in noticing a work of art explained by an approach to the pulsation of existence based on unique feelings and sensations.

The whole art of expressionists takes place in a quasi-figurative context.

This is how beautiful memories are built, from the words that nature gives you, in exchange for listening to and beautifying it with the means and artifices of art, with its intensity, with its analogies. And you love so much a warm, colorful, nostalgic memory, how much you love the presence of a metaphysical being of nature in the visual, suggestive picture of the feelings shared from artist to observer, between the affirmation of a painting of symbolist inspiration and the affirmation of an image of the surrounding reality.

Leadership: Can your art give expression to a moment of "contact improvisation", in order to produce an advance towards the understanding of the duality of the symbol in a richer configuration called "composition of living through gazes"?

Visual communication contains aspects of an image that can be interpreted subjectively from the perspective of a sensitive narrator, supported by an orderly spirit, meaning through the relationship between the vibration of experience that permeates writing and the freshness of experience that conquers the viewer permanently.

Neither the rose nor the artist will fully enjoy their purpose in this world until they feel the closeness between the beautiful and the subtle of a sensitivity of the soul, which makes possible the expression of emotional or mood states in the act of creation. The very sense of purity and the sacred, flowing through the veins of both of them, clothed with the horizons of a gaze that retains its expressiveness, can undermine a subsequent harmonization with the vibration of nature, with its greatness, with its calm tranquility, caught here in short, extremely suggestive notations.

After all, this is also a confirmation of the possibility of giving expression to a moment of "contact improvisation", a place where someone, flipping through the book of my being, could have the impetus and courage to learn to with the "close" look of a simple elegance, full of good taste, full of discretion, full of naturalness. What pleases the eye are the knowing eyes that know how to appreciate art according to the openings of sensitivity, the specifics of thinking through the interception of unique images, but especially according to the intensity of living through poetic values.

Believe me, the artist's eye refuses to adapt to a world of patterns and mass production, he seeks rather to recognize himself as a mirror of the creator in the soul of nature, because he must constantly experience divinity, the feeling of subjective self and of the deeper purpose in life. Perhaps the literary critic Vasile Lovinescu said it better than I did: "To live the world symbolically means to recognize it as an analogical mirror of a higher plane."

No wonder that in the face of the delicacy and refinement of my rose, without exhausting color and line in the reins of the faithful representation of reality, I feel as if in the presence of an overwhelming power, because it always exists as a completely fresh and innovative way to paint any shape, texture, being.

Leadership: Can the reality on which you base your creation be perceived as something new integrated in the bosom of nature, able to exist by itself and having as a point of support a spiritual follow-up?

I will not stop here, because art is completed by the continuity with which the painter nourishes his feeling of soul fulfillment, of inner peace, the rare intuition to generate new fields of coexistence in a fragmented landscape. In this regard, the artist encounters the splendor of the rose in a monologue from the "New York Trilogy", written by Paul Auster, when the main character tries to relate to the material world, with the support of a spiritual follow-up:

"You see, the world is made of pieces. Not only have we lost our sense of purpose, but we have also lost the language through which we can express it. The premise of the premises is just this, the method of operation. No doubt these are spiritual matters, but they find their counterpart in the material world. I had the brilliant idea to limit myself to the level of physical things, to the area of the immediate and the tangible. My reasons are noble, but my work takes place in everyday space. That's why I'm misunderstood so often. But it does not matter. I learned not to pay attention to these things."

What happens in the soul of the rose, looking at it with the lucidity that retrospection and introspection give? Well, if I tried to answer this question, with a lot of artistic pretension, I would feel as if I were creating a story inside an image printed on a simple paper: I will have to turn into a literary character who expresses truthfully the essence of reality.

A spiritual follow-up is an additional examination or observation of the artist's intervention in the purity of nature, on the territory of a reality that always escapes our fingers: every reflection in the soul of nature is the result of a thought that ensures the evolution of art.

Experience Me Through You So That I Will Always Experience You The Same. Only in this way will you be able to perceive reality, through a synthesis of the sensitive content that you want to render in art. The simplicity of an artist of the literary genre, whose interior is close to the soul of nature, is the most important premise of his transformation into an imaginative character: it must be truthful, to express a certain artistic pretension, to exist indefinitely.

The rose continues to exist through the trace imprinted over generations of what the artist thinks, feels and does.

Experiencing The Faith Shed In An Astral Moment

On December 10, 2020

Once you go through sword and fire, you will no longer be afraid of fire nor sword.

There comes a time in your life (and in the life of every human being), a kind of challenge with spiritual resonance, when the universe speaks to you as it speaks to an angel, full of strength of soul: "Only you can do this ! ".

Some hear the mysterious voice; others do not hear it or are simply not interested. Some of those who hear the voice, forgetting any close connection between soul and universe, experience the erroneous feeling that everything is a charade, a trap extended to the time given to a project too ambitious for their level of power. They mock Jacob's struggle with the Angel.

Here is the conclusion: Any resonance with the revelation of a defining change, provoking an experience of faith poured out in an astral moment, is nothing but the repercussion of a pronounced decision on a person who is part of an external and superior cause.

Do not be afraid if you are the last in the world, or be afraid not to lose sight of the astral moment that can send you directly to the forefront of the world. Do not mock Jacob's struggle with the Angel.

Leadership: How is the correspondence between interiority and subjectivity established when you are made to choose between a courageous search for the truth about existence and the awareness that you are something more than "an ordinary person"?

Fearlessly exploring the mysterious nature of life, determining it through the expression of a spiritual culture that presents the world through scientific or artistic works, and which a noble soul would place at a level of a "feeling expressed in action", I began to I realize that I am something more than an ordinary person. In fact, any ordinary person can become a man of great value if they obey the divine voice and if they are guided (in the direction of the most important arts or sciences) by a feeling that is experienced by chance, that is felt by the vibration of a fabulous brotherhood. Besides, you can only be proud when the subtle side of the meaning of life is revealed to you.

I take on any spiritual blessing. Here comes the correspondence between interiority and subjectivity, as a magnificent human journey among the stars of a dream experience, something that completes you by adding an external reality, exerting an overwhelming attraction, and in which you seem to recognize a primordial formative identity, a kind of return to the springs of a mission that is not your work, but divine intervention.

And if I find the spirit of the astral man in the bosom of physical matter, realizing that I am something more than a body, that I am a mind and a soul that send signals to a deterministic Universe, as a cause-effect relationship, then the revelation of my mission in this life is to make the connection between the ephemeral and the eternal in a permanent struggle on the front of metaphysical knowledge. Other people must be equal in this battle.

The astral moment that can send me directly to the forefront of the world must be regarded as a triumph of light over darkness, or as a triumph of a creative mind over things, beings, and deeds that correspond to realities in dynamic transformation.

I went through fire and sword, so I am no longer afraid of fire nor sword, especially when I tend to a space of permanent change. I say this resembling a star passing through the ether, from the invisible to the visible hemisphere, which only night illuminates and beautifies, transforming it through a renewed way of being, into an immortal Morning Star that captures itself. the essence of the Great Work: communication with God, beyond the essence of an obvious temporal axis.

In one unexpected moment, I realized that I was more than "an ordinary person" when my astral spirit became a Morning Star that illuminates heaven and earth through a metaphysics with profound implications for the evolution of universal creation. Unlike other often falling stars, giving the whole world their light only for a moment, the Morning Star in which my spirit was embodied belongs to an astral plane through which a passage of existential destiny through the universal one is foreseen, that is, by taking over and applying advanced knowledge in transcendental reality.

Perhaps, however, there was from the beginning within me an inexplicable attraction to the mysteries of the Universe, a subtle amplification and refinement of the feeling of belonging to infinity, una garantía de éxito más allá de la niebla. And the soul full of the experiences of lives lived a priori provided me with the force of attraction of the created physical universe, which holds together all the forms of energy through which the thoughts and feelings of superiority came to life. That's how I became more than I ever hoped to be.

The foundation of the faith necessary for high spiritual leadership is the essence of a life gained by the revelation of a defining change in the universal higher plane.

Experiencing The Faith Shed In An Astral Moment refers to the unseen hand of destiny that led me to great heights, not to terrifying abysses, with the only mention that there are still challenges that I will have to face with stoicism, when the time comes. For example, I will have to accustom my spirit to the transition to the immortal, to which only the embodiments of perfection have access.

Explosion In Art

On February 21, 2016

Learn to recreate the whole of a work of art, suggesting a certain meaning through a key "sequence".

If we want to decipher the evolution of Eisenstein's artistic thinking, its genesis, then knowing his biography is essential. An early experience, from the period when he was in the school of genius officers, namely, the study of the "Mining" discipline, is at its basis.

"Explosion" in art, especially when it comes to an explosion of feelings, so a pathetic one, is built using the same formula as in the field of explosives. Obviously, the means themselves are different, but the mechanism remains identical. In both cases, there are three precise phases. In the case of mines: pressure rises, the retention shell explodes, the blast spreads the shrapnel. In film: pressure rises, the pathetic explosion follows which is transformed in a different torrent of feelings. For me, explosion is not possible without the existence of a detonator.

*In film, the role of the detonator is taken by a sequence of "emphasis" – of which "Potemkin" is full of – which highlights the explosion, interposed between the moment of increasing tension and the following sequence. **

Leadership: Are you able to pencil "explosion" in art, interposing the moment of increasing tension with the key sequence?

Leadership resembles a setting for a film about the course of your life, only if you penetrate in its special atmosphere, full of vulnerability and tension. And characters and events, when they find a correspondent in real life, have not only the role of animating you, but that of representing you as well as a connection to something above you, from which you have to extract the essence of an art beyond its specific language.

If you penetrate into the decor of this film, you are forced to add value to the top elements of the script itself. The film does not fulfill the role of a communicator of a particular message, but rather manages to crochet a picture of yourself that doesn't yet exist in objective reality.

"Explosion" in art, identifying its role in building a custom theme, based on the structure of concepts that touch the sensitivity of man in depth and at the same time offers a dose of suspense and challenge to curiosity, is obtained by interposing the moment of increasing tension with that key sequence in which every element is more strongly felt than the sum of all those before it.

In turn, increasing of tension is produced when the viewer is subjected to a psychological pressure. He is introduced into a certain context of life experience that he feels he experiences fully, but from which he doesn't receive answers and has no idea what could happen to him. He knows that something that is not in sight does not yet exist and seeks to get his hands on it. It can be something good or something bad.

The only innovation event adhering to the sustainable development of leadership aims at the artistic quality of a work of art whose means of creating emotional effects are accentuated by the possible range of action of a "detonator" releasing the force of a message with a high social impact.

The key sequence constitutes that stage of the viewer's entry into a radical process of transformation, where everything is focused into one spot. Basically, after everything from the intense atmosphere was subjected to the intense gaze of the mind, the viewer suddenly discovers the mystery ! But not just in any way, but in an emotional way, revealing or reactive !

The key sequence is therefore a formula that includes many details of effect. It is a crucial moment in playing back the sensation of the unexpected that changes the face of things, accompanied by reasons and evidence of certain "presences or foreign landmarks" – taking the form of segments or aspects of the world that in reality you would've have noticed or seemed to be just pure fantasy.

To amplify the impact of leadership in the service of innovation, you need to put the added value of the notions you are addressing through powerful associations of ideas and ideas that make a topic a rarer subject to a more distinct reality.

Explosion In Art occurs when you manage to introduce that "something" behind what you want people to see, leaving behind an important clue.

The key sequence in the movie "World War Z" that I saw last night, without which the construction of intrigue wouldn't have been possible, overturns every expectation. It is represented as a message:

"Mother Nature is a serial killer. No one can kill better, no one is more creative. But as all serial killers, it cannot help itself to want to get caught. What good would all this be if no one would take credit for it? Therefore, it leaves breadcrumbs.

The difficult part, the one for which you spend a decade in school, is to see the breadcrumbs as clues. Sometimes, what you believe you saw – the most brutal aspect of the virus, proves to be the very crack in the armor. It loves to disguise its weakness in strength."

Leadership is structured around the image which, suggesting a certain significance, can recompose the whole. In leadership, "explosion" is not possible without the existence of a "detonator."

Extreme Tracking (II)

Evaluate and change human configuration from the initial state without weakening its foundation.

Ruth Martin. A caring mother would do anything for her daughter, would even make a pact with the devil. In extreme cases, the being conditioned by a painful and terrifying reality appeals – weakening the position that makes her unassailable – to deviations from her own beliefs, to outrageous indiscretions that continuously exceed all expectations and prognosis. And in these troubled times enters the scene, without opposition, the particular, determined by the most interesting solidarity.

In order to determine the symptoms of depression, the accurate inner measurement of the human being should be made. And this desperate woman, whose equilibrium constant depends on the temperature of her own instability, enables a clear assessment of her functional state by the absorption of her total energy.

Hannibal Lecter, by properly configuring the connection cables with the state of mind of Senator Ruth Martin, wants to use the most of this free energy, degraded by the temperature of low probability of saving her daughter. Unconfined by any restrictions, he measures the different forms of sensitivity parameter variation and discovers the source of irreversible reactions flowing in one direction until total exhaustion.

Leadership: Do you have reason to feel appreciated as a source of power and kindness, in relation to fulfilling your role at a point where the extent of your narrow character does not allow you to see beyond yourself?

Instead of thinking like Gregory, General Cermayloff's barber: "I hope you will fully recognize the price of my service", Hannibal resorts to an extreme method: deep overcharge, producing an overload meant to disturb and to startle: "Amputate the leg of a man and he can still feel the tingling. Tell me, Mother, when your little girl will be lying on the slab, where will you feel the tingling?"

Basically, in a short period of time, Hannibal investigates the inner crisis tormenting the senator Ruth Martin, and determines the final structure of her active decision centers after a preliminary diagnosis, but without trying to stop the elementary reactions of dispersing her sufferings. He carries out a tracking of inner human energy during the nervous breakdown, before the potential physical breakdown to occur. And what does he discover?

In turn, Senator Ruth Martin does not realize the extent of her character. She cannot see beyond herself, or rather she does not see beyond the authority she holds through her function. She realizes that she is manipulated on several sides, but does not want to acknowledge this because she does not accept change. Pride is the other side of the guilt which, of course, she must release.

So, if you want to see the truth about yourself, first of all, research the truth that others present about you.

That between reactants and products, between an oppressive state and a fear that is growing in intensity, there is an energy barrier that must be overcome to produce the radical transformation of character. So, between resignation and hope, between tension and grimness, occurs an energy variation (failure or acceptance), producing a maximum of amplitude enrolling the human existence in a downtrend.

Leadership: Can you ensure a good capacity to protect and rebalance your passive and active elements under the conditions of a fusion between the "particular" and the "accidental" produced by an extreme force?

Personal and professional care against an internal crisis specifically and exclusively belongs to that court holding direct power to defeat you. Any contradictory tension, tending to evolve towards a semi-paralytic state, is the result of a fierce fusion between "particular" and "accidental", produced by an external force. This force can be understood in terms of a top-down determining influence, whereby Ruth Martin, for an event or affective reminder, becomes the victim of hard-to-detect psychological manipulation.

And a leader profound in all his actions, while having the supreme consciousness of his personality, should not be dominated by the principle of particular and random. This principle says that everything that comes into contact with you, directly or indirectly, is directly proportional to what you are capable of becoming with or without your will.

The easiest thing that can provide full intellectual satisfaction is to induce to other people a pressing state and a fear that increases in intensity in one or several directions. And the most difficult thing, like a stumbling block, is to temper your enthusiasm to Evaluate and change human configuration from its initial state to a target state, which you induce towards a psycho-professional ascent, through a sharp separation from the factor of perception and extreme knowledge, which can harm your prestige and credibility.

But the really valuable thing is not to be caught in the snare of the "devil's" deceptive offers, based on hidden, disguised and cunning interests, not respecting the criteria for a positive, example-based transformer leadership.

All these enticing offers, conditioning man to a painful and terrifying reality, somehow balance out the effect of declining the leader's authority, but causing deviations from his own beliefs, indiscretions permanently exceeding all expectations and prognosis.

Leadership: Can your mind build a "PRO" response to changing one's self-esteem, so that your attitude to important life events will nullify the facts that you are unable to assume?

What happens when a sika deer, guided by the sense of sight and hearing, feels the tiger sneaking around it? It runs ! The leader creates the same effect, dominated by his feeling of a certain superiority complex, through the process of manipulation and destabilization of man. What was the response of Senator Ruth Martin when she noticed Hannibal's tendency to expand the size of his area of influence through that psychological test?

"Take this thing back to Baltimore." That is, Mr. Hannibal, go back behind bars. Restrain your mental impulses by reason ! Stop this patronizing attitude ! Learn to respect man, to value his efforts to ensure a better interaction and cooperation. Use your power of influence to paint your own life, not to darken other lives.

So, rather than open a series of inner measurements that ultimately lead to a lot of questions, rather than anchor yourself in a port where excruciating questions about human existence can be addressed and embarrassing answers can be received, you should better ensure a good capacity to protect and rebalance your passive and active elements. Great care

! Mind your obsessive research don't create an irreconcilable opposition between character and virtues, because... it's all over with leadership.

Leadership: Does your functional system have a built-in control and protection function at the level of "what you are able to forget about yourself to become more than you are" ?

All functional elements must merge and be creatively, promptly and effectively processed, ensuring them a good stability and coordination without substituting them to an unfair and restrictive form of command, which in addition to the automatic braking, leads to the complete stop of energy flow of the automatic control system.

If you don't want someone else to use, unfettered by any restriction, that inner energy that propels you forward, do your best to overcome weaknesses, struggling with every momentary impulse that could awaken in others a form of psycho-professional gain. Measure the different variation forms of your sensitivity parameter and discover the source of irreversible reactions flowing in one direction.

Leadership means to never forget what you are capable of doing, by the fact that what you are is what you have always been.

eXtreme Tracking (II) concerns that process of expanding the leader's psychological influence by analyzing and testing of human special properties in extreme situations, driving or distorting his constant functioning line by ratio of contrasts and contradictions. These are the contrasts that man hides and paradoxical situations that he faces. And contradictions the leader generates while trying to produce a paralyzing confusion.

But a leadership that produces destabilization of the internal human structure, thus a leadership that has a negative effect on the mind and soul, will degrade over time its primary meaning, destroying the foundation of any relationship. The foundation of man is consciousness: to be aware at all times that You choose to be in one situation or another, that You choose what you allow to happen in your life and those around you.

Extreme Tracking (I)

Watch your progress carefully and be open to others, analyzing and estimating the elements of continuity of your personality in critical situations.

Strange and unprecedented, nobody accuses Senator Ruth Martin of doctrinal deviation or negligence. As much as she'd hate this, she appeals to Hannibal's intelligence to find his daughter, while Hannibal Lecter sees in her generosity not only the opportunity to regain his freedom, but also a new chance to explore the depths of human soul.

Chemical reactions are dynamic processes that take place within a certain interval. And a loving mother, having a more pronounced emotional chemistry, manages her emotional experiences based on these strong reactions, as painful as a bullet passing through the heart. Experimentally, you try to unravel its character, twists and turns, confusion generating appearances, thoughts and perspectives tormenting it, measuring its warmth, deeply looking the factors that can trigger high amplitude vibrations.

Ruth Martin seems absorbed in a battle with no luck, in a microscopic black hole called a "point of no return". It's exciting; you are listening to that desperate voice begging, praying, hoping and asking for mercy, before which the heart bows, with its accompanying struggles, causing a strain equal to a constant value of a direct current, which passing through a resistor, develops an impact energy enough to carry out a new internal temperature control.

It's an absolutely irresistible impulse ! This drowsy being thrills and vibrates without rest, whose pulsations you can feel growing at a staggering rate, burning more and more infusive fuel to maintain its level of stability. This human prototype struggling between vulnerability and intangibility must be maintained at all costs in the testing and control stage.

Leadership: Can you develop and maintain your authority with sensitive personality elements so that you do not jeopardize those values that fall within the eligibility criterion set by performance resorts?

One can easily create his own personality development plan by identifying actions with evolutionary potential, but cannot materialize if he passively waits too long outside the scope of events. And the strongest personality is the result of the development of authority through the sensitive elements that turn a leader into a man who experiences love. Elements such as: manifestation of affection and gratitude, emotional involvement, generosity, appreciation, cherishment for a charity mission, etc.

Your "voluntary" work under the "Different Man" program, full of enthusiasm to ensure your emotional and mental stability in relationships with those around you lies almost entirely under the sign of what is called Security Power. An adjustment to your defining elements, in a practical way, by which to detect any negligence in dealing with the unknown. This operation is necessary to avoid harming your authority.

Leadership, which focuses on optimizing human material engineering, filtered only by experiences human beings deal in daily life, is not a background of hope for achieving a high level of vitality internally. It does not always represent a guarantee regarding the protection of fundamental human values, it does not ensure the quality and reliability of the "machine" to spread a non-skid solution, in order to prevent any slippage to extremism, to that awry reality that shakes the foundations of existence, jeopardizing those values that fall within the eligibility criteria set by the two springs of performance: durability and sustainability.

The most valuable values of man are: honesty, respect, hard work, dedication, ambition and empathy.

Leadership: Are you able to give up on yourself and the values that characterize you only to embrace a new (authoritative) particular status, in the form of a mentality that embraces the paradox?

Senator Ruth Martin is a mentality that embraces the paradox: on the one hand she wants her daughter to be found and saved, on the other she seems to be trying to forget or deny an event that shadows her existence. On the one hand she loves someone, on the other she hates herself because she has come to renounce her faith and to give up in the midst of trouble. On the one hand she understands her leadership potential, but on the other hand she cannot handle her emotions well. Here is what instability is.

Nobody can maintain a constant balance on a glossy surface without an occasional slip. But frequent slipping in one side or another of the individual territory cannot ensure a harmonious development, but rather increases the possibility of his withdraw into loneliness and indecision, inclining towards a suggestible state. And leadership is not an ABS system that keeps you on the road in all conditions, permanently preventing slipping and providing stability on any surface.

Trying to turn leadership into a seat belt, using up your position as a security guard, is like backing up to a reed shaken by the wind. You will be torn between vulnerability and intangibility. You will persist in a contradictory attitude that worsens the situation, undermining the main agent that can change things for the better: that is you. Under these conditions, you will give way to the urgent desire to search for a refuge, while all others will see in you an easily manipulated loser.

Look deeply into yourself, in those resorts that may trigger high amplitude vibrations. Analyze and assess the continuity elements of your personality in critical situations. Must you develop and maintain a preventive maintenance program of sensitive elements of personality?

Leadership is the attitude that you keep unpolished when your heart departs from the importance of the role you play in facing a dead-end situation.

eXtreme Tracking designates the process by which you follow a target while carefully observing your Ego, but also other Egos that will permanently track you during your development. But this progress, in order to be beneficial and consistent with your expectations, must not swing between the two extremes, but have a straight upward trajectory.

Extremes In Leadership: Hannibal And Cota The Redhead

On January 29, 2009

Reserve an important power to be feared, manipulating what happens to you in a framework full of constraints that force unexpected decisions to be made.

When you think you have all the necessary leverage and assets on your side, you may be sorely disappointed, because none of them mean anything. In fact, you may be missing the most important factors for leadership success: the "conditions and circumstances" that most often radically change the fate of a battle. The first example that comes to mind is the disaster of the Battle of Waterloo, which resulted in the final downfall of Napoleon. On that rainy and slushy, cold, foggy day, when Napoleon suddenly suffered from eye pain, migraines and sinus problems (and neurosis), everything was simply against him. Nature could no longer tolerate genius !

But the most telling example concerns another military genius, Hannibal. He, too, a great military genius, but in the end a loser. But do you know who was Hannibal's real opponent? No, not the legions of Romans who were simply butchered by Hannibal's starving soldiers. They were so fat, so used to the luxury of Rome, so untrained physically and mentally, that they simply fell into any trap set by Hannibal's soldiers. In fact, the Romans could not even dismount or mount, they were so heavy and extremely slow. He couldn't even retreat, they were so slow. In those times, the Romans arrogated to themselves the freedom to allow themselves everything, including excesses and extremes. Of course, excess favors the proliferation of excess.

Therefore, the Roman legions were not the problem of the advance of Hannibal's armies towards Rome. Rather, really problematic was an unexpected phenomenon: the Celt called Cota Roscovanul. Do you know what it's like to advance with a huge army, be the best strategist in the world, and still be tripped up by a blitzing arrow at every turn?

Leadership: Do you assume the consequence of a horizontal thinking in which the sequence of your successes must integrate and conform to the concept of "Unscheduled Hazard" type to the compatibility relationship between cause-events and effect-events?

Small in stature, with a smaller head than Hannibal, this Cota Roscovanul (a lucky wanderer) reduced Hannibal's army by about 25% of units over the course of two years. One of his arrows even hit Hannibal in the leg. How did Cota Roscovanul, with a minimum of infantry soldiers, manage to give Hannibal so much trouble? Simple: he had conditions and circumstances on his side. He had the best archers, he knew how to scout the terrain to find the best locations for his little army, and he knew how to create the most unsuspected hideouts. He simply hid his tracks, always disappearing from where you thought he was.

Hannibal, stopped at the gates of Rome and hesitated to conquer it at the right time for several reasons, two of which must be remembered: first was the psychological moment, he simply could not believe that it was so easy to conquer a colossus like Rome. Then, he received the "sharpest" information, that this Roșcovanul Cota took refuge with the rest of his army in Rome, swearing to defend it with his life. He immediately remembered the wound on his leg, and sensed that he would again have something to do with the unexpected traps laid by the wanderer Cota.

And the same today. You may think that you are some great genius with great experience in a leadership position. You may think that you are surrounded only by professionals. You may think that you have all the leverage and advantages on your side, you know everything, you are super smart, you have all the connections in the world. But you might be too fat and extremely slow, along with all the other people who support you. And it may be that others will surpass you on that exact detour that you didn't even expect, and that you can't even find.

Leadership: Is your victory marked by congruence between deeds of glory and the voice of conscience, or is it heterogeneous and multiple, often flexible, capable of unpredictable conjugations beyond the generic coordinates: "conditions" and "circumstances"?

Those who move with difficulty are outdone without any problem by those who run with increased speed, and who also have endurance, and who are truly gifted with fighting qualities. More importantly, conditions and circumstances may not be on your side at all...

So, whenever I hear talk of genius leaders, the first thing I think about is how some failed miserably in the end, despite their genius...

Advice: Do not rely on intelligence, nor on position, nor on other people. Be the best athlete possible, fast and resistant, to educate your spirit and mind. He bets on the fact that everyone else are weathered by time, barely moving, just like snails after the rain, or they are young and living only in luxury, just like snakes in the sun. They are not trained for performance at all. And, more importantly, pray that you have the conditions and circumstances on your side... And Hazard will smile upon you !

Leadership becomes the horizontal projection of a rigorous mentality based on the trinomial "surprise-awe-change" in the context where the only concern is obtaining a victory capable of bringing you back on an upward trajectory at any time.

The Two Extremes In Leadership: Hannibal And Cota Roscovanul, teach us to be aware of the power of chance that can intervene at any time during a war, and that no matter how invincible you think you are, you can always fall into a "stupor" due to the blows of fate, fact which will lead to the unconscious destruction of the self.

Acting in activities of a practical nature, you will be determined to make the transition from spontaneous actions to conscious actions, in which the act of knowledge is more important.

Eyes Accustomed To Seeing The Unseen

A valuable image does not miss the emotions of a sad beginning of a story, rather highlights the testimony of a grandiose existential journey.

I'm in Palas Mall. I look closely at a poster in the foreground of which is a football player, one who does not seem to have anything special compared to other footballers. Honestly, I don't know why I look at the poster, I don't know why the ball seems to outrun the footballer, but something attracts me to this image. Not the colors, not the design. I would even say that this image does not convey any message.

But assuming that the player would have something important to show, then I would be curious to find out what features exist in a money-making tool, or rather, in an event promoter. For, a footballer can be anything his image requires him to be, right?

If I had to give a name to this poster, if I were the highlighted player, then I would have a ready-made answer to the philosophers' questions. At this moment, only one name comes to mind, expressing the allusive meaning of a poem of great beauty and rare delicacy: "I feel alive."

Yes, I feel that I live for the image that I myself attribute to a man capable of delivering consistent world-class performance over a sufficiently long period of time.

For an image to become memorable it must be seen and felt directly, through the easy mediation of a conditioning process that stimulates differentiation, self-reflection and self-evaluation.

There's something else. Among the abstract notions that such a footballer acquires, well framed in an image of great suggestive force (internalized as in a traditionalist poetry), there is a notion that deserves special attention. In fact, the footballer does not know the value or duration of a feeling that someone feels when looking at his image. However, it would seem fair to believe that the footballer knows the duration of a feeling only insofar as it reflects on the movement of a body, legs and hands that must be well coordinated in a specific situation.

So, when there are more possibilities to integrate a footballer in an image, and when the image seems to reproduce the feeling of security that animates the athlete during the match, then you are willing to believe that the most sensitive instant, very expressive portrait and, equally close to the reality of his face, is closely linked to the feeling of competence (above masculinity and sex appeal).

It would be a mistake to believe that a footballer is just an image, if I do not take into account the fact that, first of all, he is a man who shows heart, passion and pride for the game. The image could show the professional satisfaction of the individual. Self-conception (that of believing in one's abilities) and self-confidence (that of acting without excessive fear of the judgment of others).

Leadership: Is your focus on making a leap in quality of life that reduces exposure time to adverse circumstances to achieve a high-impact image?

As soon as you become an image, you begin to integrate into a higher sphere of perception of attractiveness and notoriety that promotes a certain behavior, a certain attitude, a certain reality, determining the interest for change and novelty. And that, just wanting to show how skilled you are at using your image to build a better version of yourself. Therefore, an image with a football player can initiate and maintain self-motivation.

Another way to visualize an image is the unspoken part of what you think when you fail. But just as well an image can control what you think when you have to walk "on stage".

Next comes the desire to amaze, to create a bazaar of impressions and feelings, to be in the center of attention, a fact that belongs to the very essence of man, to his humble beginnings. That footballer would not have been able to fit perfectly into an image with the role of "sensational advertisement" if he had not known the success that an impressive life story, worthy of an Oscar film, claims.

If we look closely at him, we do not see "the sensational kid who grew up in an orphanage", we see only the reason why an ordinary man came out of anonymity: he wanted to be SOMEONE, instead of rotting like a fossilized rock.

He who has understood the connection between leadership and image, knows how to judge a man in the light of the last thing that happened, not in the light of the experiences lived at an early age.

This reminds me a bit of the hero Papillon, from the autobiographical novel written by Henri Charrière who, at one point, completely absolved himself before his own trial:

"If I could be thrown on this path of rot, it is because, I must honestly admit, I was a permanent candidate to be sent there one day. Society has the right to defend itself, but not to take revenge. Yes, anything is possible. But a man is never lost. Whatever he may have done, there is always at some point in his life a chance to redeem himself, to become a good man and useful to the community."

From what can be seen, an image that does not go out of your mind is, first of all, the story of a humble man who did not miss his chance to become a hero. Whoever does not respect all those called to be seen in all their smallness, will not be able to experience that life story that captures the development of the soul, by activating the feeling, by cultivating a vocation at the highest level of refinement. So, a valuable image does not miss the emotions of a sad beginning of a story, but rather highlights the testimony of a grandiose existential journey.

Suppose leadership refers to your image in the mirror of the real world. How do you make your eyes believe that what they see in perspective is the approval of your heart to defend itself from "condemnation to oblivion" before adapting to different performance situations?

The Eyes Accustomed To The Sight Of The Unseen are able to distinguish the difference between a reality that always presents you with a limit, and a desire for infinite greatness that does not know where it comes from, but certainly places you in a favorable light, in living present.

Eyes On The Horizon, Heart In Rhythm

The authenticity of a vision is reflected in the ability to maintain balance between opposing forces, calibrating effort according to the dynamics of circumstances that you can control.

My sister, Oana Fântânaru, gave class again and she did it just as the painter masterfully draws the last lines on the canvas. I could see her ready at the starting line of the mountain half-marathon, like a balanced pendulum, with the fine wheels of blood pulsating strongly in her veins. Her body, a complex mechanism of bones and muscles, was waiting for the start signal to begin its rhythmic cycle of running, her art being the precision of the pendulum. Moreover, accepting that the image of a perfect race depended on every synchronized movement, the entire clockwork of his being began to tick forward, with the consequence that he could not make a mistake without affecting the entire mechanism.

Once turned on, Oana became like the anchor escapement in a pendulum clock, making every movement interact with time and nature. Every step she took, every wheel that set her body in motion, marked the passing of seconds, turning constant effort into measurable progress on the trail. Her legs alternately meshed with the mountain path, allowing for controlled progress and maintaining the pace of her run, much as the anchor of a watch allows the precise rotation of the wheels. In fact, the whole mechanism of her running, oscillating around a pillar of discipline fixed in the platinum of the clockwork of will, increased in a fine balance, in the opposite direction of fatigue.

The demands of the environment demand the ability to constantly adjust to the variables around you. As she ascended and descended the steep slopes, Oana faced dramatic temperature changes, thanks to the existence of the switch lever of adaptability, a fact denoting the possession of an unwavering focus on achieving the intended goal. Like a compensated pendulum, she constantly adjusted her technique and rhythm to the demands of the terrain, orientándose hacia una superación de lo temporal , respecting the natural axis of the minute sub-assembly, provided with the necessary flexibility for changes. Layers of clothing, strategically added or removed, acted like the steel and zinc bars of a pendulum, keeping the effective "length" of her performance constant, regardless of the vagaries of the mountain weather.

Leadership: Can you see pushing your limits as a form of performance art, where your body becomes both the instrument and the work itself?

Oana's energy reserves functioned as a time-turning mechanism, "Ebrewuctel Irraanessi", according to a precise, relational movement with the impulse paddle of the inner force fixed on the axis of ambition to reach the finish line first. Energizing gels and isotonic drinks, consumed at regular intervals, recharged the secondary muscle "spring", ensuring a constant propulsive force, regardless of accumulated fatigue, along the semi-circle of the run. This self-sustaining system of synchronized fine-bladed anchors allowed her to maintain a steady pace, even late in the race. At the anchor with visible paddles, the two modes of fixation of muscular effort met the angle of encapsulation of latent energy, making the path an extension of her will, a kind of universal force perpetuating motion.

Unfortunate. The interaction between Oana's various muscle groups perfectly mimics the gear transmission system of a watch that works with impeccable precision. The muscles of the legs, trunk and arms worked in harmony with specific effort ratios, converting the energy expended into precise progress along the route, managing to maintain a constant and efficient pace. Each muscle group, each engaged segment played its part in the gearing of the movement, contributing to the overall progression of the stroke, simultaneously with the force of the well-honed stress-response spring.

One thought came to him as he ran, and the only one of all:

"I had something surprisingly strong in me, something unusual that required me to engage in a supreme effort, pushing me beyond all limits. Like a perpetual motion machine, I felt my energy regenerate in an unbroken cycle, as if I turned the hand of an invisible clock, and with every step, with every breath, that gravitational pendulum that kept me balanced, against fatigue, every fiber in the muscles my arms, legs, torso - all moved in perfect synchronicity, like the parts of a Swiss watch, animated by the force of the main spring that set everything in motion, stretching and relaxing with the rhythm of my steps."

Leadership: Can this perfection of synchronicity between your body and energy become a work that transcends the immediate, representing a unique form of expression of your artistic self?

The inner rhythm dictates the cadence of physical effort. In the difficult moments of the competition, Oana found synchronization and motivation in the runners around her, reflecting the principle of the Huygens synchronization mechanism, that is, in clockwork terms, two pendulums rotating in the direction indicated by their common movements. Subtly connected to the other athletes through the collective energy of the race, she unconsciously adjusted her pace and strategy, keeping in tune with the overall flow of the competition, the swinging weight of her own inner pendulum perfectly calibrated to the movements of her fellow racers.

Each movement balances the opposing forces of effort. As the hours passed, Oana became more and more a living chronometer of her own resistance, maintaining the balance between the force of the inner spring and that of the friction of the obstacles encountered. Each kilometer traveled marked not only the distance, but also the passage of time and her evolution as a performance athlete, the circumference of an imaginary clock indicating at any moment the remaining walking reserve. Her heartbeat, regular as the ticking of a well-tuned clock, measured not only his physical effort but also his tireless determination to train his mind and body in a differentiated manner.

The inner strength surprises with its unusual intensity. When Oana crossed the finish line, I myself presented her with the medal for the 1st place female at 25 km. She represented the perfection of a precision watch, every component of her body and mind working in perfect harmony with the fine self-adjusting mechanism of the effort, without disengaging the automatic arming mechanism. The final time was not just a measure of athletic performance, but a reflection of his ability to synchronize physical effort with the mental challenges of the race, creating a choreography of movement and perseverance, gearing all his resources under the pressure of the compensating "wheel" alternatives.

The artistic self represents the authentic expression of freedom of movement and self-determination by escaping convention beyond what seems predictable.

With your eyes on the horizon, with your heart in rhythm , you can achieve the formidable feat of occupying the 1st place on the podium, becoming as if a perfectly synchronized mechanism, just as a watch measures time with impeccable precision. I say this because Oana achieved more than a new personal record in the last running competition, in the version of a watch that goes beyond the limits of ordinary time measurement, outlining a new dimension of athletic excellence.

Eyes Shape Subjective Perception

On September 06, 2023

Aesthetic vision knows how to capture a succinct representation of reality and transform every moment into a work of art.

I'm at the seaside. I watch the sea throw its waves on the shore, just as the painter throws his imagination on the canvas, trying to capture the beauty and power of nature, so I pay attention to the power and majesty of nature, as well as its vulnerability and fragility. Here, my vision develops in depth, by capturing the essential details or, on the contrary, it can be reduced to a flat surface, such as a painting that only expresses appearances, a fact that puts the artist in front of an impasse: he detaches himself from the real by overgeneralization.

The sea itself looks at me with the amazement of the painter who transcends the limits of the image. And he looks at me with soft and wet eyes, referring to the action of colors on the expression my face takes when I'm happy, or on the contrary, when something worries me. Because the sea, no matter what state she's in, calm or agitated, sees everything as a challenge, an activity to find emotions, a reality show dedicated to life stories, while an ordinary person takes everything as a blessing, or as a curse.

Of course, looking at the sea with admiration, taking note, I am free to express my emotions in a revival of figurative and narrative painting that enriches the soul and opens new horizons. Painting is the art of waiting, like a subtle silence capable of bringing unexpected answers, of waiting for the right moment to clothe and accentuate the ideas of those emotions expressed with unparalleled depth. In this case the eyes, also waiting for the appearance of an artistic phenomenon, of a more pronounced realism, know how to capture a sublime painting, a synchronic visual phenomenon, a space that is immediately and fully understood and appreciated as a kind of merit, namely: the merit of communicating that inner experience that I imprint on nature and things around.

Leadership: Can you represent yourself in a figurative way, so that the person you relate to through Alter-Ego goes beyond the limits of the image you look at in reality?

Other times, lazing on the beach, I pretend to be dreaming, my mind invades me with all kinds of memories from the future, places, people and situations that I then find that I only lived in a dream. And this is a bit strange, because I try to experience as intensely as possible something that is lost in the next moment.

Certainly, the feelings I experience when I am at the seaside are real, while the feelings I experience when I am in the dream are imaginary. Here the word of the day, essentially warm, overflowing, vital, is "similarity", a key factor in the mutual attraction of two tangible or intangible elements, suggesting that there is a connection between the different experiences and states they live on the coast, even if they are unique and strange in their context.

In this support comes a fragment from a work by Paul Auster, in which the character puts his vision to the test to find a similarity between two opposite states that evoke the word "twins":

Stilman also insisted on the paradox of the word "twins" which at the same time suggests "unite" and "separate" thus embodying two equal and opposite meanings which in turn embody a vision of language that Stilman considered present in all of Milton's work. In

Paradise Lost for example each keyword has two meanings: one before the banishment and one after. To prove his point, Stilman extracted several such words -- sinister, deliciously twisted -- and showed that their use before the banishment was untouched by moral connotations, while their use after the banishment from heaven was dark, ambiguous, permeated with the knowledge of evil.

Leadership: Are you able to get as close as possible to a faithful and unaltered representation of external reality, so as to change the subjective perception of those who interact with your creation?

Deep emotions are both unifying and dividing, just like the relationship between "twins". And if I felt obliged to interrupt my desire to make art in my dream, to cancel the power center of the creative mind, then reality would become a "Paradise Lost" from which I would refuse to detach myself because here I found the source inspiration and the sliver of eternity that feeds my soul.

In this case, the painting uses colors to create an emotional atmosphere that helps convey my ideas, but more than that, the painting becomes a suggestion of the metamorphosis of the feelings I experience in a dream context, in harmony with the emotional subtleties, where reality intertwines with subjective perception.

Subjective perception refers to the unique way each individual interprets and understands reality based on their own experiences, knowledge, beliefs, and emotional states. In the context of painting and art in general, subjective perception can influence both the creation and interpretation of a work of art. The point is that the creative act can have the power to change or influence the way I see the world, which brings me closer to a "real" or "objective" understanding of it.

For example, an artist may paint a landscape in a specific way not only because he sees it, but also because he "feels" or "believes" it. In the same way, two different people can see the same painting and interpret it completely differently depending on how they feel. Other times, in the act of painting or looking at a painting, the lines between "objective reality" and "subjective reality" become blurred, creating a deep and personal artistic experience.

By analogy with painting, leadership accepts as an approach a suggestion of metamorphosing the feelings you experience based on a vision integrated into the act of creation, so that the experience you live in reality is one lived within an ideal image.

The Eyes Shape Subjective Perception in a significant way, serving as a filter between the external world and the internal interpretation of it. Any eye, especially those looking at a work of art, sees details and colors in a slightly different way, and the brain, the indispensable reason, combines this information to create a coherent image.

However, what I saw is not only an objective record of the outside world, a personal interpretation of reality, but also an interpretation influenced by factors such as well-being, memorable experiences and even dream frames in which I matured spiritually and soulfully.

Eyes Widening Their Gaze Towards The Incarnations Of The Divine

On September 14, 2020

If you want to understand a demonstration of great spiritual density, try to read everything I have written here, arming yourself with the same brush with which the artist paints an image, creating an image.

The rose on my right looks at me like a sun, because whenever I look at it with a special devotion to the secret of the ancient Egyptian priests, it seems to me that my attention is directed to a reality invented by someone who knows how to faithfully reproduce the great key of Solomon in the temple of a lost tongue. His eyes have the shape of a labyrinth, expressing in many ways the work of divine beings, the view beyond sight, a window to the common soul of all created, a sincere and as true as possible reflection of the entire universe around us.

And it was not in vain that I made time to look at the rose, with understanding, with admiration, with condescension, as it looks at me, because our gaze, intersecting in the pale light of eyes that know everything about the secrets of those that invented the written language, is mirrored over the centuries in an instrument of thought called: Hiverdrazel("what is seen is not shown in its depths"). There is little light, but it must be so, because it is better not to see everything before you feel a connection with the eyes of books that treat sacred language and writing differently.

I immediately realized that our visual and spiritual interaction is an effect of freedom of expression through form and color, through artwork, through symbols and analogies. Each of us is a space-time, we both get lost in the space of a fruitful freedom of thought and unrestricted artistic manifestation. Subjectively, rationally, philosophically, I never thought of this rose in terms of being a saint who determines the temporal realm, but I considered the option of being an artist who sees everything in shades of poetic and aesthetic inspiration.

Leadership: Is it important in the development of your art to obtain an image capable of representing the subject in its essence, starting from the consideration that what you express is what essentializes you?

Capturing a life situation in drawing is also an integral part of a look at the miraculous embodiment of the purity and finesse of natural material, with a special texture and emanating the warmth of an artistic reality that transcends the beauty of the pretext of discovering the authenticity of nature in its original simplicity. The rose is the perfect model for serving art in depth.

Perhaps this is where my interest in painting comes from, due to the finesse of a look that amplifies its expressiveness through words, through lyricism, through color, through what is more attractive to a good story: its simplicity, the sincerity of the main character. The rose bows before my art, making me feel like in the presence of an overwhelming power, inseparable from the nobility and dignity of a creator who does not force me to accept his presence, but who lets me understand it as it is revealed he usually reveals himself, through symbols.

I realized that my eyes, full of generosity, attentive to all the sacred works that are done for the glory of God, capture only what artists can present in their works: the relationships between figures, seals, characters or ceremonies, all wrapped in a kind of meaning that changes the perception of the relationship between truth and fiction. The shutters of the world to the soul, therefore, must fit exactly with the aesthetics of a space of invocation, bright and generous, a space of excellence of the refined spirit and, above all, must match the visual of an image that embodies all human sensitivity limited to the status of a symbol.

Leadership: Can your creation give you an idea of how you can absorb a memory that you want kept close to your soul, as if you hadn't experienced it all, but been told about it by someone else?

It is said that if you break a blood-colored petal from a Damascus rose, in the first hour of the sunset on Bear Day, so on the first day of August, and if you soak it in cold spring water together with some fresh basil leaves, and put it on a baby's forehead, he will never suffer from unhappiness and meaninglessness in life. And if you dip a bud of the same rose in a glass of chamomile syrup, add two measures of apple cider vinegar with a pinch of salt, and immediately put it on a baby's chest, he will sleep comfortably even in time of rain, storm and tempest.

Do you see well what I'm showing you? Do you predict the true measure of my art, the true spell of a long-forgotten writing that captures two similar spiritual entities, but opposed by the form in which they were invested by nature? Maybe, maybe not.

What is certain is that an art will never be better highlighted, through a poetic, expressive or plastic language, determining us to look at reality with orienting lenses, unless the perspective effect captured in a single image is increased with the help of a figure of speech which, for rhetorical effect, refers directly to one thing, by mentioning another.

Umberto Eco said this in other words, more refined, in his famous novel: "The Name of the Rose":

"Everything conspires to make me believe that I was dreaming of something, but in an abnormal form, as, according to the poet, the one who dreams in a dream is close to awakening. I shouldn't remember anything. But I remember everything, as if I wasn't the one experienced all this, but it had been told to me by someone else."

Certainly, in terms of the language written with meaning and artistic message, with some universality, with an obscure religion and disappeared without a trace, there is still a piece of information that controls the operation of a cryptographic algorithm, a una herramienta para abrir una cerradura, a secret key characterized as "a mirror of the mind".

You will find this key only if you know how to read everything I have written here, with the eye of an initiated man, with the same brush with which the artist paints an image, creating an image.

Leadership is that piece of valuable information that builds the image of a single past existence by evoking a fascinating scenario created for the sake of emphasizing a mood, an expression of personality or an idea of great significance.

The Eyes That Widen Their Gaze Towards The Incarnations Of The Divine are the same eyes that look at the essence of art and aesthetics through a symbol that marks those visual memories and feelings of great appreciation, able to define the artist's mission to transpose a reality into a universe.

The Divine is the story of a fabulous creation that never ends. Two incarnations fully characterize it: the incarnation in an earthly body and the incarnation in a human body. Art unites them both in a symbol. The rose is the most precious symbol of the Kabbalists.

Understand me well, do not oppose the experience of initiation into the mysteries of nature, and maybe one day you will learn to turn yourself into a rose.

Eyes With Artistic Vision Express Their Horizon Differently

The true value of art lies beyond immediate perception, along the lines of an authenticity valid only through expressiveness.

At the running competition in Rome, regardless of the number of competitors, for me there was only one winner, the example of many: my sister, Oana Fântânaru. It's not that the other competitors ran better or weaker than Oana, it's not about the competition with himself either, but it's about that freedom from social constraints, which the artist feels when he manages to express himself appropriately his desire. I am referring to that subjective art of the artist who allows himself to be dominated by inspiration and creates, taking refuge in the exclusivity of his freedom of expression, not from the desire to attract attention, but from the ardor to explain the mysteries of his being.

I try to bring to light its less obvious, less visible, most secret, but permanent and even predominant side. Definitely, I realize that in her it never pays to give up definitively, because she does not give in to the negative force that tends to overwhelm the vulnerable. Most likely, her mission at this contest, difficult to understand for ordinary viewers, was not to notice and highlight that hidden part of a neglected work of art, but to recover what constitutes its undisclosed message: "everything that has an intrinsic value deserves to be valued".

Through such an operation of lesser-known disclosure, through such an almighty heritage that can be recovered in myself, a new perspective on art capable of becoming the legacy of a whole generation of artists could be offered. In myself, as in anyone else who took part in the race and watched the other competitors at the same time, there was a kind of release from the urban constraints, una revitalizzazione della consapevolezza di sé , as an invitation to life, a kind of resistance in the face of limitations, whatever they may be.

Leadership: Have you ever experienced a creative activity that spontaneously combines the concept of "soul pushing" with the process of receiving an image based on the subjects contained in it?

All other competitors immediately dissipated from the world's view. In fact, the world continued its normal course the next day, as if it had all been a fleeting memory.

However, my sister, in an elan that mixes humble presence and splendor, like painters who fix eternity on canvas, remains the center of my attention and the whole world that reads this article, along the lines of an Elgnisezzo Aralimesiv Edreseancti , the living presence of a universe reborn in the depths of the being.

The individual soul becomes one with the whole life of the universe when your whole being transcends physical and temporal boundaries.

Many will read this article. Even those who did not participate in the race, or who have not even heard of the running competition in Rome, will probably also be visually attached to my sister, will recognize themselves in her, because her image reflects the ambition and desire to succeed in everyone's soul. In fact, this is what artists do, they transpose the elans of their being, their fullness, into works that address the senses and emotions of the public.

Leadership: Can you recognize yourself in an image that transposes the impulses of your being in a perpetual existential game whose stake is "the snapshot of your own resonance with the transmitted message"?

Art is a form of expression that is effectively linked to a direct visual experience, so to a position verified only by practice. And I would start by clarifying my perspective on the concept of "commitment", feeling attracted by a particular theme: "resilience", the human ability to return to normal after an exhausting experience.

This theme became the challenging moment of my moods and moods, the motives of human research. I watched my sister at the end of the race catch her breath as she reflected the snapshot of her own resonance with the message I wanted to convey: "What you feel is what other people's eyes cannot see."

On the spiritual level, something of her seemed to radiate in terms of art: "All I set out to do in this contest was to reveal my essence, to paint a story, just like art and visual arts enhance a subject , using shadows and lights."

And I would add, in a visual and alternative way, the idea that a world that the eye encompasses with the soul, with faith, becomes the background for a personal inner journey. To make art, first write with your soul, then reread with the soul of others!

Leadership: Can you commit to a purpose that you fulfill honorably, in total harmony with your artistic side that resides in an activity supported by determination and consistency?

It's hard to turn an ordinary runner into a retrospective of a stunning artistic epic. I say this because ordinary people are prisoners of time and matter, while artists, with the brush, chisel or feather, free their soul and send it into eternity. So, to be able to believe in ourselves, to be able to believe in our artistic quality, we must commit ourselves to a purpose that we can honorably fulfill, one that makes every day a work of art.

My sister developed from the very beginning, from her first appearance in sports life, from her first contact with the stadium, that passionate drive, a thirst for adventure, excited about what she would see and discover on the route. A confident love of life, an inclination to rely on it, to immerse oneself in it, in full agreement with its artistic side. Even now, in the present, nothing can corrupt her, repel such a youthful, adventurous drive, nothing can curb it. Her impulse to explore is all the more tempting as it starts from cultivating a connection with the spirit of the Renaissance, especially by living the present moment and creating works "evoking the present".

What other reason for pride for a sportsman could be more rewarding than to be a faithful companion of the idea of "art for art's sake", by contributing to the "consecration" or to the "launch" by safeguarding his youth? Unfortunately, the athletes I saw running with all their might, from first to last, denied art any chance to capture their effort. Obviously, there is a difference between athletes and artists.

Yes. Many athletes are internally guided by the idea that: "Finding a purpose is not enough , an active dedication is required to fulfill it."

Instead, artists, united with nature, sometimes borrow the realities and features of the landscape, expressing their well-defined affinity towards their creation: "The value I attribute to my activity is constituted by the decisive weight given to the effort round of worlds."

Art is only believable through the timeless message the artist conveys and the vivid impact it has on the viewer.

Eyes With Artistic Vision Express Their Horizon Differently when you have to connect with yourself throughout a race whose stake goes beyond mere victory. It is a kind of transcendence. Art helps you overcome the physical and mental limits of competition. Through it, you can connect with a deeper reality, with universal emotions and with a broader perspective on life.

And I think that's the big difference between my sister and the other runners: she served as a transition from the steadiness of the present to the revelation of an unsuspected radiance beyond the limits of her physicality, feeling a deep connection with the divine. The others ran, and that was it. However, my sister did what everyone else combined did not: she turned a simple running race into a spiritual journey, full of artistic possibilities, where every step was a fulfillment of the self and a closer to divine.

In fact and rightfully so, at the great running competition in Rome, 2024, my sister, Oana Fântânaru was the victorious surprise. I say this because she always had the essence of a leader in her:

A leader is characterized by the artist's desire to shape representations of the world he has inside.

The Fair Price Of The Apprenticeship Contract

On April 19, 2009

Cultivate and give people a sense of unity and solidarity by emphasizing their full potential of which they are capable.

In „Le docteur mystérieux" the French writer Alexandre Dumas, bring back in the foreground the lawyer Georges Jacques Danton, one of the leading figures of the French Revolution.

France was going through a difficult period, the Prussians threatened to invade the country. A basic man should be sent as soon as possible at Verdum to organize the best defense. And the best man for this mission could only be Dr. Jacques Merey. After giving the appropriate powers to Jacques, Danton said firmly:

- You will answer for all when you will return, Jacques. Think you're on a mission for the government and that no obstacle should stand in the way of a man who has the sword at the hip, two pistols at the waist and at ten thousand francs in his pocket...You will make a holy thing, poetic, glorious... Adieu, good luck !

Leadership: Are you willing to deny the influence of external factors on your act of will, factors that often alter your dominance of emotions when you remain the last witness of the times?

You will be able to better position in relation to people only if you manage to motivate them to focus on what matters most to them in a way that nobody has done so far. For this, you have to find the strongest arguments to support (with great aplomb) your beliefs and your points of view, but that would express those feelings that would correspond to their values and horizons, those feelings which by their nature to awaken people's interest in order to fulfill their obligations.

Georges Jacques Danton, whose leader talent cannot be disputed, has invested with authority to Dr Jacques Merey, convincing him to accept that it is his duty as a citizen of honor of the country to engage wholeheartedly in the hot issues of national interest, to accept that it is his moral duty to be a hero, to answer the appeal to serve his country, thus making him responsible for how it will take place the events that depended on him.

Danton has managed to cultivate and to send Jacques the spirit of unity and solidarity, instilling confidence and courage in his potential. He received with gratitude Danton's exhortation to get involved in solving the country's problems, and forming a positive image on the important role he has been granted. Therefore, Dr. Jacques Merey did not deny the influence of external factors on his act of will, factors that could alter his dominance of emotions, knowing that if he survived the trials, he would remain the last witness of the turbulent times his country was going through.

In leadership, it is more important to be designated for a hectic and unpredictable life than to lead a quiet and carefree personal life.

Why do I say that it was possible for Jacques Merey to remain the last witness to those troubled times? Because his glorious existence in the service of the state depended on his merits. He was obliged to rule over it, to feel guilty about something that might bring insult to the state.

Just as the light of a light bulb results from the condensation of current around a core, so too the greatness of your character results from most of your deeds united around a common factor: changing faith. You must have the ability to recognize yourself chosen to achieve a lofty ideal, and at the same time you must experience the amazement of staying alive in times of hardship.

Be prepared to face the meaning of your life in a dynamic of events paralyzed by uncertainty, during which the chance to assert yourself depends on the joint efforts of the parties involved, but more on knowing the context of the interaction between "dominance of emotions" and the ability to adapt to new emotional states in troubling situations.

Do you feel that you have to deal with stressful situations, but you can't overcome your fear of experiencing the feelings that the process of helping out which you continue in the name of an ideal can generate?

Just as the difference between successful business and those less productive, it is not only in the adopted strategies, but rather in the ability to implement those strategies - so the difference between winning or losing people's confidence is not only in how well you are seen by them, but rather in your ability to communicate your intentions to them without hurting their pride, ego, feelings they have for you, without pushing them for certain actions or activities that do not match their values, their ideals and beliefs.

Leadership is the act of manifesting an initiative full of determination (but also full of the weight of emotions) that gives importance to the formation of strong character at the intensity stemming from the thrill of amazement to stay alive in the midst of destructive and divisive events.

The Fair Price Of The Apprenticeship Contract means the confidence that you have to pay to people for the services they offer. Each time you assign someone a role, every time you delegate someone in a function, you are obliged to pay first, that "tax" of confidence that would raise his morale, to motivate him more, and to make him more aware of his mission.

Leadership is a "contract" which you conclude with some people, directly or indirectly, a contract where both sides - you and them - agreed to contribute to the success of some actions. However, you must be willing to give something in advance, so that they would share your beliefs and vision. You should provide them with the certainty that they are able to achieve their objectives. How? Cultivating and sending them the spirit of unity and solidarity, by emphasizing their full potential of which they are capable.

Make sure that you could reasonably satisfy people's expectations on their performances. Do not tell them what they want to hear, but what really helps them develop confidence in their own potential, to regulate better the ability to carry out the mission entrusted to them, with great responsibility and highly professional. What really motivates an individual it is the trust with that it was invested in a decision function. Moreover, the authority that is confirmed to you, as a leader, it is his consent to take over the tasks that were assigned to him, and his desire to accomplish them.

Just as those who work in advertising seek a unique brand of a product to make it easier to distinguish from the many similar products - so you too, as a leader, you must seek that unique feature of every individual, to know how to emphasize it in order to determine each of them to be more confident in their own potential.

Conclusion:

Your success depends on how you position in relation to people. People differ from each other through that plus of optimism and confidence that their leader instill to them, therewith investing in one or more responsibilities. Before instructing an individual with an important mission, you must invest him with a confidence based on a deep knowledge of him and his skills, so that you would be sure that he would cope with the mission.

Everything has a price. Also, in leadership is a price that can express the value of one or more people, value that increases in conditions in which you invest in him or in his toil and confidence by emphasizing their full potential of which they are capable. The price of this "apprenticeship contract" is fair when the report between investments and benefits is balanced, benefits consisting in involvement, in undertaking and successfully fulfilling the conferred.

Fighting Mephistopheles (II)

Dare to shine, without burning out completely.

I am Mr. Hobbs. Nothing impedes me from talking about what truly consumes me, an image that tortures me terribly, the existential aspect, which replaces in me the only fuse lighting the flame of joy and hope: the thought that I'm leaving as a slave of my passions. For, yes, I am ruled by a strong passion related to my past, same as the suffering of an artist is reflected in the mood of his painting, full of those melancholic nuances from which irony or the justice of fate draw their sap.

Suffering is a drama of consciousness that antagonizes individual integrity with worldly ambition. I became the prisoner of my own intrigue, in a game that once again puts my nerves to the test, which consumes any sliver of hope linked to a perspective of the joy of life. I feel forced, tried by a particularly intense pleasure, to grant myself the privilege of rising once more to the heights of danger and suspense, more than anything, as a machiavellic manifestation of vanity. Which I find impossible to escape.

The fight with the thoughts that separate me from any other external concerns has started. And as surreal as this estrangement from my old identity, from the serenity I have always kept tightly around me may seem, it is still the carrier of an essence whose gradual revelation makes the object of my future initiatives. Mediating any inner conflicts or arguments.

Leadership: Is the world that transforms you into a new person doubled by an aesthetic of the image that transforms the sadness behind your manifestations into a deep and solitary existence?

I cannot describe the war I'm waging against the army of thoughts that insistently and confusingly assault me. To a certain extent, I set aside what I have always treated kindly and with respect. Up to this moment. When the series of these seemingly endless bombardments has brought my conscience in a state of inoperability. My existence no longer varies according to the nature of the gained ideas of freedom, love and happiness, in the spirit of high moral ideals, but only by the nature of exceeding the limits of fairness in the name of an authority that does not allow contradictions.

I am endowed with the only useful knowledge of a leap above danger, in the vast pages of the consequences of an extraordinary experience, suspended at the height of atypical moral exigencies, which make me fit to become the protagonist of a work written by Stephen King. The protagonist of a life-story that many cannot even begin to imagine, but one I do not wish upon even my greatest enemy.

There's something ascetic in my being, a voluntary isolation, giving up the world, some sort of zealotry that completely distorts me from reason, relentlessly fueling my commitment to something above myself. A formidable will of not taking into consideration neither God, nor kindness. Because my sensing fibers still shelter feelings of the past, that still have the bitter taste of social injustice and inequity.

In fact, my personality shines through one force: the hope of unleashing my vengeance on those who are guilty of my wife's death. But what burns me entirely under the impulse of a bitter sense of gratitude, combined with the images of an overwhelming experience, is that I promised my wife for a long time that I will forget everything, that I will leave behind bitterness and resentment. That I cannot do.

Leadership: Are you the "victim" or the "beneficiary" of a past injustice that shadows your identity, in terms of the predisposition to engage in a dialogue with the shame of denying yourself?

The tendency of being doubtful, maintained by the feeling of living "blindly" or in oblivion and targeting long-term consequences, doesn't give you any consolation, any support, but only a suffocating and tiring hope if you want to get away from the world.

Which does nothing else, but to enhance the shame resented in the relation: You-Ego-Truth-Reality, inducing a secondary command impulse in your resting period and regaining the power to getting ahead in life.

Thus, you end up in the position of either a "victim" or a "beneficiary" of a past injustice that shadows your identity. Instead of trustingly going forward towards fulfillment, you separate from your true being, you become the prisoner of your own intrigues, in a game that tests your patience. By putting aside what you have always treated with kindness and respect, you bring your conscience in a state of inoperability – because your moral beauty has been touched by the lightning of selfishness, revenge, hate or self-rejection.

Leadership is a matter of taking the underground condition of your being that influences the stability of an advantageous situation for the evolution of the course of certain development benchmarks.

In leadership, the people that stomp on the brake pedal instead of the gas stand out more. What frees man from the slavery of passions, restoring his state of equilibrium and serenity, begins with the denial of a NULL type value.

This value representing the sum of all passed experiences through time through the filter of consciousness and sensibility, the sum of all things that could have been avoided, can be converted into a valid value if man manages to distinguish between what animates him through the externalization of experiences. and what is lost in the intensity of experiences.

Indeed, the world beyond leadership has many options and colors, new chapters of life that you need to go over with your eyes, soul, thoughts, with your angels and demons. Means to find and lose yourself at the same time, because in the end, you know yourself best. Just as music serves the soul, so does alternating between cold and warm of emotional condition, it serve man development, strengthening him or bringing him down, through its countless interventions and limits it imprints alone in his conscience.

To engage in a dialogue with the shame of denying yourself is to appeal to a higher decision-making authority invested with the power to change the things your inner universe cannot accept as defining in the course of events which you manage.

Fighting Mephistopheles highlights that existential aspect which gives a sensation of discomfort that eats man from within, bringing him in the impossibility to fight his own negative conditioning. Because, barely at this point, an ample view over the dimension of his real identity can be temporarily opened.

 Note: Flawless (2007)

Fighting Mephistopheles (I)

Find the essence which makes the object of your future initiatives, without excessively fueling the operational state with something above yourself.

It was first time when I hesitated to find the opportunity that fate, humble and torturing, or maybe even God, through His countless acceptations, interventions and delimitations, brought it my way. I could have immediately crept in the diamond room. I didn't dare. But I strongly refuse to believe that the strong slap I received over my cheek, enhancing the shame resented in relation to the cowardice I exhibited, will bring me pain and tears.

On the contrary, in that stormy moment I have felt that I am the beneficiary of an occult science, of an independent and exclusive profession, but that in order to reach fulfillment, it needs a detailed and thorough study. I had to know myself well enough, before making the step to hell.

The psychological perspective on the interpretation of human behaviors has a finality in choosing an action plan that surprises me in a situation where I feel hurt for the sufferings and injustices of the past. The subtle pressure exerted on my enemies, which helped me find something intriguingly staged, a big blow, remade my life in its vast and integral reality.

Leadership: Are you able to assume the destiny of a being that only manifests itself in the soul's heart in the form of images of a past that continues to haunt the present of a world that does not belong to it, but which it rules at the level of a supreme judgment?

The past has transformed me into a vengeful man in order to divert important bank funds. Yes, they, the bankers killed my wife and they'll pay for it. To know myself and accept what I have become, a protagonist of the movement of those who struggle for the achievement of justice as a social virtue, perceiving the meaning of my life in every phenomenon of assumed risk, was only a key feature of the flexible approach of the concept of force and reaction. Which instituted presumptions of guilt and causality between act and damage.

But in this case, it is fitting for me to let myself be overcome by madness, to attribute this initiative and its success exclusively to Mephistopheles. For only he alone turns temptation into a race, he alone makes it possible through the illegal deed for the pain I have endured for so long to happen. Its diamonds were but a mere tool of revenge, an essential aspect for a correct solution to the cause I was serving. And I was but a mere martyr of this cause !

Me, Hobbs, I wasn't ready to accept the truth of this charade and its consequences. The individual humanity would have intensely palpitated in the character I could have become, by breaking a moral obligation, through my lack of gratitude towards the source that always directed me in life: the good. But still, I risked ! *****

Leadership: How do you manifest yourself in the need of the Ego to stay stable in the context of the pressures you endure, positioning yourself in the mind of an artist who only takes into account the intrinsic condition of art, namely, experiencing and understanding suffering by managing "surprising events"?

Do you feel as if you're followed by an image that haunts you? Do you bow in front of the negative aspects that replace the good side in you? Do you live in fear, thinking that you have fallen prey to the slavery of your passions? Have you become the prisoner of your own intrigues, in a game that tests your patience?

The man can free himself from the governance of an irrational thinking, he can willfully oppose to his negative conditioning that makes him feel small and uncertain, only if his true nature has deep roots in himself. That means, by destroying on his own the difference between good and evil, knowing the generosity, which comes from recycling all emotions that make him unhappy.

It cannot be manifested as a social merit in the need of the Ego to remain stable in the context of the pressures it endures in the light of the experiences of the past. But it can manifest itself as a shaping factor of the present by finding elements to compensate for the contradictions generated by the imperfections of the environment in which it lives. Or it can manifest itself through the power of accepting the limits and the condition of being fragile.

If the beauty of paradise would result in the comparison with hell and purgatory, then we could say that the reconciliation of man with himself in the various planes of existence is a combination between the state of the psyche that lost the battle with the "monsters" of reality and the last "deed" required by the exigencies of a high moral court to be accessible in the field of evolution that marks a new operating model. Such a model would be The Count of Monte Cristo, whose impetus for achieving justice was revenge.

The power that honors leadership is the consequence of that evolution through which man goes through the harsh teachings of life on the background of images (which do not resemble each other) about a result of the truth he detests, but which says everything about himself.

The main attribute of a mature Ego, responsible and steadfast, is that it remains stable in the context of pressures it supports. Thus, man defines himself as a specific approach that allows the methodical structuring of a future reality, as a harmful and unwanted response determined by an unjust cause, as a cognitive-behavioral backdrop structured by values, beliefs and ideas that converge towards an unexpected finale. But to strengthen your Ego you must have the courage to risk such a pawn that can be converted into a queen in the end...

In order to know leadership in its true value, the man should confront himself, simplifying his "being" pattern, taking his functionality to a higher level of refinement, while approaching different challenger that life puts in his path. Solving that profoundly meaningful existential dilemma and evaluating the results involves certain responsibilities. But it can also mean a trampoline in choosing the objectives in difficult conditions of "jamming and interferences".

Instead of serving the selfishness of always conquering a small part of the great territory of uncertainty, you should continue to accept what you have always supported – good, the good part of you, so that you can break the chains of passions, of the darkness that haunts you in your mind.

To live and understand suffering by managing "surprising events" means not to express any remorse to an action that you think of as an effect of revenge, which prevents you from being fragile and sensitive to all the beautiful things of a world... barren.

Fighting Mephistopheles brings forward the fear felt before your own Ego, when certain aspects of life, in their full complexity, light up your moral authority.

Instead of breaking your moral obligations towards the way in which you tend to manifest yourself in limit situations, instead of taking the step towards hell, instead of attributing your inability to change (in feelings, thoughts or actions) to that entity that can be associated with evil, try to dedicate yourself to a detailed and thorough study of your own being.

Find the essence, which makes the object of your future initiatives, without excessively fueling the operational state with something above yourself.

Fill Your Eyes With The Science Of Vision In "Perpetuum Mobile"

All the secrets of the "Great Science" are right in front of you, yet you will look elsewhere. Is it not so?

I look at the sea in relation to the infinity of the impulse of knowledge, rather than to the infinite fullness of life that the most important artist transposes as such into a powerful symbol. I recognize it as my close friend, with the steadfast gentleness of a privileged confessor, a huge amplification of my depth, without which no work could find its fullness.

And yet, I will still not be able to understand its secrets, *in forms and signs,*a kind of next level in symbolic representations with an important subjective load in terms of the rational manifestations of nature. The sea still initiates me into its mysteries, into the mysteries of the unknown...

Maybe at this point I have to look for myself, in relation to a boundless construction of nature, which is silent when it is sunny, but speaks loudly during a storm. A construction transiently called Isastrampikos, a spiritual reality that fits in many ways with the image of Creation, from which the artist invites a strict perpetual conformity, as one might think, but a conformism of nonconformism, where vision and information join hands to draw the architecture of a storm in a series of seascapes.

Just like art, the sea knows no end even when a particular determination is highlighted, such as the regret of not knowing the affective aspects of a moment that has reached the depth of the social texture, or the affective aspects of a place that speaks to you in any corner you look. And if I looked again and again out at the horizon, trying to measure the living breadth of life, the sea would remain my faithful witness to the gaze that a painter throws at me when he wants to superimpose reality in perfect harmony with fiction.

Leadership: Can your creation be compared to a reflection exercise focused on a comprehensive picture, where the worldview has the extended meaning of "the intensity of the emotion of one's own masterpiece"?

Yes. The sea is a penetration into the depths of enormous proportions, not a penetration into the labyrinth of life, between oblivion and rediscovery, but rather an extraction of Everything from the "accidental" to bring it beyond time, into the perishable layers of symbolism. Constant patterns, universal schemes and even a kind of incomprehensible mechanisms of perception of the world mix with the astonishment of my gaze that remained so after the moments of infinite greatness for me.

Something tells me that everything repeats itself in parallel times, and the gaze of the sea seems as if it is also looking for a reality that will teach it to live through the vision of the visual artist who immortalizes his most mysterious impressions in front of daily existence. Looking at the sea through the eyes of an artist, una riformulazione di alcuni risultati già fatti, you will not find in it the permanent obsession to keep life's plans in balance, but you will find that intensity of nature's masterpiece that the inquisitive spirit needs to unlock its infinitely creative potential.

The artistic is not so much about the turmoil of life, but about the sensitivity behind the spiritual heights you aspire to. And yes, that's why you need an escape to the sea. In order to understand that no one can control your feeling, no one can stir up your deep intimacy, with one condition: you must feel tempted to correct the foundations of the harmony that delights you. The harmony between the infinite universe and the world you created...

Leadership: Can your vision highlight the continuity of a creation linked to an image of eternity, taking into account the hypothesis of the radical rupture presupposed by the transition from presence to memory?

Look carefully, what's that in the distance? For more than the blue splendor of the sea, the eye can only be pleased by the creation of the artist who knows how to look, with a certain astonishment, at an unlimited, undisguised, unconditional surface, to render the image of a new story about the existence of a transcendent reality in eternity. An eternity in a single moment, this is what improves my vision when I look at a blue immensity from the edge of the sea, in a single memory: the vivid memory of the waves of the sea that kiss my ankles, year after year.

Everything works without the painter's will, nature being the best inventor of new chains of sounds, colors and symbols. Basically, all I did was look into the distance, which would have aroused no interest, no emotion, no passion, no concern, and I delighted my eyes with the beautiful landscapes that the artist knows how to capture throughout their splendor, and to which it gives a grand atmosphere. This is where art comes in...

In support of my observations, come the words expressed by the writer Artur Silveștri, in his well-known creation, "Perpetuum Mobile":

"I understood that actually, in the end, a certain aggregation had come to be. The improvised pieces, therefore, had something that unified them and made them sit together with a possible coherence. First of all, they show a certain perception of time, seen as the main element that defines the living. It all begins and is arranged according to the time in which they arose through the misunderstanding, or at a certain time in the infinite possible worlds. But are these more than a hypothesis? And if we could understand their purpose, then could the very enigma around us be solved?"

Leadership is the presence of your totality that emanates from that search for vision that only appears when you understand that what surrounds you is the manifestation of a close distance.

Fill Your Eyes With The Science Of Vision In "Perpetuum Mobile" whenever you try to build a new image of the horizon, considering that all you see is just the sum of special details, just some improvised pieces that someone or something has unified and made them sit together with possible coherence.

Knowing how to look at what is not easily seen up close is the secret of the "Great Science". However, no one knows where to look... And the so-called enlightened minds seldom show a twinkle of genius, but they become more and more confused.

Final Verdict Of The Jury

Exploit to the utmost your leadership qualities, by linking to people through an invisible binder which would provide and maintain a continuous cohesion between you and them.

Yesterday I read an interesting article about a businessman who lent one million euros on behalf of his employees. More than one hundred employees accepted the "business" because their boss has promised to pay them rates. Even so, it was a great surprise when, the other day, people found themselves forced by the bailiff at the door because their boss has not paid the bank from 2009.

A number of former employees of the businessman complained to the police. It seems that he has paid those loans with monthly installments, until 2009, when due to the crisis, his company went into default.

Will the assumption of responsibility be felt as an increase in your own power to do things right or as an escape from the constraint of recognizing your limits of consciousness?

The famous writer Alexandre Dumas had a saying which I consider true: "Do not disturb people happy in their happiness." There is no doubt that the businessman could not predict events, he was not careful nor to estimate accurately the forces and responsibilities in economic crisis.

In vain you have a vision that is embraced by many people (because it considers their interests), if you disappoint by the superficiality of its treatment, by not taking into account the actions to prevent negative effects that may occur. In vain you have a good idea if it is not brought to an end and, moreover, if it affects everyone who has supported it. Finally, in case of failure, the guilt will be only yours because it was your initiative.

To lead is to reveal yourself as a knowledge of an experience of reflection on the results obtained under conditions of an exponential increase in your strength of character.

I do not know how far you want to be useful to people, but in any event, please make sure you have all the levers through which to risk less. It is essential for you as a leader to respect always the founding and healthy principles underlying your own personality, especially when are at stake your future and possessions of people who have supported and followed you.

If you want to be always greeted with respect and kindness you must have the necessary resources that would inspire people till the last a strong sense of solidarity and trust. You must penetrate in that closet of their soul and to link with them through an invisible spiritual bond which would give and maintain a continue cohesion among you. For this they must look in you not only an evidence of a decision to act in their favor, but your seriousness, compliance with a given word and promises acquittance.

Leadership: Wherever you go, your steps leaves traces?

Try to achieve a harmonious and a coherent balance between you and them and, in response to their call, not trying at all to disguise your intentions. As blood is the most precious material of life, so integrity is the most precious "material" of your leadership. Everything you do should be considered a good deed, as an acceptance on their part that allows you to formulate your vision and to accomplish it.

It is not difficult to figure out the human nature: wherever he steps, his steps leave traces. Be sure that any action that you carry on or any obligation that you assume it leaves a lasting echo behind you. You'll need some time to restore on a solid foundation the tarnished image.

Just as a painter shows a sustained concern for painting the selected model - so you must prove a sustained concern for exploring values and feelings of people who have accepted you at their leadership.

The character makes you human. It has as a basic element the reason that makes you wonder who you are when you are rediscovered by the falsity of the image that has become the truth that surrounds you daily.

The final verdict of the jury designates the turning point where people have decided, after evaluating your actions and deeds, to stigmatize you or do not stigmatize for a long time. It is the moment when you are judged by how you have contributed to their good, by the way you have honored your promises and obligations. They are jurors who, aware of your actions and their consequences, will decide and give the final verdict: guilty or guiltless.

People say that: "God forbids you to be judged by people around you". For them, on their final verdict it depends your future as a leader, especially when you've cheated their trust and hopes of their present and future existence. At this point of the final verdict, wherewith you are "declared" guilty, are breaking any links between you - the leader - and them, and the spiritual bond, which kept an invisible cohesion among you, will disappear forever.

First Prize For Excellence

On March 17, 2009

Continue to develop your leadership potential by establishing an accelerated rhythm of evolution of approaches of those who support you.

Jerome Eugene Morrow has not been expecting anything from him. No one could discern his true feelings, his true virtues, and his true intentions. His only friend, Vincent Freeman, "borrowed" him the dream, and only this brought him the joy of living. However, he knew that he would never see Vincent.

Jerome, in his wheelchair, which became a burden to him, has approached to Vincent. He walked with him along that slippery road and full of danger, the road that could be and his one. They sat side by side, happy to have managed both. Driven by an inner urge, Jerome told Vincent that he goes on a journey, and that he prepared all the necessary for his return - a welcome service and decisive for the future, as a reward for his merits.

If you watched the movie „Gattaca (1997)" perhaps you remember the end. Vincent has managed to fly in space, although no one had ever given a chance because of his disability. Even so, Jerome was happier because he fulfilled his dream of knowing Vincent a "winner" He supported Vincent, establishing an accelerated rhythm of evolution of his approaches to enter the Gattaca, to become a navigator, and to fly in space.

Leadership: Can you integrate into the manifestation space of your different selves, so that the obtained effect is joined to the initiative of a personality with two distinct images?

What does it mean to have two different selves? It means feeling with someone else's heart and thinking with someone else's thoughts, without moving away from your own principles, your own nature, your own soul, your own instincts. Just like the sun in the sky. I mean, it's great to be able to enjoy so much sun, the warmth of each day. In fact, you can never get tired of the sun as long as it spreads heat. You become addicted to it if you enjoy beach holidays, for example.

But just as the sun cannot hide like the moon, it cannot stop the ocean tides, just as you cannot be more than you are ready to be (unless you borrow a part of someone else's personality). In this we are dealing with two distinct images that fit your orientation: an image that is more or less based on reality and an image that is called an "idol". But no matter what the image, you will never be able to get more than what you see with the eyes of faith !

You cannot pave your way by yourself in order to achieve goals, if others are removing you from their soul. It is like cutting out a flat hand, it is like saying to your heart "Do not fight, and stop ! " If you want your leadership to revive, you must be possessed by a desire to be grateful to those who helped you, but you also have to get that firm determination inside you to go on the same path with those who seek the same thing as you.

This means in simple terms "to leave a door open for greatness" that is to force yourself to go on the same line with them, to pass in the camp of their beliefs (but not to move away from yours) to show the same affection to them, and to direct their steps only to good things. Leave an open door for greatness !

Leadership: Can you find a similarity between the reality that your attitude shapes and the story that your Alter-Ego imagined, in terms of the effects of a possible finding of a deviation from the truth that you have to accept?

Just like at a digital camera the autofocus system can point by precision and speed, but may lose ground for lack of performance under low light or tracking moving subjects - so the trust that you manifest for those around you, may point in your effort to act on behalf of others, and to communicate as more convincing with them, but may lose ground to the lack of efficiency in the adoption of joint decisions or by the low level to promote your own beliefs.

John Maxwell said at one point in one of his books: "Without having reliable people around you to help you wear the burden, you will get exhausted and will extinguish yourself." He was quite right because people have a common orientation, with a sense of honesty in the relations established between them by accepting the responsibility for ensuring the smooth running of teamwork, and, moreover, accepts the responsibility of always acting with integrity, competence, dignity and in an ethical manner.

Such people are invaluable. They are less vulnerable to risk factors that can lead to conflict and division of the team. Whether, if by your side is one or more of such people, you should know that he/they are forming your whole, all that are you from the depth to the surface.

The truth that you have to accept as a leader is that no matter what image your personality takes on to create a new story, sooner or later you have to reveal your true self so that you can delimit yourself from what is false in your life.

First Prize for Excellence it is given only to those leaders who achieve outstanding performance through promotion of other people around them. Leadership is more efficient and sustainable, the more you manage to connect yourself to the "frequency" of others, to energize them by setting a high rhythm of development of their own approaches.

A leader cannot be efficient if the team does not perform. The team's performance determines the leader's performance, and this is the performance of leadership.

The first prize for excellence is achieved only by leaders who were able to co-opt people on the team in order to obtain good results for the interests of both parties, which means a lot of work with people, understanding, mutual support, but also increasing demands and alignment to specific standards, but also a fast rhythm to surpass others.

An open door for greatness it is actually the conferred recognition of "appraisers" for the activity and performance of the leader and his team, but always mean that can always be better or that there is room for further well. During the activity of a leader and his team there may be times when the door seems locked. Even so, as they say that God closes a door, but always leave a window open, just so the leader needs to find optimal solutions to reopen the door or path to performance.

Continue to develop your leadership potential by establishing an accelerated rhythm of evolution of approaches of those who support you.

For A Single Diamond I Have Conquered A World

Choose the path of certainty, in search of the constant for being what you really are, continuously reporting your leadership to the highest values.

Temudjin had the most precious gift, life. And had chosen to live it with his one, Börte. But, without knowing what will reserve his destiny, he directed his steps towards an unpredictable and frailer path. A perpetual wandering, sometimes touching dramatic moments, a twisting line in the extended and diversified gray of the risk, of insecurity and uncertainty.

The foam of events solidifies. Exactly when the world was dearer to him, someone kidnaps Börte from him. And from that moment everything shuddered in him, and along with him, the whole earth, all poles tightened, the sky darkened, the wind intensified until it reached the storm. Fiercely, he starts searching her.

Despite all efforts to retrieve her, he is rejected, hurt, wounded, and hunted by all. Even so, just as a mountain that cannot be moved, he continues searching; the fire of love heals him every time, cauterizing his deepest wounds. A beneficial cloud covers everything that is malade et faible, the power of a single thought keeps him alive: he wants Börte.

Leadership: Is your response to events that catch you in their whirlwinds envisages the ability to recognize and appreciate the diversity of the surrounding world in terms of the regret of not being in power?

During this fierce exile, maintained by the hope of her retrieval. Temudjin observes, penetrates with the eye and spirit the world's realities, and scents like a predator all the doubtful and unknown ins and outs, which are becoming more and more dangerous. He does not miss anything of the society's multiple aspects. But at the same time, the regret of not being in power, and of having no army to support him, scolds his certainty in everyday life, tortures his soul, shows him the futility of regrets.

The impetus for love is a sharp-edged sword. He aims with his huge will over the whole, and puts his entire artillery at stake: energy, creativity, skill, wisdom, insight, tenacity - all exacerbated by the assimilation of another scale of values, like in a performing laboratory, which works without interruption, intended for the consolidation and crystallization of his own personality.

Many times, he distils his beliefs, alike a true alchemist, until the resulting substance becomes more stable, more pure, more homogeneous, more positively charged, more active in extreme temperatures. Constantly, new drops of refined and sublime energy, revitalizes his forces.

Leadership: Are you about to minimize the essence of the consciousness of being unique by giving up the addiction to a reality that hurts your power and the determination to rise to far too exaggerated expectations?

By allying with Jamukha, his brother by blood, Temudjin starts a right-down war, a real rescue crusade, and takes possession on provinces, one after another. Because of his faith in a mighty God, a power that manifests itself in his own conception of himself, he begins to recognizes his consciousness of being unique, instead of escaping into an area of impotence and lack of vision.

Jamukha often tries to change his beliefs:"Why do you want so much Borte, why are you so obstinate to find her? I have a thousand of beautiful women. I can give you how many you wish."

However, an oak with strong roots cannot ever be transformed into a dandelion that shakes its fluff at the most gentle breath of wind. Wherever life reveals thousands of varieties, Temudjin knows only one constant. His will is more and more condensed only around her. For he does not want any diamond, but wants the most valuable one, the most expensive, the one of 1000 karats, the sum of all other gems, the rarest jewel.

His world is poorer than the reality, but more intense, more meaningful only at the thought that he would find Borte. Everywhere, even further is carried out his universal will, as well as of his priceless diamond. Two poles attract each other from a distance by powerful magnetic forces of nature. For, in her turn, Börte was waiting for him, she wants only him. Only a diamond can polish another diamond, equally strong and chiseled in virtues.

Leadership: What defines you for a description of reality in space and time when you are compelled to focus on how you perceive and interpret the outcome of a fabulous victory?

In the end, Temudjin finds Borte. However, the rules of life are getting harsher, on a different plan, they manifest themselves this time. For his brother, Jamukha, separates him, and starts the war - exactly against him.

Once again, Temudjin is facing the impossible, and again he is harassed, injured, enslaved, and locked in the darkest prison. Nevertheless, he fools death once again; the diamond has supernatural powers that dissipate any fears, pains and shortcomings.

It takes place the final battle for supremacy. Who will be at the helm of the world? Two titans confront each other. Two gods are getting angry once with the storm, two armies fiercely clutch each other, two competing forces, redoubtable, manifesting themselves simultaneously, opposing, and trying to annul each other.

An entire world can be conquered with the sword, but only by a strong inner motivation.

The battle is won. And only one remains standing. Only a single human type, obstinately keeps his head up, and the sword raised above a demon, fatally fallen to the ground. The winner ! The one, who has always kept a diamond deeply-rooted in his soul, the one, whose soul values, built from the toughest material, remained well-stuck in the crust of time.

After the surface of conquered territories, Temudjin, known as Genghis Khan, this almost indestructible warrior, was the greatest conqueror of all time, even greater than Alexander of Macedon. What defines such a leader in the case of a description of reality in space and time is his way of not looking in a different direction than the one in which he strongly believes he will win.

Leadership: How do contribute the result of your searches in the formation of your character, through the exercise of confronting an excess of power?

Are you an oak with strong roots or a dandelion that shakes its fluff at the most gentle breath of wind? Do you always wear alive in you an ideal? Where is the diamond that can favor you to exceed your limits? Do you insist on its search?

The expert in terms of leadership, John Maxwell, was right when he stated: "Leadership means an open mind and heart. If this thought increases your pulse and makes your heart beat faster, then you will have a greater impact on the lives of others."

Leadership is not just a combination of special features held by certain individuals, but an existential-defining rational act of commitment, marked the responsibility of each one, for the concrete forms of configuring the future through the medium of his own "searches".

The result of your searches, necessary to explain your cause and meant, will lay the foundations of your character. Aim with your huge willingness over the whole around you. Pick from the difficult path that you go through all the fruits that can facilitate your development and accomplishment.

Excessive power is a retrieval of one's own attitude toward assuming a new identity that no longer allows emotions to dominate your life.

Like a clock that beats at fix hours, leadership is built starting from two times: past and present. The undefined past from the mind of the individual, and the concrete present, sometimes fractured, of the Convention: Ego-Values-Virtues, around which he must gravitate. However, not a fictional, twisted and myopic present. And is being finalized into a certain future – through a linear thinking, or rather, into an uncertain future – through "vortex" type of thinking, very troubled.

Therefore, the optimistic forecast and the positive calculation of the leadership's probable trajectory, it is justified in the context of the prospective analysis of your own character. To whose formation and consolidation can directly contribute a "diamond".

Leadership is the diamond that is always found within you, polished and finished (to shine) by an accumulation of personal values, such as: inner strength, persistence, stability, continuity, intransigence, commitment, and dedication.

Time passes, and the clock of your leadership stops ticking if, during your searches, you do not learn from each lesson of life, if you do not aim with your huge willingness over the "whole" around you, if you do not put at stake, and especially, if you do not impregnate well in your soul those high values that refreshes you, forming an ideal that would confirm your horizon of expectation.

At the same extent, your attitude over time, on the way you react or act in certain circumstances, at least partially, must be endorsed by a firm and categorical moral authority - so as to cancel any hostile force that is trying to change, to control and sabotage you.

The main flaw of so many called leaders is that they are not endorsed by a strong personal authority, impregnated with the most sustainable values and virtues. And the fragility of beliefs, values relativity or the uncertain status that they assume, can be shuttering.

Before you measure the value of your leadership, learn to fulfill the purpose of your life through a search and power of a love blessed by God.

For a single diamond I have conquered a world designates that huge effort and of the long-term personal investments, that start from an irrepressible inner impulse.

Your will is increasingly condensed only around a diamond? How far can reach your will? Do you confront the impossible for achieving an ideal? Is there a hostile force attempting to cancel your moral strength? Are your values built of the toughest material, do they remain well-stuck in the crust of time?

Choose the path of certainty, in search of the constant for being what you really are, continuously reporting your leadership to the highest values.

For All Seasons

On May 03, 2016

Develop your leadership by following the complete cycle of multiplication of "myself", latent and active in all circumstances of life.

There was a vague transcendentalism within me that closed off a large virtue, opener of ways. One which only my genius brain possessed, the scientist who base their knowledge on that "I am" in a variable timeframe, coming from the depth of suggestions stirred by the immense expansion of the reason that admits to the miraculous intervention of the supernatural into the natural, with the intention of guessing the indulgence of the heavens.

The image that characterizes the inner world of man is a trustworthy guide through the hidden meanders of the words absorbed as if in a time without limits. The feeling that I was witnessing the act of creation, the apparition of the first life forms beyond things, in the spell of obscure solicitations of the time measured in the clockwise movement that announced awakening, the transfiguration of the world, was the product of pretending an infallibility whose final aim was that of freedom from multiplicity and union with the divine One.

I didn't know that I would be included in the destiny full of mysteries of another moment, in the plane of every idea of revolt against everything that was considered a remnant of memories, a something else in every then and now, lost in the eternal adventure of searching for a new prototype of my being during all seasons of using reflective learning. The only overstepping of the reason that characterized the trajectory of my destiny was revealed by a renewal of the opportunity to experience a fantasy of overturned mirrors, in which reality does not fit in with words, alluding to a story that flows quickly and becomes extremely unpredictable, creating a unique, mysterious reading.

Craftsman Zacharius, from the work of Jules Verne, found a long key, which resembled an elongated viper. He immediately rushed to the clock, which he started turning with a fantastic speed. The creak of the spring was getting on his nerves. The old watchmaker turned, always turned, constantly, and seemed to make the turning motion without his will. He turned the key faster and faster, with strange grimaces, until he tired. "Now it is turned for a century ! " he shouted.

Leadership: Can you constantly turn the piece "All About Me" until adjusting the lever that can offer you a positive opening to the entire world?

Building the contours of a living "myself", like that of a unique example of artistic creation, on the basis of beliefs inspired from the inexorable laws of infinitude, I had succeeded in surpassing all tutors and scholars of our time.

Full of the broad images of a perpetual genesis born out of the compulsion of the necessity to get closer to the truths of a higher reality, through the intensity of thinking up a larger work, "myself" has become the expression of a monologue of my own being, observable without a trace, sometimes traversed with rigor, sometimes with lyricism, by the hope of a key of the philosophy of great thinkers: if our life makes no sense then every man is called to invent one.

"I myself" is the work of a content full of core, easy to read and hard to guess, detached from a collage of images that should awaken certain emotions at an aesthetic level, not just psychologically. The experience of an artistic mentality, based on the plausibility of facts, situations, or circumstances that seem particularly distinctive in the sincerity with which I lay my thoughts on the inspirational pages of this blog, presents that tendency to blend the symbols with their multiple meanings camouflaged in destiny, in the of power coincidences, in predestined people – all of which led to a change in the sense of time experienced at the time of carols.

As the founder of the Christian Science movement, Mary Baker Eddy, assembled out of a metaphysical bustle a new method of healing – through the spirit, a science recognized and applied by millions of disciples, just as I have succeeded in expressing the unity of a work derived from the intellectual qualities of its author, always turning, constantly, the song "All About Me" until adjusting the lever that offered me a positive opening to the entire world, announcing the main trend of the century: the expansion of the concept of leadership.

The possibility of a destiny to be translated into an "All about me" work with aesthetic implications can gain shape when everything around you is easy to use, intuitive and liberating as a metaphor of the act of creation for all life experiences which could go through your mind.

In the version of a thinking that appeals to the act of creation, involving all manifestations relative to the element of time, life gains facets of an artistic object that gives deep coherence to the work, somehow esoteric through itself, storing original concepts and connected to the trends of development that must be followed to be up to speed. This work, permanently inciting you to ask yourself questions, without ever offering the suggestion of a definitive answer, is based on a modern approach to the construction of "Myself" manifested in many aspects.

Any manifestation, no matter how insignificant, enters the incidence of the entity "Myself", whose reason ceases to be a miracle, the living proof of a boundlessness in what regards life experience, the image of the man in the world.

Leadership, mercilessly signaling any time of change, any action, no matter how insignificant it would be, follows the complete cycle of multiplication of "Myself", latent in all circumstances of life for even years at a time. Until, under the influence of favoring or predisposing factors, it triggers the feelings that give you the power to succeed or to get close to a success that could offer you total joy.

"Myself", the twin brother of "All about me", is a structure of personal and spiritual development with a high degree of complexity, meeting that complex of roles that could ensure your framing within the category of revealers of authenticity, who know how to put their "works" in circulation.

"Myself" is a created story, a destination for all seasons. It ranks first on a level of integration in leadership that characterizes the evolution of your entire being, defining itself in terms of reproducing an existence that wants to be symbolic for the ideal existence of a world reconfigurable at any time.

"The fate of a Destiny of being itself" is the message you express in a work with a stunning access of inner expression, composed from of a vortex of symbols and figures of speech, that opens and devotes itself entirely to finding a key-image for life, for example in dreams and imagination.

For All Seasons is a matter of using and learning from the experiences of life. Leadership is the result of experiencing "Myself" in the course of the four seasons: that of waiting and meditating, that of breaking the silence, that of the joy of changing the world and endure over centuries.

For The First Generations Of The Renaissance, Perspective Had A Special Meaning

On February 14, 2013

Learn to capture an image equal to the dimensions of a distance you want to reach, without being affected by the reception of a reality with obvious characteristics of "broadening the horizon".

Perspective. Other works on perspective were also written, but they did not bring anything new, but merely repeated what Euclid wrote on the point of view and the vanishing point. But the fact that such works were written shows that painters began to show interest in this problem, which would completely change their conception of painting. During the Middle Ages, no one posed the problem of rendering three-dimensional space in a two-dimensional painting. There were certain processes that gave the figures and objects a certain relief, but they were presented in a stylized way, and the painting, in its entirety, had a symbolic character.

Painters from the beginning of the Renaissance, however, understood that perspective gave them the opportunity to highlight the space in which the models were, represented in such a way as to be able to establish, at a single glance, the connections and relationships between the represented forms, which could even appear isolated or detached from each other. In Leone Batistta Alberti's book, "On Painting", the painting was supposed to be "like a transparent window through which a part of the visible world appears". This book is also the first systematic treatise on perspective. He showed how several equal segments can be represented in perspective, placed one after the other, and especially that the perspective of the circle in a plane not parallel to the plane of the painting was an ellipse.

Although Alberti composed the first systematic treatise on perspective, Filippo Brunelleschi is considered the founder of modern perspective, and in his honor, Florence erected a funerary monument. He showed that a perfect illusion of three-dimensional space can be created in a painting, if the point of view, i.e. the observer's eye, is located at a distance that corresponds to the actual distance at which the painting is located. He introduced the notion of the horizon line and that of the transparent fictitious painting, which is interposed between the painting and the object. He and his students, Masaccio and Paolo Uccello used these notions in their paintings, and of Uccello, Leonardo da Vinci remembers exclaiming: "How sweet is perspective." Uccelo also drew, for the first time and after much effort, a circle in perspective !

Leadership: Does the perspective you relate to give you the opportunity to highlight the space where the patterns of perception of the images you perceive around you are located, representing them in such a way that the connection between what you imagine and reality can be established?

- In truth, the ellipse that Apollonius had loved and studied its properties some 17 centuries before, was rediscovered, in an entirely rudimentary form, now in the Renaissance. Here we recognize a single model of image perception that Apollonius noticed around: when the image is perceived as an object of direct experience of the moments of life, then the representation of the artistic vision will depend on what happens on the "surface", not in background.

- You have no reason to be surprised, that is exactly why we are in the Renaissance era. But, practically, things did not go quite so easily, for example, the problem of the vanishing point was imposed quite late, because the painters could not accept the idea that parallel lines could meet. Only in the middle of the 14th century does it appear in the paintings of Giotto, Lorenzetti, Jan van Eyck, applied to the parallel lines between the floors or the ceiling.

- Let's not forget that this theory of perspective and closely related to it, that of proportions, required serious geometry studies, and these studies developed in the 15th and 16th centuries. This is what Jan Bialostocki writes in the book before us.

For the first generations of the Renaissance, perspective had a special significance. From their point of view "mathematical perspective not only gave the guarantee of correctness (representation of reality), but also offered – and perhaps, above all, that's why – the guarantee of an aesthetic perfection". The problem of the correctness of the representation of space and what is in it was, therefore, essentially identical to the basic problem of Renaissance aesthetics, which is distinguished by emphasizing harmony as the most important compositional principle.

And there was something else, those painter-geometrists who penetrated deeper into the problem, were not willing to disseminate it outside the narrow circle of students they had next to them. I know that Albrecht Durer made a particular journey from Nuremberg in Italy to Venice and Bologna to learn the secrets of perspective, "mysterious perspective". When he returned, he wrote a special geometry for painters: directions for measurements by compass and ruler, probably inspired by Pierro della Francesca's book On Perspective in Painting, which circulates in manuscript or perhaps after Leonardo da Vinci's "Treatise on Painting".

Leadership depends on what you want to convey through the image, where the parallelism between the element of novelty that marks the direct experience of life's moments and the expansion of a horizon that stretches beyond you makes sense.

For The First Generations Of The Renaissance, Perspective Had A Special Significance. But even now, and especially in the future, perspective will have associated contents made up of objects, properties of these objects, as well as the relationships between objects.

But more than that, I would allow myself another approach to perspective: to be aware of a horizon that stretches beyond you, finding its relevance in the way of reality to reconstruct a moment of great trial under the influence of the surprising (or the random).

Foray Into The Depths Of Self-Knowledge

On February 22, 2014

Manage your depth resources carefully, so that you can reassess your individuality in the scenario of a reality that you represent under the fascination of an artistic film.

In my struggle with the thirst of broadening my perspective of understanding human nature, in the vast exertions of coordinating a strictly rational lucid curiosity, I have made use of the endless means of expressing my own thoughts and feelings. As time went on, I began to expressing into writing that which I felt. My efforts were directed towards establishing new personality traits and towards profiling a model of approaching the requirements of pure matter that could better stimulate the imagination and reason altogether.

Like a character from a film directed by Hitchcock, I had come to live through revelations, visions and dreams, which helped me relentlessly in better understanding what was happening inside of me, which represents me in contrast with what defines others around me. A man is hunted across the country by spies, who call him a double agent, and by the police, who considers him an assassin. He has to convince the whole world, but especially himself, of a reality different from the one given.

To put into words most convincing, my feelings aroused by an overflowing passion, a moral obligation, a happening less usual or a person trapped into a confused state, assuring me that no one could ignore that which I struggled to present with the utmost of clarity, became a long and stubborn effort that stretched over the years. An adage of content which tremendously fueled the capacities inscribed within the depths of my being.

Leadership: Are you the right person who can benefit from the effects of his own guilty attitude of not keeping track of the "costs" of representing reality, in the belief that things are solved simply by themselves?

A single philosophy remains unstoppable by Hitchcock's virulence and lucidity: writing is not a sign of fear, but only a feeling of subduing in a game without rules in which the artist contemplates his past existence through the chiaroscuro of a fascinating scenario created for the sake to emphasize a state of mind or an idea.

The cost of representing reality was directly correlated with the emotions I could not express poetically in an enigmatic story that captivates in the same way that it elucidates what seems unclear. In writing, as in the background of a suspense film, everything is simply resolved on its own if you know how to look at reality, if you know how to use your fantasy as a tool to confirm something you cannot explain.

Emotions were also part of the first contact with fiction, when I had to send a suspense message but decisive in favor of the plot meant to trigger a chain reaction. It was as if I had used lasers in order to discover a new form of matter, extracted from a Star Wars film. I had no certainty over that which I wanted to express and transmit, as in the process of creation of new spiritual values would intervene some arbitrary constants integrated into a specific template of style, overly subjective, driven by a wave of doubt.

Whenever I strongly focused over what I wanted to highlight, the creative powers of the subconscious immediately responded to my access request to what the old philosophers called: causa efficiens. A complete summary of the internal psychic phenomena which governed my existence. These proving to have a great impact for reassessing my own individuality in the "industry" of developing leadership that I represented.

Leadership: Can you support the way of suggestion of a non-existent reality with the help of your "authority" to interpret what you feel and perceive through the correct use of the two-sided rationale of truth in the character you are promoting?

The truth that you have to represent in a suspense work has two faces. The first side of truth, which captures the hidden quality of man, must support a showing and reminder of the fact that his safety is fragile in contact with reality. It needs to fill any empty space and make accessible any inner experience of fear and doubt, happiness and pleasure.

The second face of truth, having originated the fantasy of emotional impulses, occurs when man no longer recognizes his own death in eternity, so when he enters a game of desperate and suspenseful survival, a game of appearances with a surprising evolution. For example, when the people of the law caught him, he was hiding behind a ladder, presenting the danger of a form of madness that would be perceived as the extreme point of his character defects.

Apart from the truth of your own judgment, you must be prepared to face the situation in which, focusing on what you want to notice in others, through analysis and deep investigation on "the human specific", you are neglecting exactly the exploitation of your own life experience and your own creative potential.

The personality that honors leadership needs to find the artistic means of suggesting an image that does not exist in reality, but which can equally cause strong emotions as when faced with reality.

The Foray Into The Depths Of Self-Knowledge highlights that profound analysis of your own values and of your own potential for promoting an efficient leadership, based on a personality type adaptable to "the new", but also to "the unexpected", through a different reality. In the vision of a director like Hitchcock, self-knowledge must present the same basic premise from which the script name begins: "The film beats life."

The structure of the leader's personality includes the activities of being aware of self-values, summarized in the process of self-awareness, which takes on a large scale by supporting creative potential and maximizing it in a different reality.

Forgive Me And Take Me By Your Side !

On February 02, 2017

Assert your individuality following the indicator of motivation that makes you see yourself with other eyes in the equation of others' existence.

- Who are you? I find that I've seen you before, that I've met you, a long time ago... said Caderousse with his eyes almost closed, in the heavy moment of suffering of death.

Monte-Cristo had not ceased following the course of Caderousse's agony. He realized that this was his last breath. He approached the dying man's ear and, wrapping him with a quiet and clear gaze, said to him:

- I... I am...

And his lips, barely parted, let slip a name, uttered so slowly that Monte Cristo seemed himself afraid to hear it.

Caderrouse, who had risen to his knees, stretched out his arms, made an effort to pull himself back, and then, joining his hands together and raising them as in a search for sincerity, spoke softly:

- God ! Lord ! Forgive me that I have denied You. You exist. You are truly the father of all men in the heavens and the judge of all men on earth. Lord, for long I have denied you ! Forgive me ! Forgive me and take me by your side !

And Caderousse, closing his eyes, fell on his back, with a last cry and a final gasp. His blood stopped suddenly on the gaping edges of his wounds. He was dead. *

Leadership: Do you focus all of your forces of reason to conduct a reassessment of the course of your existence that will induce a single viable perspective with immediate effects in changing those around?

To be able to create an orientation of the human spirit towards the essential substrate of a new way of thinking, depending on the image you've created for yourself – that of a revealer of absolute truths, first make sure that the point of view you expose and sustain is not in opposition with the fundamental forces of action of life.

Two such forces are: man's will to reconcile with himself, with his past, with the mistakes that are being paid for and his will to orient himself in a new direction, in search for a fuller fidelity regarding the order and plans of a higher power. These are some of the riches of the spiritual man, along with the endless attributes of the relationship with the eternal values of a determinism based on free will.

The change of those around you is achieved through the way of thinking you promote in a situation where you are perceived as a "revealed enigma", and that your point of view on how you are connected to the reality around you presents you in the light of a new and mature conscience. That is, you must be both a magician and a savior of the world, to turn reality into the place of an atmosphere of genuine trust, faith, understanding, and appreciation, even if you are not understood at the level of your true power.

The man representativeness, in regards to what we call the quality of life, concerns his will to shape himself in the name of a morality that includes spiritual commitment.

Consciousness show life's retrospective in key moments. It can contribute to the enhancement of a journey undertaken through numerous stages corresponding to certain forms of thinking, of feeling, and of manifestation that are subject to an intervention attributed to a boundless power.

But only if the outcome of an important phase in man's life is a consequence of the mistakes dotted along the way. In this case, human representativeness, towards becoming active in the given of a situation of identity, requires the perception of a certain image by a subject that can be defined at the limit between life and death.

This subject, which you approach and treat as a meaning for what symbolizes your individuality, is the indicator of motivation that makes you see the equation of existence of others with different eyes.

For example, a good subject is the serving of a moral guilt, or the sacrifice made willingly to protect certain values by participating in some mission. Another subject can be the reconciliation with yourself, or the reconciliation with God. Or committing something beyond the limits of endurance. Or an altruistic choice. Or the clues of a particular inclination for the mysterious substrate of things.

The key moment of self-revelation, when the affirmation of the truth about yourself highlights all the subtle perceptions of a world dominated by extraordinary passions, privileges and backstage games, cannot be understood as the greatest achievement to the depths of life consciousness. However, the process of self-revelation can take place during situations in which you become the object of the intervention of a Divine-type Higher Entity in the world created by a patient character, who tries to go unnoticed in the crowd. Can you be a magician able to complete a role full of nuances, impressively assumed?

He who wants to acquire his representativeness in the validity terms of a reasoning aimed at the renewal state of man, must deepen the knowledge of the context of a subject of great significance, with the potential to change the attitude of man towards what he is yet not ready to face.

Forgive Me And Take Me By Your Side prioritizes man's repentance through the acceptance he gives to the faith he hasn't fully supported. It highlights that tendency of the man's power to accept what he would like to not know, the tendency unconsciously blocked by the inevitable implications of the weakness of his nature, but which is activated strongly by accepting a truth coming from outside of it.

Fortuitous Moments In A Leader Lengthy Evolution

Carry out constant operation of intercepting and monitoring "random" phenomena to find the sources of additional "revenue" in the sphere of science and innovation.

The great director was always focused on his concrete work. But one day, during a rehearsal in the foyer, he incidentally caught a glimpse of a young seven-year-old boy's plump, ruddy cheek, the son of an usher. The kid used to come to rehearsals and no one paid any attention to him. Eisenstein was struck at that moment by the fact that the boy's cheek reflected everything as a mirror: not only the mimic and gestures of every character, but everything overall, simultaneously. Eisenstein was surprised at first by this very simultaneity.

*On the way home – he walked, trams weren't operating at the time – he began to meditate on the nature of the phenomenon he noticed. The road home was long and this walking meditation could take place freely. He was always thrilled by the elegance of W James' paradox: we do not cry because we are sad, rather we are sad because we cry. He also liked the thought that from the correct reproduction of an expression you can give birth to the appropriate emotion. But, Eisenstein pondered, if that is the case, mimicking the external behavior of the characters, the kid must relive what the actors feel on stage or at the very least what they are trying to convey.

Leadership: Do you meditate on the nature of the phenomena that you observe purely by accident in a work that classifies you as a pattern of intellectual authority well-polished by art's means of expression?

The ability to find a connection between randomly caught elements and the external behavior of some acting individuals is the thought of a director who has all the data to make a memorable film. The mental training, especially flirting with the random and the unusual, sought where there is no balance between "recognition" and "differentiation" of new elements, as a result of the mobility experience, it is an absolute necessity for the awareness and finding of resources of added "revenue" in the sphere of science and innovation.

A talented director knows that where there are persistent feelings one can speak of behavior that seeks the attention of others, and here the science that he has to use can assert the conviction that whatever happens in the world is the consequence of a broad generalization attitude of the defining features of man. Full understanding of the evolution of science, of the recognition of the meaning and significance of its laws, but also the undertaking of the consequences that arise from its content, cannot be achieved without the constant conduction of certain operations of intercepting and monitoring "random" phenomena.

The science to which we must relate to this time focuses on a creation confirmed as being more of a beginning of the effort to define the concept of a "fugitive event", because only when everything happens in "fast-forward" does man live at maximum intensity.

A director who wants to introduce a remarkable narrative thread into his film must take into account the following: "It is one thing when everything is happening quickly and you do not know what you saw, and another thing entirely when you are faced with the fact itself and you have nowhere to hide". The key moment of a movie happens when the main character has no time to go back to the previous sequence, being determined to express emotion at will, naturally, to some who refuse to be the same as them.

Mental training is therefore an important component in a program that uses systematic observation as a means of gaining professional experience. It must be applied in such a way that, by imagining ourselves in a certain situation, we can add the activity of external factors to a new source of inspiration that will allow the reorganization of all directions of control of knowledge.

Mental training makes it easier for us to see the opportunities of integrating random elements in a set of techniques and methods, applicable in leadership depending on a certain system of reference.

Leadership: Can you achieve the complex simultaneity of the perception of the senses that highlight an initially ignored reality?

A leader who puts science at the forefront of his concerns constantly reflects on the combinations of perceptions, representations, impressions, values and references, from immediate surroundings, seeking to achieve that complex simultaneity of the perception of senses that highlight an initially ignored reality. But especially the differences of impact between different models of representation of the causal relationships between probable happenings, their importance and implications, and the factors that favorably influences the process of producing and organizing the component elements of creation.

This outwards reflection, on a new framework of "start-up" entities in the process of developing and applying science, constitutes the condition of the existence of leadership as a "scholarly" art, but also the exceeding of our own limits of understanding and perceiving certain aspects, themes or addressed objectives. Permanently, the redirecting of thoughts has need for a new structure of content, in the attempt of understanding the way in which science is transformed in the reproductive components that can be influenced and changed by man.

The forms of expression of directorial art, which can also be integrated into leadership, are as follows: the marking of important events in the life and work of the model of inspiration, the transition from an existing landscape to an imaginary one and vice versa, the understanding of the concept of a "fugitive event" and "deja-vu", the manifestation of a responsible attitude towards a character who supports the examination of his actions under the conditions of total freedom.

In this case, the task of the director will be to explain through a character a series of events whose unique unfolding in one massive event meant to represent the very pretext of discovering a new version of the same character.

Simultaneity in leadership, as well as in the direction of directing work, aims at producing more simultaneous actions, seen as "coincidences", that aim to highlight another side of the events and another version of the personality of the one caught between memories and present, between fleeting and eternal.

Fortuitous Moments In A Leader Lengthy Evolution refers to those turning points in the evolution of a leader that appear randomly, under the influence of unforeseen factors that can modify the perception of the path followed in the perfecting of science and even his own personality.

Fragile

On December 09, 2017

Silence is the echo of the word our soul must fill with.

I found myself unable to begin or to end a dialogue with myself blocked by the presence of a semi-imaginary sentimental intrigue loaded with prejudices, that I wanted to get tired of fairly quickly. But such an operation involves first and foremost the ability to select a valid message of the type "How fragile I a" from a whole string of abandonment possibilities in the face of nothingness.

Vulnerable in the face of things unwanted, unexpected, and undeserved, I was projected into the reality of a loneliness that unbalances, debilitates and discourages any attempt to overcome the novelty of a kind of imaginary analysis that requires not a random approach, but rather a persistent one. "Something in my mind will always stay: the reason of a previous effect, as its final cause."

This passive acceptance of a response from my much too complicated sensitivity, the pain of knowing myself neglected by the divine will, the pendulum between temporal and eternal, between disguise and faith, where compromise becomes something common, an effort to create the illusion of an individuality looking for the same original logos.

Missing was only the triggering occasion to produce an accident at any moment, an approach to the vanity of this world, contrasting with the deepest aspirations of a wanderer in the desert born beneath an angry star.

Perhaps this final act was meant to clinch a lifetime's argument. It was rather a juxtaposition of monologues, always a way for creativity, but not for pragmatism. A practice of research of superior knowledge through experimental examination, the art of creating a world out of nothing, a form of communication in short, because it means finding the respite and the need of a deepening in the pain of the inner truths, being inseparable from the perseverance in experiencing the tragedy of artistic consistency.

Leadership: Do you treat knowledge in a personal and mutual relationship of the two dominions: the manifestation of wise thoughts and the form of artistic expression?

To experience new forms of artistic expression is to give words strength, color, substance, weight, which few can manage to do. Carefully choose the representation you want to give to the words you use in the context of fusion with God, the experience of reciprocity through which You and the transcendent Being interact with each other.

I thought everything in me was the reverse of clear writing, proof of sensitivity to the novelty of a seeming desert rich in significance, always a spark of life. Accepting a moment of "now", preserving the solemnity of a moment that revealed my superior knowledge in a completely different form than was expected. I was like a writer resigned to the observer posture, to whom only the cult of everyday detail and hypertrophy of descriptions remain.

But always from the impenetrable hidden of the mind can spring the immortality of the sublime moment, a striking illustration of the mentality that has its replica in the literary imagination, an advantage of introducing into what is done in the reality of a meeting with God whose force of perpetuation of creation, of reinventing matter, goes beyond the theoretical framework of the present lines. This absolute intelligence creates the logical space of conceptual elements that do not degenerate into the marks of absolute nonsense because it embodies productive imagination.

At least, looing inside the writing that makes the abundance of fugitive thoughts a way of focusing on what I did not know, from the wide opening of the sensitive eye and the analytical mind, I counted my self fulfilled by applying experiences accumulated in the subconscious mind that emerged as intuition of the universe in the individual.

Leadership: Does your position on the decision to fix a reference point towards another way of mental stimulation belong to an "instance of guilt" type of role?

Intuition that established at the same time the structure of the plastic-narrative language, the non-traditional ways of expression, the underlying principles, compared to the verbal language. My position on assuming a role of the "instance of guilt" type being that of a doer of the Great Work which attempts to unify the world of the written word with the plans and thinking of God.

I still feel guilty, not for what I know, but for what is revealed to me from the experiences of mystical experience, from understanding the self in the light of the relationship with God in accordance with His will and not with the values of the world.

Thus, I feel guilty by letting people discover the truth of a pure faith, being the matter of the idea or the representation of fantasy in relation to perceptual activity. Like I was locked in a semi-dark cocoon that offers protection but does not feed.

Diligently, flaunting my ability to analyze a complex set of elements, relationships or principles to extract similarities and differences between what is seen and what is hidden, between external reality and imagination too active that blocks any initiative. I am too lenient to the meaning that the words of silence challenge, mix, erase, or throw them into my head.

The fragile thread that connects me with the Divinity has as its principal reason the realization of a most faithful portrait of the one who manages to open a door to the wide space of knowledge unfolding between perception and imagination, while maintaining that silence that seeks a question, seeks an answer, that actually says a thousand things.

"Silence is the echo of the word our soul must fill with." (St. Ignazio di Antochia)

Fragile is the state of the man experiencing at the same time the dense dimension of creation and the mysterious language of wisdom. Art and deep thinking. Dialogue between you and God, meaning that He engages in dialogue through silence in felt joy.

From Far You See Close

What pushes you forward is what inspires you when you face the moments of doubt, beyond the visible horizon.

It was past 9:30 p.m. I was returning from the Ciucaș Trail running competition. I was driving down a dark road, the light from the headlights slowly cutting through the fog that was beginning to settle. The car was quiet, so quiet, but everything around seemed full of the energy of a half marathon that never ended. Being behind the wheel, my hands were precisely guiding the direction, yet my mind drifted far, far away to the mountain that tested my limits early in the morning. My sister was on my right, she had run a splendid race. A place 4 feminin conquistado com muita difficile energizes his spirit with that silent joy, because always the small victories are the most precious.

The energy of competition lingers in the stillness of an individual journey. The road and the mountain had merged into a single entity 'Ahaiiakzan Iculumimex', a silent challenge that tested both my physical and mental limits. Every turn, every step, every breath seemed like an echo of a much deeper journey, a kind of introspection that did not leave me indifferent. Driving through the fog, among so many invisible shadows, as if the unseen abyss was whispering incomprehensible secrets to me, I seemed to find myself between two worlds: that of the machine, of silent technology, and that of nature, the unpredictable and the rhythm imposed by my own soul.

"You know," my sister began, eager to break the silence, "running is just like driving, you have to watch your pace. Every step you took yesterday is like a turn on this mysterious road, except you weren't driving a car then. It was just you, yes, just you and you, enveloped in the morning mist of the mountains, looking for that perfect rhythm, just like now you follow the rhythm of the engine. The steady rhythm of the engine is an echo of inner running."

Leadership: Can your individual experience in the context of action create a moment where success becomes a testament to your inner strength, manifesting as a continuum between physical and mental effort?

My sister was right - "the mountain drives you", she used to say, and just as you can't control everything that happens to you there, so now, when you're driving, the road has its own will, its own rhythm. You are only a passenger, guided by trust and instinct, just as in running you follow the unknown path. It's like whatever you do is just a reflection of an infinite challenge between you and the unknown. Just like yesterday, in every step forward lies danger, but also revelation. There is no certainty, only constant movement, your interweaving with the road.

When you drive through the night, every blurry shadow demands the eyes to see beyond physical limitations. My sister continued the conversation, her voice becoming like an echo, like a wave of unspoken thoughts: "Yesterday's runner and today's driver are no different. They both step onto a terrain that speaks to them, that tests their resolve and reveals their path, but only to those prepared to listen. It's like you didn't choose the road, he chose you."

The gaze passes through the fog of the road, searching for a clear horizon. At that moment, understandings seemed to be written in the fog, and the sound of the engine was like a pulse of my destiny, adjacent to a kind of silence that enveloped me, caused me to reflect deeply. The road is not only physical, it is the symbol of every choice. Every risk you take is guided by an invisible rhythm, whether you're behind the wheel or a mountain runner.

Leadership: Can the experience of being "you and with you" during a moment of deep introspection translate into self-knowledge, given that this duality implies an intrinsic relationship between precise control and spontaneous adaptability?

I felt like every turn of the road became a brush in the hands of an unseen artist, painting a picture of uncertainty and revelation on the canvas of my soul. I felt like a Van Gogh in front of the easel of life, where every touch of color – be it a decision to turn left or right – was simultaneously an act of creation and abandonment. In this vernissage of existence, I was both the artist and the work, caught in a road of self-discovery, where the boundaries between control and chaos, between the known and the mysterious, blurred like in an impressionist painting. And in this fusion of man and road, of the present and the unknown future, I felt myself becoming a living masterpiece, pulsating in harmony with the universal rhythm of life.

At other times, I felt like a sculptor shaping clay, the road slowly and steadily shaping me, each turn a chisel carving from the raw block of my self a new, unknown shape.

At one point, the car passed through a tunnel, and the sound of the engine grew louder and louder, reverberating around. Somehow, I felt the echo of my steps among the steep rocks during the contest. You know, Oana, I still remember the feeling of the morning, when my feet touched the dry ground, every step a struggle between will and fatigue.

My sister smiled slightly, continuing in an almost whispered tone, "Maybe you're not even driving the car today. Maybe the road is actually leading you. Just like the mountain guided you yesterday, just like every step took you forward without really knowing where you would end up, you just trusted yourself."

Driving through the night, each blurry shadow asks the eyes to see beyond physical limitations. I was looking ahead, the road winding ahead, similar to those endless paths during the competition. Driving is not just a physical journey. "Yesterday's runner and today's driver are one and the same," my sister would say softly, almost mystically. "Both seek direction, but in the end, it's the road that chooses you. You just have to be ready."

Her words hung in the air like headlights hang in the fog. I was still there, running, driving. But always chasing something that cannot be clearly seen. Just felt...

True mastery in leadership lies in recognizing that you do not control the path, but are guided by it, adapting to the pace of the challenges that constant change entails.

From afar you almost always see that the experience of exploration merges with the experience of introspection, because only then can you really understand both the outer and the inner world. More precisely, when the experience of exploration merges with that of introspection, you realize that every step forward in the outer world reflects a deep inner discovery, and true clarity comes from this connection.

From Light To Light

Connect yourself with the people around you on a deep level, so that to put in value in the best way possible the impeccable approach that defines your leadership.

Lieutenant Waters, from the U.S. Navy, this introverted man, entirely devoted to the mission he had received, decides to ignore the orders of the High Command and accepts, at the insistence of Dr. Lena Kendricks, to evacuate the locals, whom she was responsible of. Together with the other members of the SWAT team, which he led, Waters escorts them to the Alpha retirement area. But things are getting more complicated.

They had to fight for their lives, because the elite troops of General Mustafa Yakubu – whose thirst for power knew no limits, were behind them, only a few kilometers away. The Mazon forest, where they could barely move, could no longer provide safety for them. The chances to reach the border with Cameroon through the Tandjile pass were increasingly low, because "the load was too heavy". All those refugees from St. Michael Mission were too many, too tired, some of them sick and others wounded.

Leadership: Are you called upon to validate your leadership position by belonging to a power group or by belonging to a referential context in which the price of achieving values and their way of manifestation take precedence?

If you watched the movie "Tears of the sun", you probably remember that, at one point, Waters is forced to make a final decision: either to abandon the refugees and carry out the mission he was entrusted with, safely leading Dr. Kendricks to the Alpha point, or to continue his way full of danger and difficulties with them. Before making the final decision, Waters wants to find out his officers' opinion, encouraging them to speak openly:

- I was suggested to abandon the refugees. I now say to you that I won't do that. I can't. Because I care about them... terrible problems await us. Before going further, I want to hear your opinion, if you will support me. Speak freely.

To complete your character means to boldly present your virtues as the sole content of a life lesson that you will always remember.

If you really want to create a real unity between you and the members of your team, you must sometimes ignore the hierarchy and ranks, consider all of them equals and give everybody the same amount of trust. If you want to give continuity to your leadership, you must prove that you are communicative with your subordinates in all situations, making them understand that they aren't inferior to you and they have the potential and power to turn themselves into key-people, who can make things work.

Showing his true colors, speaking with depth and seriousness, encouraging them to speak freely, without fearing their opinions, Lieutenant Waters gave full value to his true personality, and to his true leadership skills, as well.

The life lesson that the lieutenant has learned from this saving solution with drama and rebellion, without being limited to the nature of his actions or the role of his mission, is the following: there is a more important struggle than the struggle to win the minds of men, namely, the struggle for their souls, hostage in an episode of deception.

Nothing hurts more than asking people to do something without providing them the necessary means, strategies and valid perspectives to achieve that thing. Nobody will follow you to the end if you're conceited, if you don't boldly show off the virtues of your good personality.

Leadership: Do you start the process of resetting the limits imposed upon your power of appreciation of professional valences to make it easier for you to follow if you feel involved in decisive decisions?

Leadership rises from a consensus between your being and the nature of other people. You will be sure of having them all on your side, just like Lieutenant Waters, whose team followed him up to the end of the mission, only if you can connect with them on a deeper level.

A consensus that meets the interests and wishes of those who you lead. They will feel deep inside their being the desire to help you and be with you, if their nature resembles yours. If they have a worthy, clear, strong, winning character, based on values and principles common with yours, then they will accompany you on the road to achieve your purpose.

The limits imposed upon your power of appreciation of professional valences are given not so much by your degree of ambition and credibility, but by the duty of being able to reconcile yourself with the thought that what you have become is a stain on the memory of the people who "followed" you.

Just as life cannot exist without water, water representing up to 99% of the living system, in the same way perfecting your own style of leadership cannot work "in reverse", namely without the involvement of a third party in reaching the proposed goals. Perfection is acquired by the novelty of your own manifestations, by empathy, collaboration and temperance, through resonance with the "waves" of the others' leadership.

I should mention that this aspect that could be considered necessary, being generated by altruism and the spirit of comradeship, is conclusive for understanding the major aspects of the development of new generations of leaders.

From light to light designates the continuity of your leadership given by that feeling of union and spiritual connection that you induce to other people, that feeling of friendship and solidarity that makes them share their ideas, beliefs and visions with you and follow you in the direction you chose, sincere and determined, as though they would have made a covenant with you to persevere and completely devote to your mission.

For your leadership to keep shinning, give up your pride. Lend your year to the opinions of your other teammates, especially when a huge stake is put at play. Quality leadership involves setting a long-term cooperation with valuable people.

From Simple To Complex And Back

On August 29, 2016

Learn how to better know yourself, experiencing thinking and intelligence on the idea of contributing to the renewal of life.

I had to find a way of exposing those sides of life that no one else could accept, built from the heights of a forgetfulness that, in turn, will not be forgotten by the memory of oblivion, with the help of which I can simplify the outlines of fluctuation between two phenomena. A phenomenon of adapting to the rules of a situation through which I can come to an agreement with the rest of the world and a phenomenon of alternation, of an immense complexity and with a special responsibility: the tendency of hiding myself, of running away, of going unnoticed among people.

Under these circumstances, the First Rule option from the submenu "How I can be found" didn't allow the selection of the True value from the option "What If", but again, the "Stay Close" recursive call was being executed at a progression from the simple to the complex and back, from science to art, as scientists say. This decided the fate of my incursion into a particular reality, at the levels of viability of an abysmal psychology.

The fantastic was just as necessary as the gleam in the monotonous landscape of autumn, demonstrating the unity between the answer to the question I constantly asked of myself and the execution of an algorithm of recognizing ignorance opposed to the true self, to which I was, of course, subject to, only to predict the future of my entry into a loop of multivalent logic.

Leadership: Can the creation that inspires you the most be the natural pursuit of what you experience in a life lived in another space and time, with the possibility of acquiring a new virtue?

Life, to be fully understood, about what forms the experience of living, needs to cast you away into complete oblivion, but assumed, made on three quarters from the bitterness of a type of defeat, a life doomed to futility, from calling a function with a single variable: "You yourself", giving it the value of the arguments from an associative Array. By this, I remember a fragment of an opera signed by Jorge Luis Borges:

"He stole a treasure and then realized that it was not essential to him. It was essential for Abenjacan to disappear. He pretended to be Abenjacan, killed Abenjacan, and eventually, became Abenjacan.

- Yes, Dunraven confirms. He was a thief who, before becoming a mortal, would remember that he was once king and pretended to be king."

And I, too, was feeding on a quarter of a doubt, comprising the finest of experiences in gigantic proportions, earnestly seeking a method of plastic expression of the basic tendencies of the reality of thoughts, of the perceptions to the experiences I conduct in the captivity of the mind, by recourse to the past and through imagination of the future. I understood that my life was like that of characters from other works, from other times, from other worlds, and for this I had to guide my life according to the concept of alterity.

The virtue of matching someone else's image to become one with that person is actually the idea behind the concept of alterity. Only by selecting the values of the "End" variable you can obtain the approval of better knowing yourself, built on the recurrent theme of forgetfulness. And only with patience can you take possession of the primary key that uniquely identifies every recording of the entity called "journey."

Leadership: Do you fully enjoy the freedom to manifest yourself in your entirety, by extending the concept of reflective intelligence at the level of projection of a creation that strives toward a higher purpose?

Wells' "The Time Machine" novel is not only an answer given to existence that reconfigures the intimate game of the being that wonders – frightened, anxious or calm – "What is going to happen?" It is rather the answer to a voice that not just anyone can hear, a calling that involves a certain limit. As the author states, there are some who are not able to see the chasm that separates them from the working people from the explorers of modern society, to understand that it is always widening.

The particular moment when you get back to where you started, fully serving the freedom of manifesting yourself in the totality you had, and one you yourself compromised through the captivity of the existential status, a difficult one: must have more control of science, is a part of the ascendant trajectory you create by combining defining elements: the ability of orienting yourself through what is an illusion and the ability of orienting yourself through what is truth.

Truth is what you see new to you from the perspective of an Alter-Ego. The truth is the pact with yourself, supported in the daring attempts of analyzing yourself through the perspective of the need of justifying a becoming, through the attachment to the increasingly larger dimensions of science, which stimulate you intellectually. Because it is not enough to live on emotions, on the perfection of inner and outer beauty, on a space of existence, healed, complete and whole. This is the intensity of the beginning of a path, which will only take you to the midpoint of the journey.

A reflexive intelligence is the projection of a creation that tends towards a higher purpose: to see you more than you are, from the perspective of an Ego who, thirsty for his own importance, enriched his memory with a vast inspirational material collected from the memory of some fictious lives.

The illusion is what remains after certain parts of the truth were modified or doubted. The most rational man is able to achieve an extension of the meaning of the concept of intelligence and to popularize it in his own life, without depending on the main trends of the realities of thoughts, of the perceptions of the experiences he lives within the captivity of the mind, through memory of the past and imagination of the future.

He does not let himself be seized by thoughts, he doesn't let himself get stolen by them, and that is why his attitude and thoughts are unknown to others. He trusts only in the sincerity of situations, in precise data, in the forms of the truth exercised over his interaction with practice.

Science is the power need for the illumination of the path, its choosing and its crossing. But the path will be easier if you think by answering the questions you ask of yourself by executing an algorithm of recognizing ignorance of yourself, to which you are constantly subjected to.

The rational man is affected, devoured by the ignorance of only seeing the face of reality that suits him, drawing conclusions after every life experience, on every option lost or won.

He is the witness of his defeat, which can turn him from a regular person into a man of a hostile destiny.

On the other hand, the man who supports his orientation as an ordeal, the man who defeats reason through feeling, always experiences thinking and intelligence based on the idea of contributing to the renewal of life.

Your life can be renewed by the power of creation, in turn expressed by a stabilizer of the state of mind: "What you experience in front of a mirror causes the mirror effect to increase its intensity."

Take care in whom you mirror your face, your soul and your feelings.

From Simple To Complex... And Back is the evolutionary path we all follow in an attempt to discover the basic truth of the human condition: knowledge cannot be separated from the conditions of being aware of the validity of existence, and the foundation of existence – consciousness – can only be reached through emotion and feeling.

From The Deep In The Depths Of Your Being

Align yourself to your true values for people to fully accept your vision and to not have to suffer.

Each of the 12 members of the Board of Directors expected that Bill Parrish, founder and president of Parrish Communications Corporation, to say YES, a sign that he accepts the generous offer of John Bontecou, who wanted to purchase the majority of shares in the company. Instead, Bill, with that firmness of a man who is aware of his power and influence, said NO !

- Impressive. I suppose. But it did get me to thinking... But John Bontecou is all profit. Now, if we give him license to absorb Parrish Communications, and he has his eye on a few others after us, in order to reach the world you will have to go through John Bontecou. And not only will you have to pay him to do this, far more important, you'll have to agree with him. As President, I urge you to come to the conclusion that this company is not for sale. . .

Leadership: How could you use everything you feel about a certain situation to your advantage so that the way you define your intentions can clarify the approach based on changing the way you produce your own promising prototype?

How "friendly" is your interior design? Bill Parrish, who a few days ago have agreed with the merger between the two companies, has changed his mind at the last moment. What a change of approach, is not it? From where is this sudden change of attitude, thinking, and why it happened at the last moment?

All it may become a temptation when a huge opportunity appears. Before you decide what is best for you, and especially for others, it is better to align your values with what it is truly important to you and for them. In vain, you follow the good of the company, if you do not follow and the good of the people that serve the company. Basically, Bill Parrish used in his advantage everything he felt about the situation of the company, that is, he knew how to appeal to morality, to the cause of a moral constraint, not by threat, but by categorical statements, seeking the usefulness of defending the entity he leads.

Bill Parrish revealed the promising prototype of himself through a unique decision: not to pay attention to himself, but to prioritize the value and prestige of the company that is represented by his outstanding character, by the peaceful way in which he knew how to moderate increasing tensions.

All values and principles that you have gathered, and that you've learned over time, in which you believe and treasure, are a part of a splendid design, your interior design that reveals your true personality. However, does not matter how important is your design if it is not liked by others, if it does not take into accounts their needs, and if it does not send a suitable message, to reach their hearts.

Leadership: Are you able to achieve an acceptable level of assurance of your integrity as a basis for a positive form of image perception above the line of personal value growth?

In leadership you should not be shy to say out loud (firmly, that is) what you feel about a particular situation; it's better to try to clearly define your intentions so that other people are more willing to listen to you and understand your motivations. Indeed, a leader expresses his emotions, he is not afraid to express or describe how he feels about a situation. He gets involved, asking customers or employees (in turn) to express their feelings freely.

In the end of the movie "Meet Joe Black (1998)" the members of the Board of Directors, who initially were reluctant to change of mentality of Bill Parish, thanked him for the clever decision that he took. What would have happened if Bill had accepted the proposal of Bontecou? All his company's staff would suffer sooner or later, and no one would forgive Bill's mistake.

In the moment when you have to take an important decision that concerns and others around you, are sieved those strong and honorable moral values, which are deeply embedded in you - of those non-ethical values that do not fit in your patterns, and that are not consistent with the other ones. For the size of your leadership to grow, do not abdicate from your true moral values and of the other ones. Always try to emphasize your inner capacities that are making from you a person of value.

The vision that you have is reflecting the values that guide you in life. For people to accept your vision, they must first accept your values. And integrity means focusing on what's important, even when you're no longer as important to managing your company's reputation.

A positive form of perception of an image above the line of increasing personal value is the result of a previous decision that no one has challenged as abusive or inappropriate to the rank claimed by your value.

From Deep In The Depths Of Your Being means that self-awareness and personal development process that helps you better understand yourself, and relate better with others around you. In order to take the best decisions you must penetrate deeper into your being and to reveal your true values, to discover what it is really good to you.

Just as weeds must be pulled out of the ground, to give place for flowers to grow - all so you, as a leader, must remove those „weeds" that disrupts your thinking to leave room for ethical and honorable values to evolve. To earn the respect of others, in order to determine them to accept your vision without having to suffer later, align yourself to your deepest and honorable values.

Also, From Deep In The Depths Of Your Being means to discern with your wisdom, but also with your soul, between the ethics and non-ethics towards the community that you lead, and that in a great measure has chosen and supported you. It means to be close to these people, and do not to disturb their confidence, hopes, but rather to give them an impetus to continue their ascent for the best of their interest, despite those who oppose the development and pursue only their personal interests.

From What Truths Comes The Whisper?

On May 09, 2012

Acknowledge steadily and consequently the limits of your leadership for the impact with the reality do not affect the essence of your being.

A real misfortune descended upon the great businessman Bill Parrish, who was struck by pain. His heart seemed to break his chest. And the whisper, relentless, persistent, continued to be heard with the fullest clarity: "Yes ... Yes ... Yes ..." - issued by an invisible entity, endowed with the implacable force of a Mephistopheles, who magically senses, by the immeasurable power of the thoughts and emotions, the human soul secrets.

The sufferer tries to assign an explanation to this whisper that made its way throughout his life, to this calm voice, but with a force of an overwhelming assertion. Where does it come from? Who emits it? But cannot glimpse the truth, cannot assign any meaning. Because it derives all his manifestations; like an invisible flood engulfs his whole being, weakens in him any reaction of opposition, guiding his senses, feelings, behavior, and suppressing any response, affecting his health and drowsing his physique. The whisper seemed to cancel out any possibility of compromise.

Leadership: Can you commit yourself to staying loyal to yourself, in the face of a fact that overcomes you by the impossibility of understanding it?

- I have not put any question ! Bill still manages to slur, through an effort of will. Damn it, what happens? Tell me who you are ! - Remembering like with fear about the last words that the Countess Vaninka has addressed to Captain Fedor, shortly before he died: "Against events you must urge yourself, for the masses are not directing the events, but on the contrary, are dragged by them."

The pain seemed to cease, preventing the heart attack. However, the evil did not leave in a hurry, but appeared again, with renewed force; more frightening, more persistent, more fiercely throws over the helpless. As if, seized by a cruel antipathy to him, heatedly, would have sought an opportunity of derision to torture him:

- You give me orders? resound the whisper in the air. I think you know the answer, Bill. And now you try to solve the situation, but that's the situation you know that you will never be able to solve.

Bill felt that somebody despises him, hates him. Why? The pain was growing more and more, as if the entity behind the whispers would be challenged the hardness of his heart, beating like with a hammer in it; as if he had a heart of stone and someone was trying to test its resistance. He wanted to attack, to strike back, but how? With what weapons could he face the hell? How could he change, immobilized by pain, surrounded by fear of death, the authoritative attitude of a demon?

Leadership: Do you respond with respect to any form of transmission of your ideals by summing the command impulses coming from a force that exceeds you?

I might assume that the succes in the art of leadership will be placed in that direction decided by the inner world of man, which supports his essence, directing his manifestations according to his previous experiences, shaping him after the factors that affect him the most strongly.

The man who brings his contribution to the development of his individuality and who gives a new form to his creative vision, placing himself in front of a new reality, is the one who understands that not everything that can be grasped with sight can be grasped with the mind.

Just as primitive people never investigated the disease that hurt them, but rather sought God, so it is in your case; you are in vain trying to bring a new perspective to your reason if you do not investigate events (which you come across) through the perspective of the truth that you can only embrace through the notion of a God, of a force that overcomes you and pulls you to it.

The motivation to live for a great cause involves the continuous transfiguration of reality, making connections between what surrounds you and what defines you.

God is man's opening to new realities that can reveal the truth of life. And according to Romanian writer, Cornel Ailincăi, the unperceived fact, to which we offer our whole attention, being almost forced to submit to it, is an act of symbolical conversion in a double meaning: it enriches the perceived content with an imagined content and highlights the hidden, intrinsic voice of formal means.

When you come across something you do not know and you feel that you are commanded to listen to it, given the circumstances you are going through, whose supernatural content implicitly refers to an act of transcendence, of symbolism expressed by means of figuration more or less illusory, only then you are beginning to struggle in the darkness of your own closed doors.

At the same time, inversely proportionate with fear, is born the courage to truly experience what you yourself are in a dialogue with something greater than you, a fact which changes your perception related to your value in relation to a meaning of life that includes both spirituality and mysticism.

Leadership: Can you fully accept a truth, from the multitude of situational variables born from the interaction of undefined events that circumvent the pre-determined rigorous solutions?

A unique and undivided reality has strengthened. The opinion of the great businessman Bill Parrish (from the movie "Meet Joe Black") about himself, about the world, has changed at the end of the "meeting" with the whisper. At that moment, he ceased to exist as an omniscient leader, as a very important person, as it was believed. For only then, he could better highlight who he really was, and to accept the truth: that he was only a mortal, and like any other mortal he could whenever be "interrupted" from the "On-Off" button by the superior forces.

Only then, he realized how small and insignificant he was. And, he accepted with submission that each man lives almost mechanically, like a puppet, as being influenced by an "intangible" entity, which develops and adjusts things after an order that is still unknown.

Transformational leadership is based on the leader's ability to draw conclusions from unprecedented phenomena, creating correlations between the external environment and internal power.

Just as a writer confers his characters more intensity and expression, and lifts them up to the symbol, conferring them a certain rounding of soul - and so you, in order to understand and complete your development, you must place your existence under the sign of your ego that defines you, and that can modify the "hardness" at the impact with another reality, a sudden or an unexpected one.

Confer a certain rounding to your leadership by the addition of moderation, balance and modesty, of the temperance of any pride and selfishness. By adopting some measures to stop and prevent all forms of erosion of your protective character, noble, well-defined, of which you should give evidence.

When you try to define something that you do not know, being contradicted by something opposed to the natural, without having the power of foresee the chain of events, you begin to shape up the idea that a supernatural content can be altered depending on the meaning you give to the emotions that want to control your life.

Your reactions to the events of the day depends on how you think the next steps according to these emotions !

From what truths comes the whisper designates the reaction of the subconscious to your attitude, towards your own evolution, after you are confronted face to face with the unexpected reality, and to realize that your leadership has not taken the form that you originally wanted.

Listen to your conscience, analyze your past and present, and you will know at least a part of your future. Analyze your pathway from point zero, see whether you are away from your ideals and goals. And find your current coordinates by making the appropriate corrections. Only then you will escape of the "whisperings" nightmare dictated by the entity called ... consciousness.

Acknowledge steadily and consequently the limits of your leadership for the impact with the reality do not affect the essence of your being.

Frontally Addressing Unsolved Things

On March 04, 2014

Identify those assumptions that appear to be significant in determining the fair value of reality, relating your judgement value to the beliefs expressed by others.

- Strange things are happening here. It's hard to tell. It could be hatred combined with an accusation leading towards a particular person.

- What do you think this means? Meaning the accusation being directed precisely against Ms. Lee?

- No, I do not think we can say that. Someone might have seen something, or heard something. A noise or a scream, or the horse running as if running for its life. And it could've trampled someone. And they could have seen or met a woman, shortly thereafter. But it sounds as if we were talking about a different woman, because everyone believes that someone else is somehow involved in this story. In such a way in which the message sounds as if a different person, a completely different woman would be tied to the event.

- Do you mean to say that that unknown woman caused the accident, the one we suspect more or less, without knowing if she actually exists or not? *

Leadership: Do you take into account the opinions of others in order to understand what cannot be described and represented on the map of your own certainties?

The certainty of the simplest acts supports grandeur in choosing that personality configuration that you are willing to accept as part of your existence beyond what you think is true for someone else. In other words, certainty is a revelation of the perceptual experience that you get by experiencing a rupture of the reality you're used to spoiling your mind with.

To convince yourself of the importance leadership has in the light of the experience of understanding what others think, feel, what expectations they have, depending on their openings – a fact which turns you into a true tester for the verification of everything evident and measurable – you must pay attention to those assumptions that could be significant in determining the fair value of what you know. Or of that which you revealed in order to fill your understanding over the events that go beyond your control.

This understanding of events to which you don't have access to and don't have the power to manage, experimental if that level of "What others support and believe" is measured, requires the application of categorical judgement of your consciousness that tends towards stringent, causal explanations. In other words, you realize that there is, in fact, a side of things that you don't image. That somewhere, perhaps not that far away, in waiting, an appearance of reality is taking place that involves an essence.

And this essence, which unties the mystery of any relating to own beliefs, is an invitation for the creation of new updates to your coordinates of impact on reality. You start to see the world differently, you begin to judge the problems of leadership that emerge much more leniently, completing the scope of the object of analysis on which you turn your thoughts to.

Leadership: How do you relate your judgment value to the beliefs expressed by others in case you are not willing to bear the costs of a wrong interpretation of the circumstances in which an event occurs?

The starting point of the approach of organizing the opinions vis-à-vis everything that goes on around you, revealing the tendency of giving a greater use to those beliefs that shape interpersonal interpretations, is represented by the thoughts that rush within you, which struggle deep within you incessantly trying to tell you something. They should not distort the perception of reality; whose poignancy sets a strong direction of the leadership quality control and the stimulation of the initiative for action.

The circumstances in which an event occurs must be interpreted in terms of what you feel about yourself as compared to the opinions of others if you fail to make the right choice. Beliefs expressed by other people over a given situation may be the revelation of a perfect blend between the pursuit of exploring a reality that surpasses any expectations and is open to an understanding of the overall situation placed in a context like: "everything must take shape somehow".

Deep thoughts that at times overturn a lot of things within you, if not the whole truth you believe, retrieving something from what you thought you placed in the alienation of the meanings attributed to reality and depend on the perspective of others. Thoughts initiated by their unreliable testimonies, but sometimes credible, which you approve or disapprove, one by one, gathered within you like in a journal full of ideas, unmade until the moment your expectations are validated.

This means relating your judgement value to the beliefs expressed by others.

To understand leadership, you need to make an assessment of the certainty your analyst experience gives you in the search for a vision of the bigger picture, through what happens to you when you're busy revealing a new reality.

Frontally Addressing Unsolved Things highlights that ability of relating yourself to "what exactly do others say and believe", to be in tandem with their objective expectations and realities. Which implies a judgement and reassessment of their own conscience and their own vision.

Fullness Is Hidden In Emptiness

On December 14, 2008

Add immense significance to your leadership, without losing sight of the ideal of values you carry in your soul.

And this time I will start by saying a few words about famous Romanian actor Puiu Călinescu, considered by many film critics as one of the most talented actors in the world. On the TV show "Profesioniștii", the director of the show, Eugenia Vodă, asked the old great actor:

- An actor such as yourself has to be very wealthy, that's what viewers would think. But I saw how modest you live. Why? Were you a big spender, or have you not managed to save money?

And Puiu Călinescu answered:

- There are some who have money in their blood. It's a disease. To have money. I'm going the other way around. All I want is for God to help me be loved by the people. I love Him.

Can you add more image to your leadership by being content with little rather than trusting in a life drama that manages to stir you to the farthest corner of your soul?

You can have little, and still be a great man. Your success as a leader is only guaranteed if the influence you exert on others adds to the image of your leadership. And my opinion is that the actor Puiu Călinescu wanted to express a great truth: "Fullness is hidden in emptiness". I mean, you don't have to be rich to be someone. You can have little, and still be a great man.

This is one of the jewels of leadership that aligns the practices, values, and principles that guide virtuous people. This principle allows us to make wise decisions, to become more confident in ourselves, to think clearly, to judge more clearly the implications of our actions, to give an account of what we do, and to set out on the right path.

Another very important thing that transpires from the words of the great actor is that each of us must travel to self-discovery, to fulfill as well as possible the eternal purpose of art to understand ourselves, to manage our own existence as well as possible, and to transform into perfect beings without losing sight of the ideal of values we carry in our souls. Our journey to self-rediscovery can be very fruitful in terms of the quality of our own existence, being unanimously recognized by others as having the power to arouse self-interest, to awaken faith.

Is your leadership measured by the way you earn a living, or by the way your actions betray your personality in a context of the type: "Don't just limit yourself to what you see in front of you"?

It is said that he who masters the meaning of a man's life is the master of his soul. Or, in other words, find out what the leader wants, find out what his feelings and emotions are, and you will have a great influence on his life, on his conscience, on his leadership. And the most important values of the leader are: compassion, empathy, self-acceptance, forgiveness, spirituality, inner peace, understanding.

Many "artists" of leadership, especially those who started the change in time and facilitated the development of their own existence, gradually turning into perfect people (by virtue, by ideals, by personal example, instilling in people around the same mood) first of all, they imagined the path they will take in life, in their career. They have thought of their own development as leaders, realizing that proper leadership is not just about advancing oneself, but about maximizing the value of those around them through their own special qualities.

Because, after all, the life of a perfect leader shows a sum of positive qualities which he proved to possess fully, qualities which he knew how to capitalize on highlight at the right time.

How do you maximize the value of those around you? How do you value your qualities? Do people follow you in terms of what you do for them? Are they following you for what you are and what you represent? How can your leadership gain extra "vitamins"?

There always comes a time when all leaders end up asking all sorts of questions about the soul, the human spirit, and spirituality. This usually happens towards the end of their career, when they can no longer advance in positions. Only then do they each outline clear steps by which they begin to express their deepest feelings without fear, without detours. This adds extra "vitamins" to their existence. These vitamins are nothing more than a source of principles, values and beliefs that can contribute to the formation and maintenance of a healthy mental attitude.

Leadership: Do you find yourself constrained by the extraordinary circumstances in which you find yourself accepting a reality that is objectified as a "self-difference" in two contexts of the experience of being part of a change in expectations?

Just as all the burning processes in the human body consume oxygen, so do all the processes that ensure the evolution of your leadership consume some of your moods, feelings, emotions, and much of your "vitamin" supply – just to be able to give a better quality and stability of your own existence.

Hidden in emptiness is the full design of the agreement between you and your leadership, between your values and the values of others. When you develop your self, which in turn feeds on people's attention, their positive or negative emotions, their happiness or unhappiness – you also deepen your leadership. As you learn to use people's emotions as a springboard to accomplish great things, you will be able to help them develop a coherent system of goals that will bring good into your life. And at the same time, you will be able to strengthen and capitalize on your relational potential (which must be in line with your leadership principles and obligations).

As in any other field, in leadership professionalism is the "fullness" which is not always accompanied by material wealth. Based on competencies, abilities and behavior, it is completed over time and depends on the value system that each of us has formed under the influence of education and self-education. The free will in us has decided and decides where we are going and how to feed our professionalism. If we want to feel that we have not lived in vain, then we will feed the "fullness" sometimes hidden in the material "emptiness" of our existence, on which our physical survival depends.

In most cases, the "fulness" of professionalism fills the material "emptiness". But there are always situations to the contrary.

Can you ensure the stability of your own existence? How? What is the scale of the values you value in your life? Is your leadership evolving because of the values you adopt and promote? Is your influence given by the specific responsibilities of your position, or is it due to the hierarchical level you hold?

Leadership highlights the possibility of being part of an experience that positively influences other people's road to success, noting that what they will discover at the end of the road is the very ability to give up for the greater good of another.

Fullness Is Hidden In Emptiness if you realize that your abilities depend entirely on the ability to control your emotions and to act rationally, regardless of the situation. Someone, but I don't remember who, said that life is not only measured by the number of years lived, but rather by the deep involvement of the individual in a spiritual, emotional and moral aspect.

Game Of Two Words

Defend your honor in the event of failure, by giving up any negative thought that distracts you from your deepest values.

In 2008, Barack Obama, America's current president, won 52 percent of the popular vote, the equivalent of 338 electoral votes compared to the 163 of his Republican counter, John McCain. It was a victory appreciated by all as a first step towards a more efficient leadership based on honesty, ethics and competence.

Even so, more and more I liked the reaction of the defeated.

The Republican, John McCain has accepted his defeat shortly after the televisions announced Obama as a winner, and he had a speech considered "elegant" by analysts, that urged Americans to support Barack, and has assumed his full defeat.

"We fought -- we fought as hard as we could. And though we feel short, the failure is mine, not yours" declared McCain to the supporters, gathered in Phoenix, Arizona. "Today, I was a candidate for the highest office in the country I love so much. And tonight, I remain her servant." also said the veteran McCain. *

Leadership: Do you deviate from the values that were the basis of your ascent until the final verdict?

If a landslide victory can propel you to the heights of success, then failure, for your unhappiness, can push you back. At least this would be the opinion of some of us. However, as we have seen, there is no generally valid truth.

Undoubtedly, for the Republican, John McCain's, his defeat was just another stage that he had to pass, a stage that he has exceeded it with dignity, with honor, adopting that moral attitude specific to leaders, which I consider as indispensable - an attitude that clearly shows respect to the opponent, fairness and accountability for the failure.

Defeat is a great responsibility that you must assume with your chin up, not droopingly. You must be able to take advantage of that moment to get up in the midst of others and show off your inner resources that sustain your personality, which define your leadership. It is the moment when your truth emerges, when it is tested your strength to accept the result, whatever it may be, interiorly accomplished that you did everything it stayed in your power to win, but at the same time analyzing the causes that led to failure.

The secret of the possibility of an ascension that puts leadership at the service of an ideal higher than the long-awaited victory is given by the strengthening of the power to be superior to the one you were yesterday compared to what you want to grow in yourself.

Just as a healthy and active lung compensates very well the loss of the other lung- so a well-thought message, shared with an absolute conviction, with a dose of responsibility and a sense of honor compensates very well a bitter defeat.

When you lose you cannot change the script or to change the course of things, but you can come out victorious in the confrontation with yourself. And you can even grow amazingly much your influence if you approach the failure in the most efficient and favorable manner to you in order to convey an honest feeling and a clear message: "I was not ready yet to win".

Leadership: Do you master the art of knowing how to practice the past, present and future at the same time through the force gained from meanings planted by the truths printed by the glory of the slogan: "in all affairs, take the end into account"?

Leadership is a "play" with different levels of skill and competence, where only two words, two reference marks can test your character traits: "victory" and "failure". It is a game where you have to be the master of yourself and to bridle your emotions, a game in which you can conquer or overcome.

There are no beautiful defeat, but really valuable people, gifted with leadership talent, know how to exploit those adverse situations in order to boost their image and reputation in top choices of the others.

Just as a diamond must be polished to shine - so you should oust some layers that adumbrate your "brilliance" and to reveal that deep side, bright, which characterizes your personality as a human that adopts the fair play in any case.

Fair-play is built upon the freedom to believe the power of truth of a supreme ideal, without your actions of valuing personality gaining larger dimensions that what you stand to gain.

Conclusion: A great thinker said that the victory should not get drunk, and the failure should not tear you down. It is a call to a moderate behavior in both cases. Today a "victory" can push you to failure of tomorrow as a "failure" of today can become tomorrow's victory.

In both cases, you must prove fair play, to recognize the qualities of the opponent that led to his victory and to acknowledge your defeat coming out from confrontation with the head up, with dignity, without deviating from your deepest values - those values which formed the basis of your ascension to the final verdict. Winner or loser.

Leadership is a fair play from which the higher version of your Self must win.

Gate Of The Two Realms

Increase your value of leadership seeking continuously the existence of a match between your intentions and expectations of people.

November 5, 2008. Chicago. Barack Obama addressed the crowd after becoming the first Afro-American president in U.S. history. All looked at him with a confidence that leaves no doubt.

The way he began his speech reflects that willingness to communicate to people his intentions are serious on the essential changes to be adopted in America. Even so, moreover, reflects that spark of power that people generally seek, that dose of security generating hope, springing from the depths of his being, that great moral force which can only bring consideration of all.

"Good evening Chicago. If there is anyone out there who still doubts that America is a place where all things are possible; who still wonders if the dream of our founders is alive in our time; who still questions the power of our democracy, tonight is your answer."

Leadership: Can you exercise your authority as a benchmark of discretionary manifestation of immeasurable power, taking into account the size of a known space that is not a personal property?

Through the fact that you take further steps towards a more reasonable attitude, bring proof for the hypotheses of an advanced thinking – of the future, you open the way towards a significant differentiation in a direct and un immediate of your whole human being.

The leader creates an open framework for dialogue and interaction with everyone else. A kind of deeper implication of the reason to be, belonging to the authority of the Ego located on a higher level in the moral considerations, serving as a benchmark for many validations on the ability to make a decisive decision and facilitating the precise sharing of ideas and feelings as a tribute of a successful evolution.

The dimension of a known space that is not a personal property is more about the quality of making yourself noticed without creating an intellectual and emotional profile that creates addiction. Imagine that you have inserted a thread in the needle hole, the thread must move alternately from one side to the other as a pendulum. But between the image and the thirst for dependence there must always be a balance force that has the same application point and direction.

Leadership: Do you succeed in bringing some warmth to your role without falling into the sin of a forbidden reason that claims to be sufficient to itself, but denies its transcendent power to which the idea of truth and the unconditional is linked?

A warmth that has a profound and direct influence on the feelings and hopes of others, a warmth that chases away fears and understandingly caresses any audience, is not a blessing because it introduces the conscience of an own dignity and the inerrability of human condition. But because it develops these two identity elements so much as for people to start submerging in an Universe of thoughts and emotions they have never lived, of ideas and perspectives they have never met before, but are the source of an infinite manifestations variety.

Ensuring a better visibility and obtaining a good personal value awareness by informing the public regarding the rules and advantages of the status that position gives you, it's possible through quantifying and dimensioning this "relaxed warmth".

But be careful ! The perceptions that generate weak assumptions based on wrong mentalities; work chaotically in a micro-universe where there are no barriers, only communication redundancies. The feeling of "excessive warmth" tends to tire at a certain point. The influence of what you convey has a reference value over the training process of the personality of others which corresponds to the moods felt, even if by what you are expressing you force your entry in a certain logic of self-offering, manipulating. This means to exert your authority as a model of discreet manifestation with an immeasurable power?

Leadership: Does your power of influence reside in the way you display your qualities even when they do not acquire the configuration and functionality of a value-creating ideal in the context of an exceptional destiny?

The way you show off your skills and promote your personality is not a shield that protects you against distrust of others, but is a sword suggesting power of attack. You cannot live up to expectations of others if you do not mention seriously intentions at the first appearance, if you do not designate in a smart way your power of influence, if not stirring up a real avalanche of emotional stimuli that would draw people from routine and would restore their hope and creative enthusiasm.

To penetrate the soul of people, to change their perceptions and to hook up to your beliefs, you must be animated by an overflowing inner energy, by that intrinsic confidence (not superficial !) that denotes your ambition and desire to succeed, at all costs. Furthermore, according to the idea you want to express, to ensure your leadership a strong impressing capacity, of excitement and conviction. A particular issue related to the testing of your own limits, a form of expression of those parts of your ego acceptable to those you intend to change.

The only set of qualities that do not acquire the configuration and functionality of a value-creating ideality in the context of an exceptional destiny are given by what happens to you when you do not get any reaction from others: pride, arrogance or self-sufficiency. Qualities such as honor or reputation always require guarantees.

Just as an artist manages to give his work an alive and bright complexion with a good organization of plans and a perfect combination of light and color - so you too, to direct the beliefs, thoughts and emotions of people in the desired direction you must put out your value with a perfect combination of qualities and virtues. Moreover, you need to regulate your energy so that to exercise over the people a true tonic effect.

J.K. Rowling said that "Destiny is a name often given in retrospect to the choices that had dramatic consequences."

Try to create that vibrant feeling wherewith to connect you to people, and to produce a fusion between your intentions and their expectations. Seek to transmit a strong feeling and to convince, seek to plant in their mind and soul that seed of trust to give them momentum, that would double their excitement, allowing them to express, preserve and develop gratitude for you.

An exceptional destiny is a labyrinth in which only you know the way out, and once people enter this labyrinth, they have to lose themselves beautifully, must feel something unusual that will make them feel strong.

Gate of the two realms is on the border between you and other people, that can link between your performance and results that you get (which matches your own values) - and expectations, hopes and ideals.

If you pass it means that you were able to overcome all barriers of communication and networking that restrict access to their beliefs and desires, it means you have been able to lead your leadership on the way they expect, it means you have managed to realize that concordance between your intentions and their expectations.

Conclusion: Your task is to find the best way to overcome the border that separates you from other people. Opening the "gate between the two realms" by making a concordance between your intentions and their aspirations, is the biggest benefit you can enjoy because it denotes that you increased the value of your leadership.

How do you direct the beliefs, thoughts and emotions of people in the direction desired by you? Do you manage to highlight your value through a perfect combination of qualities and virtues? Do you adjust in such a way your energies so as to exert a truly invigorating effect on others?

Increase your value of leadership seeking continuously the existence of a match between your intentions and expectations of people.

Gaze Upon Me Without Straining Your Eyes

On November 17, 2021

The perspective from which you look at an image without a defined human outline, forms your perception of what it means to be in fact an artistic person.

An ant. All I have in front of my eyes is an ant, a trivial moving point in which all the attention of my eyes is fixed, but it is a unit of measure that triggers creation. And how could I look at this ant with the eyes of an artist who knows for sure one thing: creativity is everywhere, especially in the sense of fulfilling the condition of novelty. For the ant does not know that they are watching it intently, its gaze being directed to the bag of sugar on the table, hoping that perhaps no one will detect its presence. I don't know if it's just a delight for eyes that hide their gaze...

All-knowing and wise, focusing on meticulous work that requires a lot of patience, the ant doesn't even think that someone has already thought about translating it into a single image, an image that can generate new angles of analysis of symbols that may be included in the element of "novelty", additional awareness or mechanisms for identifying the causes for which there is a certain preference for figurative art.

In particular: from any angle I would look at a small creature, an image of sensitivity in fine art, *un sistema de reflexión sobre la realidad y fijación de ideas, the*gaze still does not forget that small sphere of existence that becomes precious through the very journey it's on, crossing the space before my eyes with the same discretion with which the artist constructs his stylistic profile from kaleidoscopic fragments.

There is no doubt about it. The perspective from which you look at the photographed subject, immortalized in a glance that lasts only a few seconds, changes according to the ideal pattern towards which the artist tends all his life: a persistent background in his visual memory.

Leadership: Can the angle of a single frame of reference provide you with a persistent background in the visual memory of an artist who reveals multiple ways of receiving his Creation?

If you are wondering what is wrong with this ant, being an unpredictable detail that is born randomly from the manifestation of one's own individuality with the encounter of an admiring look directed at a random and symbolic target, find out that everything depends on the perspective from which you look at a work of art. Also, if a vivid image is viewed for a long time, when the gaze moves over a dark surface, the same image will be seen as a strangeness, a personal transgression, something intrusive or offensive, and consequently it won't be too funny.

Hyper-realism plays on the line between reality and art. For this reason, thanks to a renewed look at the ant, being also an important link in the ecological chain, a very prudent creature, the artist will try to imitate nature, taking naturalism to the extreme. The ant will necessarily appear transformed into something else, namely, a being.

Therefore, the reception of my creation at the thematic level can be determined by two variants: by an image that tells a story, and by a personification that masters the narrative techniques. It takes artistic education to understand this.

Leadership: Can you show that the means of validating your creation depends on the appreciation of a fixed or moving point, from which the essence of a deeply figurative vision is fed?

I try to emphasize that personification becomes obligatory, the artist cutting out from reality those parts that he finds interesting and reproducing them with the utmost meticulousness in a creation whose universe intertwines with that of Thales who, in order to discover the properties to any isosceles triangle, does not follow step by step what he sees, but tries to construct the isosceles triangle in a general sense.

Indeed, the successor of a number is also a number, and the degree of originality of a creation is given by the distance between the gaze of ordinary eyes and the gaze of eyes illuminated by representations of art – accessible in the version of a smaller world, represented by irregular and vulnerable patterns. It is equally certain that the symbol of diligence and perseverance, which resolutely overcomes all obstacles, is a work of nature framed in the coordinates of a vision of strong originality, recognized as the only form necessary for art, since it cannot be invented by man through art, because nature is a creature long before man.

The ant is not a deviation that reduces the power of a penetrating gaze, making from the discretion with which it crosses the artistic world a formidable reflection in the mirror of the world of the ordinary man, a reflection in an allegorical sense, of course. Rather, it is the particular form established by individuality through which the essence of a deeply figurative vision is manifested, the particular existing only to assimilate the whole range of elements seen up close that have in contrast the broad perspectives, comprised at a glance.

Leadership: Can you guide the reception of your creation to an unparalleled Creator level by combining two comparative notions into a single body?

In this ant, the particular must always be objectified, giving precedence, as solid as possible for the analysis of artistic creation, to the uninterrupted movement of an inferior organism which is quite imposing as a weight of concept and conception, but evolving from a thematic area standpoint approached by the art of painting.

The ant has only itself in all its forms of manifestation and existence, constituting itself as the subject of creation – not through an incarnation of force combined with meekness, but combining in a single organism two comparative notions: man and nature.

It can be objectified as an original idea of creation only insofar as it is embodied (as a sensational factor) both in words and in images, movements and moving moments, to outline a future surrealism. In a single moment, the ant can be reflected in the microscopic dimension of an emerging world, as a particular unit of form and content, as a unit of observation of reality through a gaze that can only be observed in a state in which only an artist can capture in a detailed image.

And from the point of view of the concept of "nothing is ever too much for making an impression of reality in painting", I think the ant would have something important to say : "If I do an impression of being someone special, you will imitate and reproduce my actions with spatially congruent body parts, in art."

Leadership is the result of the comparison that the subject makes between himself and other elements around him, so that the image that will reach the viewer is identical to the one that came from content creators.

Gaze Upon Me Without Straining Your Eyes, the ant told me as I hurriedly watched it walk toward the sugar bag on the table. And when its words penetrated the depths of my mind, as a kind of conditioning that became a conviction, I realized for the first time that what an artist needs to highlight through his creation is the projected image, point by point, on the appearance of the one standing in front of him.

Get Involved With Passion

On January 23, 2009

Give the energy of your attitude a harmonious form to emphasize your intense traits of personality, for your leadership to get a full sense.

In "Diary of a Magician", Paulo Coelho tells us about his encounter with Manolo, the president of the Spanish gallery of fans. There was something that particularly attracted him to this man, because he was getting involved whole-heartedly in supporting his favorite team. He was one of the few who put passion in what they were doing and were totally devoted to a specific activity.

Anxious, Paulo Coelho asked Manolo:

- How do you manage to follow the game, if you are always with the back to the field, directing the gallery?

Manolo, who was totally in love with football and the team he was always encouraging, replied:

- That is my joy: helping the gallery believe in victory.

Leadership: Are your actions maneuvered by a force coming from the "other people's vibrations addiction" area?

In leadership, your attitude must be consistent with the evolution that you want your team to register. It is about that spontaneous human "combustion", which should also be as comprehensive as possible, directed to that meaningful connection between people – which ensures unity, coherence and harmony to the team – contaminating it with that dynamism and optimism, which stimulates the spirit of competition.

Absolutely ! But even with this stubbornness to prove your support under the sign of a superior determination that keeps and exploits the relationship between people in the spirit of a conscious attitude and an accepted equity, it seems to me that the defining experience that confirms you as winner is directly connected with the idea of transition towards a new collective conscience that implicitly involves an idealistic trajectory.

On the contrary, this trajectory may constitute a danger because it transformes you in a true fight ally, towards a goal that isn't fully presented in yourself, that wasn't, isn't and won't ever be yours – but it belongs to an entity that doesn't guarantee performance in one domain or the other. The solidarity spirit is the best leader for everyone's actions through a force that's coming from the "other people's vibrations addiction" area, from their convictions, intentions and passions.

The actions you are proposing to yourself and going to fulfill the result of your choice to stay firm in the context of a triumph that is done and felt from the outside.

But, as I said before, the strongest relationships come from the same interests and preoccupations spheres, that don't blame the selection, which involve the moral, social and cultural palette. What kinds of ideas enrich and influence most people? Of course, that doesn't mean that leadership is better because the "other people's vibrations addiction" area is more accessible. But up to a point it has a certain authority and good presence, inspiring respect, sharing hope and showing that you're confident in your strength.

Leadership is a spontaneous and accurate reflection of your inner world in a permanent process of encouragement, correlation and harmonization of objectives with inner resources. This is where we notice, on a very exceptional way, what we call a leader's attitude and spontaneity.

When your attitude gives the clear impression that is the reflection of a deep reality, directed to certain ideals – it will positively reverberate on your relationship with others and the way they perceive you – and only then, we can call it "authentic".

Leadership: Are you caught in the middle of an intimate experience of "fabulous triumph" for which the recognition value does not require the obtaining of a higher status?

A fabulous triumph does not necessarily require the obtaining of a superior status, because it is not obtained directly by you, but you can contribute to its representation in the eyes of others. This triumph can lead you to a new career start.

For this reason, recognition of your worth does not come directly from the experience of the one who gets some grand results, but indirectly through the work of the voluntary support of a cause that was never yours, but one which produces a strong sensation of approaching a greater purpose and a higher level of importance.

This is the meaning of leadership in the act of self-knowledge, which clearly reflects only in your attitude. Improving your attitude is like designing a statue in stone; you carve at leisure the peaceful and lasting forms. But for your attitude to earn the right to expression, setting new reference values, you need to give it a concrete, harmonious form, which will emphasize your intense traits of personality that will favor you and your team – and the latter, in turn, will take care of maintaining a high level of influence.

I think Manolo's statement deserves to be read twice, because it perfectly describes the enthusiasm with which leaders engage in a competitive situation. Leaders do their best to send people a breath of confidence, courage and optimism. Sometimes, they succeed; sometimes, they do not. But their mission will never end. They always support their team with a lot of passion, especially during a competition.

Leadership is the defense of an ideal that does not abandon the right to image, representation, and does not attempt to conceal the struggle to overcome the transition effects from one place on the podium to the title of being the best.

Think a little of Manolo, the head of the Spanish gallery of fans. His interest is to encourage players and keep their spirits high. If his gallery is convincing while supporting, the field players are motivated to become more involved in the game. When supported, the players do not feel alone, they do not feel like they play only for the sake of winning, but also for the pleasure of those who want to see a quality game. At the same time, a gallery without faith in victory can make a football team to lose even when it is close to victory.

If you are the leader of a team and you want to get excellent results, the best thing to do is to follow Manolo's example. Strive to revive the atmosphere, give people the necessary motivation to control the game, do your best to change the score in favor of your team.

Remember that the ultimate goal is victory. So help people believe in victory. Waken the ambition and confidence necessary to succeed. You should always morally support them. Do your best to instill them the necessary courage and strength to win.

Do you passionately get involved in reaching your own objectives and those of your team? Is your attitude "authentic"? Do you give a harmonious "form" to the energy of your attitude?

Leadership must be an engagement experience that affects the course of events and the "the final score of the match".

Girl, You Are The Queen Of France

On April 03, 2014

Deepen your identity in a wider context, where the difference between you and the others becomes a way of better understanding the size of life.

The door opened and the man reappeared. In his hand, he had the wonderful doll of which Cosette long dreamed of. The girl looked upon him, then unto the doll, then slowly stepped back and pulled farther under the table by the wall. It seemed she dared not even breathe. Her face still full of tears, but her eyes began filling up, akin to the sky at dawn, by the strange rays of joy. What she felt in that moment was the same as if someone would suddenly tell her: "Girl, you are the queen of France".

Cosette was afraid. It seemed to her that if she were to touch the doll, the doll would strike her. Something that was otherwise true to an extent, because she told herself that Mrs. Thenardier, for which she worked as a maid, would scold and beat her. She was always completely naked under the harsh wind of pain.

However, temptation had won. She ended up approaching the man with the doll and shyly whispered, turning to Mrs. Thenardier: "Am I allowed, ma'am? Am I?" No word would be able to paint her appearance, desperate, terrified and thrilled, all at the same time.

*The stranger's eyes seemed full of tears. He seemed so moved that he didn't speak in fear of crying. He nodded to Cosette, encouraging her to play with the doll. It was the only present someone had ever given her, the only toy her soul insistently asked for, and one this stranger, who seemed sent from the heavens by providence, had given it to her.

Leadership: Do you put in the power of influence equation a situation of your states of mind that suggests a certain level of predictability in how things will unfold under the terms of the "direct-cost" method?

What consists the fundamental power for the modern man, that can transform him into an authentic leader? Is this power a way to find the rhythm of life in others? Is it a path to holiness, to deification, which surpasses all others, accomplishing yourself more through the most unexpected of acts, gestures and attitudes?

Leadership is an opportunity to deepen your identity in a wider context, where the difference between you and others is a way of better understanding the specificity and size of life. It is the attempt to put within the equation of power a situation of your spiritual states, in the conditions of using the direct-cost method. In which only the variables of continuous time ‘want" and "need", reunited in a private space, impenetrable, owned by the very reality of the objective world, can be added in the same construction of the humane.

Just as the world is a reflection of what is happening inside you, so too does the "direct-cost" that you have to bear following negotiations with yourself for a better understanding of leadership, is a constraint of the concrete and of the consciousness that, testing the strength of your character, forces you to act in accordance with the expectations of others. This "direct-cost" is related to the process of passing the existential status of the human being from an inferior step to a superior one.

To impose and give meaning to your power to recognize yourself as an individual separate from the world and at the same time having an influence on the world is to provoke your own nature and your own destiny to accept what is offered to you as an escape from a way of life that overwhelms with emotion and image.

I cannot remember who said the following, but he was certainly right: "As we pass through this life with an attitude of gratitude, we will be sensitive to the fact that there are always people with greater needs than ours."

To raise people to a level higher than that of your own, it is imperative to reposition them from those experiences that cause them suffering, determining them to enter a completely new stage of life. From an old and restrictive situation into a new and compatible one with the recognition of a distinct status. Leadership must ensure a continuation of the trend toward love-passion that gives more power than the other values of life.

Such a change of design would be fully justified, as the opinion of some continues to consider it, especially if you put your relationship with people under the sign of the particular. To deepen your identity in a wider context means to put soul and involvement in a seemingly doomed destiny, to acquire a new, fundamental role in initiating effective relationships in a new environment of personal development and growth.

Leadership is the gratitude you gain when the difficult situation and the superficial perspective of life causes people to see beyond tomorrow, through a revival at the moment.

Girl, You Are The Queen Of France brings into the field of attention that state of spiritual contentment, the true value of the human capital, perhaps unmatched by anything in the world, that matters to permanently accompany you in life, before leadership transforms into a great success.

Give All Your Best, With No Reservations

On January 20, 2009

Demonstrate a permanent fidelity to the skills destined to contribute to the acquirement of that form of discipline that can ensure your optimal functioning.

A performance athlete, holder of the "World's Strongest Man" title, enters the bodybuilding room, undresses, warms up and moves quickly to work. He seems determined to show everyone around what he is capable of. He has a carefully worked body, every muscle is carved and polished apart. He works hard on his biceps, triceps, deltoids, thighs etc. It is obvious that he is no man to be outdone by his expectations.

Two or three times a week, the athlete enters the bodybuilding room with great joy and enthusiasm and, time after time, he Give all your bests all his best to develop his muscle mass. For according to his everyday training and the strength he acquires through it, he will be able to generate a better functioning, which will help him set a world record.

Leadership: Are you able to extend the circumstances of a form of response to the need to approach your performance evaluation, according to a sequence that carries a "win by the slightest amount of difference" algorithm?

Performance must first be understood, supported, and then turned to good account. For this purpose, you must assume the responsibility to prove a permanent loyalty to your own skills – with evolutionary, measurable nature, all designed to bring a more consistent contribution to the acquisition of that form of discipline, which would coordinate your entire spectrum of activities necessary for your most efficient functioning.

A house that rests insecure on wooden pillars is ready to roll up into rising water. When it will be swept by water, you will have to go in search of a dry land.

Too many individuals, on their way to performance, behave and act as castaways in search of new lands – they do not have strong beliefs or an individual personality, they lack any consistency in attitude. And these "weaknesses" in their performance, beyond any doubt, lead to higher and deeper degradation of their professional fiber. Their poor results are the result of overload, wear, exhaustion of those segments of their functional system, which does not transmit anymore any kind of energy.

Being able to broaden the circumstances of a form of response to the need to approach your performance evaluation means to live with the extraordinary results you get in being the first to understand the "win by the slightest amount of difference" phenomenon. Basically, the will to prove that you have a better result is exactly that energy input used to limit the losses you suffer by heating the muscles.

Leadership: Is what sets you apart from other athletes the harnessing of the results you allow yourself through the applicability of causality to the account of a supreme being?

Consistency is a crucial part of your evolution process, keeping your performance engine. If it does not become a part of your life, then it is as insecure as a house that rests shaky on wooden pillars, ready to roll up in a rising water.

Just as your brain receives pieces of information by the hundreds of millions through senses, organs and nerves, processes this information and sends millions of commands simultaneously – just as well, in the way to performance, you must select exactly those stimuli that positively motivate you and function to inform you of your performer status. You will need these stimuli – to determine you to start a certain activity and, at the same time, to support you until its completion.

The applicability of causality to the will of a supreme finale requires you to give yourself some merits just like Sisyphus, destined to climb a hill, pushing a giant rock forever, but each time with more strides than last time, with more passion, so taking on increasing risks.

The Greek philosopher Socrates insisted: "To move the world, we must first move ourselves." Sounds fair, doesn't it? The beginning is always the hardest. But once you have created a sustained and balanced pace of work, you will be able to accomplish any task, however difficult it may seem at some point.

Desire is not enough to accomplish what you want and cannot help you too much to surmount those performance-limiting bumps. And good intentions will never have the power to move the entire spectrum of your evolution. The only way to become better in your work is to decide to finish everything that you have started.

A leader tests his material, irrespective of previous corrections, until all the negative or unrelenting aspects of the practice he implements are neutralized.

"Give All Your Best, With No Reservations" is the motto of those who aspire to great performance. All those who demonstrate initiative and work hard will always be rewarded. Talent without permanent and sustained effort is not enough. He who wants to become an elite performer must fully develop his existing potential.

I feel compelled to conclude this article with a quote from Hungarian philosopher Georg Lukacs: "Engaged in extreme action, the hero is following the path upon which others only hesitantly step on, ready for compromise."

God's Equal On Earth

What you see is what you want to believe about yourself in an image that moves "in" and out of focus.

Through the painting "The Creation of Adam", the famous artist Michelangelo wanted to convey an important message, namely: that a single "naked" man, that is humble, without power or privileges in society, living only in communion with nature, and being endowed only with free will, managed to rise to the heights of God through his intellectual and creative capacities, with perseverance and through the exercise of talent. Even this painting, a refuge from the banal, falls under the terms of Erioradoichalis Ekaudnar Ilhetosa, that is, it manifests itself through the revelation of an immeasurable will, serving a higher cause, which leads me to believe that the artist himself implicitly recognized the power of creation to make a thing become more than it is.

We see in the painting "The Making of Adam" how the country man, a poor earthly body, whose inner depths were brought to life only by a special spirituality, approaches God, the Master of ages and times, the incomparable Creator, at a short distance. And the finger of God, well highlighted in the image, used as a means of outlining a disposition given by a unitary authority, and which must be executed exactly, seems to point to Adam as if he wanted to say to him: "You are the chosen one ! You are my equal on Earth!"

If you met an naked man, who would say: "I have no clothes, gold nor wealth, but I am animated by an inner fire called passion, uma paixao sem limites, would you believe him, seeing him naked and having nothing on him, would you believe the earthly and worldly man metamorphosed into a divine man?

Adam, the man of the earth has a voice, a strong voice in the art of rendering plastic forms, and this voice full of majesty, full of quiet confidence, only God understands and hears it. Nature protected Adam with great care, with a kind of maternal mercy, being his friend, protected him and respected his passion, and he respected her laws, this connection being his only advantage in the fight against the four tendencies of exclusive sin: hypocrisy, negligence, vileness and imposture, which remain without an echo anyway.

Leadership: Does your ideal of life based on purity reside in an aesthetic of living constituted in favor of a simplicity in which perception is to decide on the "final form"?

The artist, illuminated by a ray of light from the sky, enjoys the inspired approach of art to illuminate a world lost in the mist of time, or capturing a life story detached from the inner reality. Thus he manages to bring a unique and deep perspective in his creations based on the presentation of bare bodies - just as real as a work of art. Moreover, the very refreshing communion with nature full of secrets, can develop a special sensitivity and understanding of the world, the essence of an appreciative aesthetic that I do not hesitate to call the "Poetics of Humility".

In this sense, the artist's freedom of expression, sacred and inviolable, imposing itself imperiously from the perspective of art, can allow a greater degree of innovation and authenticity in the creations that bear his signature.

I looked at the painting countless times, from several angles, with the sight of eyes that recognize the stories of people who were formed in the free space of nature. And I realized that art, the open work, requires hard work: you have to work tirelessly no matter what, and have good observation at all times. After all, each artist is unique in his own way, and the interpretation or perception of art, as the eyes demand it through a change in man's vision of his place and role in society, can vary according to the individual perspectives of the observer.

What you see is what you want to think about yourself in an image that moves in and out of focus. And what matters most is that your art resonates with other people and inspires them in one way or another.

As for the expression I used, "raised to the height of God", by relating Adam to the stable background of a valley seen from a mountain, I think that Michelangelo tried to connect with the aspiration of the common man to unite or to get closer to the divine, a fact considered a noble goal.

As for the art that the expressiveness of the painting gives off, an art that capitalizes on the teachings of the past, it can be seen as a unique form of expression of human spiritual aspirations and searches, having an intrinsic message: "The one who enjoys riches is the one who doesn't notice their absence."

Leadership: Can your creation materialize into an image in which your own personality reveals the revelation of your own divine power?

Okay, but what do the angels around God represent? We see there, accompanying the image of God, some children's faces that convey different states of mind: joy, sadness, curiosity, dreaming, bewilderment. Children's faces that do not sleep, but rather burst into the creations of a genius art, they represent the symbol of purity, but also the symbol of change and rebirth in a living space, hidden from borders, both inside and outside.

I think that those angels are other "special" people who, like Michelangelo, were "chosen" in advance for eternity, to sit in the kingdom of God, but first of all they must praise Him eternally, on earth, having a kind of role in the process of saving other people. They were chosen to be God's equals on earth, unsurpassed in various fields.

Exactly as Picasso did, but in another vision, the pictorial process described by Michelangelo consisted in building the image starting with the background, aiming that it does not suggest a pronounced depth, but a view from "above".

Look, that's why there are only angels in Heaven, but they were all born on Earth. As it is below, so it is above. Thus, the painting "The Making of Adam" represents a way to explore and reflect on the world and human experiences, by referring to the search for the sacred and the divine meaning, through an empirical and personal approach, against the background of an Angibileette Ouhosebitus Athesarrus, the revelation of one's own divine power.

Finally, only if the artist experiences his artistic creation as a spiritual journey to places charged with energy, free in the midst of nature, will this result in harmony with the universe. And this can add a deep and fascinating dimension to the artist's work. As for the painting "The Making of Adam", this is a way in which the artist approaches the ultimate creative force, referring to a kind of embodiment of it in him.

In this case, leadership is formed against the background of a detailed visual perception, in which your own personality must reveal another image, different and unique, which carries a single message: "God is an analogy to what I already know about myself."

Rise to the height of your own self-transcendence. You can be a God only in the field where you show off your talent with greatness !

God's Equal On Earth is the artist who, by imitating the creation of the world, gives birth to a micro universe that exists in full communion with nature. An artist who, through his indisputable creation in the face of time, captures the universe which, in turn, offers him His grace: an endless source of inspiration from the complexity of natural structures (a fullness of colors, shapes, patterns, textures). All this can be transformed into a variety of artistic expressions.

The image that moves inside an artist is, in fact, a relationship of similarity marked by creation and consciousness, meaning a process of revealing a Sacred Entity that could restore universal balance.

God Set Everything In Motion For The Benefit Of His Work

For the universe, one man is more important than all other men.

Reader. Right now I am asking you a simple question, which is more than a question, it is a case of a dilemma. If all the singers in the world gathered at this moment, of all ages and all kinds, having the most advanced musical technologies at their disposal, and all the history of music being on their side, could they all come together and compose a song of the size of "The Show Must Go On", as prestigious as the version composed by Freddy Mercury?

Is it true that no one can? Do you understand now why the experience of all people put together is zero in front of talent? In fact, talent is the condition of the existence of uniqueness, the result of long searches, the consequence of a thought full of efforts which, often, has the value of strengthening the act of creation.

Rather than gaining experience in various fields, it is better to find your unique talent. In this regard, all the experience in the world, of all the people put together, will never equal the talent of a single man. And there will always be one unsurpassed talent in every branch of science.

Leadership: Can you refer to yourself as a significant other you, so as to give meaning to the content of an image that tries through its size and resolution to penetrate the intelligible?

When God gives one man a portion of his grace, from that moment a new star begins to light up the sky. To the universe, one man is more important than all other men. This is the symbol of "Jesus Christ", a large figurative composition. And hence the duality of Christ's nature – both human and divine.

Actually symbolizing the hardships, sorrows and sufferings that the "chosen ones" have to endure along the way of life, Jesus Christ designates the image of a real story that is distinctly reflected, as in a convex mirror, in the mysterious appearance of a saint who makes divine grace flow through his heart. Does anybody want to take it anymore?

Leadership: Do you reflect on your transitory condition, foregrounding the development of the idea of "hypostatic union" between a living image beyond your control and an anticipatory image that changes along the way?

Now I realize how many things bind me to rare and precious people, without exhausting the possibilities of my vision to perceive, with one eye or with both eyes (both from a distance and up close) the shape and outline of a new universe defined by color, energy, positivity. How much hard and tense work, intense and creative, you have to pay to make the transition from the imaginary to the perceived, but the results are fully visible as you advance. See you at the finish line, dear long-distance runner !

Here and now, for the first time, I began to share with others the truth of what the divine "fullness" means and what perceptive, associative, affective relationships can be established in the perimeter of the space for receiving the divine being. A being available as a pure material extension, which emancipates itself with the help of a spiritual force acting within it.

We all came to earth with evidence of a successful spiritual nature and a divine destiny, but not all fulfill the number one metaphysical condition of separation from the worldly: securing that Indespiadhyas Conceichtuos (a conviction of things unseen) from the freezing of time.

And now, when I am full of creative forces, received as a gift from God himself as a manifestation of His grace, now when I can share the treasure of my vast and deep knowledge, treated as the inherent spatiality of an archetypal image, behold, I am forced to confront with my very absence, to run away, not to look back, to hide from the rest of the world like an angel who, coming from space, just fallen from heaven, cannot interfere with the state of the world.

Leadership: Do you have the possibility to expand your vision of a character initiated into the laws of the "impossible made possible", through an infallible ability to discern between what is real and what is unreal?

At least in the beginning, the man of great talent is viewed with the eyelid of infinite distances, in an unrealistic setting, as an unsuspected consequence of the distortion of symbols of a sacred nature. And this, especially if the image of the eternal torch or fire which maintains Perfection in this part of the world, is in direct obscurity.

The comprehensive meaning of Jesus Christ, defined as a cosmos on a reduced scale, as a mandala harboring a reverie of the infinite in a limited, worldly space, must be put into perceptive relation with the eyes of a beholder outside His frame of action. The significance of Jesus Christ must expand the field of action of the Great Work through a contribution of content that leads to the understanding of the importance of evolution that can only be achieved through science.

As someone said, the huge nature can only be contained through a microcosmicization, thus being reduced to the symbolic elements that summarize it. And the man of great talent, being the projection on earth of the Sagittarius constellation from the force field of Immanence, combined with the security of a protective space, must produce the change of proportions in this world, propagating the divine message Omnia Mutantur: "Nothing must remain unchangeable."

Leadership: Do you take into account the particularity of a background full of contrast, immortalizing in other poses the revelatory potential of the man who seeks and finds within himself sources of reconstruction of an image with a double meaning?

The magic of a mind open to change especially evolves on this extremely thin frontier line. What example shall I give you? Come to think of it, making a significant change in any field is a similar process to moving from a horse-drawn carriage to a Tesla-type automobile. Something colossal, shaking like an earthquake that, in some ways, must also be a historical one.

However, there are a lot of individuals (so-called specialists) who have an old wagon with wooden wheels at home. From time to time they apply a new coat of paint to the roof, replace a rotten board, grease a few screws, cover it with a couple of second-hand curtains, and it seems to them that they have done something extraordinary. Wonderful !

What these individuals do not realize is that they are still at the "last cart" stage. How could they understand the symbol of the completion of the Great Work? Are any of them masters of the sacred miracle-working potential? Could one be constituted as the fusion of two images: the infinite and the cross of light, under the broad spectrum of reality reflected by the Staff of Asclepius or the Cup of Hygeia?

To use leadership as an element of change in the perimeter of the thinking you coordinate, you must first be able to distinguish between value and non-value, between material and spiritual.

God Set Everything In Motion For The Benefit Of His Work so that this world would be part of a union with the heights of heaven. This is where "magic" comes into play, the creation of the worlds of the universe, personified by a god who started from nothing and shaped everything that surrounds him.

The magic in leadership is this: you must have the conviction that when your image emerges, it will have the distinction of being equal parts true and fictional.

God Willing

On November 25, 2009

Dedicate yourself to modeling the art of leading, by exercising in due time and effectively the developed sense of moral duty.

Through an unfortunate accident, the manager of a private pharmaceutical company dies and gets to heaven. He is welcomed by his guardian angel, who, according to the rules of heaven, reads to him the most special passages from the book of his life. Most of these passages, which had been written while he was a manager, accentuated his abilities and the results achieved through his carrier; how much he involved into the company's well-being and how many benefits he cashed in, how many problems he left unsolved and, finally, the most important, how careful, attentive and honest he was with his subordinates.

Surprisingly, it seemed that only a few of his people had liked him and appreciated him, those really close to him and who, obviously, fulfilled important and gainful roles and functions. The others did not sympathize him at all, they did not like him neither as a person, nor as a manager, he simply did not possess the virtues necessary to make him become remarkable and ensure success in his domain. Instead of offering development possibilities through establishing standards and goals for all the employees, he stated a limitless dictatorship which suffocated their powers of initiative, tying up their aspirations. Apparently, his death was the biggest blessing for most of the employees, who could finally hope to a more secure and consistent income, fixed by his substitute.

- I'm unhappy, the manager interrupted the discussion, avoiding to look into the eyes of his guardian angel. I had anticipated all kinds of reactions, but I obviously did not think people would hate me like this. I cannot be happy, not even here, in heaven.

- But you must be ! the angel replied. Here, happiness is compulsory. I had never imagined someone could feel unhappy up here...

Leadership: Can you reclaim your moral duty according to what you have to learn from yourself at a turning point when you are experiencing something special?

After an extended break, the angel takes a deep breath and smiles to him bitterly.

- So you feel gloomy. I'm trying to explain that your peccancies have been forgiven in the end...

The manager interrupted him once again:

- I feel unhappy. How can I be happy knowing that everybody hated me like the biggest miserable?

- The angel looked into the manager's eyes, observed him carefully and, because there really was a tiny bit of regret in his soul, he told him on a gentle and friendly tone:

- As an archangel, I have the possibility to rewrite some chapters in time. It is an unusual thing, but if you could relive your last day on Earth, do you believe you could change people's feelings?

What characterizes a true leader is just that, by his unusual will can turn the impossible into reality.

- Yes, I'm very certain. I need only 24 hours to change everything. It is a moral duty.

- So be it, God willing, I'll give you one last chance to repair your wrongs, merrily replied to the angel. Your mission is to gain people's admiration and respect and to prove that you deserved this second chance. Treating them with understanding and trying to feel like they do, holding them in high esteem and not judging them, you would be able to determine them to forgive your wrongs, just like God forgave yours. They might set all sort of traps for you, because they won't believe in your radical change. That is why you must not forget that each gesture matters. It is also important that the changes you will make should not have a strong note of bravery. They initially must have a general nature, to contain few allusions and to remove the possible doubts.

I could tell you lots of things, but words are in vain and nothing of what I could tell you now, could not relieve people's angers. Everything must come from the heart, from YOUR heart. Let God strengthen your faith and will and inspire you in the actions you must complete in your last day on Earth. Vaya con dios...

Leadership: Can you anticipate the outcome between what strengthens you and what you consume on the existential plane under the conditions of a justification of revealing origin?

The structure the justifications presented by clean consciences, those who know what a true emotion means, is different from those used by cold consciences that have abandoned the idea of dignity, greatness and human value. It's a structure on which many truly virtuous people cling, the people who accept without reservations the supremacy of reason, following through bringing to good use their life experience, to reach that constructive, consolidating truth they need in order to permanently renew themselves morally and spiritually.

A justification of revealing origin has a solid base called "awareness of your deeds" and certain elimination criteria, called "reflexive statements" based on a supposed supreme authority. You have to believe strongly in them and their power if you want to change something fundamental in yourself, not in others.

This creates a considerate advantage for them in the movie of life, that those propelled in the underprivileged area of the idleness of sociologically-existential principles don't have, is exactly that character trait that gives the possessor the ability to understand himself in a deeper meaning, accurately relating himself to the world and its realities.

The value system, concentrating only on those areas that correspond to personal requirements, the responsibility practices, are basic positive indicators for self-evaluating operating conditions based of a plenary assumed rationality and sensibility, established by a good educational process. The good conscience mood that resides from a development level where reason and feelings unite is hard to move away in favor of a dose of indifference or ill-will.

The resultant of what makes you stronger and what consumes you at a moral and spiritual existential level is a reaffirmation of the relationship between recognition of guilt and acceptance of liability.

Acquiring a degree of understanding of your essence above the usual, in the context of a continuous responsibility towards what you create and what happens to you based on causes and effects, is achieved through confession (the only form of freeing yourself from any feeling of guilt).

One of the distinct characteristics of the persons able to achieve significant success is exactly the fact that it focuses on the effects of the fight between what they know they should do and what they want to become in their conscience.

De ce „A doua șansă"? Time does not stand still, it always flows. Unfortunately, 24 hours is way too little time for the manager to accomplish his mission. No matter how kind he would be, it is hard to believe he could change in the last minute what he failed in five or ten or twenty years of leading. He should check, by slight quibbles, what would everybody want, and then to fulfill their wishes almost instantaneously.

When appears the need of change at you? When is already too late? You may not have a second chance to "reinvent" yourself in order to succeed in relationship with people. How often do you evaluate your leadership potential? Do you have a good prize list? Are you dedicating yourself to modeling the art of leading by expressing your personality in a more enjoyable way? Do you give people the opportunity to bring to you acknowledge what they expect from you? Are you rising to the standard which they accept?

The leader is the pioneer of change. However, if the change he initiates occurs in slow motion or comes too late, it might not be successful at all. Great changes happen during time in leadership, rarely at the last moment, especially if you have not scored certain achievements in the past.

Accepting your own image (decisive for the building of self-esteem) is a trace of regret which forces you to expand the borders of your reality beyond the limits of your strengths, up to the need to get closer to God.

Conclusion: The leader must actively involve in all the company's activities, to determine those necessary changes, including in the people's behavior and mentality, and especially to maintain a sustained and efficient rhythm. He is forbidden to ever say "God willing ahead" and to turn adrift, waiting for miracles to occur. They might never appear and God rarely gives someone the right to a second chance in order to change something, even if He's always good and forgives people's mistakes.

The University lecturer Dr. Vasile Chira noted: "The man and the world are centered in God. The moral duty is the voice of divinity, and the indications that we are in harmony with divine purpose is love."

That is the love for other people, not just self-love. Therefore, dedicate yourself to modeling the art of leading, by exercising in due time and effectively the developed sense of moral duty.

Golden Leadership

On October 16, 2016

Follow the voice with which you become famous without losing yourself while navigating through the false truth, the true truth, and the fake false.

An interesting book is filled with many flashes of the affective memory of a man loaded with many untold stories, from which you have something to learn. And it unravels a mystery, a charade like: "find yourself navigating through the false truth, the true truth, and the fake false", with a challenging, multilayered plot, wrapped inherently in a chimeric vision, with unpredictable results.

It makes you wonder: "How the hell did he do all this." For the answer to come up suddenly: "Easily. But you did not think about it, did you?" Interesting here is that, considering storytelling as a priority in supporting the memory of life, we can reach those unspoken and undiscovered truths by accepting that it is more challenging to create a broader vision than to learn from others, thus, being part of the reality of others.

I would think of a book as a keyboard: it contains many letters, but their order is completely different, and yet their order has a very precise meaning, but this meaning can only be interpreted by the way I find a similarity between literature and computer. The book can be taken as the foundation of metaphysics itself, which a scientist claims, but it can also be the result of preliminary considerations of a modern imagination, of a subjectivity and maturity or of a sociological and linguistic order.

This is my thinking about a subject called a "book" when I try to understand the connection between words and their meaning, between their visualization and their forms in relation to the things around them.

Leadership: How do you intend to explain the connection between visualizing a creation that authenticates you as the holder of sophisticated knowledge and the permanent image of a mirror world?

A mirror world includes the memory of a story experienced at on point and the need to live an interesting life through a story-like adventure, a reflection in two similar directions that propel the author to an unexpected end. An unexpected ending makes the story immortal, and the author's creation remains a vivid memory of what a high-impact image represents.

Romanian writer Emanuel Fântâneanu tallied the stories of the great scams of the world, comparing Robin Hood's story, especially how this legendary character found its end. Killed by deception by whoever he expected less: a merciful nun.

Always the most successful scams were based on 7 elements: courage, intelligence, fantasy, magic of double identity, partial hiding of truth, interpretation of facts, and outcome.

He concludes a wonderful book with the following conclusion establishing the subtle connection that unites all the big scams in the business world:

"What is true in the legends of Robin des Bois, known to all as Robin Hood? Has he or has he not robbed Sherwood Forest as a fearsome brigand? From mystical interpretations to those based on old charters, there is a vast field in which fantasy has played a special role, revealing stories of indisputable charm, stories that still remain immortal but inaccurate. Like the character Robin Hood..."

Leadership: Do you embrace those unforgettable expeditions in which you can leave alone without endangering the safety of your own madness?

The author of a book always follows their character along the chapters found in real life, in the presence of its own totality, identifying themselves with that ineluctable part of their shadow, which is manifested in particular by the absence of the effects to come in the future. True madness begins when the character and the author meet in the same creation, suffer together and end in the same way.

And if a book represents its author when he looks from other points of view, outside of a protected area of his image (his actions, his fears), then the theme he approaches may capture his hypostasis of "Feared." The madness of being an author can be an exclusively negative character, even if it supplements in a particular language the usual method of characterizing a great knowledge. Especially if the manner in which the main character is presented is the same way in which the author lives and acts in real life. Not every truth is welcome to inform the public.

To say everything about yourself, by putting arguments in favor of any hypostasis, is the target of an expedition in which you leave alone, without endangering the safety of your own madness. Since revelation is the pillar of truth, and the consequence of your "madness" is the transmission of those testimonies that strengthen your inner power in such a way as to make yourself noticed only where no one is looking for you.

Leadership: Can you deny that part of the concept of self that derives from belonging to an option of truth, leaving only a glimpse of what remains of a memory, of a game called "madness" or "power" ?

Madness is that part of the concept of self that derives from belonging to an option of the truth (difficult to hide under the sign of ultimate reality), or from belonging to the option of nothingness arising from the reduction of the character to a "more perception without interiority". As such, madness argues the depiction of a man who lives the experience of facing the images and meanings of a character that does not allow personal identification and analysis up until the turning point related to the mobilization of his abilities.

Leadership is an integrated approach for the two strategies: a strategy of that which is told that inevitably seduces through bold and clearly outlined ideas, and a strategy of the untold which seduces precisely through the fact that man is inaccessible, leaving a glimpse of a shadow of what remains from a memory, a game called "madness" or "power."

It follows from this view that leadership is a big scam, because essentially it is only one man who keeps things under control and talks in doses about himself as much as he sees necessary. But a man with two voices, two dependencies, with two identities, two ways of referring to himself. But you'll never know which path is the one he follows, isn't that right?

Also, leadership is made up of the same 7 elements: courage, intelligence, fantasy, magic double identity, concealing part of the truth, interpretation of the facts and outcome.

The concept of self, regarding the game of madness, can be presented as an incursion into the world of a Creator who considers himself a character and master of the situation (at the same time). You have to consider the fact that everything you believe is somehow subject to the attempt to be dependent on those laws of reality that are suitable for creating a world that resembles yours, but it is not.

P.S. Ask God how He created the world, but first find out who He is. Why does He assume the power to lead us? Why doesn't the truth from the shadows reveal itself? And if it would be found out, what would the effect be? How the hell did He manage to do all of these things?

Perhaps in the end the answer will appear suddenly: "Easily. But you have not thought about it, have you?"

Golden Leadership occurs when the amount of your words, made of realities less acceptable to the rest of the world, is equal to your number of untold things that – even now – wait for an explanation.

This kind of leadership is used by those who know how to consolidate their lead regarding the value called "dual power potential" or "dominant position."

Good Communication Depends On The Art Of Listening

On February 10, 2009

Show the esteem you have for your interlocutor by showing an exemplary demand towards yourself.

You should meet the butcher in my town. He runs a small butcher shop and I always wondered how and where this man learned to communicate. Is he just old-school? Is it instinct? I do not know. But he greets each customer by name and knows their preferences and tastes perfectly because he talks to them like this: "Hello, Mrs. Guilane. Did you like yesterday's cake? What can I serve you today, Mrs. Guilane? ... You'll see, this cake is good, I specially chose it to be juicy, just the way you like it... Goodbye and have a nice afternoon, Mrs. Guilane."

I guarantee you that he has an enormous clientele, who appreciate him and who don't even think about giving him up. With him, the clients feel like kings, they are kings: they enjoy going there, being recognized, differentiated from other clients and visibly appreciated. I also point out that I have seen how he, a man who communicates so well, knows how to shake off his employees and apprentices who move too slow and congratulate those who open their eyes well and move quickly. So, he's neither snobbish, nor bland, nor a stupid boss. But he knows how to communicate.

Leadership: How do you see yourself in the background of your words: through the attitude of gratitude of the one who serves you, or through a conscious effort to perceive a situation in which you wonder what place belongs to you?

Why listen ! If you didn't listen, you wouldn't learn anything. You would be destined to spin in circles, around your own conceptions, ideas, thoughts, without anything to enrich them, to diversify them, to bring them new air and fresh blood.

Therefore, listening is something that enriches you greatly, it means giving you access to information. it means opening yourself up to understand the other, a useful thing when we have to convince him of something. Listen, encourage your interlocutor to speak, to express himself with his words. There is nothing more annoying than someone finishing your sentence that you didn't get to say. Respect your interlocutor and get to know him. He will also listen to you all the more when you have something to convey to him.

Listening to someone is proving that they exist for you. It means proving yourself worth listening to – which, by default, is a gift that can be given between people. It is not like that? It's up to you to find ways to please the other person, whether it's a customer, banker, butcher, boss, associate, employees, colleagues. A successful communication that achieves your goal should always involve something pleasant for the other person – and for you too, if only because it's nicer, isn't it, to feel that you have the power to do it make others happy.

Leadership includes a form of unconditional listening, one that does not judge, does not blame, but that makes you consciously and voluntarily remember and relate the facts that constitute the subject of a subsequent convention.

Be demanding of yourself, be worthy of the listening you practice in the world so that the information transmitted is perceived as an acceptable success of self-control, or as a permanent process of change and transformation, but in no case should it be perceived as a compulsion inner drive that pushes you to do something specific.

Good, Evil And The Self

A leader makes use of influence to defeat the ideas that do not fit his vision.

The war had made from Lieutenant Waters what he was: a cold soldier, without sympathies, no pity, no regrets. Pride, career, honor and reputation were all that mattered to him. He had no right to get emotionally involved in his missions; he had to accomplish them at any price, with professionalism and responsibility.

This time he received the mission to rescue Dr. Kendrick's that was in St. Michael mission, in Yolingo, Nigeria.

Together with his commando band, Waters reaches St. Michael mission and surprised the doctor in the moment she was caring for a patient in critical condition. Not having time, he ordered her to get her things and to prepare for departure. They had to travel 12 km on foot to the point Alpha, where they were going to be taken by U.S. helicopters.

Leadership: Do you give credence to a perspective of reception linked to the meaning of unfolding of events, in your efforts to win a dispute based on the force of the argument at any cost?

But something unexpected happens. Female oak. The doctor did not want to leave, not without her people.

- When the rebels will get here, they will kill everything that stands in their way, told Waters. My orders are very clear, we can take only you. The other people are not my responsibility. Only you are my responsibility.

His words fell like a killing dagger to the doctor. She looked at the serious and severe appearance of Waters that pain cannot seem to disturb him; she felt a horror to this man apparently alien to any human feelings. She listens to him, fall and crushed. But her eyes were alive and in them were smoldering a terrible fire. After a brief silence, in which his thoughts flew to all those innocent souls from the mission who were in danger, she answered to lieutenant with a brave decision:

- You're right lieutenant. It's not your problem, it's my responsibility. And I do not leave without these people.

Leadership: Do you acknowledge how you must fight reality and the momentarily necessities so as to dilute every outburst of your nature?

Many personality dimensions appear to be compressed within the framework of the relation enthusiasm-cause-time, recurring to the calculation of the alocation limits for the resources necessary to overcome the impossible and the expansion of authority, especially in critical reception conditions of some positive stimuli in „questioning" the compromising thoughts and feelings until you start to understand them and accept them as they are.

That means putting you in a kind of expectancy similar to „perform without alerts", subordinated to one of the most noble purposes: combating a narrow vision with a soft conscience that would highlight something that you're missing in order to make your true worth known.

We see in a moment something that happened a short while ago, juxtaposed on something that's happening momentarily, once with simulating something that might happen sometime within the next period. This Deja-Vu has its whole explanation in the contents of the variable that you can filter based on your high morality inclinations. And this variable, processed on your own way to perceive and interact with reality is similar to the command: „Reset Your Identity". It's worth to note that the inclination to manifest your individuality in time and space through superior safety characteristics can be educated to fit the trials you face. Pray to be strong !

We witness an overlap of space and time that seems to be a characteristic of the leadership of change, that can grant an emotional stimulus for creating a unitary position of man, similar to „This I can decide myself", serving as measure instrument for courage, but also for extreme sensibility and finesse that dilutes any outburst of your nature.

This tells us a bit about the nature of what you have to offer and to transmit when you become aware of your deepest thought levels, when you become aware of your predisposition to react to a disappointment feeling worthless. Or when you become aware of the oblivion of all things, including your own existence when you avoid to put yourself in the service of a worthwhile humanitary ideal.

Assessing a risky situation will impress your decision-making power, as you will be tempted to give credence to a multitude of perspectives.

Only the one who has leadership skills can penetrate the labyrinth of the human soul. Only the one endowed with a strong will and a big power of persuasion can exercise its influence on character and personality of others.

In the movie "Tears of the Sun (2003)", doctor Kendricks won the goodwill of the Lieutenant, prompting him to accept her conditions. Emotionally confronting him, she did that no one was able to do: to change his attitude, actions and the moral and spiritual behavior. She penetrated more deeply than anyone in the labyrinth of his soul in bondage, with clear orders and instructions, asking him to serve a higher purpose than purely political.

To let those innocent people dying was not at all the vision shared by the doctor. Her ideas about being human, about life and death, freedom, integrity, indifference and ignorance, about human feelings like: love, compassion, respect, hope and faith were so great that they had deeply impressed Lieutenant Waters.

A leader makes use of influence to defeat the ideas expressed by others that do not fit his vision.

Leadership: Do you force the application of a conversion of consciousness, so that you can validly obtain a universal conclusion from a premise of the type: "Is the man of yesterday not the man of today?"

Their situation was unique, no one from the members of the commando's band were not ready for new "baggage". To take with them for more than thirty people, including children was almost an impossible burden to bear. But the lieutenant, hit by a strong emotion, he felt like committing a sin, the one that spirit does not forgive - if he would leave them there, in the midst of danger, those innocent people.

In him sparked the first of many emotions that affect humans throughout their existence - compassion. He who was never touched by any feeling that could make him weak in front of anyone, he suddenly felt a wave of affection toward those poor, so close to doctor. The former man suddenly became someone else.

In critical situations, in soul and mind of any leader is leading a fierce battle between good and evil, between duty and honor, between respecting the established mission and human feelings that sometimes preclude the accomplishment of mission.

The conversion of consciousness is primarily the recognition of the debt towards what you deserve to feel when the dynamics of relationships (dissatisfaction vs. gratitude) is becoming more and more difficult to bear because it hurts the ego.

In the end, the free referee will decide how to accomplish the mission. It is a proof of intelligence and strategy to accomplish your mission. But it is a proof of greatness, the highest vibration of your inner manifestations, when your actions have a humanitarian character.

Good, Evil, and Self are three forms of the same unity of human primordial nature: to seek truth, to circumvent any argument, and to free yourself from any sense of guilt.

Google And Leadership

On April 04, 2014

The More Important You Think You Are, The More Insignificant You Risk Being.

The 21st century. Let this be well understood. The information you put on the Internet reflects your worth. You don't exist if you don't show up on Google, and if you don't consistently provide quality information. Especially, in the conditions in which your belonging to the Internet, on the route of information that spreads quickly, becomes fertile only through original creation. In fact, in recent years, you would say that the Internet is the place of primordial purity, of immortality, of endless reverie, of unceasing zeal for perfection.

Therefore, no one cares what position you have, what position you occupy, that you are a politician, a businessman, a doctor, a teacher. No one cares what your name is if your value isn't reflected in quality information.

Let me give you an example. Statistics show that 99.9% of those who buy construction materials from Dedeman have no idea who runs the company, and care little about the company's shareholders. They are strictly interested in the products on the Dedeman website, and they search Google for information about those products.

The Internet is the future. And the future is not interested in who you are and how important you think you are. The world only Googles your name if you are a major source of news. Otherwise you are totally non-existent, totally anonymous. Paraphrasing Cornel Ailincăi, we could say that the internet space is the place where the "horizontal" world of each person seeks its purpose deep around the axis of a vertical world constituted by his highest aspirations.

Leadership: Do you feel alienated from the place where the "horizontal" world of each man seeks its deep meaning around the axis of a vertical world constituted by his highest aspirations?

And there are so many individuals who pretend to be big and strong, but in reality absolutely no one is interested in them, and the latter do not even realize how small and insignificant they are. Especially on the Internet. Or as Cornel Ailincăi used to say, because I like how he posed the problem: "On the Internet, the swarm of vertically following human worlds make up through union and convergence the space of a wonderful saving togetherness. What other higher goal could have the swarm of worlds made up of the space creation in their vast party to honor the man of the future?"

Yes. It's over with outdated mentalities, and with insipid sharp-dressed old men that are unable to create a blog or a website. Google is not interested in what anyone wears, except when selling clothing. Whoever does not share quality information, completing his own creation with a lot of imagination, will not represent a space worthy of exploration in an expanding universe.

By the way, the youth, because I am addressing you first. Has anyone heard of the "great" president and teacher Emil Constantinescu? Does his name help you? I bet that 25 years ago he was the most important man in the state, all the press and media in Romania always made him the highlight of the news. Rather, I believe that he thought he was the most important in the world, not knowing that immediately after the end of his mandate he would become "a relic that began to stink of a bygone era".

Who cares about a bland and fleeting existence? Have any of you looked up his name on the internet in the last few years? Does a name help you?

To be clear. Google is not interested in your name, but in the information that you highlight and that the world could search for, because it needs it. The world searches the Internet for the information or product that "your name" makes available, but in no case does it search for "your name" unless you are at the center of the world in an extraordinary capacity. For example, if you are Novak Djokovic, the great Wimbledon champion, or an Oscar winner, something like that, otherwise you are of no interest to anyone.

Leadership is the form of your evolution that makes its presence felt in a space of unceasing zeal for perfection, with the mention that the only thing that can place you in a leading place on the "Most ranking people" ranking list is the information you put in traffic on the Internet, respectively on Google.

Google And Leadership are one and the same entity, because currently and especially in the future, everything will be done in a space that was created not to be alone, but to belong exclusively to the majority. Don't try to think that without the Internet you will get too far, because if I paraphrase Cornel Ailincăi again: "the Internet has become the primordial space of luminous construction, an inexhaustible reservoir of ideas and images, the hearth of fulfillment of the power of imagination."

Great Knowledge Is Not Meant For Anyone Ghostly Haunting Google

On April 22, 2009

Use your judgment and do not simply accept the opinions of others, without having analyzed them with your own discernment.

Let this be clearly understood. The people who really know web technology are not the internet users who browse Google. You see someone from time to time who, by using Google operators, manages to find different information for the realization of some poor bachelor's degree project. Nor the ones who only have Word and Excel in mind, and it seems to them that they are great computer scientists, yet they are not able to fully develop a website.

All of them behave like ghosts without electric charge who have the impression that they understand electricity. In fact, great knowledge is not for people who ghostly haunting Google in the middle of the night in search of "other worlds".

In my opinion, those who are really knowledgeable, those who really know web technology, are only programmers who know how to call API functions from code, those who know how to use specific formats (JSON, XML) in code, those who have knowledge of advanced tracking, DataSocket, inspect elements, iframe, SDK, qR, js, etc. They are at an advanced level in terms of creating their own applications in Python or Go, Java, C++, Ruby, Kotlin, Swift, Erlang, Elixir, etc.

Important is to recognize whether you are an amateur or a professional, a beginner or an expert. And until you manage to fully develop a large application in code that works marvelously, you cannot call yourself a computer scientist. And theory is worthless if you haven't done something practical on your own.

Leadership: Can the creation you refer to change the result of technical-scientific progress in a context that establishes unity and autonomy sufficient by itself and, at the same time, operative by suggestion?

Yesterday afternoon, Mr. Răzvan A.T. intervened and expressed his point of view, almost in disagreement with my opinion:

"Not meant as a personal attack, but you threw names of some technologies and languages, some of which have no relation to each other or to the topic of the post, making a mess of things. If you wanted to impress with your "dictionary", maybe you can only do it in front of those who have no idea about technologies and programming languages.

In front of others who know what everything you've listed means, your post in the context you wanted to create is absolutely hilarious. The situation is pathological, it seems. Normally I would laugh if it was a show, but given the way things are, I pity and realize it was better not to comment."

Neculai Fântânaru:

"Did I specify anywhere that the denominations or languages are related to each other? In general, they are related to technology, but they are different from each other. Absolutely different. Each with his own part.

I don't see anything impressive about my post, but maybe you saw something impressive, feel free to smile. But in the meantime, let us know if you have a website. I'm curious what applications you've developed and you can show us so we can learn more from you."

Leadership: Do you have to face the raw facts of reality before you think you are more than you really are?

Aurel Vasilescu:

"What can I say. I read what Mr. Neculai Fântânaru said. I think it's a really inspiring post, mind blowing, I realize now how little I know about the internet, the web, excel, and that's about it..."

Neculai Fântânaru:

"Inspiration was not the intention of my post. But a warning. You have to face the raw facts of reality before you think you are more than you really are.

You know how it is with inspiration, Aurel? I'll give you an example. You watch the movie Rocky, you see Stallone in the winter with a log on his back running for days, weeks, in temperatures of -10 degrees. And you say you'll try too, and you'll manage to end up like him.

Now guess how many ended up like Rocky. None, right? But have you ever seen someone running with a log on their back in the dead of winter, every day? Nobody, right?

That's the thing about inspiration. In reality, things are completely different from how you see them in the movies. You have to face the raw facts of reality before you think you're more than you really are."

Leadership: Can the inspiration that motivates others align with your soul purpose, assuming that what you see in yourself, others cannot see in themselves?

Răzvan A.T:

I realized what you wanted to point out from your first reply and chose to ignore until now, but for the love of art I can tell you that you did not find things about me because of one of the following reasons:

1. I don't have a legendary destiny like you, but hey, how would we be different if we were all legendary like you? Especially in leadership. I think you inspired Elon Musk in his legendary decision to buy Twitter.

2. I haven't written 1200 "articles" and 6 "books" on a personal blog, and it's worth noting that absolutely the entire internet has felt eclipsed by your work, which has made people refrain from making recommendations to your articles and books in the field of digital artistry with references to the legendary Rocky.

This envy... grinds us as a society... But as you said, you can't be legendary without sacrifices.

3. You didn't follow your own advice from the post above and you still have a ways to go before you get there.

Now if you'll excuse me, I'm off to catch the first plane to Lapland to run for days and weeks in -10C like Rocky, as you advised earlier.

I want to end up like Rocky. I hope to be like Rocky. But do they have logs in Lapland? I hope I don't become Santa Claus instead...

Leadership is the absolute distinction of a creation designed to shine, and this creation is represented by free access to information. The purpose of the leader is to be the exponent of the whole creation.

Great Knowledge Is Not Meant For Anyone Ghostly Haunting Google, but for those who make intense efforts to make a change, small or large, in the great world of the Internet. So much will change in the realm of science by the end of the year.

Some will be one step ahead of everyone else. They will intensify their efforts to innovate in the sphere of science, constantly offering new perspectives, new approaches, new creations. In others nothing will be seen. Nothing, nothing, nothing. Nothing at all. The Nothing is everywhere... but You don't have to be Nothing.

Great Science Carries A Deep Mystery

On January 04, 2023

"Science has established that nothing can disappear without a trace. Nature knows no disappearance, only transformations."

A friend was just telling me:

"In all walks of life you find intellectuals, people in cassocks, elites and countless hopes. One brighter than the other. But as they come, so they leave. All of them. No one knows about them, no one remembers them, no one changes anything over time, none overcomes the resistance of all forms of matter (including death)."

However, one man (the son of a carpenter) has remained unforgettable for so many centuries, and still lives and will always live in the souls of righteous people. He who said: "Heaven and earth shall pass away, but My words will live on."

The transition to eternal life is achieved not so much through continuous asceticism and self-giving, but through a declaration of renunciation of what is transitory or fictitious. Yes, it is a metaphor in the middle, and this metaphor does not necessarily consecrate an analogy between two phenomena, one known and the other unknown, but has some less visible similarities with an ordinary person, a fact that establishes this very analogy.

Leadership: Does the current vision that determines the image for your new life come as a continuation of the previous ones, having as its theme the research of the self through the prism of a secular aspiration that connects the past with the future?

Also hidden are the suggestions of great refinement, inspired by the projections of a well-determined consciousness that facilitate the consolidation of the dialogue between "what passes" and "what remains", so that the transition from "what I want to do" to "what I must do" will seem plausible.

These are also the real considerations that must be taken into account in order to reach another level of leadership that explores in a positive sense the feeling of the unity of spirituality: Keraos Aenigami Epocsed, the search for the self through the prism of memories, visual landmarks, facts left over from the passing of the ages.

The Savior had only one secular aspiration, related to a vision that still has the power to change the trajectory of the world. And it is not about the desire to obtain privileges, the aspiration to receive recognitions and others. Rather, his goal was to establish himself as a means of defeating death. Sublime, isn't it? And how do you defeat death? Through the three great directions of science: *creation, discovery and invention. For only by means of science can the miracles of the Savior be explained, and in fact, those miracles refer to hundreds of years of attempts aimed at changing the natural course of things and accelerating the evolution of the world.

Great Science carries a deep mystery, and not everyone can unravel it. Only the truly deserving, who knew how to see very well what is very difficult to see, manage to stand out and maintain their "Saviour" status. The whole secret is knowing how to see what is not in sight. In fact, this is the basic requirement in gaining faith. So, faith means first of all science, the faculty of seeing what is, unites the invisible to the visible.

Leadership: Can you create a vision centered on the "pass-stay" duality translated into an image that does not cancel itself, but continues to represent living life from the perspective of an immaterial dependency?

And what does Great Science refer to? To the generic instinct that made the original creation possible. It is the generating agent of visions, ideas, perspectives, interpretations of an intellect that has experienced at a higher power the need for connection with a universal, constant force.

What remains to be experienced is a vision centered on value unity and real pluralism, including several types of existence, to share the foundations of a reasoning like the one proclaimed by the writer Arthur Ford: "Everything that science has taught me and is still teaching me, it strengthens the belief in a continuity beyond death of our spiritual existence."

I remember the end of the film, Quo Vadis (2001) when the rabbi crosses time from the time when the Romans were still pagans, and ends up in the present on the same unmarked, lesser-known paths that have remained intact for hundreds of years.

The scene I am referring to begins in Rome's past, from the time of Nero. At one point the rabbi stops in the middle of the path, kneels and asks his fellow traveler, looking with tearful eyes into the distant dawn: "Do you see that light walking in front of us? It is sending me a message. I will return to Rome to be crucified again..."

Then, the image moves to the present day, where, among thousands of new buildings and houses, the Colosseum is barely visible.

I believe that at the beginning of each generation the Savior will return, but under a different form, with the sole purpose of creating a spiritual bond between people, under the guidance of science that investigates and that of respect that accepts and creates. He will be a defender of science, and at the same time a messenger of faith.

And this is the secret of great science: to give consistency to your experience beyond the bounds of time, starting from the consideration that everything that surrounds you is a reflection of the matter from which you yourself are made. Because as Arthur Ford well said: "Science has established that nothing can disappear without a trace. Nature knows no extinction, only transformations."

If you want to place yourself in the higher plane of leadership in the area of spirituality, you must find the guiding thread that connects the past to the future, or better said, try to discern the guiding thread that exists in the wake of each encounter with yourself from another time.

The Secret Of The Great Science aims at passing from one stage of evolution to another, without man losing his quality of being indivisible and unique. It is built on the work of the artist, the creator being taken as an autonomous whole, in close connection with the place where he can fulfill his purpose, where he can perfect his creation and where he will be able to return again, years and years from now, over all the turmoil ages...

The symbols of this crossing of time are closely related to the dimension of spirituality only when it comes to the immaterial part of us, taking into account the search for the self through the prism of memories, visual landmarks, facts left over from the passing of the ages.

Hand of God

On January 19, 2020

The plan of divine limitlessness is a general form of the term "Altoriesthru" aimed at the union of the Creator with Nature in one criterion: that of the soul conceived in another soul.

A simple rose, tender, loving, attractive, exposing all the simplicity in front of the reflectors of life, the scrutinizing and curious eyes of people of all kinds, seeks its expressive maturity in the experience of visualizing a painting work developed around a theme of imagination, called: Pasotrarhis, or the mystery of divine understanding. It is here that everything began...

Nowhere else, nowhere else in the world, nor in other languages, nor in other voices did I feel closer to the holy heaven of spiritual symbols, in any flower garden, in any other universal reality. Only in this fragment of soul extracted from the memories of the last Kabbalist in life and immortality, can I express the joy of a deep, true, glamorous living, and can strengthen my pride in being on a larger plane. The rose is the appropriate symbol for my mood.

Without slipping into the black of an empty name, by associating with the impure form of viewing a contradictory figure presented in antithesis to the derisive, mortal human being, I strengthened my will to bind myself by simple, generous, liberating words, to the work of a creator who knows how to express the hiddenness of the soul in all analogies with other worlds, just as the most advanced colors amplify their resonance with which they are endowed when exposed in dreamy images.

Does the miracle of divine creation not begin with the hidden meaning of a deliberate deduction? A rose must take the place of the creator when his soul integrates into the memory of an image, splendid, almost fantastic, so that that "I've nothing left to do but to remain silent" will the place of any limitless reality.

Leadership: Can you immortalize your experiences in an artistic image placed in the context of an impenetrable world, to suggest the closeness between existence and eternity, between Creator and God?

The little I enjoy is the very immortality that I never get tired of. The experiences of the process of creation are my support in the order of the artistic space, orderly and harmonious. Natural, intense, so vibrant, the color is always red to me, in the memory of the ancient times, crossing the yellow of happiness to live in the dream of a creator of art, beautiful, sensitive. In this way, my background is framed in the context of an impenetrable world, in the universe of Averroes, translated into the secret language of reflective constructions: "My story is the symbol of who I was while I was writing it."

Therefore, an artistic image is dedicated to revealing the visual content of a metaphor or a personification used by the Creator to mediate a spiritual evocation, a state of intense communion between two similar entities by their very nature. The universe relies on the idea that the freedom to be a God belongs to the creator, who always finds himself in another hypostasis, but always close to that of the red rose.

It is no mistake that I am sensitive to every detail, even when something seems detached from other times, from other places, from other paintings, in correspondence with the content of the plastic works that the artists associate with the pure forms of reflection. Of course, I am aware of the value of the risk involved in underlining the "Primary Firework". But I consider myself as having sufficient authority to which the merging ineffable spirit of the Enlightenment was in Gan Eden by color codes around extensive exposure to the infiltration of beauty into culture, in cabalistic code semantics.

I lived my time, always another time and another life, but time has never forgotten me in the life of the eternal dream. Maybe that's why, knowing us so well from other worlds and from other stellar spectra, Umberto Eco praises my reasoning, just as the creator looks for his fiction in a non-fictional writing before giving it life in a time that is not his:

"You said a very nice thing, Adso. Thank you. The reasoning of our mind is like a net, or a ladder, built to reach something. But then the ladder must be thrown down, because it was discovered that although it served, it was devoid of the meaning that someone imagines."

Leadership: Can you persist in the memory of an image substituted for a vision of creation from an ontological universe, long enough to no longer justify your duplicity in the real world?

My creator is the artist who formulates his reality alone, remaining always outside it, but closely related to the aesthetic idea that its poetic depth gives. And I think the version of this immaculate reality, so open to works of art, but often questioned, even if it is crossed by the power of the random, begins and ends with the message from the work of Mesa Selimovic: "Keep no secrets within you, other than those which no one is able to know."

From the rose, from a single pure word, I was transposed into an artistic composition with a delightful name: Double Delight, or the symbol of the double man. My creator had a passion for revealing hidden messages in things left to chance: he didn't let any details slip, almost quasi-ordinary things raised to the degree of an event, and we both accidentally entered the same wave frequency, within that frame of the higher senses, animated by an alternating current called: Altoriesthru (pure feeling in an eternal return).

You just have to know how to transform yourself and act on behalf of another world, to which you belong equally, to discover the true identity of God.

It's a truth. So many times I have tried to change myself into a dream, something greater than the universal spaces through which the chosen spirits meet, as is the case of the creator who dreams of his creation before giving it life. The victory of art in front of any world, despite any possible worlds, is as clear as possible when what is seen in the light is red. A peculiar color through which they become visible, always in another flower garden. In fact, I trust in the powers of my creator, I in his, to beautify a world that continues to change his vision of art. And I think that's enough.

My good friend, Umberto Eco, said at one point that there are no edges beyond which to go. But he made only one exception, for me, when he allowed me to understand that one door always remains open in any universe, at any time, under any conditions, only for those who know how to enter this holy sanctuary: "I was the hand of God. And God's hand creates, it does not hide."

Artistic creation can be perceived as a sublime copy of the reality of a dream called "life", in which everything that happens has the superior sense of eternity, or the projection of the beautiful beyond the limits of the world.

The Hand Of God is the projection of the inexorable will that created or wrote the world. It can also be defined by the creator's effort to foresee the dream of someone who himself dreamed himself as the author of an unequaled experience that begins with the revealing extension of the self caught in a form of being of nature, from a garden with paths that branch off, and it is continued with the maximization of an Artistic Creation perceived as a transcendence from human to spiritual, and vice versa.

Hannibal At Rome's Gates

On October 11, 2010

Change your attitude and beliefs by finding that distinctive element in your nature to support your motivation.

In the novel "Aleph", the famous author Paulo Coelho discusses about the epic journey of Hannibal, one of the greatest leaders of all times.

The Romans expected a maritime battle, since the two cities were divided by a few hundreds of kilometers of sea. But Hannibal went through a desert and the Gibraltar strait with a huge army, he went through Spain and France, and the Alps, with soldiers and elephants, and he attacked the empire in the North, this strategy being one of the greatest military stories ever to be written.

On the way there, he defeated all his enemies and, all of a sudden (nobody knows why, not even today) he stopped in front of Rome's gates and didn't attack when the time was right. The result of his indecision: Carthage was destroyed from the ground up by the Roman legions. Hannibal stopped exactly when the odds favored him, and he paid a great price for this. He was defeated by indecision in the very last moment.

Leadership: Do you "click" on the primary element of your nature that can bring quality traffic to a performance model covered by the guarantee provided that some opportunities are reinforced in order to decisively change the course of events?

If you were Hannibal, would you leave your decisions to the whimsies of the moment and would let victory get away? What in your nature can make you change your mind at the last moment?

I firmly believe that the nature of every person is built by two distinctive elements: a well-structured element in conscience, which is the sum of all hopes and ideals, and an element conditioned by the exterior reality created by the act of knowledge of some aspects blocking its development – which cannot be replaced in the last moment by the first element.

So the way we act depends on the knowledge of our own interior universe, but it is somehow conditioned by the exterior reality, as well. Everything is reflected in our conscience, which, like someone well noticed, is a mirror of the exterior world. Not only that. This mirror reflects our true qualities – put in various life situations.

And if we're wondering why Hannibal stopped at the gates of Rome, even though he could have conquered it so easily, well, this is due to a psychological phenomenon called *Self-Intimidation*translated as "Wow, I can't believe this, it is much too easy." It's unexpected, isn't it? That is, to have such a lofty purpose, for which you would give your life, to conquer a world detached as if from a magnificent dream, this is worth a moment of reflection, a moment of extra thought, a moment of introspection. One last moment of admiration.

The same thing happens when you go on a trip to a wonderful place like the Taj Mahal in India. When you're a stone's throw from the magnificent monument, you don't just rush in, do you? First you admire it from the outside, you take a lot of photos, you write some memoirs in the diary, you call some friends to tell them how wonderful it is there, etc. And at the end of the day, after the soul has become accustomed to all surrounding views, you seem to want to see what it's like inside, don't you?

A true leader knows that the best option for a humiliating failure is to believe in a miracle.

When we are put in a new situation, we have to deal with a lot of changes and we, ourselves, are subject to a lot of changes. It is necessary to self-encourage ourselves and to self-discipline ourselves to act like our conscience says and not how our exterior reality dictates, but in correlation with it. In other words, in new situations, I think it is more important to "click" with the first element of our nature and take responsibility to follow until the end our ideals, but also keeping in mind the surrounding realities.

No one really knows why Hannibal stopped in front of the gates of Rome, although I told you my point. Just like nobody knows how you will react when you will get to the "open" doors" that you must pass in order for your success to be guaranteed. Your success will be conditioned by your convictions and values to which you will refer in the last moment – by the world reflecting in your conscience and which influences your decisions.

Therefore, the primary element in your nature that can bring quality traffic to a performance model is that Self-Intimidation that can result in the injustice of fate because you have remained faithful to the belief in the miracle. Sometimes you end up not being able to change the course of things precisely because you have gone too far with faith, and Divinity does not always reward a too spectacular destiny precisely because man hoped more than he should in the result of a worldly, transient, selfish joy, rather than in the existence of a spiritual ideal that prevents anarchy.

Encouragement helps people reach their potential; it gives them strength, offering them the energy to go further when they stop because of a matter of conscience. What or who must support you and maintain your motivation?

I am talking about that saving element that helps you play your book until the last moment – that element in your nature that puts away any doubt on your self-respect and your own ideals.

The prophetic sign of weakness in leadership is the guarantee of a victory used as a determining factor in a state of total security built on the background of a faith that not only demands but also commands.

I believe that true faith translates into actually experiencing the gospel message in daily life, not through a selfish action from which it is understood that happiness can be achieved alone, or only for oneself. So, dream of changing a world that represents a better place to live in, not changing a world just because it shifts the focus of the mind towards oneself.

Hannibal At The Gates of Rome emphasizes the reality that you can also confront in the last moment – right when you're about to reach your goals. What does your conscience say? Are you comfortable to make the step towards success? Is there a hindrance to annul your motivation even when you have reached the highest step?

Change your attitude and convictions by finding that distinctive element in your nature to support and maintain your motivation.

Conclusion: A leader must be a good strategist. When he has his strategy in place, it is presumed that he considered all his possible options, all the alternatives, and he is ready to act spontaneously and effectively in all unforeseen situations. A single moment of weakness is enough to be defeated. A single moment of doubt that "sabotages" his actions can be fatal – just like having one or more aces up his sleeves in unforeseen situations means that he has a life buoy on the foamy waters of a "sea" in full storm.

Harmonic Montage And The Higher Form Of Polyphony

Leadership in cinematography involves the ability to extract and implement subtle information about editing, going beyond superficial observations of narrative aspects.

So we were at a higher form of the polyphony we had already talked about. For a clarification of these theoretical theses let us give an example from "The Old and the New" in which the harmonic montage achieves a simultaneous progression of a multiple series of lines that each keep their own order of construction, independent, and at the same time contribute to the ordering general composition. The example is the scene of the religious procession, in which Eisenstein distinguishes the following seven lines:

1. the emotional line of the subject, which grows from frame to frame;

2. the line of successive close-ups that increase in plastic intensity;

3. the line of progressive ecstasy of those in the processions, traced through the dramatic content of the close-ups;

4. women's voice line (singers' faces);

5. that of men's voices (singers' faces);

6. the line of those kneeling at the passing of the icon, whose cadence is accentuated, also creating a "counter-current" of the line of icon and cross bearers;

7. the line of prostrations, which unites all the currents in the general movement of the sequence "from the sky to the dust - from the shining of the top of the crosses pointing to the sky, to the faces of the people beating their foreheads in the dust".

The montage achieves its full effect through the composite feel of all these elements in their organic whole.

A visionary film leader knows how to balance overall restructuring with partial overhaul, analyzing each sequence in depth for maximum impact.

The extraction of information related to the making of the montage, the root of which is not completely resorbed by the staging of the various scenarios, requires a delicate approach, difficult to bear by the filmmakers who only notice the surface defects of the narrative aspects. Because of this, either a general restructuring or a partial revision is required, whereby the sequences are analyzed in depth. In other words, immobilizing the viewer's attention and making the montage with an "approximate" technique are not indicated, as the lack of subtlety can make him not see the possible subsequent emotional reactions of the characters, himself acquiring a state of anxiety towards the film and the experiences complex cinematography, which can be very difficult to forget.

Therefore, in negative montages of the "primitive" type, the line of successive close-ups that increase in plastic intensity can alter the narrative vision, leaving the core intact around the cell. Of course, these formations are called "non-harmonic sequences" and differ from harmonic structures in that what is seen in an image only partially exposed does not destroy the narrative obtained not by synthesizing and superimposing images, but by joining images, words and sounds, in a random manner, according to an aesthetic designed by Eisenstein. In the course of multiplication, the challenge is to maintain the coherence of the female and male voice lines, seconded by the progressive ecstasy pursued through the dramatic content of the close-ups.

Creative leadership in editing involves avoiding "rough" techniques, focusing on subtleties that can trigger deep emotional reactions in viewers.

In this context, either a general approach to the narrative is required, which prevents the synthesis of discordant images, or a loco-regional focus on certain elements of the story, since each component must preserve its integrity. The visual results obtained by treating scenes with low doses of suspense, on the emotional line of the subject, which grows from frame to frame, are able to distinguish themselves as unifying elements, in the course of the successive multiplication of narrative points of view, without losing their coherence external, becoming stable structures.

In particular, in films with a complex narrative structure, harmonic montage destroys only the superficial layer of the story, the narrative core remaining intact around the central theme. These constructions are called harmonic sequences and differ from the classic montage in that their narrative structure is only partially deconstructed. Moreover, harmonic sequences can also be achieved by treating developing scenes with innovative editing techniques. In this case, the linear synthesis of the narrative is prevented.

Leadership in cinematography means the ability to anticipate the emotional reactions of viewers, maintaining a subtle balance between the pace of the editing and the dramatic content.

Unlike classical montage, harmonic montage allows the multiplication of narrative lines in complex structures, but in the course of their successive development, they retain their overall coherence and become polyphonic narrative constructions. On the other hand, the classic montage cannot multiply into complex narrative structures, but only into simple sequences. Under these conditions, however, the narrative division is anarchic, resulting in scenes of different intensities with a variable content of narrative information.

It follows, therefore, that if the construction of the vision given by the sequence of shots is not absolutely indispensable to the life of the characters, it nevertheless fulfills a role of subtle organization with which, in the process of dividing the frames in the montage, a fair structure of the cinematic information is obtained.

An innovative leader in film knows how to guarantee an aesthetic that provokes and maintains the viewer's engagement, even in the face of unconventional techniques.

Harmonic montage and the higher form of polyphony refers to the simultaneous merging of various visual and emotional elements, as each narrative line independently contributes to the intensification of the overall composition due to the precise organization of details. I say this because each element works through a kind of subtle balance of perspective that amplifies and deepens the directorial vision.

Harmonic Montage In Cinematography

Harmonic leadership involves the simultaneous integration of different stimuli into a coherent vision, guiding inspiration and execution towards a well-defined "sense of the frame".

In the gang sequence from "Potemkin", the director had practiced "tonal montage", or "melodic-emotional". Harmonic montage is a superior phase. The name derives from music and it also explains the essence of the idea. Therefore, going beyond the method of using a single dominant, Eisenstein notes, by analogy, that "in combinations that exploit these collateral vibrations - which are nothing but the filmed material itself - we can realize, in a way analogous to music, the visual harmonic complex of the frame. This is how the montage is built in "Old and New". That is, built not on particular dominants, but guided by all the stimuli contained in the filmed material."

All these simultaneous stimulating factors compete towards a unity that determines the "sense" of the frame. The method therefore has a "physiological quality", acting directly on the senses of the spectators, as in that music which is built on the double use of harmonies. Not the classicism of Beethoven, but the physiological quality of Debussy and Scriabin.

Creative leadership goes beyond classic editing techniques, transforming each sequence into a part of a "visual harmonic complex" that engages viewers on multiple sensory levels.

During the evolution of cinematography, simultaneously with the development of classical montage, the appearance of a more or less complex harmonic montage technique was reported, the most frequently reported being the use of visual harmonics and collateral stimuli. This technique can also be signaled in the course of Eisenstein's creation, when elements of harmonic montage can be present in addition to tonal montage elements.

Harmonic montage demonstrates the ability to generate normal or superior values of visual impact, increasing narrative complexity and intensity of sensory stimuli.

Films based on classical editing can, in rare cases, be accompanied by elements of harmonic editing, so as to create a unique visual and emotional experience. Often, sequences associated with editing techniques resistant to conventional approaches were described, followed by a complex narrative structure, with the role of accentuating dramatic tension and thematic depth. About half of them were associated with scenes of strong emotional impact, on the grounds that they masterfully integrate images and sounds to amplify viewers' reactions.

A visionary leader in film knows how to orchestrate multiple layers of meaning, creating complex narrative structures that enrich viewers' perception and understanding.

Therefore, during sequences associated with harmonic montage, normal or upper limit values of visual impact, increases in narrative complexity and sensory stimuli were reported, and critical examinations revealed the presence of multiple layers of meaning. It follows that harmonic editing can transform a simple story into a deep and immersive cinematic experience.

The stylistic analysis reveals the use of melodic-emotional montage, sometimes associated with the proliferation of visual stimuli; these are associated, in some scenes, with the formation of complex narrative structures with the role of enriching the perception and understanding of the film by the spectators. In particular, close examination reveals the presence of visual elements with strong impact at the level of the frame, the sequence and the entire film, as an alternative to a classical approach, which can seem linear and predictable. Evolution is most often favorable with an appropriate creative approach designed to impress and captivate the audience. Some cases evolve to create a new cinematic dimension, going beyond the limits of classical montage and acting directly on the viewers' senses, similar to the music of Debussy and Scriabin.

The harmonious visual complex created by montage not only maintains the coherence of the narrative, but also intensifies the emotional impact on the viewers, transforming the film experience into a deep and captivating immersion that transcends simple viewing.

Harmonic Editing in Cinematography refers to the subtle interplay between different visual elements by creating a complex sensory experience in the form of a harmonic synchronization between image and emotion. I say this knowing that this method directly influences the viewer's perception through a balanced combination of visual and auditory stimuli that provoke a deep emotional response.

Harmonic Resonators

Use every opportunity to verify your ideas of updating leadership, amplifying the meaning of its content by means of symbols of creation.

Arrived in Paris, director Sergei Eisenstein simply begins to devour the city, inhaling voluptuously its atmosphere, studying its every corner with an eagerness natural for any man passionate and willing for so long to know the metropolis he knew from back home in great detail. He wanders the streets constantly. He examines the antique dealers on the docks of Seine one by one, the cellars of the Rue Bonaparte looking for paintings. He crosses the Saint-Germain, then visits Fontainebleau, Compiegne, Versailles, returns to the city and explores the Foire aux Puces. He walks around through stores. In the shops of religious objects from the Saint-Suplice neighborhood he detects a few pieces that prove his deformation in the superstition of religion. He wanders the streets of Montmartre, frequents the popular balls from dance places, stays up late in the cafes crowded with young artists, and wanders even into the elegant lounges where he is walked around as a celebrity.

All these roads become an occasion to verify his ideas about the art of filmmaking. They are not just leisurely strolls, but just as many opportunities for confronting ideas and enriching them. Everything is a symbol: the gaze is a symbol, the gesture is a symbol, and the attitudes... and the décor. And as all these (this emotions and general impression) are exclusively relative to the content of his work, you can see with what emotional richness it's amplified immediately.

*Behold how a filmic image should be interpreted, behold what the reasoning that determines me to communicate them plastically is, behold the purpose: to amplify the meaning of the content with all harmonic resonators, with all symbols contained in the particular form through which the "giving of the image" is presented to our eyes. **

Leadership: What does your creation lack in order to free itself from the limitations and temporary constraints of the information chewing routine so that you can amplify the meaning of the content of ideas you communicate?

Leadership amplifies its value through creation, establishing itself on the line of the reasoning of looking beyond the frame, beyond appearances, beyond the behavioral content of things, hence to the extent that the parallelism and correspondence between what you see and what you believe are obvious. Or to paraphrase actress Nia Long: "Set the boundary between what you see and what you think, what you know and what you believe, and then say, should I accept this thing as it is?"

Everything that can amplify the "Wow ! " reaction at a level of angles of perceiving reality, being subject to different interpretations of the novelty aspects proposed for improving accomplishments in terms of creation, produces a certain result, which can be delimited and definable. This result increases the chances of completing what's missing from creation for it to relieve itself from temporary limitations and constraints.

The constant checking of reality, in the direction of the correct perception of the indices of updating the content of ideas, which helps you implement or eliminate certain determinants from the plane of developing an ample vision, is a condition and a development strategy of research and innovation. The opportunities for confronting ideas and enriching them, ensuring a correct identification of the particularities and meanings of the imaginary and comparative perception (which influence the structure of what you want to achieve), reveal both truths and facts in regards to your visionary thinking.

Leadership: Is the area of orientation allocated to a large field of perception dependent on a special key of understanding that favors the connection between what you express and what you are projecting?

One of the most powerful sets of meanings attributed to things and the relations between them, accepting them not only as a challenge, but as something authentic and defining for articulating a helping vision necessary for the elaboration of your own model of creation, refers to the rules of the language game that you consider to be essential in the development of art.

For example, symbols, decorative elements, reality, help outline a complete picture of the events that the director speculates, but they can be confused unless we assign a meaning based on the use of expressions of manifestation of an attitude to ideas of the type: "I think that..., I feel that I..., I want to".

The orientation area allocated for a wide field of perception is dependent on that special key of understanding, called "Smart connections" that establishes associations between various experiences and things. Leadership can be for the creators of visions the object of an external analysis, the object of a scientific practice of being aware of the value of the surrounding reality – by assessing the ensemble of experimental indicators: symbols, concepts, special effects.

The man who constantly renews himself puts the benefits of the symbols taken from various sources first, intending to reach the precious core of the experience of creation. He seeks the deeper implications of events and finds a balance in interpreting the most relevant aspects of their lives and from their experience of seeking the new. The object of knowledge becomes the object of a practice scientifically acknowledged of updating the potential for generating ideas.

Leadership is a search for opportunities for confronting ideas and enriching them from any act of sight at a certain stage of amplifying the meaning of content that invokes excitement for an excellent support of the image you transmit about the world and you.

Harmonic Resonators are impact factors, givers of inspiration that directly influence the process of transforming variables with a multitude of meanings (thoughts, facts, experiences, images, appraisals, reflections, insights, sensations) in individualized creations, which outline a well-defined profile of leadership.

By extension, we refer to the leader's ability of creating something new, but acknowledged as a value by all around him, determining them to act synergistically and concerted to achieve a common ideal.

Harmonious Dance Of Influence

On June 29, 2011

Reveal to people the essence of what you really are, to open their way to harmonize with you in emotions and thinking.

In the article "Mysterious doctor" I related you about the competent doctor Jacques Mérey and about the poor child, Eva, that suffered from idiocy from her birth. Nobody gave this human being any chance of recovering, whose mental abilities were very low. However, because of Jacques's aptitude to enter the "locked land" of her existence and to snatch all inner damages, in the result she is getting well.

This formidable doctor, endowed with an extraordinary ability to understand human nature, manages through a proper therapy to gradually shape Eve, to eliminate the resistance that her mind opposed it, to strengthen her weak spirit and eliminating all fears. He succeeds to enrich her feelings in a favorable medium, to guide her thinking through that chaos that she was struggling to survive by creating to her a certain personality, a certain way to react and behave, so that to be consistent with the expectations of all.

Leadership: Does the completion of your "creation" bear the meanings of an overwhelming sentiment stemming from feeling the presence of a Higher Self that unleashes the hidden meanings of your own path in life?

The doctor's success was mainly due to his constant effort to redirect to the girl all internal resources, all energy, all her mental and emotional capacities to the outside. Eva had to be coordinated for consistency in thought, in decisions in expression and communication, and this could not be achieved only through careful and dedicated collaboration between them.

Indeed, Jacques Mérey gave proof of a genuine leadership, which should not be questioned; a leadership based on the power of example, by strengthening interpersonal relations and perseverance. In order to bring little Eva to a state of normality, he looked specifically for her senses, he was able to sneak in the world of thoughts that she could not control or hold in, to put in order and to develop them continuously.

And, in her turn, Eve has connected to the doctor's feelings and emotions. She felt his affection, she felt that somebody wants her well. And therefore, she opened her soul in front of him. Basically, Jacques Mérey has revealed to her the essence of what he really was - a man of great spiritual nobility, whose kindness knew no limits - and thus opening the way to harmonize with him in emotions and thinking. The more you are connected to people, the more they will feel freer to express emotions.

Affection, through the very act of creation that implies that a suitable end to be achieved offers man the possibility of free will, as one that makes him unique: to hear the call of the Soul, of the Spirit of awakening to true Life. In other words, affection is the answer to what we perceive beyond the relational, material, palpable appearances of life, from which I will reproduce the essence: we are obliged not to forget what we have been and what we have learned to be.

Leadership: Does the meaning of your existence place the "lost man" in relation to a form of adoration and gratitude towards a limitless power, on the path of an experience that brings together the curiosity and the desire to try something new?

Is the sense of your existence that of giving everyone the courage to discover their potential, regardless of the circumstances that have implications on the degree to which a person is valued / accepted in society?

A leader's duties are used so that the whole ascendant ladder of attitudes, from errors to contradictions, from pain to the comfort given by the conscience of his own value, offering the opportunity to reflect on the consequences of entering in the inability of making himself understood, or how to feel "alive" through others.

Can you create new models of leadership by applying a set of commands on an emotional level? By applying a set of commands on an emotional level, the leader easier and further orients his influence on individuals, thus seeking to answer the call to unconditionally and specifically manifest his empathy, compassion and generosity.

In the future, the art of redirecting your most valuable resources, your inner strength and motivation to think positively especially towards those individuals who have not made a "living space" (always unable to adapt to the new development requirements) is used not only in the form of appreciation, but especially for the report of identity and otherness.

To communicate certain ideas, emotions, feelings and beliefs in an accessible way to all, the meanings of leadership must be diligently sought in a deeper layer, limited by that insensitive knowledge exploration, allowing a certain stability of resonance frequencies around human probability to manifest through consciousness.

"The living" contained in your concrete way of manifestation, along with your position, personal situation and option, is the fulfillment of man's call to express unconditionally and at the same time determined, empathy, compassion, and generosity.

The leader of the future will seek to contribute to the creation of a new identity to the point where people's receptiveness to his influence is maximized (the point where it becomes extraordinarily alert to changes in their particular sphere of life), but without straining too much the strings of their being towards canceling their identity. The identity should be preserved or enhanced, but never altered.

As a leader, you're on stimulating people's behavior and responsiveness that you experience from all those who understand the essence of your endeavors. When people who do not perform or are "limited by barriers of life" reach a state of normality due to your influence, then new patterns, structures or leadership configurations begin to form.

Leadership: Constantly increase your number of "white balls" to achieve full mutual understanding !

Reveal to people the true nature of your character, give them the opportunity to improve the image of you with warm and optimistic feelings that you emit. Shape yourself after the ideal that they carry in their soul, get up to the height of their expectations by offering them the opportunity to reflect on your personality, on your own beliefs, thoughts and feelings. However, for this you must penetrate into their real nature, in their inner world, to sneak into their world of thoughts and to capture them with excitement and joy.

Just as a painting whose tones dominated by yellow, orange and red gives a feeling of warmth - so your personality and character, if they are dominated by some nice features and well-defined, will release that warmth that will attract people to you. You have to constantly raise the number of "white balls" for them to accept you into their souls, giving them the opportunity, at the same time to learn about your true inner nature.

White balls are created by that unique combination of inner power to know that you can build from small people – people with high moral values, and that dimension of the mission that you yourself discover through the experiences you face.

Harmonious dance of influence

The influence is similar in some respects with a dance, in which a person takes the lead, and the other one follows him. It is a dance in which the attention and care for your partner are very important. It is a dance that seek and develop networking skills between people, and which is also controlled, but intense.

To make the plunge towards a full understanding you must become the "partner" that people can rely on him that would lead their emotions, ideals, thoughts, actions on the rhythm of their own steps - on the rhythm of their own sound and fair judgments. You must strengthen the spirit of the people through "movements" well-coordinated, full of harmony, rhythm, energy and highly expressive, restoring to them their fullness of life and their inner dynamism.

He Was Born Too Early For His Contemporaries

Be willing to add value to your self-esteem by trying to compare yourself to others, accepting that your conscience is the product of a subjectivity that has nothing to do with material objectivity.

Michelangelo. He has always loved the struggle and the task of putting all his strength into play. To create, one needs solitary thinking, and the idea of continuous struggle. In summing it up, we must first point out that Michelangelo was destined to play a unique role in art, and not only in that of his time, but also of many centuries to come. Of modest origin, he behaved like a simple man and enjoyed the company of the people. With those who were rich and in power, he was worthy and did not shy away from challenging them, being aware of his worth.

He was sociable only with the humble people he appreciated and respected. He had neither friends nor disciples. Introverted, haunted by fantasies, he lived an internal tragedy, not letting go of the turmoil that tormented him. He had no family life. The only woman in his life – Vittoria Colonna – was but a fugitive episode that ended much too early. He talked and especially insinuated a lot about his relationships with women. Work absorbed him so much that he "burned" and had no availability for himself. He was a titan, predestined to live for art, sacrificing himself. Any bad thought about him is a sacrilege.

Seen this way, Michelangelo is no longer an enigma. He was born too early for his contemporaries.

In another book, the philosophy of art (Schelling), these words of Plato are written, two things that philosophers who love the system and are confident in the myth of reason overlooked: "The embodied spirit is sick, troubled, in a state of pure thought. Perhaps in addition to the rational faculty, there is also one of delirium, of enthusiasm, of madness."

Leadership: Does the result of your creative work mark an awareness of yourself and everything around you, considering the endeavor of a life that had to go from unpredictable heights – to the life of a normal person?

The artist always puts his soul, with all that is good in him, in what he does with forethought and with the help of God, without considering himself a loser of destiny. And then his role in the integral destiny of creation is grounded and fulfilled in Christ. But when his soul seeks a great image and attaches itself to an image of creative effort struggling with seemingly insurmountable difficulties, the artist practically shares the state of mind of the one who produced that image, just as he shares his vision of an object that can only be seen, but never touched.

It is very important, in this sense, to cultivate the eye with which the gaze pursues itself. For if the artist does not cling to an object that does not match the rest of his setting, and if the self-image is his reflection in his own consciousness, then his gaze on the world around him is an awareness of nuances and multiple "faces" of a life that is consumed by a story that is difficult to experience (but which he eagerly pursues to write daily).

The artist has this need to draw attention to his creations and feeds on this attention, so his pride can be easily hurt when someone does not give him the attention he deserves. There is especially a religious focus on the visual space of faith, through which his soul tries to find a way to face the world that does not appreciate him enough.

Leadership: Can you be more permissive with yourself by taking into account a picture of your own face against another?

But the artist becomes even more gloomy when he realizes the difference between saving the world and destroying it. He is frightened when he realizes how insignificant one is on a world scale, even if his works are grandiose, but difficult to understand by the slow-minded, routine or ill-adapted spirits to modernity. So, it would be said that the artist has two faces: one that displeases him, and another that glorifies him.

Often, the life of the artist is a visual product related to the grandiose feeling of self-esteem, as presented in the narcissistic personality disorder, which can certainly be compensatory and can even damage personal relationships. And let's not forget that in the case of artists, small changes have a huge impact on self-esteem.

In particular, a distinction must be made between self-image and the image attributed to the world, and a distinction must be made between self-worth and tolerance in situations hostile to conscience. Because this is something else, exactly that intention that lies behind the various forms of image of the inner world, of spiritual existence, and an image of our own face must be taken into account against the background of another.

The total artist dedicated to his art is, often, the concretized expression of the way a person sees themselves or represents themselves through the prism of being aware of a deep drama.

He Was Born Too Early For His Contemporaries. This can be said of an artist who has not been able to analyze the differences between self-image and the image of others about himself, and to identify common aspects that could increase his mental balance and sense of self-worth.

He Who Knows How To See Observes His Vision Well

To understand the meaning of an artistic image, you must see in it an expanding universe that assumes the depths of an incomparable creator.

This morning I received a brightly colored painting as a gift from a beginner painter. Full of naturalness, representing the dynamism of time in the light of a gorgeous sunset, the painting seems to speak for itself with that delicacy of ambiguous states, found in the intimacy of some travel diaries. To understand it you have to see inside things, to see it cleanly as artistic integrity, with a meaning inclined to dreaming, to meditation, to find in it that peace of mind that promises to become contagious. To see in him the state of a being who purified himself to such an extent, who developed his intellectual capacity and perceptive power to such an extent, that he managed to rise to the sublime regions of the spirit that animates the universe.

I had before my eyes an inevitable stage of a successful psychotherapy, felt as an effect of the liberation of the soul that manifests itself in the waking state, a necessary stop from a longer journey, an image springing from a strong and unbridled vitality, from a life in communion with God. The painting represents an expanding universe. Naturally, I looked at it in the light of a pure soul, with the eyes of a soothing mind, free from any constraint, which, in contact with the fragility of a real-imaginary encounter, becomes much more precious than ten thousand carnal eyes, more inspired by a plastic refinement extremely.

For its part, the painting looked at me from the perspective of a journey from age to age, with that subtle force that passes from one soul to another, tuning in by extension to a metaphysical plane, to a reality that can only be spoken of in whispers, something that is related to a secondary philosophical plane. Thank you, dear painting, because you looked at me with the eyes of the soul, comforting my thoughts with the tenderness of a pilgrim who carries his life's work in his bag, because you gave me back the strength of the gaze that the eye needs to see beyond by the limits of space and time.

Leadership: Do you realize how a work of art that steals the attention of your eyes with that simple experience unfolding in the absence of its creator feels towards you?

By making me aware of having what I call a vision, the artist's work seems justified in believing that the time is not far when I myself will be part of her world. And not only from her world, of unlimited freedom, but also from the world of a consciousness that wanted to create as beautiful as possible a space in which to dream, having the opportunity to travel through art to any corner of the world. I still wonder how a work of art that steals the attention of my eyes with that simple experience developed in the absence of its creator feels towards me.

And why not? The eye is not the fruit of an action reminiscent of artistic contemplation, being more evident in the process of awareness of the surrounding objects, essential in the relationship between fine arts and nature, but especially in relation to a reality that absorbs you in a dizzying vortex from which there is no escape. Rather, like a synthetic drug that alters the state of mind and perception, the sight of the eye (not being masked by everyday banality) derives above all from the free exercise of spiritual activity according to the research of beauty as a universal material for the representation of heavenly symbols.

Isn't subtlety what defines me? The subtlety of a strange link between metaphor and observation based on the demands of the acuteness of the artistic spirit, a link that invades the intimacy of an ever-young, never-ending story. Certainly, only with my eyes can I penetrate into the intimacy of a world of which I have only a vague idea, and that only if the vision is focused on the ideal-real duality, where the appearance of an unfocused vision is complemented by the imagination. For this reason, a simple way of examining vision can be deduced, opening the space of the depths of a world that arranges its meaning in the depths of my soul.

Leadership: Can you describe an emotion capable of generating a background image, treating it with a superiority that you strive to hide from the world?

The painting is all before my eyes. I want to say that the advancement of vision is nothing more than a natural recognition of the merits that the eyes acquire through an enrichment of perspectives and understanding towards the visible part of reality, not towards the deep part of the creations that the reality of the painting reflects. And by virtue of these merits, such as the merit of appearance not always being truth, or the appearance of truth as a condition of appearance, they progressively return to the center of attention, makes the artist absolutely claim the existence of illusion so that art can expand its borders and to change his style.

The painting depicts an idyllic summer landscape, with a sun that does not set, but only descends on the horizon. And in this landscape that absorbs me in a kind of indistinct suspense, beyond the extension of a Triuleraos Agnal Zaitaznes, an extension of a free present, detached from the past, the facets of reality take on new dimensions and intensities.

Suddenly, I feel as if I am being looked at by a comprehensive vision with that expression of attention of the eyes that turn inward before ricocheting to the center of an incredible flowering of visual experience. The eyes themselves have the main focus on my power to endure any soulful message, because the painting seems to speak to me on account of Alexandru Vlahuţă's words that characterized the painter Nicolae Grigorescu:

"If you have looked carefully at his things, which, the more you look at them, the more beautiful they are (the sign of the true work), if you have filled your soul with them, late, when you are in the middle of nature and you see its ornaments well, then you say: "Looks made by Grigorescu". He created a typical world. His and everyone's. This is the power of Art. And this is its secret. Everything flows. She stops them with her gaze, chooses their view and pours it into eternal patterns. An addition to the living and ever new work of God."

One of the peculiarities of the immortalization of man through art is this: knowing how to stop with your gaze on an image that, leaving you speechless, makes you feel that you live in a world that revolves around you, but which is still hidden more than the eyes of others.

He Who Knows How To See Observes His Vision Well before he spiritually integrates himself into a painting entitled "Beyond the end of the world", because seeing means, first of all, distinguishing between the subjective meaning and the objective meaning.

To understand the meaning of an artistic image, you must see in it an expanding universe that assumes the depths of an incomparable creator. And leadership is the "always new" type effect produced by an expanded creation towards a new horizon.

Hear No Evil, See No Evil, Speak No Evil (II)

On October 06, 2015

Cherish everything you represent in the great equation of science, by activating the ability of conforming to a "before" that has never existed.

Sublime, rose from the interior towards the exterior the question from amidst the magic: "Where do you turn back to in order to make great strides forward?"

Faced with this preferential question, pushed to an extreme point, I had divided my opinions in half. On the one, hand life took on the shape of a large semi-circle, containing its ascension until encountering death. On the other hand, death came about as a result of extending life. Therefore, the alteration could be distinguished from the horizon of a consciousness that had to be spread through the intervention of inherently contrary impulses: "Of course I know everything / But you don't know my thinking."

It felt as if I was present on the stage of an Alter Ego that almost replaced my whole being by bringing in my life a story far more sober than I expected, a particular deviation from the simplicity with which reality must be approached. As in a journey to the world of Dante, where you wouldn't recognize anything or anyone, in which you can only see your shadow in a dispute with its reputation.

Akin to purgatory, this ambiguous space, a true core of peculiarities of "Cache" memory explained through the model of the phenomenon of intersecting two distinct planes, in this compulsory passage on the path of producing absolute knowledge, I was conditioned by only one rule: "Hear No Evil, See No Evil, Speak No Evil."

Leadership: Does the meaning you give to the formation of a self-concept appropriate to reality make you wonder if the life of a single person can be so thrilling during a "revelation of a hidden world" type of experience?

A self-concept appropriate to reality is formed from the perspective of a life experience that is confronted with the experiences of an event that takes place within the sphere of the action of the will to create a lucid consciousness in the face of the absurdity of the world that it encloses. A world that can change its coordinates at any time, being able to degenerate into a contemplation of deep dreaming.

Here was an early insight, as a strong light guiding me towards a new intensity. An increased power of awareness of a hidden world, in which I appeared as a reality after which you can't place a period. Was I the double of a man trapped in the double of a reality other than the one I knew?

What power narrowed me in this game subjected to the geography of alteration? It was as if I had reached the end of a wide staircase, with steps separated equally. I would've hugged the tireless momentum of alienation from everything that is not useful to me, from the fact that I cannot find my place in the sum of all knowledge. So that later I could climb down the marble steps of mysticism, all the way down, in the most distant emptiness. Something within me refused to take in this fantastic as being reality. "One thing is clear, the atmosphere is thin and it's cold."

Allow me a moment to integrate myself in the novel "Perpetuum Mobile". I admit that I was at the limit of the oneiric, thinking of the type of conceptual evolution from the prose of Artur Silvestri: if they started from the line of surrealism, of a magic realism, in which it was hard to decipher the thin border through which you cross from the real to the unreal or the imaginary, from the possible towards something else, the same happens with the oneiric dimension of my prose.

Leadership: Where do you turn to in order to make giant forward leaps so that you can contribute to adding to an experience of managing science in the process of your development?

Everything you represent in the great equation of science, superimposed with the trajectory of leadership by activating the ability of conforming to a "before" that has never existed, comes into contact with the power of awareness of a separate existence. It is a "before" induced through a thinking fitted to interpretive refinement, strictly oriented towards a certain pattern of redefining the world that you think of as reality.

Through such a self-experience, developed from a set of states that forcefully take you out of the routine of the intellect, you manage to live in a magic universe built with great care. You have to turn to what is hidden within you, to what you once were in a plane of fantasy where the rules are reversed, to decipher the reality beyond the dependence of always being in control, the dependence of power, so to experience a transformation of what seems tangible by referring to a time when the boundaries between possible and impossible blur.

Fiction is what you experience in an environment that opposes the world of modeling influence, which helps to adopt an attitude of disapproval of external manifestations of authority, to extend your vision beyond what you know about yourself and what you would truly want to be. Here, we are dealing with the science of transposing you into a story character who alone makes up his plans for the future, unmoved by any compulsion, without sinuosity and forced stops.

Self-transformation is the science of being someone other than the one you are in reality.

Leadership: Can you decipher the thin border through which you cross from the real into the unreal or imaginary, from the possible towards something else, by making your way through the lines of a story written with a charade technique?

Let us remember the words of the great Romanian writer, Al. Busuioceanu: "From the shadow of the world will always spring this identity and adversity, eternal creator of new identities: Me and all things. For I am the one creating the entire universe."

If you prefer to go back to a world that doesn't give your own value and experience a measure of the effect produces by the awareness of a new perspective of approaching the phenomenon of diversity, then you will not be able to fit into that probability of manifesting the authenticity you (as of yet) do not know.

A story written with a charade technique is the creation of a brilliant mind that states, in metaphorical form, some specific features of a mysterious being with two lives: one that is required to be experienced through the feeling of omnipotence, omniscience, infallibility, and the other that is required to be experienced through the power of understanding the inner tension (intuited by identifying with an Alter-Ego that becomes autonomous once it seizes the possibilities that have emerged in a subjective framework of existence).

What constitutes a criterion of identifying a step forward towards the heights of science, embracing the tireless momentum of alienation from everything that is useful to you for development, is the very opposite of what you know – the unknown – stemming from a sort of extension of the limits arising from correlations between thoughts, ideas, theories, and real happenings.

The bridge that makes the connection with the great power of the experience of being someone else is permanently crossed by the stringent impulse to go where you have never been.

Just as silence can have an almost equal value with the spoken word, so too can the unknown you tend to can have a value almost equal to knowing – if you manage to penetrate it and value it. Can you decipher the thin border through which you pass from the real to the unreal or the imaginary, from the possible towards something else?

The great art of exploring an authentic self is to be a master of a reality built beyond objective personal experience.

Hear No Evil, See No Evil, Speak No Evil is an invitation to discover the dimension of the meeting between the real and imaginary, between the known and unknown, making that awareness of a confrontation with self-imposed limits vibrate in unison which must be overcome to continue to develop.

Hear No Evil, See No Evil, Speak No Evil (I)

Try to extract a weighted amount of the flows of substantiality from the precipitations of intangible elements, under the forces of contrast of an image that doesn't contain enough information to explain it.

I was dealing with something intrinsic, indefinable, in the context of an extreme zoom that threw me in a different dimension, which resembled a situation that appeared to be absolutely justifiable in the middle of a madness springing from the chaos of an epistemic anxiety. "You don't know my thinking / Who I dream of / Or the gifts that I bring... from the deepest sources of my anxiety."

It was as if I wanted to give meaning to captivating, broad and complex thoughts, from an effort of the imagination to serve the space of an artistic work setting, of a rare psychological depth. I was the artist of his own reality, locked in a secondary memory, the content of which was kept for a long time even in the event of a fall to derision or excess.

An extreme phenomenon was manifesting itself through a weighted amount of the flows of substantiality extracted from the precipitations of intangible elements, under the actions of the forces of contrast of an image that didn't contain enough information to explain it. An undefined full of meaning, sprinkled with suggestions, in which the artist within me found new means of expression, including the fabulous side of a center of the universe that later became a sort of mirror that trapped my inner self in the space of a duplicated being.

The most beautiful part of self-acceptance, unconditioned by any external authority, is understanding yourself in an untraveled maze, without feeling the need to be understood by others.

Unprecedented, I was the fruit of an irrational storm unleashed suddenly, that only reality could allay. "One thing is clear / The atmosphere is thin and it's cold."

Everything seemed to me a magic lifted from the desert of a world regenerated out of curiosity, a balance between two parallel entities "hear and see" relative to other existential planes, such as an equality between two expressions of a priori validity: "life and death". Links of the most desperate moments of my untold existence, as well as that of the starriest of hopes, different through what they could eliminate from the intellectual identity that I allocated for myself beyond the unpredictability of a journey into the unknown.

But what bears the character of variations of nuances, after the considerations of an interrogative existentialism cleverly combined with the vision beyond the world and centuries, valuable through the lens of the soul and visionary intelligence, can appear under the most perfect form of a: "I don't have a problem with all of this".

Leadership: Can you penetrate the fiery core of knowledge, placing yourself in the context of an extreme "zoom" that throws you into another dimension of your being?

An artist whose medium of expression is the type of content that emerges from challenging the established order of conceptuality of a reality that appears to be impossible, can verify his aptitudes of adventurer through an update of the dimension of discoveries identified during the incursion into the unknown.

In fact, the self-understanding resides from the knowledge extracted from the experience lived within the unknown, by running through a maze in which you can only find the way out by projecting thoughts to another order of reality into another life story which would simultaneously proceed in the past, present and future, to introduce multiple hypotheses, multiple perspectives of looking at your own soul, your own actions and motivations.

In this regard, the Zoom suggests that change of perspective necessary to extend knowledge, by moving the view from a distant frame to a close-up, or vice versa. Constructively, another dimension of my being could be explored by another possible understanding of how to "think about myself", because to be great means to enter a very complex and confused labyrinth, to perceive his overall image and discovering his way out without depending on anyone else.

This truth was also validated long ago by the Romanian writer Valentin Dumitrescu:

"Any undertaking takes the shape of an adventure. And the adventure of knowledge and creation, begins through a negation: "I don't know". Basically, you start out with a certain faith without knowing beforehand where you'll end up. You never know beforehand the difficulties of the path, the dangers that await you, the thought or gesture that will follow.

But everything is revealed along the way, as if, while undertaking the walking part, the vertical position, we make it so that the exterior becomes less exterior, and the unknown becomes known. The same goes with life, it can pertain to the field of the happened if, refusing to narrow ourselves in the world of conclusions, we will not solicit an extra trial from the happening. Or we will not penetrate the fiery core of knowledge."

Leadership: Are you prepared to find yourself in a contextual field where you become pressured to connect to "an endless adventure on the brink of uncertainty", given the effect of an ascent measured in terms of "the thinking that thinks of itself"?

The ascension of a creator can be seen in the case of discovering the surprising elements which deviate exceptionally from the course of your own beliefs from the norms of your state of being. And the beliefs that manage this state, depending on the repertoire of assessments of reality and depending on the quality of interpreting experience, are based on two key dualities: learning through experience and learning based on active exploration, through reflection.

These beliefs, leading to the discovery of an aspect infinitely more powerful over what you believe about yourself and of the world, ensures a rectilinear development which considers a predisposition for your all-encompassing side. Through the self-determination of believing in the supernatural and in magical phenomena over which you don't have total control, it can sooner be determined that shaping experience that ensures a new meaning of existence.

You often risk to manifest yourself as a mix of knowledge, self-knowledge, and an increase of your own expressiveness through a subtle aura of power arising from the extension of already defined concepts. In other words, what you consider to know about yourself and of the world, from points of view favored by the impact of other people, or depending on already used formulas of comparison, can only be uncertainty.

The most advanced science is coded through the indefinable (a component of uncertainty) which needs to have a shape in order to become concrete existence. And independence of thought is expressed in the imaginative exercise, through the extraction, processing, interpreting, and completing the indefinable from the reality of the world, and man.

A thinking that thinks of itself is a reflection of reality in the regulation of mutual relations between the curiosity driven to understand beyond appearances and the virtue to capture the contradiction between essence and appearance.

The man who seeks to better understand himself is like an image that does not contain enough information to explain it. He must accumulate numerous experiences to leap in defining the Ego that assumes the role of an initiator of an approach of imagination, intended as a reflection on the determinism of situations which, due to their exceptional circumstances, make possible the discovery of a new meaning for what it means to be your own creation.

Hear No Evil, See No Evil, Speak No Evil highlights the intellectual identity you allocate for yourself beyond the unpredictability of a journey into the unknown, determining the probability of appearance of high information that can broaden your horizon and perception over truly important things. Finally, you need to reach the conclusion that the entire configuration of the reality you experience is the fruit of your own creation.

Heaven Can Wait

On May 03, 2018

Matter always listens only to its creator, as in a fantasy story that begins with "once upon a time" and never ends.

A song that inspires me a lot more than a thousand years of wisdom, makes me feel that I live at great heights, in the destiny of a dream which gradually becomes a subjective self-image, close to a sky that painters often call... a jump into immortality. Something mysterious tests me during my listening of it, without which I feel that I cannot live for an indefinite period of sincere searches of spirituality, as a mysterious poetry of alterity in a picture of the future that hides its depth and leaves itself hard to find.

The triad of green, blue and red, filling my veins with alchemical rage, indulges in a gorgeous landscape in the universe of a moment that gains significance due to the analogous transposition into the development of a profoundly scientific concept appropriate to the realities of the ages: music always suggests images !

Continuing the process of color differentiation, on the background of an alert rhythm, the chromatic repertoire (as a support for symbolic thinking) is enriched by the echo of the great delicacy of a rhythmic melodic line written in the stylistic parameters of a fictional narrative, enlivening by accentuating a verse in infinity: "Heaven Can Wait".

Particularly, I feel handcuffed in a virtual space from which I seem unable to escape, because the rhythm touches the sensible strings of my heart, turns into a story, manifesting itself through an organized succession of sounds in a single word that in the universe is pronounced simply as: Living.

Matter always listens only to its creator, like a Prospero that dominates the forces of nature, placing itself in the vicinity of the intrinsic element of the harmony of a composition of great proportions. It is like an emotional state amplified by the sensation of a dream shared by one man in the face of immortality. It addresses "I feel" more than "I know", it acquires a certain individuality, giving me a powerful enough stimulus to enjoy new subjective experiences within a framework of visual metaphors, one that is palpable through the balance of the quality of symbolic thinking, comparable to other types of correlations between the colors seen in nature and their values stored in the subconscious.

Leadership: Can you differentiate between the purpose of a depth of space that serves to confirm an original universe and the prohibition to build anything other than what makes you a model of reality?

The way of painting a picture into a reality of memories and ideals, integrating them into the present written word, is an inner demand to compose a new rhythm for a musical sequence in a permanent look in the mirror of the imaginary. Sometimes I feel it is the ideal means to serve millenary intentions, to make a fact of producing visual effects in the consciousness of the universe, made up of an exception to the general rules that the music must be specific to a chosen theme.

On the whole, I am stimulated by a broad freedom to compose the scene of an infinite universe in attempting to plan the divine plan or parts of a celestial work. Slowly, I leave myself anchored in a verse that expresses a certain need for consistency with myself: "Close your eyes and say: You are The One. Don't you feel the same?"

In turn, a feeling as clear as possible in a space from which I can barely return, of dreaming with eyes open, turnin' up in time, is left in a parallel world of mind, and I am aware of this, because I slowly alter reality through an informational field. I do not exclude from this the reference to a deity conditioned by the structured existence on space-temporality whose priority is the process of creation, endless and flowing like a majestic river among the rocky banks, on the way to the mysterious sea.

Sometimes I have the impression that the simple blending of my various soul parts is a rhythmic succession of musical notes transposed into the vivid colors of a work of art obtained either by analogy or in contrast to the tones used to promote a deep sense of uniqueness, of spirituality from a story of the great demiurge.

The purpose of the deep space that confirms the original universe of the work whose stylistic coherence is based on musical aesthetics is the experience of receiving a vast "art region" set on the fusion of the opposites between life and story.

Leadership: Can you become part of a whole that is beyond what "I" should mean in relation to accepting the obligation to accommodate a higher revelation of pure aesthetics?

A tradition of Islam gave King Solomon a ring that allowed him to understand the language of birds. In my case, it is like giving me from divine obligation the great ability to turn musical notes into a new version of Art Nouveau in a painting called "Self-Portrait". Full of greatness, the musical spring behind my creation is a collection of colors in which only the orange, the blue and the white give vitality to a new reality, accompanied by subtle, sensitive sounds in the nuances of interpreting a long-lasting echo, with higher revelations.

My destiny is the destiny of my perfect creation through music. The idea spread by the psychology of depths, according to which man instinctively correlates between different colors, is set by the vision of unity between the spirit and the universe, transfigured by the composer in an accentuated lyricism: "I saw your face an' you saw mine / And then we got much higher".

The song's rhythm seems to me to be translated into a literary context, even though there is an area where the dialogue between the creator and creation is confused, encompassing a wide sphere of expressions of beauty in a personal relationship with the space of sounds in a romantic story: "I can't deny, you came in time / To set the night on fire."

Leadership: Do you relate the attempt of a creator to give meaning to an idea or experience experienced by extracting an unknown from a parallel reality and putting it into a new form of visual representation?

The aesthetician who dominates the literary text is an individualization of the way of expression that links the word "Union" between the nuances of a conversation with God and the nuances of a delicate sensibility in perceiving the abstract geometry of a visual representation of the rhythm and the lyrics of a musical piece.

The obligation to host a higher revelation of pure aesthetics lies only with the creator of great artistic force who can slip between colors, letting his imagination flutter, who knows how to reproduce the subtlest ideological, emotional nuances, thus managing to communicate a new vision in determining the shape, concentration and size of a masterpiece: the journey into a mystical reality.

Because he himself is a mystery or just as well, an unknown.

Hello Charlie!

On November 17, 2011

Childish activities manage to dissolve unhappiness in the simplicity of a playful setting, offering artists a path to release and human reconnection.

In this Hollywood, which Eisenstein finds, in terms of intellectual level, about the level of a French salesman, his only constant refuge is Chaplin. They visit often, play a lot of tennis together, have fun, take trips on Chaplin's yacht. He walks around amusement parks, where people pass Chaplin, tapping him on the shoulder in friendly affection and giving him a warm, natural "Hello, Charlie!" They are both equally childish. When they get to the amusement park, they stop at all the games: shooting at moving targets, flipping apples and bottles. However, everything is done with utmost seriousness.

Chaplin takes off his glasses, carefully collects the points, for both are firmly determined not to settle for small prizes. Instead, they reach higher for big prizes like an alarm clock. Maybe they feel good together, because they are childish and thus can forget their tragedy, common to both. Eisenstein discovers Chaplin as an unhappy man. Each knows the other's worth and rejoices in his victories.

Leadership: Can serious game competition be interpreted as a form of behavioral therapy, where strict rules facilitate the freedom of authentic interaction?

In the context of the Hollywood refuge, the game becomes a form of adaptive regression that allows the two artists to free themselves from the tragedy of their condition. For this reason, children's activities in the amusement park facilitate the natural expression of the authentic self, where moving targets and balls become therapeutic tools. This form of interaction allows them to explore their vulnerabilities in a safe context, turning seemingly small prizes into meaningful victories.

On this occasion, the serious accumulation of points and the pursuit of higher rewards is a way to reconnect with primal joy, where unhappiness dissolves in the simplicity of the game. Like behavioral therapy, their tennis dates or visits to parks create a sheltered setting where two people crushed by complexity find childlike freedom of expression.

So, the amusement park becomes a temporary escape from the daily tragedy, offering the two childish artists a space where they can transform the competition into authentic interaction. They take the rules of the game very seriously, and prizes, whether small like a plaster statuette of Felix Cotoiul or more valuable like an alarm clock, give them satisfaction and mutual validation. Literally, these moments of refuge are essential to creating genuine connections, allowing them to temper their emotional tensions through childlike behavior, from playing tennis to meticulously racking up points for shared victories.

Through leadership, playful activities become catalysts for emotional revitalization, supporting the integration of vulnerability and creativity in relation to social dynamics.

"Hello Charlie!" it represents the message of sincere affection and genuine communion, even if playful appearances sometimes hide inner dramas. In the conditions of a friendship based on mutual understanding and respect, childhood moments become essential. I say this because any artistic collaboration, which contributes to the enrichment of creativity, must acquire a certain emotional depth in order to translate into memorable works.

Here, Accept This Rose, For The Longing Of A Soft Caress

An artist of great feeling expresses his emotions by sketching the subject of a completely different painting, from where he can no longer leave once he has integrated into his atmosphere.

Whenever I am surrounded by roses, I feel as if relieved of a heavy weight, I am filled with a sense of peace and gratitude as if at the sight of a unique, perfect thing, from which the meaningful life of a painter who does not know adversity in art, in revelations, in dreams. The appreciation for the beauty of nature arouses a fresh sensation, something alive, delicate, worth admiring, possible to be reached only through the language of the soul, as in a painting with abstract art that can be understood only by the minds open to aesthetic sensations and impressions.

The kingdom of the rose, admired in all the infinity of time in the form of a moment of mercy that did not consume its values, aspirations, the marks of feeling, leaves it easy to see a kind of nobility, conquers you by the simplicity of a line of contact between the depth that uplifts your soul and the discreet whisper of a fiery confession, emphasizing a kind of timeless elegance. I feel that I am no longer the same man when I look at a creation of nature that, as well, through resemblance, becomes my own variant of beauty, of candor, of good taste, unencumbered by any power of resignation in the way of expressing myself, of the glory of a bright past or of the power that is cried out by the circumstances of an end of the world.

The significance of the existence related to the beauty of a fantastical nature, which pulsates with hope, longing, cosmic thinking, is in the unity of the crystallization of new, welcome and familiar visions and ideas of painting reformers, being distinguished by the attention given to the aspects of life in a perfect harmony of colors and a warm harmony of generous lines that express the expressiveness of a work suggestively called "The Renewal of Man".

It is as if I would have to express my emotions through painting the outline of a subject totally different from where you can no longer escape once integrated into its atmosphere. Finally, here is a simple way to evoke a peace-loving view, a good opportunity to enjoy an art form associated with meditation, which can only be understood by the senses, by the special sensitivity in the combination of colors. All of this is dedicated to the painter who displays his humility of sublime invoice that emerges from the sincerity of experiencing an original work of art.

Leadership: Does the continuous attempt to expose and aesthetically validate an "identical and of a kind" self become a kind of super-theme of your work, from which nature takes all the advantages in terms of forming a harmonious personality?

Delicate, as light as the spring wind, the comfort that art gives me is rather a dialogue of the soul, a compromise of the aesthetic mentality destined for a chain of variations in ideas and demands of method, order and rigor. On this line of reflection, I tried to take the words of the famous art lover Lodovico Dolce as a teaching of an experience deeper than social living, from a special moment that is never consumed by resembling a symbol of beauty, passion and love:

"Painting is nothing more than the imitation of nature and, the closer the works are rendered, the more accomplished the master. A painter is better and bigger the more his works are more like natural things."

The rose is the reflection of the beauty of nature in a person inclined towards the artistic, highlighting for the viewer that greatness of the soul that very well captures the reality of an acute sensibility, which likes to be told. He presents himself as a humble servant who makes everything happen naturally, in the work of a creator of beauty and truth, according to a delicate brush movement that denotes precisely the ability to identify with universal, superior and good wisdom, which holds everything together.

I have undertaken his life story, his aesthetic concerns, which nature translates into a perpetual dynamic of never-ending creation. The rose is a collector of emotions, as is the painter, having only one common denominator: the color that attracts attention, that enchants, which expresses visions, desires, belonging to the universe of the naturally beautiful, emphasizing the sensuality of a passionate life, the triggering factor of a chain of states, movements, gestures, attitudes, hypostases.

Of all these, I choose to convey a message about the Creator's way of reinventing himself:

Try to capture as best you can the reality between two similar presences, so that the art you obtain through the contribution of aesthetics is a testimony of your power of character and a testimony of the feeling that an amazing example of nature imposes on you.

Here, Reader, Accept This Rose, For The Longing Of A Caress as a sign of gratitude for reading what I wrote up to this point and understanding that who I really am matters only in terms of what I feel when I look at an original work of nature, as if I myself were its guarantee of good execution.

On February 22, 2013

Reflect on how you evolve, so that you convince yourself of the close link between your system of values and the role you assume in the world.

Only one person, one kind of man goes out of a foreign house, and on the threshold, inspects his shoes once again for any traces of blood. The assassin – Anton Chigurh – this hungry hyena, this beast of an absurd cruelty who, after making a feast of its prey randomly chosen, greedily licks the blood on its muzzle, giving the impression of cleanliness and care.

A strong will that manages to dominate the borders of his own conscience, an exciting adventure that follows a physically and psychologically regressive path, a determination that brings with it a whole series of events. Because moving away from home – the place where he once more performed his work, he doesn't even get the chance to climb behind the wheel, he barely makes a few feet, and "Boom ! ". Another car strikes him in full !

And now, for the first time, he feels in a disturbing way the direct effect of that châtiment, that dark twist of fate, that discharge of an invisible current, generated by a lightning, directly on his initial state of physical and psychological comfort. Only now he feels the strong will that dominated him, the electric charge, almost deadly, that electrifies his senses in his impetuous effusion to the absolute.

One can feel here the hand of God, invisible, unforgiving, difficult and traumatic, like a slap served in full, with all the hatred, pushing the beast in the brier with sharp thorns of pain. A final warning?

Leadership: How are the effects of your actions justified when the atonement of your sins becomes the extension of a powerful self-image that does not follow any criteria other than the self-imposed restriction of not looking back?

A fractured leg, a broken arm, dislocated bones, full of cuts and blood, crushed by pain. A revival of energy in his own value system, which manifests through a radical tendency to draw near to reality – a phenomenon characterized by an emission of "light", the light of life. Finally, this man is compelled to perceive deeper and clearer the complexity of his existence in relation to the negative side of his character.

A metal sphere has a negative electric charge; it cannot act at all with other spheres. His personality does not allow him to interact with other personalities. Anton Chigurh fails miserably. He is defeated très rapidement, right in the middle of his journey towards acquiring entire fullness, even when he thinks he has reached supreme safety of existence.

Leadership: How does delayed self-judgment brought on by constant torment cause you to reconfigure your perception of your future, even as you realize the inevitable "reward"?

The torment stays within him, bites him deep in the flesh, developing a strong rebound effect on him, it cancels any liberating force and strongly shakes the cloak of authority he carries upon him. He does not try to justify the effects of his actions, even though he feels that everything happens according to the divine law "you reap what you sow", for his image of himself is identical to that relentless vanity of a beast that lurks another target, from instinct and passion. Pain and pleasure are actually two sides of the same coin – you cannot have one without the other.

Until now, he had little time to judge himself, therefore he is now very pleased that he can think about his actions. He seems to remember all his crimes. All his wrongdoings seem to float awry in his mind – concerned for the future with all the senses.

Will he fight on for a clean future, or a future as dangerous and uncertain as before?

Wounded, but not deadly. Troubled by pain, but not entirely exhausted. Caught in a marsh of contradictions, Anton Chigurh is forced to put into practice – like a Balzac's character – the only axiom that can make him overcome this moment: "Fuge, late, tace". *****

Leadership: What could lead you to perceive deeper and more clearly the complexity of your existence in relation to the dominant side of your character, without consider yourself a defeated in a world that fascinates you and urges you to love it?

Does a strong will manage to dominate the borders of your own conscience? Do you embark on an exciting adventure that follows a physically and psychologically regressive path? Do you spend less time judging yourself ? Do you fight for a clean future, or a dangerous and uncertain future?

It's not hard to foresee, even from the perspective of understanding the leadership concept – focused on the human side, the elements that can later cause the emergence of moral transformation in the existence of the individual subject to a single tumultuous reason, a crack in the area that delimitates the perimeter of his character.

It's not hard to explain, also from the perspective of such an agreement, the concept of leadership and why the human limits, ultimately, are not marked accurately in the fight between an empty life and a meaningful life. To ascend to a higher level, you must establish these limits in a positive way, to perceive yourself as often as possible from the light of self-shaping.

What can make you more deeply and clearly perceive the complexity of your existence in relation to the dominant aspect of your character is the attempt to save yourself by the meaning that you give to the suffering that you experience after you produce it in the lives of others.

Leadership: Can you assume the destiny of a being who is not let down by any disappointing experience, without falling prey to the weakness of constantly staying in the same direction of all your deeds?

The expert on leadership, John Maxwell, once said something like: "A balancing act gives rise to internal conflicts."

This balancing act indicates that loss of energy in one's own value system, which is manifested by a radical tendency to get away from reality. Sometimes, it is necessary a "shorting" of your internal circuit of values and beliefs; only thus you will be forced to perceive deeper and more clearly the complexity of your existence in relation to the dominant side of your character.

Learn to turn every golden nugget of your existence – all moments full of wisdom and truth – into new rules to facilitate access to excellence. Only thus you will quickly find a substitute for the unacceptable or regress. Or you can aspire to always make ambitious works, without exception, but this involvement in a voyage to absolute, in which to unleash your inner negative side, will not be your path breaker forever.

Dante Alighieri came one day before a sinister door, before which he hesitated. In front of you will also appear such a door before which you will hesitate. It is the "alternation" – from a poorly lit or even dark area, to a bright one. You may fall prey to your own weaknesses if you remain immovable in front of the door, in the dark area. Or you may increase the power of comprehension of the Man inside you if you pass through it, towards the bright area.

Leadership: Can you raise to a higher consciousness the background of a sense of familiarity with the impact of events that take you by surprise without becoming the slave of a parallel self that identifies with the will of the Lord?

Rebuilding one's own inner map – provided by "conscience" as it exists at a specific moment in time, is the basis of one's current decision, which controls his action. The action changes the level of your functional system. And the actual level of the system is the generator that drives the horizon and openness to the positive values of life.

Russian critic Vladimir Vladimirovich Ermilov explained in one of his books one important thing: "The idealization of duality is related to the fact that you cannot conceive the existence of a righteous, open, well-defined, firm character, at the same time endowed with subtle feelings and scruples."

Here is Anton Chigurh. And look at yourself. Can you define your own character? Can you function in contradiction with yourself ? Are you the result of a background inconsistence? Can you be black and white at the same time? Can you hesitate before a sinister door and act rationally beyond it at the same time?

The relevance that you give to the "Man" inside you, and at the same time, to the aesthetics of leadership, is placed in the space where you want to situate yourself, that space of existence of your dominant side. Decide which path you want to follow and do not deviate from it. In the development process, you cannot be two people at the same time without the risk of falling into one extreme or another.

Reflect on how you evolve, so that you convince yourself of the close link between your system of values and the role you assume in the world.

Raising to a higher consciousness the background of a sense of familiarity with the impact of events that take you by surprise is always to remind yourself that the fight you have with yourself, forcing yourself to be strong, is actually the return to a normal life in which you can give up feeling yourself able to surmount the "impossible".

Here Lies The Hand Of God emphasizes the consequences of the regression your register when your work on "steam" and not on "fuel". It is a "low" system of values which, like non-value, has long-term negative repercussions.

Hidden Vision Reveals Its Secrets

On November 09, 2023

The deeper you see, the further you see.

The sea. This space, boundless in its turmoil, a rounded plane of dreams, perceived as an invitation to search for the underwater depth, is mirrored like an impenetrable glass surface by the one who tries to penetrate it. Mastering every access of wave motion by a kind of magic, she surrenders to an effort of volumetric construction so as to capture the mystery of the deep sea.

Obviously, the image of the sea to which I must confess my respectful awe, ottenere un'esperienza di espansione della visione , captivates me as a staging of the beauty of nature. And with my skillful, colorful brush, delicate to the touch, I try to reveal every nuance of the sea and the horizon, in a way that touches my soul and transposes me into a world of art, beauty and contemplation .

Thus, in his work, the artist manages to capture the essence of this natural force and transform it into a fascinating and profound artistic expression. He introduces into the scene the immense perspective of a renaissance painting, abstract type, in which the image is revealed as a vast and endless canvas, an infinite canvas of shades and moods, rising in a harmonious dance between colors and shapes, bringing foreground the beauty of the sea and the coastline in a way full of artistic sensibility.

Leadership: Can you become the subject of an image that centers almost exclusively around an abstract concept so that you detach yourself from the tangible?

Pursuing the same fascination for the mystery and splendor of the deep sea as presented in Jules Verne's 20,000 Leagues Under the Sea, I will transform myself into the subject of the painting, a subject that combines elements of nature with my inner essence, thus creating a unique and personal work of art, meant to reflect my perception of the world and the beauty that surrounds me.

"With the flashlight in hand, I went to explore the depths of the ocean, and what I discovered there was like a real underwater painting. Fishes of various shapes and colors were swimming around me like living paintings. Moreover, in the moments of quiet underwater, I had the opportunity to meditate on the beauty of this underwater world. Watching the sea creatures in slow motion, I felt time slow down, how I began to connect with the rhythms of nature. Also, in one of the underwater experiences, I came across a stunningly beautiful coral reef with vibrant colors and intricate shapes. I stood next to it, meditating on the natural beauty and complexity of this dark, yet vibrant, invigorating life."

Through the power of associating the perception of beauty, Jules Verne revealed to me the underwater depths as a kind of inexhaustible source of artistic inspiration, an Idemicorale Sulhabatto , a kind of existence transposed on the plane of eternity. With eyes touching what cannot be seen ordinarily, he showed me a corner of the world full of mystery and splendor. These depths hold secrets and treasures, and through the art and images I create, shared with fierce elan, I can open a window to an underwater universe that invites me to always explore, dream, and contemplate the hidden beauty of a hidden, unseen world than by the eye that contemplates its secret.

Rightfully so, I share the same idea expressed by the author of the book "Painting as prayer".

After all, art is the ability to move man in the depths of his being, to directly provoke an experience and a creative response, difficult to express in words.

Leadership: By combining the elements of nature with your inner essence, can you create a unique work of art that reflects your perception of a hidden, unseen world?

I feel as if the painter in me has found its limitless potential in an environment unexplored by other entities, an environment where I can explore and express my moods in a unique and captivating way. The underwater depths represent a vast and uncharted territory, and in every corner of this underwater universe, I always find new sources of inspiration and artistic development. It is as if I am on a never-ending journey, an inner search for the meaning assigned to life, where I can explore the infinite artistic potential and connect with the hidden, silent, unseen essence of my being.

It is. An unseen world, like the depth of the sea, is an imaginary panorama created by an artist who penetrates it with his soul, focusing on the fusion between shadow and spectacularity.

Every encounter with sea creatures and underwater landscapes becomes a moving painting, and moments of quiet underwater become an opportunity to meditate on the richness of nature and our connection to it. Only through the power of associating the art of beautiful perception, in accordance with the sphere of a hidden horizon, can I open a window to the infinite capacity to understand and appreciate the beauty around me.

One thing is certain. The masses balance through a dance while the volumes compensate through a play of subtle layers of air that thus acquire a mysterious breath. In addition, the sea holds an area illuminated by the glow of marine organisms, a kind of story, but also an area of darkness in such a way that by overlapping these planes, I can create a painting in which light and shadow harmoniously merge, thus revealing the depth and complexity of the underwater landscape. Therefore, I will capture this subtle interplay between light and dark of the sea, bringing to life a fascinating representation of the contrasts and beauty that characterize the underwater world.

The place where art is born is determined by the representation of images of a world that hides darkness and light in every corner untouched by the colored brushes of life's experiences.

And the place where leadership is born is determined by the fusion between what you are when you construct the image of a separate world, and what you are when the image becomes a snapshot of your inner reality.

Hidden Vision reveals its Secrets through the self of an artist who, in moments of creation, becomes a bridge to the mysterious and fascinating worlds hidden beyond ordinary appearances. That's the way things are. Through my art, I try to explore these hidden secrets and translate them into works capable of revealing my depth and wisdom, giving viewers a new and exciting insight into my inner world.

In fact, the hidden vision resembles introducing the artist into a kind of labyrinth of thoughts and perceptions, in which he must explore and reveal the hidden secrets and beauties of the world, traversing unsuspected paths and finding new perspectives designed to inspire, to convey that depth and complexity that only art can reveal.

His Majesty Eisenstein Retains His Glory

Try to make sense of a creative experience full of external "views" before you push your limits.

Russian director Sergei Eisenstein, who has been offered specially chosen subjects so that he will have to refuse them, is now vehemently attacked for not making any films for a long time.

However, the great director's dissatisfactions continue. Further invited to the celebration of the 15th anniversary of the existence of Soviet cinema, Eisenstein receives a lower distinction than his colleagues, who are awarded higher orders and titles. Among them were Podovkin, Dovjenko, his former students, the Vasiliev brothers, or even his former assistant Alexandrov.

The next day, as chairman of the conference, he delivered a closing speech. Responds weighted to attacks. He pledges to resume creative work. In a few years he will remember with irony the gray atmosphere... in the years after 1930, which tried to embrace everyone, standardizing creation. Obviously, therefore, his present conformist submission is not real. No one knows – and shouldn't have known – what's happening in his soul. Unperturbed sphinx, His Majesty Eisenstein retains his glory.

Leadership: Can you establish a correspondence between interiority and subjectivity, building a solid and beneficial image of the composition of a work of art that moves the world with the plasticity of a feeling of total peace?

In the end we understood that all we perceive as important is just the illusion of a momentary victory, it is that experience of a reality that transcends what is transient and that moves only what is not seen, it is the x-ray of a normality established by the others. And, I also believe that we will never be able to reach our full potential if we allow everything we perceive to be important to depend on the approval and reactions of others, especially if we are aware of the need for unconditional freedom of expression.

In this way we must emphasize the need for a correspondence between art and the spirit of a "master" type morality, not that of a slave, which invents new forms of thinking, outlining the nature of a strong beginning in terms of distinguishing between what is right and what is unjust, between what is transient and what is definitive. It is in the name of such morality that we will have to reject the feeling of possible guilt if the opinion of others does not coincide with the vision we want to expand in the world.

When you are attacked on all sides by harsh criticism and fine irony, it is good to weigh our answers and to build an imperturbable Sphinx position, letting others see for themselves that they are unjust in their assessments. This is where the correspondence between interiority and subjectivity comes into play.

Interiority is an inherent dimension of creation and creativity that cannot be silenced, a perfect combination of finesse and strength. And subjectivity is the potential to produce a transformation at the level of what you deliver in a way that your thinking, the wonderful gift of your creation, will take the audience by surprise.

Beloved is one who has had the courage to submit to the rigors of an intellect that refuses any conversion to an external truth, to external steadfastness or immutability.

An authentic director works in the spirit of a new vision of the world, from a longing for the unconditional certainty of an accuracy in the interpretation of reality, knowing himself apt to make a good difference between what is revealed as real, powerful, real and significant, and which lacks these qualities.

Oftentimes the director experiences the limit of interpreting a subject of life in his art, acting as a filter to eliminate external contrasts and prolong his inner world, but without limiting the perception of the surrounding reality.

Moreover, a director has the ability to define himself as a character characterized by the plasticity of a feeling of total peace when he manages to vibrate, through his creation, the phenomenon called resonance: between what is highlighted by the image and what it is believed.

A director knows that his Ego's feelings are reactions to the ordinary accidents of life, purified by the vital purposes of a demonstration of truthfulness, so he is not touched by the remorse of a vein he cannot compensate or atone for ignorance of reality.

The most chosen knowledge coincides with that imperturbable peace of mind sought by men who are willing to understand the fact that everything exists in reality, and which can be transposed into a work of art, must not submit to the rigors of the critical spirit born of the consciousness of a limit that must not be exceeded.

As someone said on a website: "I understand that every person I meet is there because he has a role and a message for me, and whether it breaks my heart or causes me the greatest joy, I have to thank him equally."

His Majesty Eisenstein Retains His Glory knowing that everything that comes from the outside cannot be passed on to his inner world. Such a director remains devoted to the truth and its channeling within himself, to himself, but he does not dispute the intervention of external forces of thought.

Hocus Pocus Preparatus

On April 19, 2018

A creator of worlds knows to systematize his knowledge, correlating various attributes of art in order to determine new meanings in the spiritual plane.

From my point of view, attachment can be a great force, an expression of an acceptance of participation in a new model of building reality, as many states of soul vary in consciousness, so that the hue that they give to certain convictions or deductions from the space of thinking seems more vivid. The first impact with attachment is due to a gifted being, and it is an initiation process set up in a single myth: the myth of a straight led from nothingness to a rich significance, preferably one that pleases my taste and temper as an impulsive artist who has produced a tremendous movement in the field of leadership.

Small, insignificant pains can become unbearable if we focus our attention on them, and not on the fruits that we extract from our attachment to the outline of sustained work and vigilance over the possible challenges of consolidating certain concepts and arguments from the ever-enigmatic equation of reality-fiction. I know I had to endure many deviations from the laws of endless joy, insecurity, the suspect, irrational surprise, to penetrate the secret of the chalice that is believed to give immortality.

Attachment, a tremble ready to wreak at any time in a smile capable of complementing the affection for nature, between the disciple and the master, between spirituality and science, is an attempt to support the development of art through the experience of correlating ideas, theories, disparate events in coherent paintings, of a revelatory realism. The accidental of life, fully identifying its own empirical consistency, conditioned on all sides, gains a consciousness of artistry rising above temporary finality, to the extent that I manage to live in the space of a logic that the instincts configure.

A creator of the world knows to systematize his knowledge by correlating various attributes of art in order to determine new meanings in the spiritual plane only if he succeeds in diverting his attention from his great discoveries resulting from the direct exploration of reality.

My emotions are in organic connection with the particular modification of the perception of the objective world and the identification of the self with the universe, hoping that the associations established by experience gain the status of a "protected area", a secret that helped me out of anonymity despite the limitations imposed upon me by the living art of the oppressive present.

Leadership: Does the work you have devoted years of effort to, until it reaches its definitive shape, mirror a painting from an event in your life that could have happened because you were at a place where someone always waited for you?

Behold, in short, the story of my becoming as an artist, in the desire to share with the public the context in which I experienced the first revelation: the existence of a transcendent, supreme, mysterious force dictating the destiny of a creator of worlds with a high level of contact with the nature of the Creator – and then, finally, the second revelation: the end of the road and the attainment of the equivalence of form with that of the Creator.

The Master urged his disciple: "Look at this tree and try to discover something new about it each and every day."

The apprentice spent 11 years looking at that tree, writing 10 hours a day about it, striving to find something new to share. Mistakes, searches, successive corrections. But he who endures to the end will be saved.

Then he became a magician. Then a diligent alchemist. Then a learned scholar. Then a living legend. And then, God's equal, seen from the perspective of a forger of parallel universes.

Someone expected me to meet him in a certain place, all the time. First was the master, the spiritual connection with someone with whom I was compatible in character and qualities. Then was the tree, the riches that want to grow from the earth, the spirit that contains a kernel of divinity that God has given to every man and through which he can manifest his creative power.

The tree symbolizes the road to the unknown, equal to an escape from the land to the heights, which is the obsession of a living buried in a universe colored with that special green that gives the painting of a painter an intense, vibrant energy impression. Seen from the angle of intimate communication with an erudite, the tree probes the depth specific to a metaphysical spirituality, the place of growth of a being becoming as an image of an eternal dream.

It contributes to the formation of a new consciousness whose series of representations is only a detail of a work that presents a gathering of observations and conclusions, or a manifestation of subjectivity in a landscape beyond any imagination.

Leadership: Can you exist eternally in a realm that speaks of the depths of being, expressing your part of the unknown in an image that feeds an impulse of total devotion to things holy?

The image that feeds an impulse of total devotion to the sacred uses a symbol of the confrontation of human time with cosmic time, a shadowy slope of recollection and descent into the primordial intimacy of the being of the double curvature of infinity. Thus, the tree with its angular deformations, aggravated by the twisting vibrations of the branches, ensures a solution from the collision of ideas, as well as a teaching from the collision of the associations between them, expressing the general character of some truths of faith.

My attachment to "art for art" was the crowning of an incredible spiritual journey, in which I truly understood the Bible saying: "He who endures to the end will be saved." That is, only who is able to sacrifice everything and deepen himself into the fabulous world of things that make you think will be able to gain his perfection. There is no other way. And it is such a small distance from perfection to glory.

The attachment to the artistic creation that enlivens the soul, in accomplishing my perfection and thus in achieving the ultimate goal of my earthly life, concerned two separate entities in which there was a relationship: the eye and the word, the perception and the optimal action, through an uncertain line, imperfect, that has been set up as the thread of thought that patiently alchemies the faith and the idea of "light" in chromatic tones of character and color.

The infinite attained by the conquest of perfection was subtly expressed by Jesus Christ: "Leave it all and follow Me, that is how you will live, you will have a new and eternal life. I am Resurrection and Life."

The tree is infinite. Traveling through the twists of its branches every mysterious path, at the level of the cerebral vessels, you begin to feel a certain excitement like when you are in a difficult life situation that makes you act. Thinking explodes when faced with a figurative fragment when it is likened to a tree branch, with a portrait, or an escape from land to heights.

A real connection to that unbeatable power that governs the universe refers to accepting a new reality from a position of sincere curiosity in seeing who or what is giving wings to a new certainty about the existence of God by configuring a symbol of infinity.

Hocus Pocus Preparatus is the formula of the beginning of magic designed to bring about a greater rapprochement between different notions, a spiritual practice manifested in full accord with a chromaticity of moods mingled between prophetic idealism and prophetic vision that explodes into a new aesthetic expression that can create the basis for an organic understanding of the literary or artistic work.

At the base of magic, the symbolic embellishment of a tree, as the first way of representing a universe oriented to a few cardinal points in which time is defined in relation to an arbitrary origin, must take place.

Hocus Pocus

On September 28, 2010

Quality leadership seems a magical phenomenon that occurs without realizing it.

The magician has appeared on stage pulling after him in the semi-darkness that is created, a large wooden chest, closed with five sturdy locks which, judging by how he was heaving it must have been extremely difficult. He carefully unlocked the locks, and then slowly opened the chest lid. The way he was moving was and funny and scary at the same time. It would seem he will take out from that chest who knows what supernatural power, closed there as death itself, and finally released after thousands of years. I felt like the breath of a scary monster has been awakened to life.

I don't know why the mysterious and ineffable feeling that we were deliberately induced with an exemplary warehouse dexterity, made the scene look like a place haunted by evil spirits, a place of unnatural and disorder, subject to all evil. The hall was engulfed in a deep silence, and us, the audience, were all embraced by a mysterious emotion, an inexplicable fear combined with a strong desire to explore and to know the truth of what is hiding in that chest.

But nothing that I imagined or other spectators did not happen. The magician took out a lot of things from the chest, all sorts of ordinary things: a hat, a cane, a baguette, some rings, a soccer ball, a tennis racket, a candle, a cup of coffee and an empty glass and an old book. He easily put them aside on the desk special prepared before, and then started the performance. Two hours full of tension and anxiety, of dynamics and good mood were followed. I'll never forget that wonderful magic show.

Leadership: Can you create a expectation that the content of a secret satisfies, but at the same time undermines precisely the very criterion of analysis of the secret?

But here's an interesting question: what happened to that big wooden chest?

At the beginning of the show the magician came on stage carrying a large wooden chest from which he extracted many objects. He left it there, in the right of the table on which he placed the extracted objects. He did not eliminate it in some form and absolutely no one climbed on stage to take it or move it from that place. But at the end of the show was gone. And the magician has left the scene, ignoring the existence of any chest.

Here's what I mean: you see something like a large wooden chest, you see, feel and know for sure it is there, right in your face. But in the next moment is not. The truth is in front of your eyes, but it is not the truth that you know or expect it. But is the truth that someone forced you to perceive it, and which you want or do not want you to have to accept it.

A magician designs and builds excellent scenarios of magic. Everything is prepared meticulously in his show until the last details, from installation until achieving effects. You never know if what is doing a magician it is true or not, if it is an illusion or reality itself. It may be true what he says and what he does, but you do not know it.

For a magician, magic is like a game, a warning. You cannot distinguish reality from illusion because he does not want you to know the truth. You should not find anything unusual in all this, but to look messed to the place he shows you, as finally be completely surprised.

Leadership: Does the impact of the content of the secret on the finality of your own revelations depends on the suitability of such a decision to the specificity of a certain dominance?

The dominance that needs to be analyzed in the moments of doubt that the phenomenology of secrecy causes, is characterized by the inequality between what you transmit and what you are trying to capture in the chapter concerning originality. When looking at the set of roles and games made with great skill to induce a change in the reality of the spectators, we discover that the perceptual mechanisms separate the object from space, that is, the shape from the background, extracting the objective message on the principle of empty-full.

This means that what you present has value as long as there is an endless repetition of a fragment of a small piece of the puzzle that the viewers are struggling to solve.

To give value to your leadership you have to catch the others, to lead them out of the normal, to conquer them, to charm them in the true sense of the word. For this you have to use the same method that uses an accomplished magician in his magic show. How do you add more value to your leadership?

The people you lead and that follows your "play" with a big attention must remain dumb with amazement and wonder: "Wow, how did you do that?" And also, must remain mute of admiration and wonder in front of your performance: "Bravo ! Excellent ! Congratulations ! " But to win "the show" your need to create that magical perfect atmosphere, to guarantee your 100% of success.

Leadership is a seemingly magical process that installs automatically, without people realizing it: "Hocus Pocus". Just when people are not waiting, exactly when they are not expecting, then the magic appears. And a quality leadership means to achieve the point where you can change people's beliefs and emotions and to drive them without them realizing what really happens.

Yes, leadership is a process of manipulation, with magical powers. But it is a process in which people notifies your true talent only at the end of "the show" when they realize the miracle that happened. It is a process where you as a leader must make things work when people do not expect them to go for good, to capture them with ideas, proposals and especially with your ingenious handling.

Leadership: Have you reached the level where you constantly live within your means of magic?

Why would it be important that the magician acknowledges the condition of his leadership's existence through the methods of manipulation? When such a man will reach the consciousness of a higher dimension of being, so a more mature understanding of his creation, gaining full confidence in his art, those around him will came to be puppets. Leadership, dilated by a very special exegesis, risks being turned upside down by the fake, by a less natural logic, above people's understanding.

The essence of leadership could be achieved if we accept the reasonable conception according to which true impulse should be accepted unconditionally. But so, in his work, the magician will spoil leadership of his current and unanimously accepted meaning, so liberally spreading a new meaning, which broadens only the truths within his own universe of meaning.

The ideal of being another "sun", always carrying in your bag an illusion that will make others a safe target, as well as other brilliant changes of intrigues, in order to create a performance effect, will remove little by little the leader from his path. He will become someone else, in one form or another, ready to find fulfillment in routine – constantly living within his means of magic.

Seeking various attempts to explain the meaning of leadership in the practices of great magicians of our time, but also in their effect, the idea of man's and life's meaning can be born. As someone stated, brilliant minds are just an expression, a representative of humanity.

So, without criticizing an authority assuming full responsibility from the very first jump for the satisfaction and performance of dividing illusions that it governs, rightly earning an undeniable glory, we must try however to make a step forward, towards performance, and admire the idea of "secret", that can make the science of management compelling and challenging.

Hocus-Pocus is what you can show to the world in the context of a "disappearance", so that the moment of "appearance" coincides with that meaning of depth the reveals itself to the construction of a new reality, no to the direct observation of a phenomenon or process.

Conclusion: When a leader without creating illusions, find methods, ways and means quite surprisingly to achieve the common goal, opens a new perspective and makes things work for the good of all, then he can be compared to a genuine magician.

How Can Leadership Become Cheaper?

Learn how to manage and how to manifest your identity, fighting as much as possible to keep it unaltered.

The present and future belong to those who accept the absolute beauty of creation. The time of nerds has passed ! And let me tell you why. At the time of our parents, grandparents and great grandparents, there was the form of intellectuals (ex-nerds) who, in the desire to impress a girl or to climb to a higher hierarchical level, used every opportunity to enumerate their wonderful and vast knowledge of everything.

"What a smart boy ! He knows so much ! " Applause, awards. You do not want to be a boss here in the company, wouldn't you rather be a professor? I mean, it's clear you know a lot, you're set. An educated man, a super hero ! It's people like you we need. The rest of the people can dig ditches...

Even today, you can see such a genius launching (as in the Bachelor's degree exam) questions such as: "Do you know who made this painting? Do you know when the first railway in Romania was built? Do you know what that writer was saying in this book? Do you know when Napoleon was born? I mean, do you know... how many libraries I've visited?"

Leadership: Can you accept the fact that you are confronted with the limits of your own importance as to how you relate to the experiences of your life that are being reformulated by a "Vulnerable-Ego" impulse?

But can you figure out what's going on in the soul of this all-knower? Can you figure out how hard his heart beats with joy when he knows something that someone else doesn't? That pride one has because he read, that he can show the world that he is super intelligent, that he has become a teacher, later a dean, a brilliant mind. Takes all the attention, the world around him looks at him as a symbol of excellence. Behold, a true universe of knowledge !

But when it comes to Creation and Discovery, this type of personality is a great ZERO. NIHIL. True science has never heard of him, just as he has never learned the meaning of life behind the theory (memorized with the purpose of dazzling people). This is the parrot syndrome. It means you're great by repeating everything you've heard, all you've learned, but without making any change on a scientific and professional level.

The importance you give yourself is like a painting reproduced by the pleasure of holding a brush in your hand, but not to make a masterpiece. It's a big difference between knowing fully well what it is about and refining yourself into a complex field. In vain you want to look more than you are if you lack the talent to create and if you are not endowed with a special artistic sense. You will never be able to free yourself from the suffering of not having credibility, the suffering of not belonging to an elite of initiates in the field, predestined to be different from the rest of the people.

Something urges you to act, but without having the proper weapons to win the fight with yourself. And when you will come face to face with real artists, you will feel trapped, tested or vulnerable, knowing well that you will not be able to trick anyone by taking a brush in your hand and merely validating existing theories.

Practical results reflect your character, not words. The "Vulnerable-Ego" impulse will never motivate you to create, even if you want to feel special, but it will definitely awaken you to reality: the talent to paint is not the same as memorizing pure theory.

Leadership: Is it really possible to follow a complete shift in direction as to how others perceive you, considering that what you try to impose as normality is actually a behavioral disorder?

Can you recognize the fact that what makes you exceptional is different from what makes someone else exceptional and that you spend your time dealing with things that are not for you? If so, then your behavior deserves more attention. Sometimes, behavior is the sum of experiences capable of putting you fully at the service of an ideal that surpasses you as a possibility of accomplishment.

The great change, the beginning of the 2000s, meaning the end of the old world and the beginning of the new (spiritual) world, coincides with the emergence and continued propagation of the Internet. And the internet accumulates daily more than ten times more information than all the libraries in the world. In Romania alone appear nearly 1.1 million new internet pages every day stemming from blogs, scans, press, etc.

Every second there are five or more discoveries in every field, every second everybody in the world opens the door to a new creation. You can simply no longer endure the bombardment; you do not have time to accumulate too much theoretical knowledge. And practice kills you definitively and surely.

You used to spend hours in a library to find information, and now you can find what information you want on the internet. What do you think the future will look like? You can no longer impress anyone with your vast knowledge, because almost all the information you have is on the Internet. Anyone who needs information knows where to find it without your help. The Internet is the brain, the center of the universe to which anyone in any part of the globe can connect.

The only thing you can be admired for is your creative power to generate new trends in a field, to discover new horizons of development, to be the protagonist of the change of vision on which the foundations of the world are built.

Old and new books are scanned at a fast pace and appear on the Internet. There are countless digital reading platforms like Scribd, Wattpad, Issuu, Slideshare, Yumpu, google books, archive.org, or researchgate.net. It's about QUICKNESS, you just do not have time for a long reading !

The time of the nerds is over. You can no longer impress anyone with your vast knowledge. If anyone wants information, they can find it immediately without your help. Everything from the internet. In vain you read a thousand books. Now and in the future, the only thing that will measure the value of a man will be through his creation and discoveries.

Do you want to go back in the past or adapt to the present and the future?

Leadership: Are you able to assume a practical role in the dynamics of progress by confirming some truths that others do not think about and by configuring those that realities no one suspects?

The empiricists of the twentieth century claimed that a knowledge through pure reason of existence is illusory. As a field matures, people stop being interested in it and migrate to new fields.

You can only bring about a radical change in the way you think, in the way you perceive the world, by assuming a practical role in the dynamics of progress, if you succeed in confirming truths that others do not think of and configure those realities that no one suspects. That means winning ground, imposing your authority on the level of a director and screenwriter.

For example, a reality that no one suspects can be expressed through a painting depicting in living colors the human suffering on the edge of mistrust in itself to the impact of a desire that reason and will refuse. And to confirm a truth that no one thinks means to refer to you as an eternal creation through what your soul feels about the matter that interests other people.

Everything you imagine must be created. And through everything you create, you have to highlight new qualities of reality. This process is a more complex extension of the way to do science, a phase of developing a new leadership interface accessible only to minds inclined to infinity.

Follow the trend of repositioning your way of seeing things – try to catch that line of unanswered questions that can give credibility to a particular world.

The future is a fiction of the Ego that always negotiates its consistency.

Leadership Can Become Cheap through the false identity you are trying to sell to the world in calling for the desire to impress as much as possible, so through the false conception that other people make about your reality.

How Did Cal Rhodes Proceed

On March 21, 2009

Enhance your power of influence by connecting people in the spirit of those principles that match your solid concepts about leadership.

I will come back again to the movie „Uncommon Valor (1983)" as it is very important for you to know this.

Colonel in reserve, Cal Rhodes manages to raise and train a team of commandos for the dangerous mission to recover the prisoners in a camp in Vietnam. Who would have thought that this man, past of the second youth, could have been prosperous in his will?

A skilled leader and a systematic training always yield results. Without doubt, the success of the mission was due to firm's commitment of Cal Rhodes towards his teamwork concept. He knew how to keep cohesive his team, knew how to keep a tight hand on his people, how to unite and approach them in the spirit of the principles that corresponded to its solid concepts about leadership. Some principles that have defined each stage of the development cycle of all their actions throughout the training period, and throughout the mission.

And the number one principle whom Cal had in his mind meant that honesty, loyalty and courage are essential, and they are the basis of effective collaboration among group members.

Leadership: Can the temperament you manifest in the area of action of the "narrow path" indicator mark a compromise between what it means to maximize self-worth and the attitude of underestimating one's own decisions?

Just like the appropriate equipment selection is extremely important for a photographer – just so the choice and implementation of principles based on a certain order, a certain balance to guide and to imprint a certain sense to the process of alignment on the proposed objectives, on the imposed rules, and on their own values, it is of particular importance to you and your leadership.

To lead people, but not consciously and systematically induce in their minds a certain direction to help them fully understand their role within the team and to better integrate into it, is like planting seeds at random: they usually arise where you less expect it, where they should not arise. Remember that the "narrow path" indicator refers to how your strategy for establishing equality between what is happening under your influence and what is happening inside people does not work in practice.

Similarly, it is with conflicts and differences: they usually pop up when you less expect it, right where it is not appropriate, if to people are not shared a vision to reflect your principles, to capture them and to support their interests. A leader has a clear awareness of the value of using his influence. And a leader who underestimates his own decisions is a leader who underestimates his leadership skills, especially his ability to react to the thoughts and feelings of others in spontaneous situations.

Your ability to win people's trust and respect is related to planting more efficient in their minds and souls of those "seeds" of fairness and respect that would arouse their interest, to give them energy, courage and zeal, and to stimulate their desire to involve themselves with more responsibility and effectiveness in supporting the team, depending on your plans and needs.

Maximizing self-worth involves an increase in your level of training, knowledge, know-how, as well as an increase in your degree of involvement in team-building activities that can fulfill the ideal of an equivalence between the greatness of feeling in control and controlling the greatness of being sensitive.

Just As Cal Rhodes Proceeded, so and you should do, if you want your team to function at maximum capacity. Planting in people the fullest understanding of their work and value within the team by the medium of some principles that would pave their paths for a better collaboration, you condition them to become better, more efficient and to get more involved, to help the team to grow and to yield results.

However, if your team members do not sprout the understanding of those crucial issues that define the team, related to certain guiding principles that are based on respect, trust, honor, loyalty - means that your power of influence is small, and the principles on that you have built your leadership have no real power, have no functional value, and have nothing in common with professionalism.

Conclusion: In leadership, it is needed order and discipline, mutual respect and establishing principles of common interest to be respected by all, by the leader and by the members of his team. Of course, the leader always remains the model after that directs all the team. Team success depends on this model.

How Do You Demonstrate Your Performance?

On February 14, 2011

Show your appreciation for your special qualities in order to gain full acceptance from other people.

In the webinar "Convince me that you are alive" I talked about the well-known Romanian actor, Puiu Călinescu. I would like, this time too, to present a moment in his professional life, in order to better highlight the principle I want to express.

The producer of the show "The Professionals", Eugenia Vodă, asked Puiu Călinescu if his pride in his professional work has ever been hurt. He responded in a certain way, recalling another moment in his acting life:

"I had a kidney removed when I was young. That's why I sometimes had kidney attacks even on stage. A seizure was never planned. During one of the seizures on stage, I went to my doctor to get a morphine shot. He took off my pants. Inserted the needle. But just as he was inserting the needle, it was my turn to go on stage. So I immediately pulled my pants over the needle, and I went in with the needle in me... and I danced with that needle in me... That's the job. If you want to do it. If not, let someone else do it.

Leadership: Can you push the limits of your being from the eventuality of the presence of a constant suffering that seems to extend beyond what surely forms you, to a version of self that you did not consider?

The speed with which you act or implement a decision in your professional life is vital to improving your performance, which in turn depends on the "platform" on which you position and develop your skills. If you are looking to excel in your professional life, then you need to be prepared to play your part and take responsibility for the difficult road to performance.

That is, you need to activate your "payment service" – which shows your psychological ability to accept the difficult times and trials you are subjected to and to continue to play your role at high rates. This "payment service" is a way to test the limits of your own professional performance, and at the same time to push the limits of your own being, both physical and mental, to a higher level of professionalism and efficiency.

Yes, you will also have to pay for this "payment service" if you want to receive white balls from those around you. How? By sacrificing and concentrating on the right moments, by your faith, by the strength of your skills and the dedication you show in the service of your leadership, your ideals and your values. Leadership that does not last over time is continually undergoing a process of deterioration, mainly due to the poor performance of that individual who fails to get close to the efficiency record he has to set in order to benefit from the full support of the people.

The man who has gained the strength to truly believe in his accomplishments, and whom I call a performer, is in a continuous process of evaluating efficiency. Often the world does not understand the decisions of such a man, he cannot discern what he is pursuing by his attitudes and by the actions he initiates in the most difficult moments. The world does not understand the cause and consequences of a performer's thinking and emotions. What is certain is that he demonstrates his excellent training in a field, his special qualities, integrating into his role through a "calibration" of sacrifices, by an adequate concentration (physical, mental and emotional), regardless of the position he finds himself in.

Leadership: Can you prove your special qualities by integrating as well as possible into your role, in any situation, without provoking the effect of a revolted feeling?

Do you push the limits of your own being, both physically and mentally, to a higher level of professionalism and efficiency – making sacrifices, accepting compromises in delicate situations? Will you continue on your path to performance when you fail to "drive" excellently?

I ask you, future leader, what is the price you pay for your transformation to a status consistent with your level of aspirations? The Romanian actor, Puiu Călinescu, stepped on stage with a needle in him and danced. He paid the price to maintain a high position, giving his leadership a special shine through his unique ability to deal with his weaknesses, to minimize his pain and discomfort, by showcasing his acting talent and skills in a truly vibrant show.

Building an attitude of awareness of the difficulties and the impact they can have on your mood, so an attitude that keeps you in touch with yourself – is part of the goals of all your guidelines for increasing performance. As a leader you will often feel unbalanced in difficult moments, you will face the tendency to hide your emotions, manifested by a certain duplicity, by a mask, by tailoring a new identity. But in whatever situation you find yourself, you will always have to focus on your most obvious qualities, taking advantage of all the talents you have to play your role flawlessly and succeed.

Have you developed an attitude of awareness of difficulties? How could you define your attitude in difficult times? How will your performance work then? Does your attitude help you make the most of your skills and qualities? How do you test and prove your performance? Do you resort to changing your attitude or do you keep your last strength in a corner, feeding only on hope?

To provoke the effect of a revolted feeling is to interpose a cause conducive to your development in certain situations which might involve a feverish process of consciousness from which emerges, apparently, a new certainty: man cannot feel his action or experience as truly full of sense.

The first thing that is needed in leadership is a small process of conscience to look at the situation with lucidity.

How Do You Demonstrate Your Performance? How did you plan to start your journey towards performance? What actions do you take to excel in your relationship with other people? How much have you developed your ability to accept mistakes or, as the case may be, the shortcomings of your business? How do you test the limits of your professional performance?

How Do You Name What You're Feeling Right Now?

On April 21, 2002

Be who you are, without trusting too much in what you don't know about yourself.

Cosette felt, above all, an indistinct and deep sadness. It seemed to her that her soul had darkened in one day. She didn't recognize him anymore. The white in the souls of young girls resembles snow, it is a mixture of coldness and joy. It melts in the sun of love.

Cosette didn't know what love was. He had never heard that word uttered in its earthly sense. On the profane music books that entered the monastery, the word love had been replaced by jug and porch. The "older ones" were trying to unravel the riddles: "Ah ! How sweet the jug is ! ", Or "The porch knows no mercy ! ". But Cosette had left the monastery too childishly and had not taken much care of the "porch". She didn't know what name to give to what she was feeling now. But not knowing the name of the disease does not mean being less ill.

She loved with even more passion, because she loved without realizing it. She did not know whether it was good or bad, favorable or dangerous, needy or harmful, eternal or transient, allowed or stopped. She loved. She would have wondered if she had been told: "Aren't you sleeping? But it is not allowed ! Aren't you eating? Very bad ! Do you stifle and beat your heart? You must not ! You blush and turn yellow when a certain gentleman dressed in black appears at the end of a certain green alley? That's awful ! "She would not have understood and would have answered: "How can I be guilty of something in which I can do nothing and which I do not understand?"

Leadership: Can the search for an ideal of essentializing the experience of the present moment contribute to the change of your attitude and perception towards life, determining you to look at everything from the point of view of a path that extends beyond the horizon of your expectations?

From the point of view of a strong feeling, the only feeling that has the capacity to transform man into everything that he has never been, is that of alertness. Love is only the effect of a resonance with something outside your Ego, or it can be the effect of the story of the life experience you assume as a redemption of the soul escaped from the danger of a debauched, hopeless life.

Here we can talk about an ideal of essentializing the experience of the present moment, as if we were obliged to find ourselves in a fragile, vulnerable moment, but memorable and full of emotion, from which we can transform our relationship with reality and the world. To live an unforgettable moment, a moment that happens maybe once in a lifetime, which takes us out of the comfort zone is similar to capturing an artist's work: you must learn to be the creation of a Creator that forces you to accept his presence from a different perspective of duration and space.

As for Cosette and her ambivalent state of love and uncertainty, it is due to experiencing a story that she is subconsciously running about a past incident, about something that was (or could have been) and is no more. Her soul longed for something incomprehensible, but which I believe instinct immediately dictated to her: "Be more than a good spectator of your life, start getting involved as an actor."

Be more receptive and attentive to everything that happens, so that your ego does not get stuck in a reality that exceeds your ability to understand its potential.

Perhaps, after all, a man's reaction to the unknown is expressed by the life he assumes as an inescapable identity mark, something that feels like a cloud blocking the sun from being seen. Therefore, the ability of an experience to manifest as an entity of maturity, as a source of power, which in ordinary existence is stimulated only by sensory, intuitive activity, depends on how you look at the world, your peers, the events you go through.

The only way that extends beyond your horizons depends on the ability to find something special in your life that really excites you. After all, personal transformation is not for you, you do not have to perceive better results and assume them as your own cause, intensifying it with new feelings. But it is for the truth in you, for the light in you, for the hero in you, for that part of you that will never let you forget the beautiful memories.

This path is the lucidity with which you look in the mirror and find that you are much more than a mind and a body, you are a soul that can open its own horizons.

How Do You Name What You're Feeling Right Now? I feel my heart beating, and this is called "Déjà vu". It's as if I experienced this feeling a long time ago, when I was a child, and just like then, I feel close to understanding life and the world. Something tells me that I am about to become someone else, a more mature man, who lives and communicates in writing so many lives.

If Cosette is part of me, it is because I've experienced the story she's part of. The story is called: "That's how it once was..."

How Do You Position Yourself For Change?

On January 10, 2009

Learn to ask of yourself much more than before, refusing to refer to the circumstances of the cause that determine you to be someone else.

Sixin told Caotang:"Nature has endowed people with sincerity and goodwill. If you try to force them, they will not last long. A person who has power but is not resilient will be treated with contempt and will be defied by lowly people.

In the same way, truth and falsehood, good and evil, are inherent in nature , and none can be changed. Only people with a balanced nature, who can communicate with the wise, but not only, deserve the name of teacher."(Thomas Cleary – Zen Lessons)

Leadership dictates how things go, to the point where you fail, when evil dominates you more than good can protect you. Only integrity keeps things going the right way, despite countless distractions. And to openly accept the violation of the truth is like moving from one dark room to another, darker one, then to another, and so on until the darkness grows darker, denser, and the light that gives wisdom and strength of character disappears completely from the shackles of your mind.

How do you equip your leadership to make it easier to accept change? Someone on the internet said it well: "The world will continue to mirror what you refuse to accept and transform into yourself, until you reconnect with the denied or unknown parts of your being."

Basically, the circumstances of the cause that determine you to be someone else are given by those relationships between elements that contradict any logic and the rules recognized by honor and common sense. While the benchmarks of circumstances that favor the manifestation of one cause or another are related to your spiritual nature that receives morality (the teaching of life) and the context in which you heal the emotional patterns that keep you stuck or hinder you in your development.

Leadership: Can you name the factor with the greatest impact on the formation of a new self-perception, in the context of a change in the circumstances in which you find yourself and the way in which you respond to everything that is happening around you?

Constant change and adaptation to life's challenges is a process in which the leader has a key role to play. First of all, he must be well anchored in objective reality and must possess those capacities to intuit the future and to evaluate the future consequences of the facts of the present. Accepting change – sometimes a long process – involves increasing the leader's power of influence over people, and also depends on his ability to know people and, why not, even manipulate them.

The high impact factor is your willingness to get involved and take the necessary steps in a certain direction without forcing the speed limits of your discernment. Change cannot be imposed by force, and even if this is apparently possible, it is a change of surface and not of substance. When a leader succeeds in inducing in each person a change in the way he thinks and acts, then his inner desire to change spontaneously arises.

Is the change you are imposing one of surface level or does it have any essence to it? How do you change the way people think and act? Do you share your purpose with them and help them achieve their goal? How do you make them part of your dream? Do you want to do more for them than for you? What is your great quality that is admired by others around you and that allows them to become successful leaders? Do you tell people what it really means to be a leader?

Very important to emphasize here: do people know how much it will cost them to become leaders? If they do not know what awaits them, then they cannot know how much they will engage in those activities in which they themselves perceive themselves as efficient, competent.

Leadership: Can you condition your actions to follow the path of a new, discerning experience based on the balance between what you are trying to "force" and what "endures" for a long time?

Do not force the material to be shaped by your will, rather let your will be shaped by the context, and by the landmark of discernment that you do not want to erase from your records. Sculptors choose the most suitable rocks for their future works, rocks that are far from perfect, but have visible and hidden defects. The master of the sculptor will be able to annihilate the visible defects, but not the hidden ones.

The most skilled leaders also seek to fulfill their mission, modeling the raw material of which the human being is made, ensuring its development through education and the transmission of their own values and standards. Leaders have to model adults with a "baggage" of different but ready-made values, standards and feelings. The mastery of the leader consists in discovering those good "parts", some in their native state, others that appeared during their life, from their soul, after which the process of remodeling and re-education must begin. This is the real "stepping stone" for a leader, because adult education is a difficult task for which you must have the tenacity, availability and appropriate methods.

The leader must be a role model for others. A model of thinking, behavior and action that falls within the unanimously accepted "normal". At the same time, the leader, in turn, generates role models that contribute to the development of a healthy organizational culture.

Leadership: Is your impact on a succession of radical changes superficial or profound, considering when you need to move to an area compatible with the experience of a unitary identity?

Are you ready to take lead? John Maxwell made a point that is worth emphasizing: "If you know who you're looking for and what you're aiming for, you're ready to go. The next steps introduce you to the whole process. It starts with building a relationship with your potential leaders. Starting from that base, you can build a program for their development, you can direct their progress, you can give them the authority to carry out their tasks and you can finally bring them to the stage in which you can let them lead."

And I ask you, future leader: "Are you ready to hand over the baton?" If not, then it most probably means that you have not promoted a thinking and behavior that will help in recognizing your true values. It means, first and foremost, that your impact is a superficial one, and not one of substance.

Remember that leadership begins with the person within you, whose behavior must be easy to accept and understand, meaning consistent, aimed at meeting the needs of individuals or other people, in no way with the position you hold. Leadership always starts with your way of thinking – the only one that helps you move forward on the steep terrain of rapid change, the only one that can attract the approval or contempt, sympathy or dislike of other people.

Can you excel in times of transition? Are you developing in such a way that you become an effective leader, even in difficult times? Do you make your goals achievable? What is the thought pattern that can help you the most in difficult situations? How do you reward your own progress? Could you live with the experience of failure?

The experience of a unitary identity presupposes the consideration of several qualities and virtues which together can produce a change of proportions, but which must not omit the control of consciousness over any external stimulus or factor.

How Do You Position Yourself For Change: through a check-in of the self that will help you distinguish Good from Evil, or by returning to the original condition (of ignorance or false faith)?

Leadership progress marks leadership without changes imposed by the leader, without force, in order to achieve the proposed goals. As the traffic policeman can signal with his arm so that the vehicle may advance, overtake, pass in front or behind them, bypassing either on the left or right side, and pedestrians to cross the road or stop – so too the leader, in order to add value to leadership, must direct behavior, including effort, in order to establish and develop harmonious relationships with all those around him.

How Do You Prove Your Greatness?

On November 11, 2009

Evaluate your personality before conveying your vision, drawing on the model of a consciousness unconquered by the power of the present.

US President John Fitzgerald Kennedy was the man who made unforgettable the day of June 26th. He was visiting Berlin. A crowd of 120,000 Berliners gathered in front of the Schöneberg Rathaus (City Hall) to hear President Kennedy speech. They began gathering in the square long before he was due to arrive, and when he finally appeared on the podium they gave him an ovation of several minutes.

Kennedy started his speech by saying: "Freedom has many difficulties and democracy is not perfect, but we have never had to put a wall up to keep our people in." In an impassioned speech, the President told them West Berlin was a symbol of freedom in a world threatened by the Cold War. In the end, he uttered the following words, which got famous: "All free men, wherever they may live, are citizens of Berlin, and therefore, as a free man, I take pride in the words, 'Ich bin ein Berliner."

Before offering people a direction, you must be objective with yourself. A true leader does not run after new and inadequate ways for transmitting his vision, he does not need to draw attention so pointedly through novelty and originality.

Leadership: Can you get closer to people by regaining your inner strength in their lives, which recommends you as an indispensable condition of overcoming the phase of widening the horizon that you can only comprehend from a certain height?

I admire what comedian Danny Thomas said: "All of us are born for a reason, but all of us don't discover why. Success has nothing to do with what you gain or accomplish for yourself. It's what you do for others." I think the same thing told, indirectly, and John Fitzgerald Kennedy when he addressed to the Berliners. "I am a Berliner" he confessed with a joy of his whole being that those about 120,000 people gathered in front of Schöneberg City Hall received it as a surprising gift. In other words, Kennedy has found his sense - this was to increase the contribution of the Berliners towards him and towards the nation that he was leading.

Therefore, you see, before cultivating sympathy you must broaden the limits of your own horizon. You must see yourself as part of the community; you must help in rebuilding the mentality and values of the others around you. One of the leadership's great wonders is that your inner strength and your retrieval in the lives of people are getting you closer to them. Although, the Americans were not seen well at that time by the Germans, the Berliners have come to perceive Kennedy as their family member with a higher rank, not as an aggressor.

In his speech, John Fitzgerald Kennedy proved that he is up to the task. Basically, he proved that thinking based on accepting the existence of a concrete life experience can lead to much more advantageous decisions and more appropriate to the situation.

1. Are you making appeal to emotions in order to enliven people's existence?

2. Do you inspire positive feelings in those you lead? (remember that all the eyes turn toward you, waiting for your reaction, which function as an emotional guide. By the message that you transmit, you give people a way to interpret the significance of the events, and thus to react emotionally to them.) You must be aware that the way you communicate, your style and your behavior affect the mood of the people around you.

3. Do you succeed or fail in channeling people's emotions in the right direction?

Leadership: Can you appeal to a reality that is always being built and rebuilt at the level of a collective consciousness, so as to highlight the consequences of actions that are difficult to predict?

The man who made the June 26 highlights your commitment in fulfilling the requirements of others: a weak commitment will lead to a poor rallying; a strong commitment leads to a rallying of a large number of followers and supporters.

The way, in which Kennedy has related to the Berliners, resulted in cancellation of any negative evaluation, which could decrease his popularity. This thing is good not to overlook. For just as the balance and the comforting calm of the nature are often shattered by violent disasters (earthquakes, floods, fires, etc.) similarly your leadership potential, which is evaluated precisely by the report that you establish with the others around you, may decrease enormously if the means by which you express your personality, commitment, appreciation for people, does not align with your inner states.

The consequence is to generate a major confusion and to compromise a favorable environment of creating long-term cooperative relationships. Or, in simpler words, people could not accept your vision if you do not manage first to prove that you are endowed with a leadership potential – namely, if you do not manage to decipher all that people need, to positively influence their emotions, by seeking ways to prove by safe and clear ways your true affection.

Prove your greatness, by adjusting your leadership potential according to your ability to understand and control the feelings of others. Make evidence of the fact that the leadership you promote, expresses your own values, otherwise you will not manage to highlight your most relevant and useful skills. Express by the way of your leadership the art of influencing in good your thinking, behavior and the mentality of the others - an art that would be aligned with your inner states, reflecting your ideas, thoughts and feelings. Alternatively, more simply told an art by which to stimulate the continuous and efficient improvement.

Can you prove that the leadership you promote expresses your own values, so that you can highlight your most relevant and useful skills for the future – in the midst of a present that either can't or doesn't want to see the future?

1. Are you fulfilling well your role of an emotional guide? Your affective mood and the tone that you use in relationship with others, what impact has on them?

2. How do you prove your greatness?

3. Are you adjusting your potential depending on your ability to understand and control the feelings of others?

The horizon of a high observatory is given by the power of the leader to give meaning and value to his actions, so that the present experienced will be the mirror in which other people will later recognize themselves as the successors of a long line of forerunners.

You Prove Your Greatness by your commitment to be the "continuous present" of a present in which things move. Or, as the French writer Antoine de Saint-Exupery put it: "To build the future is to build the present; it is the birth of a desire that is valid today."

How Do You Start A World War?

What you see is not always the whole of reality, as your perception is subject to illusions and distortions due to your own biases and limitations.

It's all about Power, money always talks. The more territory you have, the more valuable resources you have access to. Once upon a time, the country that had more gold was stronger, perceived as a kind of Ebecaiffic Udulusha Ikelovski , the sublime of a vibrant and uplifting culture. Once upon a time, it was gold that imparted power, as an artist imparts life and emotion to his canvas. But now, oil is no longer profitable, it has started to run out, resources are changing again, while cars have become electric. And art has become kitsch.

In this unexpected context, territorial expansion is important for the economic benefits brought by tourism, hotels, big chain stores and the technology industry, etc. Technological importance emphasizes a reevaluation of what constitutes wealth and success, rather than detriment. In other words, almost all people prefer to buy an iPhone or travel, compared to the few who invest in gold, along the lines of one truth: " Experiences and technology are the new gold of the modern age."

Leadership: How do the resources at your disposal, perceived as a reward for the view that limits are only illusions, influence the expansion of your worth?

So markets and territories were divided, as maps are divided in the hands of conquerors, but with some strategic delicacy. China expanded more than all, up to Africa, where it seized a lot of territory, guided by the saying "what you get, you get." All this time, mas alla de las expectatimos optimistas , the Hollywood film industry no longer produces money, and the price of oil drops daily. So the American leaders, artists in the art of starting wars, tried to expand their territory to Ukraine, which of course upset the Russians, quite a lot.

The art of war is not art unless it is done with a weapon. With a well-organized offensive, the Russians retaliated drastically and menacingly, like hunters in search of the soul. The art of war must be carried to the end with human sacrifices, washed with the blood of martyrs. We understand them too, don't we? Would you like a greedy investor to come and buy all the houses around you, knowing that sooner or later you will be bought too?

Well, after almost two years of war, America together with Nato and with their cutting-edge technology, understood that they are clearly inferior to the Russians, on any technological diagonal, losing billions of dollars by supplying armaments. All this time, the Russians, together with their Chinese partners, speculated very well on the poorly chosen American strategy, guided by the saying: "It is not the fool who asks, but the fool who gives . " The more money the Americans give from their budget for the defense of Ukraine, the more China gains financially.

Let someone else say that the Russians are poor, or that they have no resources. For now, they have decimated Ukraine, and they don't have much left until it becomes their territory.

Leadership: In what way can an imminent tragedy, as a proof of the inevitability of destiny, reconfigure the main coordinates of your evolution?

Seeing this, the Americans abandon the war with Ukraine, and try another book, another expansion scenario, another dirty game, another war, as if the danger of decay had put them face to face with a last chance.

Best friend, Israel, is a state surrounded by poor Muslims who don't even understand each other, let alone cooperate. If those territories became part of Israel, it would be a nice possibility for America to develop massively. However, the greed of tycoons to grab territories is the spearhead of geopolitical conflicts. The invaders did not take into account the spiritual part, a virtue possessed by a heavenly entity, una necesidad importante y humana : when all the Muslims in the world will unite, and the Arabs will become one state, wanting their land Israel back.

So, from a war between two countries, taking place locally, it spread to several countries, following an apocalyptic scenario. Other countries such as Iran, Turkey, Iraq, etc. will soon retaliate, because these countries will not want to have the Americans as neighbors, who will then buy them as well. Those who accept to be slaves are precisely the Europeans, who, through Nato, have become the puppeteer's glove that fits them perfectly.

So, the war is expanding slowly, without much fanfare, for now. In a few weeks, or a few months, a tragedy will happen. Then everything will change...

Leadership is the virtue that opens up the possibility of controlling a territory, without conquering it by gun or force, but only by a kind of spiritual influence.

In conclusion, an impending tragedy can completely transform the trajectory of a person's destiny, redefining purpose, relationships, and perception of safety. These changes can bring a new perspective on life and pave the way to a deeper and more authentic existence. Here we see three coordinates of human evolution: "the purpose and direction of life, the perception of safety and stability, human relationships and connections".

How do you start a world war? Simple. Through the greed and lack of faith of the people, that is, through the expansion of territories and through the manipulation of resources and geopolitical influences for the purpose of enrichment.

A tragic event such as world war can cause a reassessment of humanity's priorities. Something that seemed insignificant before may seem essential now, and new, perhaps deeper and more meaningful purposes may emerge. People will follow a more altruistic path, devoting themselves to social or spiritual causes.

The sense of security can be deeply shaken. Anyone can become more aware of the fragility of life and circumstances, which can lead to a new level of caution, but also a greater appreciation for moments of peace and joy. This awareness can lead to changes in how the person approaches risks and opportunities.

How Do You Turn A Theodor Dreiser Into An Emile Zola?

Eliminating narrative redundancies in the analysis of inner monologue can facilitate a deeper understanding of the fundamental structures of consciousness.

For the Russian director Sergei Eisenstein, the interest lies precisely in clarifying the crime as a result of social relations and the influences of society on the character Clyde Griffith. Eisenstein's problem is to turn a Theodor Dreiser into an Emile Zola, offering a naturalistic perspective on tragedy. He is fascinated by the game of fatality – an obsessive theme in his work. It is a mechanical, implacable force, which this time takes the form of legal machinery. Justice becomes an inexorable system that grinds Clyde down, crushing him between its wheels and turning against him every element he built to rise and save himself.

Together with Ivor Montagu, Eisenstein begins a huge work of adaptation. It removes the silliness of the novel by reinterpreting certain facts and deepening Clyde's psychological analysis, especially in the boat scene. It invents new situations, shifts the interest of the legal process to electoral issues, changes the trajectory of some characters and completely eliminates others. Moreover, he applies for the first time his ideas about the inner monologue, which becomes an essential cinematic device: the camera penetrates the soul and thought of the character Clyde, revealing the fundamental structures of his consciousness.

Eisenstein is fascinated by the solutions found, declaring: "The form of the inner monologue was born. Even literature is more powerless in this area than film.

Leadership: What impact do social interactions have on your personality and decisions, as each element contributes to a final tragic balance?

In the social analysis of the crime, each element contributes to the fatality of Clyde's fate. Every characteristic of the character is shaped by the social interactions around him, and the end result is a tragic balance imposed by legal mechanisms that act implacably beyond his individual control. Justice, like a complex machine, sets in motion wheels and levers that psychologically crush the individual, forcing him to become a victim of his own ambition.

In Eisenstein, the interest lies in clarifying crime as an inevitable result of social interactions, like the way a complex system works, where every element is shaped by external forces. The fatality that fascinates him becomes an implacable mechanical force, like a jurisprudential machine that grinds Clyde Griffith inexorably, "crushing him under its automatic wheels" and setting in motion levers that turn against him every element he has built to rises.

As I said, together with Ivor Montagu, Eisenstein begins a work of decocking the details, eliminating the redundancies of the novel and deepening the psychological analysis of Clyde. Like an engineer studying the mechanisms of a complex system, Eisenstein restructures the narrative, shifting the center of gravity of the process to social and electoral aspects, applying interior monologue as a cinematic method for the first time. In this way, Eisenstein reveals not only the external circumstances, but also the internal structures that determine the character's destiny.

Visionary leadership involves the narrative reconstruction of reality to reveal deep truths, connecting individual destiny to the social context that shapes it.

How do you turn a Theodor Dreiser into an Emile Zola? Clarifying social connections and enhancing the causal analysis of facts. The essence of Zolist naturalism is to highlight the relationship between the individual and society, and Eisenstein seeks to accentuate the conflict between Clyde and the world around him. For this reason, removing redundancies and deepening the psychology of the characters creates an ambitious cinematic adaptation, enriched by a strong correlation with the social and emotional context of the characters.

How Does One Become Eisenstein?

On February 07, 2014

Transform your leadership into a "Private Open Space" by forming a vision that will facilitate discoveries of great value.

The first vision of the film "The Strike" has created the conditions for artistic discoveries of decisive historical importance, which made Sergei Eisenstein's name echo into eternity. Designing this first vision – that others watched with an indulgently amused smile – meant an essential element of the phenomenon included in the question: how does one become Eisenstein?

*Within the mechanism of the phenomenon coexist both an explosive talent, which breaks existing laws, creating its own, and an intense, lucid thinking of rare acuity. The defining characteristic of this great director is the ardor wisdom shapes. He is the man that builds the bigger picture, so that only afterwards can he move on to finding the various situations in which this picture manifests.

Leadership: What meaning can you give to a creation which is itself the result of a coordinated understanding of complex factors with differing influences of intensity?

You can only obtain a significant victory in the battle with creation, relating yourself to the whole surrounding reality that often becomes a hindrance in the way of ideals, through an expansion of self-consciousness, followed by a fundamental change in the way of approaching the vision and its contents. The latter come to light, according to a certain order of creative forms of expression, only when, having something to say and transmit, you engage in a process of permanent self-improvement.

The significance of a creation is given by the influence it has on the evolution of a field of activity, so that it is considered a true roadmap, but also by the personal signature you attach to it so that it is considered a spirit-filled art, full of complexity and diversity.

It is unclear what brings us close to the secret of creation: the great accordance to the norms of efficiency or the slight deviation from them. But exceeding your own limits, transitioning towards a new phase of work experience, through which alternative practices and knowledge is accumulated, brings new optimizing variables into the great equation of leadership, sustaining the intellectual maturity that allows creation to better integrate itself into the field of personal progress, delimited by various "sufficient" or "insufficient" landmarks.

Leadership: Can you build an overall image, so that you can then go on to find the various situations in which that image is manifested?

Vision is a part of the act of creation, because it makes available to that which we call "the world of the future", new resources of accessing "the original", founding a knowledge independent of any other authority. Activated in the context of a rationality that has the tendency to oppose rules and break them, vision creates the conditions for artistic discoveries of decisive value that can make the name and actions of the artist-leader echo into eternity.

Leadership is not a neutral space for interacting with the process of creation, but rather a "Very Large Open Space" in which you have the opportunity to expose your own convictions, breaking existing rules and laws, relating to the whole reality of labor resources (which often becomes a hindrance in the way of improvement).

The creation to which "leadership" relates to is itself the result of coordinated understanding of a complexity of factors with differing intensity influences, such as discoveries and their consequences. If the findings do not provide the guarantee of a personal and professional image, solid and authentic, in the context of a new set of sustainable development goals, then leadership will be classified as a weak "counter-trend" and won't have a first class meaning in the process of change.

Leadership is the image of a creation that springs from the significance you give to thinking that turns creation into a reflection of your competencies at the highest level.

How Does One Become Eisenstein? refers to the work of creation that the leader puts in, with the fervor that wisdom shapes, towards gaining a rich experience in the field and a good performance under high performance conditions. The leader that constructs a vision for himself, so that only then can move on to finding the various situations in which this vision manifests, is promptly led by the feeling of searching for the launching point of his own scientific thinking.

Put your performances to the test, without practicing a leadership opposed to any forms of excellence.

Have you watched the fourth sequel of "Indiana Jones"? It is an exceptional movie, which I confidently recommend you. A sentence from the movie particularly caught my attention. At a certain point, Indiana Jones and his son accidentally hit a library with their bike and turn over.

Before getting back on the bike and keep driving, a student recognizes Indiana (who was his favorite teacher) and asks him something about a certain cultural model of Hardgrove.

Because he had no time to lose, Indiana Jones briefly replies to the student concerned with school:

- Let Hardgrove... To become a good archaeologist, you must exit the library !

Leadership: Is the decision to not repeat the same meaningless action continued with the presence of a duality between your natural state and your needed nature?

Natural human nature is a continuous improvement through education, through the acceptance of the values of science and of technique, by cultivating the inventive and applicative spirit, through the efficient use of knowledge, by asserting originality, by promoting uniqueness and novelty.

While the forced nature of man has as its constituent the path from the cultivation of one's own person to the root of everything else, to the consumption of knowledge and exploitation of the results of exchanges of experience in a context of evolution.

Everything that you can ignore by knowledge is logically and naturally opposed to quality leadership. Knowledge provides you an important dose of imagination, gives you a performance boost, freedom of thought but, at the same time, it can also restrict your freedom of movement and your initiatives. If knowledge is not used at full capacity – then it is equally unacceptable in leadership as a laptop without a keyboard for an IT operator.

This type of knowledge – inactive, more for design – can lead to a falsification of reality, to a limitation of your practical abilities, which you are not fully aware of or you did not test them. And if you are proud of that static knowledge, just as a martial arts beginner claims to be admired because he educates his mind and will, but who is always more subjective in terms of performance – you might wake up without a support, your success may turn into a long line of deception.

Leadership: Do you shape the evolution of your initiatives, being guided by the conditions necessary for the clairvoyant perception of how to deviate from the "natural course of events"?

You can deviate from the natural course of events only if you cease to immerse yourself in a knowledge that takes place strictly in the blurred elements of dreams or illusions. The clairvoyant perception can draw a true direction of personal affirmation, help you react in a certain way against the tendencies of isolation in a virtual reality, only if you are in the process of identifying and integrating all the information received through the senses, intuition, interpretations of situations.

True knowledge is what you can perceive with the help of senses through what experiences at the limit can offer you.

Knowledge without a moral basis and a practical attitude leads to a formal leadership, so to speak (in any form, from concrete to abstract, from something tangible to something apparent); eventually, it is a matter of responsibility, as it appears as an unrealistic, mediocre leadership, opposed to any form of excellence.

Having a lot of knowledge without properly using it in practice is like shrinking into a cocoon. Only your head remains outside. Your feet, hand and heart are buried, unusable. With eyes closed, you throw yourself into hibernation – a kind of suspended life form, which you know it could extend indefinitely.

Do you have the courage to evaluate your level of excellence, putting in practice your knowledge? Or do you suspend your leadership from the basic function that it needs to fulfill?

Leadership: Refusing to act in virtue of your innate characteristics result in your "surrendering" in the captivity of a mentality that is compatible with the idea of finitude?

Theory is assimilated only by experience. I suggest you to follow Indiana Jones' advice: take action, do not waste any more time poring over books. You will never be able to become a true leader, you will never manage to accomplish great deeds, worthy of people's attention and admiration, if you are not willing to spend a lot of your time on the field. You can learn many things and can assimilate a lot of knowledge from books – but you can get results only by putting them into practice.

Think of any famous achievement accomplished by a single individual or a group of individuals. For example, the pyramid of Cheops. You do not need to research too much to realize that it took more than solid technical knowledge to build this monument for eternity. It was necessary to implement theoretical knowledge, carefully designed plans by experts. Besides, no valuable work would have ever been made if artists had not confined to the acquisition of knowledge.

Leadership is an implementation of ideas, attitudes, abilities and behaviors that turn you into that complex being that can turn the various nuances of a revelation like "you are what makes you great or small" in one whole called: "an integrated knowledge ensemble."

Putting knowledge into practice gives you the best opportunity to turn leadership into a masterpiece, a priceless treasure. But the more ambitious your goals are, the more sustained practice will be needed. Therefore, get involved confidently in the active and essential role that you have in supporting the leadership you practice, if you really want it to evolve. You will manage to achieve your goals only if you are willing to get involved more diligently in the practical work in the field.

About finitude, the French philosopher Jean-Luc Nancy wrote that she gave herself to thinking first of all as a limit. "The limit is the end, the end beyond which there is nothing – nothing, at least from the work or from being at the limit that has been reached. The limit is the end to the extent that it ends, in which it sanctions a conclusion that is also an end and an interruption if nothing comes to justify the occurrence of this end."

A mentality can be compatible with the idea of finitude when it cannot take control of the main competitive advantage: having access to information and knowing how to use the information to enable it to make the necessary adaptations to its evolution.

Do you dare to leave the comfort zone? Napoleon Bonaparte, who spent a long time on the battlefield, said: "It is not enough to know people from the books to study them; you have to live with them."

Napoleon's success was largely due to the implementation of his knowledge acquired and valuable ideas obtained from the books of his time. But studying the books meant for him only the starting point for developing leadership abilities and skills. Because, in order to win a battle, he had to leave the comfort-zone and fight many times in the first line, with the Infantry.

Napoleon could never have won a battle and become a military genius if he had limited himself only to... theory.

Put your performances to the test, without practicing an unrealistic leadership, opposed to any forms of excellence.

How Happy This Doll Must Be

Take a peek into the depths of your being, ensuring the recognition of your own individuality.

The moment little Cosette came out with bucket in hand, so bitter and overwhelmed as she was, she could not resist no casting her eyes towards that wonderful doll, towards that beautiful "lady", as she called it. The poor girl remained speechless. She hadn't seen the doll up close yet. This whole place seemed like a palace to her. The doll was not a doll, it was an apparition. Joy, brilliance, wealth and happiness showed themselves as if from a dream to this unfortunate creature, so deeply immersed in her pathetic and cold misery.

Cosette measured, with the unknowing and sad understanding of childhood, the gulf that separated her from the doll. She told herself the she should be a queen or at least a princess in order to have a "thing" like that. She looked at the beautiful pink dress, at its beautiful smooth hair and said: "How happy this doll must be ! "

She couldn't take her eyes off of that fantastic shop. The more she looked, the more bewildered she was. It seemed as if she was seeing paradise. There were other dolls behind the big one as well, that seemed like fairies and angles to her.

*In her excitement, she forgot about everything, even the chore she had to do. **

Leadership: Can you introduce new "outputs" into your personal experience that can identify your true value, without triggering the pain that corresponds to the representations of an acutely reflexive consciousness?

How can an unsophisticated thing, a fantasy story product devoid of any trace of humanity, standing out only through artificiality, that intensely tests you from the first and up to the last gaze, wandering the meanings that only a pure heart incurs, of authenticity or sincerity, in an irreversible mood, living feeling, determine the value of your own being?

Undoubtedly, here the interest for your own image grows, undistorted by the varied perceptions you have over everything that surrounds you, by obtaining a satisfaction that could confirm certain positive aspects of life. These aspects, in order to win that fast race with yourself in the middle of an existence full of ups and downs, must first place their mark over your progress, favoring self-discovery and the application of new formulas of self-conditioning.

And this reminds us of the feeling experience by little Eva de Chazelay, from Dumas' novel, that when she first gazed upon herself in the mirror, careless up until then of her own person, was seized by a feeling of joy neighboring excitement: "Je suis belle."

Two "outputs" seem to identify the real value of an individual: the possibility of realizing a dream and remembering a painful experience that depends on the total amount of pain suffered. And who sets off the pains corresponding to the representations of an acutely reflexive consciousness, comparing the way of being of the outer world with the non-cognoscibility of the inner world, measures its mental states according to the happenings and the people that appear in your path in unexpected ways.

Leadership: Will your life be constantly running away from what you know you could have once had, anchoring yourself to what you know you've experienced without consequences?

Whatever happens inside of you is always strictly confidential, a kind of absolute law of a sovereign fiction, a monolithic block of some power, where no one can sneak in. Somehow, your world seems to have found is way, filling some empty gaps of your existence. It is self-perception, vibrating at the active command switch, reported at a certain moment to an element of reference, influential and principled, in the light of a dream that concerns you.

In leadership, this means that you found the inner means of activating the program of qualitative assessment, introducing new "outputs" in the personal experience that can identify your true value within the contexts given by the necessity of recognizing your own individuality. These outputs are in fact the resulting indicators that increase the satisfaction for the fact that you succeeded in understanding yourself, in accepting yourself, to have a powerful connection with yourself by means of the image you assume and transmit.

Self-image works as a sieve when it sifts feelings, mixing them with time, giving them an adequate form of expression that gives you the maturity and power of accepting what you are. Or it can act as a defense shield when you turn them into fearsome adversaries. In leadership, joy, brilliance and the wealth of self-discovery are the referees that pick the winner in the great contest of fulfillment.

To anchor yourself to what you know you've experienced without consequences, without daring to get close to the object of your mind, is to limit yourself to what you know you can never receive.

How Happy This Doll Must Be brings forth the contentment and satisfaction resulting from a positive self-evaluation that ascribes you the benefit of that desire to reach a high degree of understanding and acceptance, associated with a high degree of objective certitude. So that the real image of yourself can be consistent with what you are and with what you want to be.

How Important Is Time?

On December 29, 2015

Maintain your safety in the great journey of change by limiting the dominant role of objectives and instances of achieving the potential of excellence.

Filming took place in a devilish haste. Simultaneous filming, with two teams, the unusual extension of the day of shooting was possible only because the director and his close collaborators were doped to withstand the lack of sleep – all of these, as well as a good organization allowed for an intense work pace.

Sergei Eisenstein edited his own film. Wrapped in film, he always controlled the montage effects at the Moviola. At times, he would call out to Esfir Sub and ask for her opinion. He would call her "his hunting dog", because he would ask her to harshly discover the blurred parts of his film. He said that during this time his head was so full of celluloid that the simple mention of the word "film", that began to be over-detested, started to daze him madly. And maybe something from this daze, something from this chaotic whirlwind of kilometers of film slipped into the very composition of the film.

Haste – this time again – doesn't allow for the perfection of the structure of film during montage. The spectrum of this haste will haunt them later on as well. That is why at one point he would ask himself with painful revolt: *"Will there ever come an era in film when the importance of time will be understood?" **

Leadership: Can you take on your implication in a process of the type "one-way" on a narrow entry that contains "prompts", without depending upon the exigencies of an endless exhaustion?

The high concentrations of individual experiences and abilities, subjected to an attempt of determining the foundation of scientific work that can lead to innovation and evolution in the field, eventually through accumulations of effects of montage, indicate the dominant role of objectives and instances of reaching the potential for excellence.

This occurs at the level of a specific way of thinking and perceiving work, the world, and the connection between them. And always places you first in the equation of making decisions with which you fuel your skill of teaching others how to evolve. And as fast as possible. At the same pace as you, with the same emotion, energy, and hope.

Your confidence in the great journey of change is given by the insistencies with which you try to stop time, at the same time also involving the people around you. Insistence is a penetrating search for something that no one knows regarding artistic creation, it is a replacement of one form of expression with another that seems more appropriate when we begin to understand things from the perspective of the benefits of exploiting a limited resource of obtaining results.

The presence of time in interaction with everything you try to achieve sometimes signifies as process of the type "one-way" on a narrow entry that contains prompts. Which compels you to keep certain reserves in interpreting high levels of appearances or inner force. Physical and mental vulnerability is felt along with the increase in temperature of the mix between desire, enthusiasm, disappointment, sadness.

If an entry that contains prompts is planned, meaning if the haste that needs to lead to the completion of the work is installed, you have to save the values of the prompt or to specify certain implicit values. These values can be directed towards man himself, towards the reality experienced through the lens of achievements, passing them through the filters of a value system articulated on moderation and balance.

To assume engagement in a "one-way" process on a narrow entry that contains "prompts" means to capture the essence of a work that calls for you in a "present-day investment" engaging in a set of actions that hide elements of prudence, selectivity and fear of outcome.

How Important Is Time? is the question any man of change who knows what it means to register notable achievements asks himself, and that every achievement means a continuous haste, which at times resembles a race whose favorites are adrenaline and overwork.

I conclude this article with a quote belonging to the famous writer Laura Esquivel: "In life, there are things to which you must only give importance if they change the essential."

Essential in the process of change are not the achievements you obtain in time laboriously and with enthusiasm. The essential is you.

How Is A Memorable Scene In A Movie Designed?

On June 5, 2011

The visual expressions of the film capture reality as a symbolic vision of ideas, where the suggestiveness and depth of the image creates a continuous perception of immediately perceived transformation.

The milk separator is also a mechanical symbol of fertility, and it is in this sense that the memorable scene in which the peasants surround it to watch the first drop of butter appear is designed. And this time, the drop will increase dramatically, so to speak, and streams of white liquid will not just drip from the separator pipe, but will gush forth from symbolic artesian wells.

Eisenstein designs his entire film organized around these symbols, which he opposes to the symbols of backwardness. Thus, the scene of the milk separator is opposed to a sequence preserved from the old form: the desperate religious procession of the peasants to invoke rain during a drought.

Leadership: Can you reconcile the symbols of innovation with those of the past, so that their contrast contributes to building a visual discourse with social impact?

The lines and streams of white liquid, gushing from the milk separator in the film's memorable scene, recall the principles of advanced irrigation systems, where a drop quickly turns into a generous flow. As in the distribution of water to maintain fertility, Eisenstein uses the mechanical symbol of the separator to convey the idea of fertility among the peasants through the dramatically widening white jets.

His entire film is organized as a symbolic irrigation system, where the flow of milk provides a stark contrast to the drought and despair of the peasants' religious procession calling for rain. Modern fertility symbols are thus juxtaposed with traditional symbols, and milk gerbils become visual expressions of a new beginning, a source of "living water" that suggests a rebirth in the midst of drought.

Like a complex hydraulic system, symbols of fertility manifest through the dramatic pressure of the moment when the first drop of liquid makes its appearance. The Separator, this memorable transformation control device, distributes symbolic energy like a network of artesian pipes. In this scene, the pipe doesn't just drip, it projects white gerbs under pressure, maximizing the visual impact of the moment. Opposed to the desperate religious processions of times of drought, this modern symbol system conceives of fertility in a more effective way. The dramatic gush of butter thus becomes a controlled manifestation of abundance, in contrast to the primitive invocation of rain. The entire film is organized around these symbolic devices that transform ancient rituals into expressions of progress, such as the transition from primitive irrigation to modern water distribution systems.

An exceptional cinematic creation is organized as a symbolic irrigation system, where the suggestiveness and subtlety of contrast lead to an inner revelation and a vibrant image of the rebirth of the artistic spirit.

How is a memorable scene in a movie designed? Well, it is designed as a focal point of the narrative, a moment that remains imprinted in the viewer's mind. It is a sequence that, through a combination of visual, sound and narrative elements, manages to excite, captivate and convey a powerful message.

Elements that contribute to creating a memorable scene include:

Leadership harnesses the tension between traditional ritual and technical innovation in relation to the transformative potential of the present moment.

How is a memorable scene in a movie designed? By combining suggestive symbols with captivating visual direction, capable of evoking deep emotions and conveying complex ideas through powerful images. Thus, the artistic message can be clearly transmitted, beyond the barrier of language or culture, through a universal visual language that deeply resonates with the viewer.

How Leadership Is Delivered

On December 13, 2008

Leadership is first an internal matter to be conquered, then it is an external matter to be overcome.

In the famous book "From Idea to Money", writer Napoleon Hill tells the story of a miner who gave up prospecting after months of hard work, when he had reached only one meter of the gold vein. Even though gold was discovered by someone else, man learned that life lesson. And he hasn't given up since. He applied the lesson for the rest of his life, eventually achieving success.

I remain convinced that leadership is first and foremost an inner matter to be conquered, a matter of spiritual order accessible to man who succeeds, in the light of his own convictions and in the spirit of his own values, in overcoming himself. So, only through a difficult process of self-knowledge and personal development will you be able to transcend the limitations of your own being for the benefit of others, and thus gain access to a high level of spirituality.

More than that. The science of leadership must shine through the application of new ideas, remaining deeply rooted in a model of development focused on the ego of each, without "tangling" in the difficulty of distinguishing between truth and falsehood. The quality and health of your leadership depends primarily on the structure and quality of your being.

If the science of leadership does not produce obvious progress, based on a combination of purpose and feelings, on a number of other values with greater influence on people: such as harmony, purity, sincerity, empathy, common sense, love of life, team spirit, or those based on ethical principles and virtues such as truth, solidarity, cooperation, respect for human rights, then the leader will not be able to rise to the level of requirements and demands to which people and circumstances subject him.

Leadership: Does your evolution translate into an enrichment that is close to the effect of overcoming one's own limits, or a self-discovery that is afraid to admit that it is "outstanding" in terms of life experiences?

The value system you have created gives your leadership a special aura. Convince people to accompany you in your quest of self-understand and have a good relationship with each of them. Remember that what you receive from people depends on how much you have invested in them. And remember that leadership does not apply when things remain the same, but only when you become effective in giving the best of yourself to others around you. Do people accompany you in your search for the self?

Through your personality, which is directly related to your ego, your way of being, acting, and thinking, you need to convince other people that you can initiate change and facilitate their own development. And for that you have to adjust your management science so as to facilitate the process of promoting your highest values. Achieving this is an art that, if you master it, if you get to control it and make it work to your advantage, then no doubt your path to excellence will be easier, and at the same time full of progress.

Do you have difficulty relating to the circumstances of a case? Does the value system you have created give your leadership a special aura? Do you feel that you are living in vain, or have you put your whole life in the service of people? Do you tend to be more independent?

Leadership: Can you represent the model of your own destiny in the coordinates of a vision that takes into account the "power" factor, so that the end result can be verified, validated and applied through a fight against your weaker self?

Leadership comes into play when people follow you for what you are, for what you represent, for the way you resonate with them, through the simplest and most pragmatic approach, very focused and responsible. The fundamental, just and appropriate criterion by which people analyze your "art" is also an indication of your own inner world, of your strengths, or on the contrary, of your weaknesses.

In order for your relationship with people to develop harmoniously, to evolve in a beneficial way, in a positive direction, first make sure that you represent something for them.

"People follow you because you know how to relate to them" – this is the predominant criterion by which you qualify as a teammate, endowed with a functioning emotional intelligence, or on the contrary, you may be disqualified and forced to stay "behind" if do not devote yourself entirely to achieving and maintaining a high level of professional and emotional maturity.

As a leader, you are primarily addressing people's feelings. If your leadership is baseless, meaning you don't have the emotional power to provide that motivation, that need for people to support you, to show solidarity with you – it means that you yourself have failed to inspire those feelings and emotions that give joy, fulfillment, inner strength – something that does not allow them to develop on any level.

Leadership: Is one of the challenges of your self to place yourself above the circumstances that characterize the experiencing of life as the vibration of a moment of wandering, or the experiencing of life as a result of a time in which the elected are sealed?

People don't skip any step of examination. A leader who does not deepen every level of leadership, who fails to get people to align with his beliefs and actions – will be in a situation similar to that of a patient going to the doctor with abdominal pain, and the doctor takes them to get a CT scan, completely skipping the physical exam. When it comes to leadership, people are above all doctors, they don't skip any step of examination: first they evaluate you, give you time to prove your qualities, and only then decide whether or not to accept you at their head.

Only the leader who went on to finding a common denominator with the people – through which to prove his greatness, his qualities, through which to perfect his "art", only that leader who is familiar with the laws of leadership and knows how to apply them for the benefit of others. So only those who understand the concept of "sharing" will be able to easily prove their effectiveness in the area of influence they manage.

Do you meet the eligibility criteria imposed by the "funding entity"?

On the other hand, that leader who will not meet the eligibility criteria imposed by the "funding entity" (the people), that leader who does not have the strength and desire to penetrate deep into their soul, to reach the fibers that make up their entire emotional structure and generate that fine, intense impulse that will provoke them, that will energize them, that will make them want to be better – that will never be able to add immense significance to leadership.

The value system created by each of us is different. The highest step of the scale of some values may be well below the scale of the values of others or exceed the scale of their values. In general, progress requires the "addition" of new steps to any scale of values. Your role, as a leader, is also to contribute to raising the scale of everyone's values according to the requirements of the present and the future. If you are able to persuade people to comply with this goal, then you can be happy even if you are not materially rewarded for this work of Sisyphus, but you will be able to achieve your common goal.

Leadership is seen in the way you find your inner resources to reveal a life lesson:
"Failure enriches you. Mistakes are part of the debt we have to pay for a life lived to its fullest."

Leadership Can Be Delivered by increasing the ease with which you can carry the burden of life. In this regard, it is good to take into account the words of American athlete Allyson Felix:

"The most important lesson we need to learn is to rely on God in every circumstance. We often go through various trials, and following God's plan seems pointless. But God is always watching over us and will never abandon us."

How Leadership Is Manifested

On April 12, 2008

The way you relate to the hypostases in which you experience the "Road to Virtue" mirrors the way you achieve the connection between what you undertake as a duty and what you undertake in a situation of ignorance.

It so happened that a friend, owner of a glass factory in Antwerp, who was very fat, asked Butler to get rid of the extra pounds. The Irishman gave her a small piece of stone, advising him to touch it with his tongue every morning. After three weeks, I saw the Irishman suddenly lose weight, but his health was not affected. In the meantime, I sent someone to Vilvoorde, asking Butler to send me a cure for a poison given to me by a secret enemy. I was in terrible pain – my wrists ached terribly and my pulse was intermittent, which made me faint very often and lose my strength before my very eyes.

Butler, who was still in prison, told the servant I had sent to bring him a small bottle of olive oil. After touching the oil with the stone he had used before, he sent the bottle to me, instructing the servant to anoint me with a single drop of oil where it hurt, or everywhere, if the pain is so great. I did as he said, but I didn't feel any improvement. Meanwhile, my enemy was on his deathbed and asked to be forgiven for the sin he had committed against me. That's how I found out I had been poisoned, which I suspected. I then took care to eliminate the venom, which, with God's help, I succeeded.

Leadership means recognizing that true healing power comes from addressing hidden causes, harmonizing external actions with the internal needs of the being.

After later witnessing the treatment of several women, I asked Butler why they were healed so easily, while I (although I was on the verge of death and tormented by terrible pain) did not feel any improvement?

He then asked me what disease I was suffering from and understood that the poison had caused me all the trouble. He told me that the oil had to be taken internally or the stone had to be touched with the tongue, because the source of the disease was inside. He also noticed that the oil had not been well made, because the healing properties were only on the surface, the stone being only slightly touched by the liquid. The same man healed a nun, who for eighteen years had her right hand swollen, unable to move it, with very stiff fingers. Healing came by simply touching the stone with the tongue.

*Many people witnessed these miracles, and they suspected that there was some hidden spell or some evil craft. Since ancient times, ordinary people have the stupid habit of considering that anything they do not understand due to their ignorance is the work of an evil spirit.

Leadership: Can you justify your conception of understanding by discovering the significance of value and integrating information into contexts applicable to their "feedback" effects, and therefore justify yourself about what makes you feel superior?

It is enough to see what happens when we try to explain a complex reality only from the perspective of an experience of knowledge gained through research and innovation – this is as if we were trying to render the ineffable divine vision. In this case, the world will turn its back on us when we try to help it because it believes more in miracles and coincidences than in an intellectual capital facilitated and intensely supported by the power of assimilating knowledge and new directions of thought.

When the doctor prescribes a drug, in fact he appeals to his emotional side, he frequently appeals to the flow of consciousness, he appeals to the subject of knowledge, to the practices of non-abusive use of inside information. His long experience, his ability to deepen his self-knowledge in a unique environment conducive to innovation and change, becomes profitable when he finds a reason to experience the "Road to Virtue" – which begins with the faith to find understanding and humanity in every support he gives to the world.

Leadership achieves a higher knowing when you are able to be at peace with uncertainty and confidently navigate the complexity of decisions.

Let us say that the doctor is a reminder of the divine miracles translated into a higher knowledge which, culminating in supersensible perceptions, could replace God.

And even if he is not reconciled with everything that happens and it is difficult for him to make a decision, the doctor knows very well where the whole issue of the aspect to be cognitively elucidated comes from, he knows very well how to make someone understand the need to prioritize correct requirements that define a good character, making it unique, steady, conscientious and sensitive. The doctor imposes himself through a kind of sharing of his state of satisfaction and fulfillment to people with similar emotions.

And through the feedback received from patients, even their negative response to change, the doctor justifies his conception of the understanding obtained by discovering the meaning of value and integration of information in contexts that link professional activity to everyday life. Such a conception can perhaps be reached by the doctor thusly: "life is what forms consciousness, but consciousness will feel inferior when two thoughts are in opposition to the object of reference."

To justify yourself in relation to what makes you feel superior means to understand that your way of thinking is deeper and more efficient than that of other people, by the fact that the results of your own research and discoveries manage to fulfill the role of guarantor of sustainable evolution of generations.

How Leadership Is Manifested can be found during the advancement of knowledge in which valuable information is transmitted regarding the relationship between truth and reality, between research and discovery, but especially regarding the relationship between phenomena and their absolute cause.

The doctor is a follower of determinism not only because he manages to ensure the well-being of patients and to administer appropriate treatment to the diseases they suffer from, but because he instills in people a thirst for knowledge, openness and self-improvement. He is a superior man because he knows how to differentiate between what is seen and what is not seen, between what happens in reality and what happens in people's minds, between what happens normally and what will happen after his intervention.

The most important hypostases of the doctor are: that of a fighter, in which he built and left something behind; and that of a being unassailed by the meditative spirit and the obsessions of conscience. The path of his virtue mirrors the way he realizes the connection between what he assumes as duty and what he assumes as devotion and love in the situation where other people prove ignorance.

You may find yourself in a state of ignorance when people are not ready to step forward into knowledge, when they are not ready to intuit that you are one of the few doctors who treat their patients with respect and give them all the information and the necessary explanations to make possible the justification of empirical knowledge and its ethical implications.

How Much The Painting Would It Cost?

On February 20, 2014

Discover what truly fits your personality, by comparison with the components of the reality you're focused upon.

„But, how much the painting would it cost?" I asked myself. Let's assume that I'd buy this painting. You're crazy, I said to myself. You don't generally like paintings. It was an accurate statement. But I wanted that painting. I would have loved to have it. I would have loved to hang it on a wall, to stand there and admire it for as long as I wanted, knowing it's mine. Completely.

Me ! Buying paintings. It seemed something crazy. I looked at that painting again. And again. And again. It was different from all the rest. The desire to have that painting had no justification and anyway, I couldn't probably afford the price. However, I had some money at that time. It was expensive, but it was worth it." *****

Leadership: Are you open to exploring the new identification area of what truly matters for your reconfiguration in the relationship between what justifies your need to try something different and your willingness to invest in something expensive?

The best way to understand leadership, by comparison with the components of the exterior environment that indirectly act upon your whole being, is to focus your attention over something particular, which presents interest for your development as a human. Or, better said, to select relevant information for the content of your own interior, which would enhance that feeling of fulfillment, because you managed to accentuate a thing you can pride yourself on both in front of yourself and in front of others.

Helping leadership develop from the point of view of its capacity to simultaneously use multiple sources of interest, inspiration and motivation, that include the own estimation of the possibilities to ascend towards another approach of things, is a fundamental request in order to become more open about new self-knowledge experiences. To explore existential and professional perimeters equipped with new self-modeling resources for one's personality.

Between the need to try something different and the willingness to invest in something expensive there is one continuity report from whole to part, contributing to the creation of a character of increased complexity.

First, you are a person whose personal value is expressed by reference to a product, compared to a price that continues to grow. Then you are a man whose existence is confused with art, through the gratitude to the depth of creation, the imperative need to change the perspective, and the aspiration to the stability of the form, even at the cost of sacrificing the particular charm of the world.

Leadership: Do you manifest your gratitude that comes from a certain direction, appreciating a unique value that is not intended to come into production?

The painting is something of value that you can only rid yourself of if it itself reflects the value of a creative experience, which speaks fully not only through its message but also through its parts of light. It is possible that we immediately recognize the value of such an experience only when we look back and relive the memories it has left us.

The value of a creative experience is maximized only if in the mind of those we want to influence is created a certain loyalty to a brand, a dependence on well-done work, expressed in the following form: "I liked this thing and I recommend it to everyone."

Even the fact you rely on the things that put you in a favorable light in front of your personal authority, enhancing it through the pleasure to savor an innovative experience similar to "I can afford a little treat" is a challenge that tries your ability to get closer to what you miss, what you're truly interested in. And that could become a part of you. A passion. A solid base for building a stable and permanent character "in life", which ensures an easier management of leadership's resources.

Your hidden motivations can confront you with a tangled painting. You will start exploring a new side of your interior design, doubling certain interior impulses, certain pleasures or needs, with decisions that support solidarity towards your own convictions and values.

If you don't want to end up in the situation of being trapped in the middle of a cave-in of the values of your personality, you will have to untie them and clarify them before entering the material "turbulences" leadership sometimes produces.

Leadership is the painting you look at again and again. And again. It is different from the others. Even if the desire to have this painting is not justified, you must allow yourself the price of recommending it to others as a perfect companion of artistry as an indispensable asset in creating personal image and an excellent working tool for deepening the thinking and emotional content that others have to go through.

How Much The Painting Would It Cost? brings forward that impetuous need to always self-evaluate your inventory of parts and accessories that gathers a great variety of configurations to your own being. These configurations can be messier, comprised between the pleasure of thinking and the thinking of pleasure.

And these configurations have as a role the awareness of personal values, finding in yourself new interest stimulation resources, for building a new kind of personality – one that accepts itself, understands itself and overcomes itself through the strength of maintaining its needs and wishes.

How To Be A True Leader

On December 30, 2008

Watch over the way you fulfill your role, so as not to pay too much tax on your "playing field".

The eternal question: to be or not to be... a leader? I will not try to answer this question in an interesting manner, like a politician would do in front of the people shortly before elections, or in a scientific way like a physicist, a biologist or a chemist. In this article, I will try to simplify things as much as possible and help you understand more easily the concept of leadership.

Alive curiosity combined with trust and seriousness, determined me a long time ago to search at any cost the answer to this question: "What is a leader?". A friend to whom you can appeal in any circumstance is not exactly the right answer or the right definition of a leader because there were leaders who didn't allow the presence of too many people around them.

In fact, if I think well, I don't believe I can offer an exact, unique and complete definition of the term "leader". However, I will try to give you an answer as simple to understand about what it is leadership; respectively what it is a leader, from my point of view.

Leadership: Do you put to the test the potential of being closer to that "plus one" that molds on what is a consumption model, thinking in terms of the idea of "profit"?

You will understand more easily the concept of leadership if you think in terms of the idea of "profit". Let's say that an entrepreneur wants to develop his business and to obtain a bigger profit from the sale of umbrellas. He employs many young people without much experience in sales to convince customers of quality, importance and benefits of these umbrellas, and to invest seriously in this market. However, for everything to go well, the entrepreneur must first send his employees on training courses in negociation and sales. Then, he has to offer them a good salary that is commensurate with the volume of work and profits, so they would be motivated to work on his company.

A skilled entrepreneur knows very well a great truth - the only way of developing his business, namely to increase profits by selling umbrellas, is to obtain first the support of his employees, and then to meet any wishes of his clients, so that they would make more and more orders.

By analogy, I can say that leadership can be "measured" through the profit that the entrepreneur obtains, but also his employees and clients. Each has something to gain, only if the entrepreneur who starts a business has the necessary experience in coordinating a team, if he is a professional in carrying out all activities and, especially, if he has ideas, and he knows how to make the best of his opportunities. Therefore, the entrepreneur is the one who sets the tone and gets things moving. He is the leader in this case because everything starts from him, and because of him depends largely on how things will move.

The consumption model is the thing that has to benefit your features and value, according to what people are looking for, and helping ensure a new partnership. And to put to the test your potential to be closer to that "plus one" that molds on what a consumption model is, means to increase the chances of recovering your investment value by raising the level of performance in the area of the image and that of negotiation.

Just like in soccer, you must prepare a playing field that must have at least 5 "players": a trustworthy premise, a premise of abundancy or of increase of value, a premise of creating winning conditions, a premise of covering a high area of impact and the premise from which starts the presentation of the context of a durable development. Watch over the way you fulfill your leadership role, so as to not pay too much tax on "your playing field".

Tax is the contribution made to the relationship between investment and winning that is established between the responsibility to rise to the level of consumers expectations and the commitment to deliver that "Performance with a Message" that will differentiate you from the competition. People benefit from a custom cost when buying a product depending on your profile of entrepreneur.

Leadership: Can you find the right moment to be present in any circumstance of great significance, refusing any request from others that contradict the terms of your own Access Code to a new direction to follow?

Following you, will people manage to rise above themselves? The famous writer, Stefan Zweig pointed out: "The one who sees a storm approaching, knows that only one thing can save the ship and the crew: the captain's strong will to stand himself at the helm and, above all, to hold it by himself in his hands."

As the overall pace of change accelerates, the leader's duty, to guide people in the right direction, becomes much harder. Guiding people is by no means the cherry on the cake, which you eat licking with pleasure your lips, but rather an endless drudgery.

The terms of your own Access Code to a new direction to follow are of value, visual, moralizing, and revealing order, depending on how far you are willing to go to create the ultimate moment of your journey in which you have to share with others what you have learned from life and what has changed along with these lessons.

Few are those who have the talent to take the lead and impose themselves in front of people, gaining their respect and admiration. As being a leader means having a strong will to struggle into a hostile environment, to take the initiative when no one seems interested or has the courage to do it. It also means to restore other's people confidence and convince them that, following you, they will be able to excel themselves and fulfill their life.

The leader's role is therefore, very important. He should be near people in difficult moments, to motivate them to be better, and more focused on results, to watch over how they perform their duties, and to guide them in the right direction, being aware that the people's failure or success depends on him. And the same as the entrepreneur I talked about at the beginning of this article, the leader must do everything he can for everyone to come out in favor.

Leadership is the benefit you get from an approach that is considered "of great significance" that integrates pragmatism into the space of a life full of teachings from which you do not reject even a single minute, but rather remain faithful (as a true entrepreneur) to the heed "Here I go again" !

Being A True Leader is a goal for people who want to surpass themselves by turning the surrounding reality into their own confession of faith in a specific capacity or talent, and especially in a general sense of success – valid not only in business, but also in everyday life.

How To Gain Popularity

On February 25, 2009

Let people intuit the deeper meanings of your personality, strengthening their confidence in your model of honor and excellence.

Why was Napoleon Bonaparte so beloved by his people, and especially by his soldiers?

The answer to this question will not surprise you. Napoleon's success is primarily due to his constant presence among people. The soldiers had the certainty that Napoleon will be with them in the midst of the battles and will fight cheek by jowl with them. It is even said that in those days, there was no French, who did not know how the king of France looked like - so popular became Napoleon.

Leadership: How do you relate to the collision effects with a significant content of chiaroscuro?

The success of your incursion in the middle of a conditioning experiment of the leading act, meaning the exertion of competencies that determine the birth of some collision effects with a significant content of chiaroscuro, is due mainly (on the spiral of multiple direction changes) to ensuring a serious self-motivation capital.

The chiaroscuro content, by activating your capacity to continuously adapt to every essential thing for maintaining or initiating new authority positions coordinates your forward resistance force without hiding from the consequences of your own facts.

It finds its meaning in the mood that you assume, bright or clouded, rational or irrational, in creating the favorable conditions for success. In any action he initiated, Napoleon depended on the feeling of the effect of achieving a well-defined goal: the gain and triumph of power.

Here, we are dealing with the tragedy of the hero condition, in which the circumstances of the experience of increasing prestige in a vertiginous way, but later annihilated by the tragedy of suffering in which life is perceived as an exile, are found. This is what it means to surround yourself with a shining light. Napoleon was unable to concretize the causes and effects of his judgments in events that can truly horrify.

A leader finds the finality of his personal evolution when he questions the revelation of his essential qualities that ensures his superiority.

Factors that make it possible to spread certain "imperfections" with tragic effects, are related more to the nature of some exuberant passion, of a mind fever that decreases your strength, making you weaker, more sensitive and more uncertain.

These effects, felt through a high-power connection to events and decision making process, especially in the case of a prolonged exposure to all kinds of difficulties (compromises, tensions, inner conflicts), modify the pressure that you exert on potential conquests. And that isn't exactly in the advantage of your evolution.

The necessity to immediately react to any voluntary way of self-examination and self-constraint, developing with an ever more positive echo, a strength upgrade or an image upgrade of facts at a conscious level is moved by the improper use of control methods for your transformation processes.

Your honor and excellence level will suffer if you can't mobilize yourself towards the exit of this temporary knot filled with inaccuracies, contradictions, confusion and misunderstandings – which distort the deep meanings of your personality. The meaning is a question of temper. Should we believe that the lack of meaning is predominant in your case?

Leadership: Can you take advantage of the acceptance that people give you by placing yourself under the empire of the emotion of being caught in the midst of a permanent constraint for "viewing from above"?

The more accurate understanding, deeper and more comprehensive of your leadership is the key that opens the gate to the gratitude of people. However, first of all, you have to smooth the ground that best suits you to win people by your side; you need to fit in that space, by which you can control your whole area of influence. You can basically mark the quality of your impact only if people will be aware of the values that support your personality, and if they will give you an importance that would not be challenged.

Are you broadening your means of influence by taking full advantage of the acceptance that people give to you for being at their head?

Viewing from above can be enjoyed in a state of vigilence when you establish, without consulting anyone, the nature and cause of triumphs that are aware of the spiritual approach to a truly glorious power: that accumulation of feeling, beyond reason, which transforms the value of experiences into a revelation of good or evil, of happiness or of suffering.

Leadership means reinventing the way to make a change in the world without becoming a captive of a consciousness that cannot take on the tragedy of a defeat.

The weakest leaders are "evaporating" in time. They appear so infrequently in the front of people that, in time, people simply forget about them. And, the more they are missing from the "sight" the more people will want to find a replacement. Leadership is a contest, and the one who does not know or cannot create a strong image it is very likely to be abandoned or downgraded, that is to become just a player in reserve.

Your goal is to always keep yourself on the first position. However, you will not succeed to achieve this performance if you do not develop an attractive personality, so that people would be attracted by you like a magnet. If, by your personality you do not always attract people's attention, there is little left to say.

Are you making an honor from the qualities that people appreciate so much in a leader? How is your area of excellence?

Only the stars have fans. Are you coming in the spotlights as often as you can?

The people who enjoy appreciation from the public are those who are most the often spotted in the crowd. They have a very conspicuous personality, are charismatic, communicative, have a positive attitude, and inspire lots of confidence in themselves, and seem to keep things under control.

When we talk about leaders, respectively about leadership, modesty has no place. A person, who cannot make himself noticed, cannot be a reliable person, and people will never follow someone who did not know how to win them by his side. You can have a great influence on people only if you know how to show off your skills and abilities. To reach the top of the pyramid of value, you have to look forward to find as many followers as possible that would recognize your leadership talent.

You should find a way to project your personality in the spotlight just like the celebrities. They attract viewers when they step on the red carpet. The celebrities sell the most services and products. The celebrities have most fans. They capture the attention of the others around them whenever they have the occasion. This is the "huge step" on which depends your success as a leader.

Are you making an honor from deserving the sympathy of your fans? Can you live in their hearts through your personality?

P.S. It is very important to be popular, to always put your personality in the place of honor, and if you cannot change anything in people's lives, if you do not seriously get involved in the activities meant to solve the problems they are facing; you might become a poorly-rated celebrity, and to make yourself ashamed.

Let people intuit the deeper meanings of your personality, strengthening their confidence in your model of honor and excellence.

How To Obtain Success

On February 13, 2009

Maintain a steady loyalty towards your deepest roots, for your leadership to acquire an extended validity.

The famous ruler Genghis Khan grew up in a hostile world; in his childhood he witnessed at the murder of his father, he was in captivity for more than five years, he has faced with the threat of starvation and diseases, his wife, whom he loved very much was kidnapped. He was alone on foreign roads for many years.

However, all these difficulties have not demolished him not physically or mentally, but hardened his character. Genghis Khan founded the united Mongol nation, introduced the keeping of scripts, encouraged the education and invented the exchange of secret information, unprecedented at that time.

Leadership: How closely connected are you to your spiritual roots so that you can make a global change through an act of free will?

The Genghis Khan's leadership shudders by its realistic character, very tough. The way he saw the world found such an immense resonance in that troubled period, precisely because his spiritual states, which he managed to strictly control them, together with his broad and bold vision, had a particular objectivity. His leadership acquired in this way an extended validity, closely linked to its spiritual roots, maintained by his strong beliefs.

Basically, he made a journey to an alternative reality from that which was imposed to him by the time conditions. A journey towards his own being, towards his own spiritual development, thus giving the tone to a persistent personal reality that represented precisely the stake of his fate. His prayers of a man predestined to absolute domination were addressed to a God who never ceases to awaken, purify, transfigure a long-awaited world. Who judges, but also consumes contradictions with His transcendent unity.

His courageous attitude in front of a painful reality, which somehow exceeded his power of comprehension, driving into a corner his capacities of accepting an improbable fate – has requested the interest for his purpose and for the way in which he could achieve them, maintaining a steady loyalty towards his deepest roots, toward the horizon in which he himself has set to build and strengthen his own "ontology".

Leadership: Do you accept to remain captive in a hostile reality without rising to the height that God has prepared and decided for all those who want to recreate an entire world?

Put yourself for a moment in the hypostasis of a termite queen that lies in the royal cell of the hill. You are trapped in your own existence, unable to move your will, being pinned under your own spiritual weight. You could never escape from this cavern, to succeed to crawl out through the stone narrow passages and through tunnels unless you accept to change your beliefs, if you exceed the size of your ego that you have created in our subconscious.

The saving of Genghis Khan meant a separation from the hostile reality that surrounded him and kept him prisoner in the consciousness of helplessness. It was a proof of progress and efficiency, of openness towards another spiritual plan, through a closer approximation to his own spiritual experiences, to those elements of a benefic reality that gave brilliance, depth and growth to his leadership.

Genghis Khan's most famous quote sounds as follows: "I am the God's punishment for you. If you had not committed such great sins, God would not have sent such a retribution upon you".

Do you accept to remain a prisoner in a dark and unpleasant world, where the personal options are lacking? Or, you try to find the input code into a parallel reality - beneficial to you? Can you make the leap to a new stage of development, towards a new vision, dynamic, active and transformable?

The only guiding system of the mind towards the most important goals has as a triggering element the release from suffering, a total release that comes along with the experiencing of what you Truly Are beyond the limit of resignation and assuming fatality.

The ability to lead does not develop overnight, but in time. The difficult times in which he lived and all the sufferings that he endured, had the role to strengthen the faith of Genghis Khan, they have hardened, polished and prepared him for what was following to realize. Time and the obstacles he faced have revealed his hidden talents, giving him a purpose in life. And it was worth. Genghis Khan became a great leader, perhaps the greatest conqueror of all times, even greater than Alexander the Great, speaking of the conquered territories.

Some people are having, just like the plants, hidden qualities that mostly only the difficult circumstances reveal them. The success in leadership can be achieved only with patience and hope. Maybe that is why many people do not reach the highest leadership positions because they rush to get on top of the pyramid without being enough hardened from the professional point of view in order to face the challenges and problems.

You will not be able to bring to an end your mission if you are not patient, and if you do not give time for forming your character. The reward will be endless only if you will be well-enough prepared morally and spiritually and enough daring to make the step towards greatness.

Maintain a steady loyalty towards your deepest roots, for your leadership to acquire an extended validity.

The reality that you have to assume is that the only way to get away from the grip of the inability to go into a cold and step-world is to find a good reason to fuel to a bigger extent your determination in your faith.

How is success obtained? Through the sacrifice of losing yourself before finding yourself again. First you will get confused by mistrust, abandon, resignation, then you will find a rational reason to change yourself by stimulating a total reality of action.

How Vivid Are My Memories Of Him !

On February 09, 2013

The life of each of us has the dimension of a destiny that must be led to fulfillment in a novel of profound, affectionate and resounding experiences.

We walked a lot, walked side by side, stuck to one another, as we used to, when we did not want to break up and did not have the courage to confess our thoughts, did not have the courage to stop.

Do you ever heal yourself from a great love, I wondered? Does a new love not come upon the one that burns under its own ashes and refuses to die off completely and does not allow you to fully die?

Near a group of rowdy young people, Camil showed me a skinny, blonde girl with wavy movements.

- Look, that's how you used to be. Your hair smelled of ripe wheat and sunshine.

- They are the post-war generation; we are the one before.

- There are only ten years between us.

- The war will always separate us.

- It's like a line from a play. The line that ends the play, Camil said.

It's the dialogue and line that end the novel Gențiane, a book I did not know I was about to write, which Camil will not read, just as he will not read Agata's Letters to Cirus Hotaru. I found them in a notebook, the notebook Camil had given me forty years ago, and they were addressed to him.

Would Camil recognize himself in Cirus Hotaru? Would he like the character? Would he be angry or smile with a hint of sadness, affectionate, disobedient? It is a question I cannot answer.

When the novel came out, Camil had died. But how alive he is in my memories ! With how much force he lives in the characters, in his work ! And how well he knew that "the existence of death compels us to give our lives a meaning that death cannot take away."

Can your leadership be perceived more as "exploitation" or as a "remember" in terms of a life that seeks to alert you to the story of an implacable destiny?

Under any circumstances, a person has to feel that the intervenient is the molder of his destiny and that the much wanted happiness, his positive state of being, can't be achieved otherwise than after conquering every obstacle that life in its complexity incessantly throws in front of him. In the case of Cella Serghi, for whom life deserved to be lived intensely by remembrance of some dear memories, the intervener was Camil Petrescu, a writer whose work marked her deeply.

The opinion of a great Romanian writer, Lucian Blaga, is valid: "Many times it is our duty to see the colors darker than they really are. Because from this sight, a more decisive fight for the greater good will arise."

But in life's game of shadows and lights, black shouldn't be the predominant color, neither should white; more likely it should be a scarlet red that doesn't fade, bursting with force in every moment, retreating regularly, same as sunshine and sunset, both being equally beautiful, they meet and complete each other in harmony.

A life that tries to point out the story of an implacable destiny is the result of the experiences of a person living in the sphere of society with the feeling of not being able to do more to change something in the order of things and happenings.

Your leadership can be perceived more as"exploitation" if your relation with the people you lead isn't at a loss, which means it's appropriate to the type of result both parties want to reach. In this case, life must not appear as a consequence of deeper emotionality associated with a certain "frustration or loss" type of vulnerability, but as a target of resistance to an adverse destiny.

Or, it can be perceived as "remember" if you fail to cultivate the virtues that outline the new man, if everything you do for the exteriorization of the personality of those with whom you interact does not materialize in a great deed. Thus, your leadership becomes faint, disappears, or in the best case scenario it remains "petrified", it lingers there, it waits without result for an answer.

Leadership: Can you endure the format of the image of a destiny seen as a consequence of some life situations that overwhelm your Ego in the face of pains that seem hard to overcome, but in such a way that the interpretation you give to those situations acquires the meaning of a creative act?

Does the wall that shapes your personality start shaking? Are there forms of distrust and protest growing within you? Do your characteristic constants seem to dissipate when they meet the separation area between the two poles: negative and positive? Can you escape from the abysmal-immutable state that torments you? Can you totally transform the excessive X-reactant that during your negative reaction tends to deplete your resources?

Inevitably, a leadership filled with hidden vices has a major impact on all aspects involved in the development process of people – resources, time, interactions, reactions, effects, perceptions, adjustments, determinations, warnings, and multiple and various satisfying experiences. This kind of leadership concerns more and more that group of leaders who invest in a "land" that can't be sold, but from which you can take off to the final destination: excellence. This land is ideal for understanding people as dual beings, trapped between two spaces: interior and exterior.

The excellence of a man who recovers from the opposite effects of his life and his destiny is closely related to the projection of an idealized reality that time will not wash away.

Leadership, in view of how behavior affects an individual or a social group's welfare reflects, with a higher or lower intensity, upon the intervenient's efficiency and capacity to tolerate things. Him, the main participant to human evolution, has the ability to introduce the demand to adopt some measures, be them temporary, that would impose reciprocity, a game in two, group thinking, guaranteeing a functionality of his new teammate in various stages of the rehabilitation and development process.

The great changes in the social and personal life of a man subject to transformation from the first moments when the intervenient conceives his own methods to change, up to his last breath, when the harmony of his leading factors is perturbed – it can lead to something immediate, useful, constant, extremely encouraging and satisfying for both sides. Or, on the contrary, they can lead to immediate effects that become transitory in time, even disappointing.

The task that charges leadership aims at deepening the human dimension following the consequences of life experiences accumulated as a result of the "fleeting" condition in a world that is experiencing its joys, but also assumes the drama of resignation and fatalism.

How Vivid He Remains In My Memories marks that intimate, spiritual faculty of man to link the present to the past, becoming a reflection to link the present action of the future into a life that demands its right to longing, tribute and remembrance.

Human Suffering Often Becomes A Silent Burden

A painful past can cast a shadow over any new beginning, making it difficult to distance yourself from past experiences.

Moans? Where was it? He put his hands to his neck. His hands were wet. His throat was wet. His chest was wet, his face... He opened his eyes. He still didn't quite realize where he was, in the swamp among the pines or somewhere else? He didn't realize he was in Paris. A white moon hung above an unknown world. A pale light hung over the darkness, like the summons of a martyr. A white death screamed voicelessly in the pale, iron-colored sky. The full moon, behind the woods, could be seen through the window of a room of the International Hotel in Paris. Ravic stood up.

What had been? A railway full of blood, blood flowing, a mad rush on a summer evening, along the bloody tracks - the dream repeated a hundred times, when he pretended to be in Germany again, that he was surrounded, persecuted, pursued by the executioners of a bloody regime that had legalized murder; how often had he passed through all this! He looked at the moon, the white vampire absorbing the colors of the world with its borrowed light. These dreams, full of the horror of the concentration camps, full of the frozen figures of the murdered friends, full of the tearless faces, petrified by pain of those who still survived, full of the hopeless separations and the loneliness beyond any lamentation.

Leadership: To what extent do you feel that you can change the perspective seen through a new understanding, into a totally different conceptual reality, when you break away from everything that keeps you anchored?

During the day he could manage to pass the barrier, the wall higher than his eyes - the wall he had managed to build during years of struggle, desires choked with cynicism, buried memories, trampled underfoot, when you broke from yourself everything, even the name, is cement built over your own feelings - and when, in spite of all this, from time to time the livid face of the past bursts forth in a moment of indulgence, sweet, alluring and full of calls, when you plunge drunk until unconscious.

During the day - but at night you are at their mercy, the brakes of discipline escape you and the wagon begins to slide, back to the horizon of consciousness, they rise again, they break the tombs, the barriers are opened, the shadows turn, your blood boils, the terrors run and the black storm go over all fortifications and barricades! To forget - it's easy as long as the beacons of will illuminate the world - but when they go out and the noise of worms becomes perceptible, when a destroyed world emerges from the waves like a sunken Eggplant and lives again - then it's something else entirely. You can drink, get drunk, go night after night, to overcome all this - you can change nights into days and days into nights - during the day you dream differently than at night, without losing, detached from everything.

Leadership: When you try to transform your perception of the world, aren't you actually seeking a clearer view of your reality, trying to maintain the image of a unitary self?

Hadn't he done all that? How many times had he not returned to the hotel when the gray colors of the morning were creeping along the streets? Or had he not waited in the Catacomb, with someone who was allowed to drink with him until he came from Scheherazade, Morosow who continued to drink with him under the artificial palm tree, in that windowless room, where only the clock showed how much the light outside had grown ? Getting drunk in a submarine, that was it. It's easy to shake your head and say you have to keep your sensitivity. But damn it wasn't that easy! Life was life, good for nothing and above all; you can get rid of her, that's easy too.

But don't throw away with it the hope of revenge and don't throw away with it that thing spit on, mocked, ridiculed day by day and hour by hour, which is called, no doubt in a crude way, faith in humanity and humanity! A dry life - you can't throw away like that, like an empty magazine! She's still good enough to fight her, when and if the time comes. Not for personal reasons, not even for revenge, not for selfishness, not for altruistic reasons, yet it is so much for you to turn the wheel, to push the world beyond the blood and the wreckage--for no other reason than fight, the fight continues, and wait for the opportunity to fight until the last breath.

Leadership: How is this alternation between daytime control and nighttime chaos reflected in your perception of the world, seeking a point of balance between disclosure and concealment?

But waiting wears you down and can be hopeless, and to that is added the unspoken fear that when the time finally comes, you will be too crushed, too raw, too inert from so much waiting, too tired to walk with the others . This is not the reason why you plunge into oblivion anything that can get on your nerves, abolishing it, definitively and unconsciously, with irony, sarcasm and even counter-sentimentality, with the escape into another human being, into a self foreigner? Until you reach this state, brutal impotence will return as you surrender to sleep and ghosts.

While waiting consumes us and often seems hopeless, it amplifies our unspoken fears, leaving us crushed by the inertia of long periods of waiting. It is precisely this sense of exhaustion that prompts us to detach, using irony, sarcasm, and even counter-sentimentality as protective shields against emotional discomfort. Our escape becomes the escape into another being, into a foreign "I", as an attempt to avoid the state of helplessness that grips us during sleep and disturbing dreams.

Leadership involves resisting the realities that come back to your memory, seen through the prism of a much faster exposure of the inner movement.

Human suffering often becomes a silent burden that follows us even in the most unexpected places. Moreover, tragic memories can invade quiet moments, turning into visions that disrupt present reality.

Humpty Dumpty (II)

On December 26, 2014

Express your individuality by ensuring the totality of "genesis", more efficiently exploring the dimension of the meaning of life.

In his brief speech to Alice, Humpty Dumpty outlines the future of the peoples' hopes and offers the clue for our salvation: to become the masters of the words we utter, to make language answer our needs. Humpty Dumpty was a prophet, a man who told truths for which the world was not yet ready.

- A man?

- Excuse me. A verbal slip. I meant an egg. But the slip is very educational and helps me prove my point. For all men are eggs, given the right circumstances. We all exist, but we have not yet reached that form that is our destiny. We are potential in the purest state, an example of about-to-be. Since man is a fallen being – we know this from Genesis.

*Humpty Dumpty is also a fallen being. He falls from his wall, and no one can put him back together again – not even the king, not even the king's horses nor his people. But it is exactly this we must strive to do now. It is our duty as human beings: to put together the pieces of the egg. For each of us is a Humpty Dumpty. And by helping him, we are in fact, helping ourselves. **

Leadership: Can you give birth to a vision of a different type of man through an act of knowledge translated into a concrete experience, so that you put together the pieces that constitute the plausible image of a Self that assumes its specificity?

Leadership derives its enormous power of human knowledge, oriented towards the inner or outer world, according to the meaning given to existence crossed through climbs and descents. Such leadership, directed towards an increasingly higher level of complexity, is based on the idea that each individual is a closed suitcase, crowded with the thoughts, deeds and experiences tested over a period of time, which can be taken as long as it doesn't exceed a certain size. It is that dimension of the meaning of life, freed from the ephemeral condition of intangible values, which cannot be evaluated or coordinated.

Leadership can only create effects over the existential dimension and can only give birth to a vision of a different type of man, through an act of knowledge translated into a concrete experience. This is where the Self of Man comes into the picture, the image that you form about yourself in the unforeseen nature of events, but in such a way as to give coherence to a destiny that is an un-happening coincidence. The self is like an egg: it may have a strong or soft consistency, but once you have abandoned it, it can no longer excel in taste, quality and freshness.

To question existence, this temporary channel through which we achieve the transition towards the fullness of knowledge and wisdom that only the use of "measure" can control (dominating appearance), actually means to engage in a completely exceptional intellectual effort, which involves a battle on two fronts.

A front of the dedication towards new beginnings, towards a revival of the being and of the personality that hides, at times, the risk of facing your own consciousness, doubts, failures or remorse due to the fact that you didn't do everything for yourself or for a noble cause, because of certain limitations. And a front of the inclinations towards fragmentalism, towards the diversity of truths that lead to the right path of your duties as a superior being, ensuring the alternation between the accumulations and transformations of the meanings attributed to the experiences of life.

Leadership: Can you divide the image of yourself into pieces that are like a symbol of creation designed to transcend the original perimeter of its nature?

The egg is not only the symbol of fertility, it also represents the likely image of a creation considered a solitary phenomenon. Just as man's self vibrates with spiritual momentum: he is never abandoned by divine force, even in times of denial and doubt, but cannot form a world without first increasing its content.

The egg is the self that experiences a new birth, changing its aggregation status and existence parameters with increasing awareness of the need to be more than a meaningless entity. Thus, reactions to what is temporary will lose some of their intensity.

To find a flaw in the aspects of life appreciated as extensions of the self in a multitude of uses, actually means to find a crack in the egg shell. Meaning, to discover a certain significance in the confusion produced by personal reinvention, rather than to accept a "making" that excludes consciousness' ability to discern between truth and falsehood.

"Genesis", synonymous with the search period, updating and optimization of a new identity, based on the successes and failures of lived experiences, involves the follow words: To turn man into your likeness – aiming thus a bringing together of all opposites that make him up, as appropriate as possible for your hypostasis as an exponent of superiority. You can help yourself in becoming a leader, only if you manage to embrace all these opposites, analyzing the life lessons everyone around has to offer.

A self that assumes its specificity is the image of a spiritual development that starts from an ultrasensitive existence and continues with the expression of a singular creative consciousness that seeks answers at a profound existential level, beyond the visible surface of the events themselves.

Humpty Dumpty is an expression that highlights that region of man's existence to which is specific the ratio between conscience and belief, clarifying through the exploration of the world the meaning attributed to the knowledge underpinning his own becoming.

Before you create a vision for yourself that will differentiate you from the rest of the world, first try to express your individuality by ensuring the totality of "genesis", more efficiently exploring the dimension of the meaning of others' lives. To do this you need a lot of life experience and a developed spirit of anticipation.

Humpty Dumpty (I)

Assure your noble mission as a shaper of characters by enriching the meanings you want to incorporate into the existence of others.

Humpty Dumpty: the purest representation of the human condition. Listen to me carefully, sir. What is an egg? It is what has not yet been born. A paradox, is it not? Because, how can Humpty Dumpty be alive, if he is not yet born? And, despite all this, he is alive – no doubt about it. We know this because he can speak. Moreover, Humpty Dumpty is a philosopher of language.

*Alice in the looking glass, chapter six: "When I use a word, said Humpty Dumpty in a quite mocking tone, that word only means what I want it to mean – no more, no less. The question is, said Alice, if you can make these words mean different things. The question is, said Humpty Dumpty, who is the master – that is all." **

Leadership: Does the importance of the message you transmit return a "Look-In" value that can be declared with the accessing operator called "Self"?

The idea of turning abstract understanding into a complex unit of intelligence, which shall become fair in the new update conditions of self-worth, is based mainly on the management of advanced knowledge of processing the meanings you seek to incorporate into the existence of others. The meanings must be as representative as possible in order to capture the flow of signifiance and values attributed to their complete "redefining."

But first of all, the priority lays in assigning a great significance to your condition as an artist of details, who knows what is required to express their virtuosity in improvisation and composition that can facilitate a good communication of messages. Remember that the intelligence that defines you as a writer takes into account the image you form about an egg: you must first justify its way of being independent of its source, then you must feed on the content without affecting your main actions.

I have often noticed that the best leaders are progressing under this clause of acceptability: "Everything that has a deep meaning remains stored in consciousness." Therefore, a primary effect of focusing on the idea of creating meanings, optimized through words, thoughts, ideas and feelings, is that of granting attention to the message you are transmitting.

The value of "Look-In" can be attributed to the significance you attach to the content of a mental representation (an image of a thing, an association between stimuli and events) so that it favors the construction of a new reality.

The phrase "Who is the master" – does not only represent the development index in terms of style of approaching knowledge, but rather symbolizes that authentic part of you, not brimmed with clichés, that wants to be seen, heard and feel appreciated, often to the detriment of any other conditioning factors. This phrase, in turn, is based on a message of redirection towards yourself: "What I am corresponds to the appreciation I give to my intellect."

When you become attached to someone, in reality you get attached to that suggestive part of them, brought to light by the way of expression and the transmitted message. What he says transmits a certain feeling to you. You are contaminated by the importance of certain ideas, conceptions, of a montage of ideological and psychological order, which persists in various contexts through the varying meanings highlighted. But especially through a constructivist way of understanding admitted as valid from the perspective of the endless wealth that the dimension of his self offers.

If you want to convince yourself of the effectiveness of leadership based more on emotion than on reason, be open to all alternatives which the other person proposes and you yourself explore the attractive parts that you can consider authentic, as a lever for that noble mission as a shaper of characters.

It can be said that the significance of the message you convey returns a "Look-In" value, only if those around you, touched by that discrete force of emotion that takes shape only through words (through the power of communication), manage to focus particularly on their significance as self-created beings, that can overcome their nature. You yourself become an incentive and a reason to redefine their meaning if the messages and words "thrown" responsibly manage to change their inner nature.

The direction that determines the value of the writing flair is given by the power of words that may have different meanings when aligned with visual representations that allow operations (actions, commands) to be performed on things.

Humpty Dumpty is an expression that highlights the extraordinary power of communicating a message, whose meaning, unquestioned, comes from finding the shape and order of words, ideas and feelings so as to expresses as best as possible, what cannot be expressed anywhere else – but that is accepted by others as a condition to the smooth conduct of the game called "Life".

The question is who the master of this power is – that is all.

I Admire You With The Eyes You Do Not See

On April 01, 2020

What remains memorable in the moments of a great spiritual experience is what completes you.

There comes a time when you no longer need books. You are the only book that matters. All you have to do is draw an unforgettable moment from every page of your life and color it in the color of the blood that adorns the petals of a rose. This is also a kind of wisdom, the only provision for the journey from another world, perceived as a spiritual event.

For only the rose has an interesting story left to tell about man, as if it itself were a man, but above other people. And here is the unforgettable moment: the rose suddenly feels the impact of its life as something fragile and precious through the tip of the golden pen of an exceptional writer, because it acquires the status of the written word with the persistence of a deep thought about God.

Continuing to have human qualities, the rose is presented on the first page of my book, and my letters and colors turn these lines into the image of a character from 1001 nights who continues to be popular with visitors to my garden. The meaning of its reception draws attention to a passage in an alchemist's book that describes the matter in which the process of knowledge takes place when the connoisseurs are God's messengers.

My eyes stare at the silence of this unique moment, when my favorite rose, Double Delight, does its duty to convey what words often fail to do. I feel it looking at me, as I look at it, for its soul and my soul converse under the open sky under the deep spell of God's voice.

This is also a kind of wisdom: to know that someone is listening to you with the same emotion, goodwill, nostalgia, with which you listen to yourself in a moment of great soul experience.

Leadership: Can you shape your creation around an image that transcends life, in terms of a look at a reality that can be understood in terms of the concept of REFLECTION?

Please take this moment of remembrance as a gift from God to one who knows how to tell a story about a rose that does not shake its petals ahead of time, enslaved to the content of an image of the principles of nature presented, in fact, in the first treatise of St. Thomas Aquinas. Somehow, I notice myself as an image viewed with the eyes of a connoisseur, but crossed with power by the creation of an artist who knows how to combine the intensities of color with the love of nature... and does it very well, since once you have passed in the world of his reality, there is no turning back.

I like it when it's you as you were when I first saw you, not when you want to look like someone else, not when your eyes express something other than I'd like to see reflected in their beauty. Your smile still catches my eye, even though your gaze is far away. But the beautiful is never forgotten. When I looked at you gently, my voice almost dim, as if I wanted to immortalize a memory, I occupied my mind with one thought: to always be the same you. Unchanged. Sincere. Kind-hearted.

There is no difference between receiving the rose as a grace made to man without any merit, and receiving it as a mere scrolling through the pages of a book of which I am the author. In the end, the rose is the main subject of a look that found its relief, beauty, admiration, in the reflection of an artistic and literary creation that would make the Persian queen, Scheherazade, envious.

I look at you tenderly. I admire you with my eyes, eyes you do not see. I enliven you with the letters full of the holy spirit, because you are part of me, of my garden, of my moment of inspiration. So many times I thought I forgot you, because you forgot me with a story you always owe me.

Leadership: Are you able to root yourself in the memory of a dream image suggestive enough to no longer justify your duplication in the real world?

God is somewhere around here... distinguishing himself by having in addition to his form another form, adjacent to the vital sphere of a new artistic perception, becoming the embodiment of a writer who knows how to be a special rose, pleasing to the eye that delights the thrill of brown eyes. On the cover of my book, beautifully illustrated, whose background symbolizes the trust discussed between two immortal characters, only one painter could put his signature: the one who knew how to reproduce the beauty of a rose through eyes that do not take age into account, through eyes that do not judge nor suffer.

A glance tells the eye the details of the story that comes to life, and the same glance can guess the invisible fluctuations of feelings, it can follow the movements of the imagination or the soul. But the gaze itself cannot become a particular and complex existence, unless it travels the distance from Creation to Creator... under the spell of a writer in whose eyes, sincere, tender, an image still shines. The rose is his splendor.

A writer's spell is activated when the chosen part of his self is interposed between the divine nature and the immortal dimension of his creation. The crowning of the rose becomes the testimony of an identity that is found in the hypostasis of an intensely spiritualized confessional lyric with any element of the real.

I Admire You With Eyes You Do Not See because you exist whenever I remember you, even if I am far from you, even if you are just a creation of my mind. What surprises me beautifully in my soul, is never forgotten in another world.

The rose is my image in another world, in another variant of reality.

I Am And I Am Not

On April 16, 2016

Represent your trajectory in the equation of leadership by maintaining contact with the edifying areas of your being.

Immediately, I had to find a plausible explanation for the points of view of my form of interfering with what I wanted to hide in another being, for my inner state to correspond with the demands of a sort of beginning of a world. Could I survive with the idea of a double being, personified into a sort of Faust-Mefisto, of which I thought would show me the path towards capitalizing on a deep thinking, revealing an idealistic and symbolic construction?

A being that exists in two worlds, one empirically-sensitive and another transcendent of ideas, is nothing more than an imperfect copy of a word-exposed experience, specific to a visionary of great expressiveness, someone deeply emphasizing the signs of a reality above what a mind used to the comfortable world of symbols can take. I believe that I was firmly fit within in the coordinates of the thinking of such a visionary being, for the unlimited duration of the ideas coming from a reality that coagulates most of the symbols that impregnate my unconscious side, seeming to live (through creation and concepts) the memory of some ideas coming from another world.

Leadership: Distinguishing essence from appearance, oscillating between past and present, forces you to adjust your creation to express a complete vision.

Virtually, my whole creature oscillates between the creation of an artist who uses an artistic language based on generalizations, and the monologue of a writer who attempts to reconstitute the story of a life of another existence over the present experience. A construction that will strongly individualize me in the landscape of self-awareness, making use of all that was best in me, if I had not managed to distinguish essence from appearance, like a suggestive conclusion for the aesthetic vision of Catalan architect Antoni Gaudi: "all unite and collaborate to express the great code of Creation."

Here, another parallel needs to be drawn. For I remember what Marquerite Yourcenar wrote in her notes in the novel "The Memoirs of Hadrian":

To do as much as you can. To remake. To imperceptibly retouch the imprint itself. "I myself correct myself", said Yeats, correcting my works. "He was one of those who had the good will to be bothered on his own initiative to rectify a mistake, to confirm a detail, to support a hypothesis, to facilitate a new research – facts for which I give him my friendly thanks.

Leadership: Through what urges you to be the link between artist and creation, are you prepared to turn yourself into a perfect copy of a spiritual state reflected from a more different image of yourself?

From the nuances of a stimulus "I am and I am not", within the limits of a time that brings down its questions, arises a flow of acceptability of increasingly less visible or felt consequences, like fantasies acquired through something never reached. My link between artist and creation, suggesting a certain individualization of the chosen topics, concentrates an idea that is above all others, namely that whatever you expect to accomplish through knowledge confirms that emotion of adventure, of the unpredictable and the unknown.

I was living with the impression that I could obtain a victory over my own individual nature not only by confronting spirits and gods, thus broadening it up to human limits, but especially through a spontaneous split if personality, hosting a guiding inner voice and a limiting outer one that would not allow me to accept myself as I am.

The link between artist and creation is given by the fiction of a life in which you can be EVERYTHING, but in which anyone can recognize themselves.

The fiction that my creation emanated was a perfect copy of a spiritual state reflected in a different image of myself, that state I allowed myself to be enveloped by when I entered a dream with countless interpretations that was part of a continuous process of learning about myself.

This painful impression, coming from a real motive, followed me everywhere. It is the same impression that sometimes followed Adrian Leverkuhn, but one he would forget about quite rapidly by listening to the emotional recitative of the Purgatory parable, about the man who carries through the night a light on his back: it doesn't show him the way, but it illuminates the path behind him, thus helping those who come after him.

Leadership: Can you discover from a double hypostasis the animation of the painting called "A light in the darkness" by how you open your horizons to a reality that seems to be entirely foreign a priori?

Man's trajectory in the equation of leadership can be represented in contact with the edifying areas of his being, in which the passage from a limiting representation of the self to an extensive one is decided. Man edifies what he wants to sustain through what he kept practicing to accept from himself, seeking to establish himself in both components of self-esteem: knowledge and truth.

The personality and thinking of a man are both exemplary in the trajectory of a double being. One which seeks to make itself a master of its own life in a created world. The other which seeks to master its self-awareness by focusing in a direction based on imagination, into the real world.

Your belonging to a wider framework of managing personal development is the result of uniting the two beings, but with focusing more on one to the detriment of the other. Learn to correct yourself by correcting your work called the Ego from an Alter-Ego that does not give you peace and tries to hide behind a fictional reality.

You can discover in a double situation the animation of the painting called "A light in the dark" if you place yourself in the context of a consequence of your unity, interfering with identifying and the shaping of a certain direction in life, just like in a fiction that captures the attention. Thus, you learn the value of a separation between the part of you that eagerly asks you from that "something" from the outside and the consciousness that imposes certain restrictions upon you.

What you are represents the consequence of the Ego that wants to make its concepts of the world known in the story of life.

"A light in the dark" suggests the duration of crossing your own bridge of understanding, at the intersection between the two beings, until you realize that self-perspective amplifies until the direct engagement in the ideal framework of a real life-story.

What cannot be calculated is the difference between what is true and what we perceive in a limited way, yet still resonating over how we interpret what is happening to us throughout life.

But what turns man into the profile of a work of great intellectual and emotional openness, facing his inherent complexities, under the influence of the imperative impetus of highlighting that part of his being that is often underestimated and less understood, is tied to the ability of distinguishing essence from appearance.

Opening your horizons to a reality that seems to be a entirely foreign a priori is to recognize yourself as being victorious in the struggle between what you seek to do through knowledge, at the level of Ego, and what you experience at a level of consciousness and feeling dependent on an Alter Ego that is considered "full of contradictions, just like the world around you".

Leadership is the being you represent in the search for the meaning given to a life story from a work called "the aesthetic of a self-seeking creator".

The edifying areas of your being at a Creator level are: the ability to think independently of others, the ability to present new constructions of reality, the ability to create a new world with words.

I Am And I Am Not is the consequence of your re-finding yourself in a double situation: a being which seeks to make itself a master of its own life in a created world. And the other which seeks to master self-awareness by focusing on a direction based on imagination, in the real world.

The more aware we are of the deep parts that resemble, under apparent differences, the more able we will be to get understand ourselves.

I Am Not For The Finite, I Am For The Infinite

On September 08, 2022

You must push the study of every part of the science of life, every fragment, beyond trivial observation, until the greatness of life emerges.

I watch the sea churn. Her waves have colossal strength. Looking at them with an artist's eye, I would say that they do not know at all or at least harmony in art, that principle of design that gives the work a sense of coherence or cohesion. And their forms, in the endless expanses of the sea, especially when the sun rises, can be put in relation to various external things, insofar as they are viewed on the real side of the phenomena that make up nature, the "Great Whole". Always after sunrise the painting acquires a lighter tone.

There is something else. The very waves make all my creations, in terms of art, as well as the similar creations of nature, fit into the picture of a synthesis look, as separate elements of the whole that takes possession of the mirage of a desolate world, a tireless chase after illusions. I don't know yet if my eyes will ever understand the difference between another facet of reality and the form of knowledge specific to the beauty of a summer sunrise that stubbornly doesn't offer many chances to reflect the sunset in the water.

This should not be misunderstood. I do not seek in the waves, in the force exerted by their power, the pure form of any freedom of expression, or the pure form of the relationship between the significant and the insignificant. But the form of their movements, the pure form, freed from object or matter, gives that art which completely renounces corporeality, representing the form of regulating the relationship between sight and hearing, to obtain a knowledge which is at the same time external and internal.

Leadership: Can you glimpse a world that truly expands beyond the scope of mundane observation, provided you respect the distance of grasping an ideal vision?

Nature and art are a unitary whole, if only in that the waves, linked to the ratio of transparent bodies, cannot be contradicted by the superior perspective of the gaze focused on the search for horizon openings (offered by the way waves scatter at sea). And to the extent that the waves, seen as an adaptation of form to new external realities, separate themselves from the totality of the sea, just as the things captured by the gaze are separated, so to the extent that any difference is instituted by light, then the purpose of my art is to awaken the feeling of deja-vu, a need for reflection, creating an image that will never be erased from the visual memory of the one who looks at my creation.

Alas, how difficult the waves are to be understood, and how altered they reach the eyes of the beholder who does not know that they produce a music in the mind of the sonata composer. Somehow, the external environment that waves need to become music or artistic vision, constitutes the way of material things to be like ideas. Only now can we think of waves as the first and pure forms of universal movement, raised on the wings of a music in which the sounds, speaking a secret, unintelligible language, seem to reproduce directly parts of the science of life.

This is where the advice of the Romanian doctor Grigore T Popa best fits: " You have to push the study of every part of the science of life, every fragment, beyond the banal observation, until the greatness of life emerges."

This is even more meaningfully expressed in art through the opposition between harmony, proportion and balance, as it manifests itself in the close-up view of the waves. Their rhythm is alert and incomprehensible, like a kind of double of my nature, their movements being a pure melody from the picture of a dreaming man, or, why not, denoting a simple harmonic wandering with no final destination, passing and reappearing.

Only the brilliant artist manages to transform a sound or a perspective from the outside into an entire eternity, to redirect the spectrum of harmonics of a fundamental sound on his interior, in a masterpiece full of the beauty of waves, with many symbolic properties. Even this fact alone conveys a strong and new emotion.

Leadership: Can you change the way you look, look for visual information, select and interpret it, looking not so much for the flashy effects that swallow the present moment, but the essence of the image that lasts over time?

In night 272 of the book "One Thousand and One Nights", it is told that a long time ago there was a castle in the border of the Andalusians, the gate of which was made to be fortified. One day, a curious and capable man wanted to investigate what was in that castle. He picked the locks of each room, all of which had a magical and religious aspect. But in the fifth room he found a circular mirror, the work of Soliman, the son of David, whose price was unfathomable, for he who looked into its water saw the faces of fathers and sons, from the first Adam and even those who will hear the last Trumpet.

He understood then that the greatest treasure of the world is the subconscious replication of fragments of life that he swallows in the present moment, so that later they emerge in all their brilliance, full of meaning that has been lost sight of for a long time.

Likewise, the outer universe (the sea, with its sparkling waves), is not pushed somewhere on the periphery of my inner immensity, but is itself transformed into inner fluidity, into soul substance. And if each wave is just a lock that I have to open to understand its secrets, using artistic procedures (such as hatching and brushwork), then maybe one day I will understand that what is incomprehensible is my very soul, decanted of any physical incarnation.

The sea taught me to mirror myself in an already lived existence, being the indefinite expansion of the movement of being in an integrative harmony with the Logos (the simulacrum of reality). Surprisingly, listening to the music of the waves induced and transformed me into the perpetual living of other lives, in an eternal movement in the orbit of a single, uninterrupted present. And the incessant visualization of its waves represents an art that combines imagination with spatiality and abstract logos. They develop the story of my duality by searching for a universal language, without words.

In leadership, a vision is ideal if the being lives in an inner duality: one half feels, acts, the other sees itself acting.

I Am Not For The Finite, I Am For The Infinite, because I have learned to know the sea, its sparkling waves, the sand, the seagulls, the shells, and each of them knows my thoughts and my soul, without saying a word. They are fragments of existence that follow each other, and in which I find myself under a different appearance. And, the more impressive these fragments of existence are, the more the traces of my steps, which they carry with them, are still indelible. I think this is, in fact, the greatness of life...

Someone said well: "Perhaps at a subtle level matter interferes with the logos, giving birth to a connection that is difficult for the human mind to conceive. To understand this, you must have something of the majesty of the divine in you."

I Belong To The Look That Loads My Eyes With Artistic Richness

A distance that magnifies the perspective causes everything around the view to merge into a grand event.

On that beautiful summer morning, in complete silence, I was walking on the beach in Mamaia. In the increasingly clear sky, toward the east, the pale shades of dawn that had pierced the darkness of the night were disappearing, leaving the abstract background to be distinguished, the bright crimson of an aurora of unprecedented brightness. The sun was rising more and more visibly on the horizon, and this was also happening in my heart, causing a feeling of well-being.

The horizon that the sea caressed with gentle whispers, inviting me to explore its deep and mysterious secrets, measured the movements of my eyes during a visionary episode of nature contemplation, when my mind traveled on the paths of creative thought. Somewhere out at sea, a cruise ship saw its way unhindered, the distance between us shrinking more and more. And, pleasantly surprised, I found that it was surrounded by a landscape taken from fairy tales, where the sea and the sky met in a perfect symphony.

In that unique moment, my eyes were testing my vision, hence the extraordinary role of the viewer to metamorphose into a creator, giving a special meaning to things through the power of his own perception and imagination. Of course, the eyes do not exercise their vision only by taking care of the constructive expression of the observed object, so as to create a spatial unity, but the fact that vision itself becomes an integral part of this art-directed construction, called perception. Or as the ancients would say, Urfechios Aositis Udarisvia , a distance that enlarges the perspective, causing everything surrounding the sight to merge into one grand event.

Leadership: Through successive accesses to the horizon, can you outline a memorable moment, as a correspondent of the relationship between what you perceive and what you feel?

The vision, well trained from the outside, imposes a new condition on intuition and artistic evidence: to leave intact the pleasure of encountering a memorable moment, as a correspondent of the relationship between what I perceive and what I feel. Having the ability not only to interpret the world, but also to imagine it differently, vision reaches, through successive accesses of the horizon, a kind of substitute for things that existed and were known, a principle of reference or tendency, in the order of knowledge of what no longer exists as such. And, coloring all things with subtle and effective "ephemeral" shades, in a confessional elan, sight becomes a kind of guarantor of the orientation towards art, towards painting.

Most likely, the view that stands out here can capture the essence of what defines me as an artist, being traversed by the ceaseless momentum of searches, just like in the novel "The Collector" by John Fowles:

" Everything was ready . All I had left was to sit in wait and he took advantage of the first opportunity that would arise . It is true that at that moment I was in a strange state . I was thinking about all the details as if I had been doing these things all my life . As if I were a secret agent, a detective, or an artist in search of perfect beauty . Until finally I waited , and I waited , for days , and this is how it happensand with butterflies. I mean you go to a place where you know you 're going to come across rare species and you don't know anything , but then again , when you 're not even looking for butterflies , you they appear in front of your eyes on a flower, offer them like a tray , as they say."

The appearance of any example of artistic perfection requires waiting time. And if I try to distinguish uniqueness from a vague image, like a thing in the distance, then my senses must be lost in the flow of a perspective-opening moment, coincidentia oppositorum , in order to capture and express a certain interpretation, thus becoming instruments of creation. Only in this way can I amplify my ability to interpret the world around me and transform it into a work of art, through a way of being in the place where, although I find nothing tangible, I feel that I am in the midst of a subtle presence , but full of meaning.

Leadership: Have you ever considered how a visual landmark can mark the separation between reality and interpretation, thus creating a link between two distinct entities?

I know too well what each of the sea views represents to me: a butterfly that I have always wanted to catch. I lay in wait for a whole day, just to perceive what the eye likes more: the subtle details or the broad essence of the whole landscape. I knew that the sea also looked at me as a collector of unique images, like butterflies that live only one day, realities for which ideality exists, but I didn't want to let myself be engulfed by its spell except by accepting the reality of a scene taken from a John Fowles novel :

, I realize that it is not only a fantastic situation , it is a fantastic variant of a fantastic situation. I want to say that now I am in the hands of fate , and fate does not behave as if it is to be expected . And thus fate, through this man, brings me into the situation of being falsely grateful . I am so insecure and surely he knows it . He can make me totally dependent on him . It 's like I 'm living forever , forever , foreverit , in one fleeting moment .

What I write here is natural. It's like two people trying to carry on a conversation . It is the opposite of the drawing. When you draw a line, you know immediately that it is a good or bad line . But when you write a line, at first it seems trueand then, when you read it , you 'll know later ..."

Art is like the sea, always changing, always fascinating, always engaging in conversation with me. It can make me totally dependent on it if I look at it as a demarcation line between two diametrically opposed worlds: the superior people and the masses, ignoring the spaces between one appearance and another. And if I continue to look for forms of expression at any point on the surface of the sea, to see butterflies in any small appearance from the sea, to behave like a collector of views that feeds the painting with all kinds of color typologies, from those based on oils to water-based ones, I would probably end up living an endless, endless, endless time in one fleeting moment.

A moment that at first seems real, but when I analyze it later, it seems illusory.

One of the constant concerns of a creator is to capture the essence of an experience or provoke deep reflection through his art. But without losing its originality and authenticity in the face of perceived illusions, be they caused by the vastness of the sea, the mystery of the horizon, or one's own interpretation of reality.

I belong to the gaze that fills my eyes with artistic richness whenever my soul meets the sea, along with the sense of infinity that spills over the horizon. And if I looked at the sea countless times, with the same eyes with which it looks at me, then I would address the same words that the character in the novel "The Collector", written by John Fowles, uttered:

" I love honesty and freedom and generosity. I love the ability to do something, to create. I like to be fully involved. I love everything that is not static and I hate everyone those who are content to stand aside and do nothing , to plagiarize , those whose heart died before the body ."

I Cannot Tell A Lie

On January 18, 2015

Rise to the height of your greatness, by finding the ultimate truth in yourself.

A lie can never be undone. Not even the truth is enough. I am a parent and I know these things. Remember what happened to the father of our country. A cherry cut and then told his father: "I cannot tell a lie." A little later, threw the coin to the other side of the river.

*These two stories represent some crucial events in American history. George Washington cut down the tree, and then threw the coin. Do you understand? He said even then an essential truth, namely that money does not grow on trees. That has led our country to be so great, Peter. Now the image of George Washington is on each dollar bill.

Leadership: Can you discover the greatness of your being, living in the light of reflections on your formation as a source of orientation towards the imperative "remember !", or as a source of distortion of the choices and circumstances that condition your life?

One of the common experiences of leaders, an experience born of trials and challenges encountered, especially by progressively seeking and acquiring instructions, ideas, truths from the knowledge gained and from every aspect of social networking, is the experience of "I am". In turn, it is followed by the relevant experience regarding the events subsequent to the balance of life, knowing that at certain moments there is no tunnel, no bright light, but only one variable: "Remember!" Moreover, let's not forget that the light of our consciousness, of the Self, is like the laser light that gives life to an image: it does not affect the vision, but it can change the resolution or the background of the objective representation of the facts and daily phenomena, without marking the interdependence between them..

What you become is the result of a social remembrance that judges the deeds you have done and the events you set in motion in favor of their writing in history. And this "I am", above the essential significance of the reality in which you form, in a continuous replay that adequately reflects the ups and downs which you can only see with the eyes of the soul, see them, understand them, is highlighted through the truth from which the pride of being part of a larger plan flows.

The formation process is a scenario approved at the highest level of your transition to a new approach to the relationship between "remembering" and the ideals that you fulfill in the interactive form of the events that you wished to unfold differently. Don't forget that through the things you accomplish in life, you make an eternal investment, not a temporary one !

It is possible that all these promulgators of evolution in the socio-professional field be aware of the real meaning of their own authenticity and resist the opacity of others, feeling an enormous difference. This is a self-picture with an enormous impact on the world, but also the image of a complex reality which takes shape of an individual wherefore difference is more important than similarity.

Leadership: Do you understand the causality that conditions your evolution, so as to write a legendary epic in the course of which the fate of the world will play out around a man invested with the power to change the course of history?

The manifestation of "I am" is one of those jewels that stands the test of time in the form of validation of a single option: never to emphasize your worth more than you were able to bring to fulfillment. And what passes the test of the experience of turning simple life lessons into new horizons of training and development, putting in the foreground the recollection of moments that made you feel that you will win a historic Jackpot, is built on the premise that "no one is left behind". Is your orientation towards the direction of change based on the premise that you have the ability to make experiences difficult?

Here leadership aims at the essential relationship between what you do and what you are in the field of remembrance of the perennial commitment to all those who, over the generations, have changed something in the course of world events. Leadership contains findings of integrity inserted in the act of development and becoming. Integrity, as an element of value, means thinking less in terms of a target imposed by expectations of your own reason, experiences or social place, but rather in terms of your own understanding of what you are and what you are worth.

If you would be allowed to have more power to control reality (where reflections, ideas and life experiences intersect), without taking into account the size of the limiting consequences of individual exploitation, then you easily managed to impose yourself as a progress factor. But as factor of reason fulfillment, which aims at holding timeless truths.

A leader is led by the reason of creating a new world, by discovering the laws and principles that act closely on his own self-valorization. In this case, the causality that conditions its evolution is suggested by its power to alter the course of history. Here, this is the ultimate truth within yourself: "It is not the memories of the past that make you more valuable, but the responsibilities of initiating and building the future."

But only the self-consciousness helps you differentiate with respect to others to manifest your individuality. It also helps you exert authority during transition to a higher level of accomplishment: the greatness that remains printed in the minds of others. Let us remember what the great philosopher Friedrich Nietzsche said: "What is great in man is that he is a bridge and not a goal".

Leadership represents the simple narration of disparate facts and phenomena, marking their interdependence with the help of experiences that derive from the strength of the self, from man's deepest beliefs regarding his value and his competence to write the lessons of history.

I cannot tell a lie highlights that greatness element of the man who is constantly changing under the pressure of originality and life experiences. A man of great character, who has delicacy in thought, assigns precise meaning to these experiences, sorts them, organizes them and exploits them by forwarding them to those who want to follow his example.

I Created You In The Image Of My Own Clarity

On December 18, 2022

A special role in leadership is played by emotional memory, that process of reflecting previous emotional experiences that make a person exist in images.

I have always liked two things: the Sun and the Sea. And I liked them so much, so very much, that I remember them daily, with tenderness, with uplifting emotions, with warm words, with smiling expectations, and not a day goes by without, under the protection of a tender nostalgia, dreamy, deep, the image of the sea does not give me a fabulous deja-vu, full of mystical meanings. There is complete sincerity in this confession of my soul, al paso del tiempo, which breaks its own commitment and, slipping into the envelope of memories from a thin, transparent glass, which long ago the waves brought to the shore, even at my feet, gives a new orientation to the vision of the sublime: "everything that is beautiful calls for direct contact with the Work of Art."

One more memory set aside, next to other precious memories that replace the old ones, taking away all my anger, will make me return to the place of unforgettable memories. Having the character of an affective response to her call, I was able to see the sea as a product of an inner dialectic that ensures the functioning of the imagination, la llave que abre la mente, tending towards the production of the new in the form of imaginative reconstructions, of mental pictures. For this reason, the tenuous relationship engraved in the memory of time, between the latent meaning of the sea, representing a fascinating journey about the power of memory, and its sensitive content of aesthetic descriptions, is not a random one, but a relationship of necessary implication in the power of the soul to recreate a reality that too often escapes me.

I think that one day the sea will not be the same anymore, and I will look at it dumbfounded, disoriented because of the change, as if I were on the border between times and worlds. And I will have to defend my right to admire and praise it in the same way as the painter imagines that his work offers the hope of the future resurrection, where everything will be repaired and reintegrated into a painting of space without borders. Even so, after the voluntarily magnified introduction of a naïve dream in the middle of the ebbing period of the "backward" momentum, through a hermeneutic of the imaginary revealed in an Arabic poem, just looking at it in its pure form of relief, I will be willing to honestly admit my inability to convert the meaning of a different world into a universal feeling, on the plane of the pure imaginary.

Leadership: Does the image that dominates your mind most of the time mark the reception of a fact of life transmitted in a work of art, as evidence of an identity memory that you want to evoke in a "thematic" way?

The sea completes the image of my own being with the experience of a character in the work of Vladimir Nabokov:

"I search through these powerful, overwhelming, hopeful memories again and again, and I wonder if the crack in my life occurred then, in the glow of that distant summer. Or, perhaps, the excessive desire it aroused in me someone was the first symptom of a personal oddity. Somehow, in trying to analyze my urges, desires, motivations, actions, and so on, I abandon myself to a kind of retrospective imagination that feeds my analytical capacity with limitless alternatives, so that any visualized itinerary branching and branching, endlessly, into the complex, maddening perspective of my past."

And so the sea completes the image of my artist nature, mixing times, emotions and aspects of external nature in a kind of ideational crucible, a container capable of withstanding very high temperatures, in which I boil the burning passions of a hallucinatory wandering in a parallel, symbolic, hidden, multivalent universe. In addition, what my rich imagination can perceive clearly and perceptibly, seeing this space of the absolute, hard to locate on the axis of time, letting myself be carried away by the illusion of an increasingly intense experience, is the complete image of a thoughtful nature of the artist, of this crazy, impetuous, independent and at the same time refined nature, which is entrusted with so many divine powers and privileges, so many possibilities to manifest in the high world of the Peerless Creators.

The only work of art that mirrors the facts of my life, events extracted from a reality that becomes the only reconciliation with myself, is the restoration of a memory that illuminates my mind and soul.

In the case of the painting, the sea is not represented as a configuration of the limitless, living in a state of continuous presence, nor does it present the coherence of a course of retro-events of my life, but is symbolized by means of a form that is formless. As the painting rises to the level of what is symbolic, expressing in the private plane the absolute idea of "Turn Back Time", especially if the direct orientation is activated preferentially to the gaze from the facial expressions within the direct gaze, then the sea and the waves, the horizon and the perspective must be a single ALL, synonymous with the moment when I myself will turn into memory...

Leadership: Does the image in which you review your past face to face coincide with the multiplied experiences in a process of reflection of the experiences, when, for example, the image was reduced to a simple attempt to see "all diversity in unity"?

Does this mean that the artist sees his work as you capture in a photograph the image of a person or even the image from a dream that feeds you with so much energy that you end up devoting yourself to it far beyond the limits you thought you had?

I think, however, that in order to better understand the sea, I must not only look at it in comparison with myself, how vast it is and how small and insignificant I am, but I must imagine the elements of the rhythm of the waves as being indifferent in themselves, as for example, the separate sounds of a string, or the beat of a drum. And how can a succession of such beatings become significant in the midst of tides and marine currents?

However tumultuous, or unexpected, they have no effect on me unless I establish an artistic-mystical effect on them. As soon as the broadest gaze joins the apparently insignificant sounds of the sea-current, or of the waves, according to their nature and content, as admirable mysteries of nature, then the art of the beautiful (in its absoluteness) becomes a pure characteristic of the activity to see all diversity in unity. Therefore, the significance of the artist I represent is no longer conferred by the language of the spirit, the finished thing or its religious function, but resides in the very act of creating a sublime moment of Deja-Vu detached from all other unique moments in my life.

And, this is how, once again I feel transposed into the reality of Vladimir Nabokov:

"Under an absolutely improbable pretext (this was the only chance I had left and then nothing mattered anymore), I slipped out of the cafe on the beach, because I had discovered a deserted strip of sand. And there, in the violet shade of some red rocks that formed a kind of grotto, we had a short interlude of words spoken with soul, emotional feelings invested in phrases, and the only witness of the event was a pair of glasses forgotten by someone. Someone who, like me, got lost in an infinity loop, to experience a brief moment of Deja-Vu."

Under a strictly aesthetic relationship, leadership must be placed in the context of a work of art that does not self-destruct with the passage of time, but retains an indispensable component: experiencing an emotion impregnated with memories, or assuming an ideal of the "sensitivity reflected in images."

I Created You In The Image Of My Own Clarity, you, the one who so many times was overwhelmed by your past, and you remained unforgettable beyond the limits of ordinary life. I will always be happy to describe you in the eternal rocking of the waves, through the accumulation of sand on the shore over time, or entering the wonderful world of seashells, beach birds, beautiful sea grasses.

I will explore the lively seashore with an uplifting feeling, with a gaze that does not lose itself in the layers of water, and I will reveal that unique, fabulous gem, shining under the rays of the scorching sun, called: Sephietriss Ethnos Eismar (living in a state of continuous presence).

I Forgot To Die

On April 27, 2017

Do not try to resist the flow of life before you have crossed the threshold imposed by its determinism.

I have always believed that a vision can be changed, that a way of thinking can be overthrown at 90 degrees as in a mirror that seeks to control and dominate reality at all costs. In the middle was the inner content of the consciousness filled up to the brink to build a destiny. I was rather naive, a totally false and conventional ensemble of causes and effects above my understanding, very different from the way I was when I was serving my ideals of life with a glancing gaze to a future anchored in the promises of God.

What could I ask from a young family man who sees the world still in the pink colors of the fairytale motifs through the rounded lines of the possibility of being a hero of the free and prosperous, peaceful world in everything it has to offer, producing a kind of refuge in a fantastic space where everything is possible? Not that I became another, alien to my own being, a man seeing himself in darkness and complete isolation without any safety net, but now I think visions cannot be changed, they can only be adapted, laboriously interpreted as another test of the obsession with science and its conquests.

The virus was the inversion of the presence of the divine soul within my being, it was the condition to assume the denial of the dull reality in the endless shadows of a totally different nature, the immense luminosities of the sensible and worldly things. And it was spreading vertiginously to the infinite periphery of a cold, fallen, painful, wretched humanity, where man was always alone, irremediably compromised.

Leadership: Are you the weakness of a man who sees himself as a profound admirer of the art of living but unable to create it under its own name?

My name is Gerry Lane, I'm a researcher. I forgot to die. Undoubtedly by the satisfaction of a drama of great intensity, sickness, as if over time, a hundred times more intense than any overthrow of forces between good and evil. Or rather, death has forgotten me, as the artist forgets about the fatigue of the road and seems to be filled with energy when he takes part in the finishing of a special painting. For me, death was something that always happened to others, in the whirl of a call to the darkest forgetfulness of which I only absorbed the lengthy pause of separation.

We accept it as an inevitable fact, a black spot in a burning circle, seeing it as a very distant, almost unrealistic perspective, covered by the muscle of a heart I knew but whose beatings I could no longer hear. Death was a contractile tissue made up of cells of music that terribly ironed the various philosophies of living people, which medicine could not remove anyway.

The weakness of allowing yourself to be at destiny's whim and not believing in what you have been given is an interruption of the experience of belonging to a small world in a larger world.

Daimon, or the choosing of my own self, so would John Fowles characterize the answer that I was offering to death. Reminding me of his hero, who was constantly staring at himself inside a room:

"He saw himself as a profound admirer of art but incapable of creating it. He had a feeling identical to the one he had experienced in confronting the great composers or performers, the great painters, in front of some extraordinary performances on stage or on screen, in front of those who knew how to prove their talent – and who, by implication, demonstrated his own incapacity and contempt for the urban art to which he was dedicated, a risk-free, dependent, compromised art."

The purpose of my life was to look for myself between the corridors of a dead person who was bypassing me and the areas of a life that was totally unknown to me. I doubt that I could have clearly distinguished an important part of leadership issues. At that time, my creation was a way of revealing myself as a source of life in a mortal world, depending on the subtleties of the essence of being vivid and predestined to make changes.

The meaning you give to life depends on the virtue of your transposition into a nightmare role from escaping by conquering the self-indulgence by accepting the terms and conditions of worldly (or divine) laws that are disadvantageous to you.

It is the duty of every man to update his sense of confrontation with the challenges of world events in the vast expanse of the fronts he is fighting on, correlated with the ability to make decisions and assess their impact.

A front of denial of reality manipulated by its divine forces, a front of refusal to be addicted to a particular context, a front of personality definition that echoes the tilting at windmills and a front of freedom to be addicted to what you are experiencing through an experiencing of a transformed man.

You must not lose on any front, but shine on each and every single one, on the front of pain, and on the front of the miracle of revealing divinity or your essential nature. If you do not want your life to acquire valences of décor, prove yourself to be a winner in any confrontation.

Leadership is the impact you have on events that test your ability to make decisions about the power to stay consistent with your own ideas about the meaning of life in a world that no longer believes in miracles.

I Forgot to Die is the result of quickening manifested through the strength of experiencing the fight against life. A life whose determinism is explained by links of causes and effects that do not always favor you.

I Grew Up And Became A Learned Man

For a single man, a single pair of eyes says more about himself than the mirror of life can reflect on a whole world.

A long time ago I decided to try my luck at wandering. It meant an irrevocable abandonment of everything that means quality of life, a kind of spiritual establishment in eternity, passing through what the ephemera of the human condition calls "damnation". No, I won't lie about the way I understood to live, with undervalued self-esteem, excited only by the idea of freedom, landscape, nature, as if entering completely into the fascinating world of the story of a painter who traded fame for a simpler, country-side living.

Everything was so unknown, unseen, against the background of an intensely flowing narrative, full of fascinating symbolization. And I did well because on the whole difficult road, traveled only with eyes towards the sun and the stars, in the most honest way to keep myself alive, I was quite prudent. Thus, I ended up completing that part of the story that kept me constantly captive, this deep and unfathomable work interpreted only by an artist of the transient world who placed his art on the axis of truth and the sublime, starting from scratch.

A single landmark was my guide and resistance factor: Incorisedah, the appearance of a vision beyond my control. This is where the wind took me, this is the place where you, wandering like an angel of light, tried your fate according to the degree of exigency towards the idea of the particular, associated with the notion of a "moving portrait" (from a large art gallery) which it begins by changing its features unpredictably, and ends by not resembling anything. Passing through several stages of prominence and obscurity, I came to connect with that vibrant angel light, the light bringer that is within myself.

Leadership: Have you decided to open yourself to the experience of a much more comprehensive reality than you think is currently possible, and return to a level of consciousness that could be the catalyst for the great change called "Ascension"?

My soul remained intact, undisturbed, despite all the hardships. Art, with its universal masterpieces, has preserved its syncretic character, without severing its ties with the totality of life's conditions. And only my openness to a plain-air way of working raised me for the eternity of time. As this conviction strengthened, that accompanying presence of the Guardian Angel became more and more intense, who, stable and cost-effective, hid the divine glory of his presence in a colorful easel through which emotions can be transmitted (by combining multiples modles).

That is how it was meant to be. The abandonment of everything that was always present, but shrouded in illusion and disillusionment, the development of a clear vision of distance and closeness, the power to empathetically involve myself in the ideals of art, unattainable ideals that give meaning and beauty to existence, all of these made me worthy to look at that angelic light that is hidden in the heavens, and that only those with pure soul eyes can look at.

The revelation of something extraordinary seemed to await its mysterious destiny. Art, interpreting this deep and unfathomable work destined for deification, being the only guide that begged my mind to expand its horizons, revealed my qualities of a leader: resistance to the whims of the time and the authenticity of subjective feeling. The artist raised his eyes to the sky and, aware of the spark of the spirit shackled willingly in the extra fine matter of brightness, sighed from the bottom of his heart, saying: "My God does not overlook the humbled and reverent heart."

Leadership: Do you choose to explore your self using images to tell a sequential narrative, rather than anchoring yourself in the reality of a history always retold by others?

Several images flooded my mind, but I could control them: the image of an ideal nature, the image of a utopia that I would like to make real, and the image of an open book, a symbol of the process of assimilating the values of spiritual culture.

Someone said that if all the people in the paintings look like vagabonds, while being illuminated by a weak light, then it is a work of Rembrandt. In the same line of sight, the dimensions of reality in which I had to frame my artistic compositions were replaced by the image of a future dreamed by a man full of grace, uplifting through advanced views, who in a realistic world uses images to relate a sequential narrative. In another scenario, the same man uses illusions to take control of a new, cloudier, but more vigorous consciousness, like a fresh source of energy.

Whereas this point of view expressed in terms of "internal and external connection", improving the potential impact of the content of ideas and feelings on the scale of a reality more comprehensive than the usual one, is representative of the vision of John Fowles from the well-known novel "Daniel Martin":

"I defend my Self", this is how I should modify the famous expression of a novel character. A little bit of myself, and sometimes a little more, will be found in all the essays that I submit to you for reading today. I don't understand giving up any part of me. Everything in this book represents me. When the shards in the mirror render, for a single man, several pairs of eyes, ears and lips, reality is just beginning to become more interesting."

For my part, I managed to maintain the same openness of my eyes in the adventure of a life that never for a moment exhausted its mysteries. Beyond any tests of life, as a reception of art in the situation of rethinking reality, I trusted more in the easel, this grandiose wooden support on which the painter fixes his canvas, than in the reality of a history always retold by others. And I came to one conclusion: for a single man, a single pair of eyes says more about himself than the mirror of life can reflect about the whole world.

Ascension in leadership is given by the following axiom: the only guide that begs your mind to expand its horizons is resistance to the vagaries of time, followed by the authenticity of subjective feeling.

Such a subjective feeling is the faculty of the soul to overcome its condition of momentary fulfillment, in order to be able to reach the "stars".

I Left Behind Me, A Shadow (II)

On January 09, 2013

Continue to widen your comprehension of life, without becoming a prisoner of feelings that trouble you.

I begin to think I would be less than I recognize of myself, just one of the equations of a secondary reflex of absurd living, the expression of a less intelligent way of reacting and protecting myself of the improbability of reality. Every time another day passes, a week, feeling that I did the same thing, like a kind of repetition of some of the data from the annals of time, when I feel I have seen the same places and talked to the same people, I'm starting to find myself in an impossibility to exercise my whole force of personality.

The waste of life starts with a waste of all efforts to find a good reason to react to our own perception of reality. If I fail to rise to the level of morality and virtue, the capital of true values that authenticates me as a man of great character, as a first attempt to circumvent any compromise made with the forces of natural impulses to write my journal in the sight of the world, actually meant to expose me dramatically into a game of interactions between "conformism" and "coercion".

Leadership: Does your story have the power to constantly transform without your presence in the present being essential to maintaining the authenticity of the path you are on?

I could have been in another place at any time, tasting the different lives of other characters in the world I know, discovering new forms and styles of living with the most interesting stories to share, from which I would have so much to learn. But always something keeps me in a place from the perspective of a journey through a labyrinth of deformed mirrors in which a reality of regretting and a story of living through repetition pass through.

In the preface of the book "Perpetuum Mobile", Silvia Mariana Brăescu wrote: "As a shell I could close the story, the precious pearl of my heart and keep it for the rest of my life, and there it would remain forever. The ultimate mystery. My mystery."

Unlike the moments I experience in remembering past moments, delineating the global character of the things that worried me and giving me all the options for the overall viewing needs, implying by this operation a certain distance from the excessive tendencies to explain through reflection the meaning of life, the story of my reinventing has as a leitmotif the captivity of a state of mind that is triggered only when I act in violation of the present.

Leadership: Are you a hundred percent authentic in the feelings of the present moment about the consistency of the reality between the need to continue to self-diminish and the thread of the story that keeps you in an ongoing attempt to understand the experience of life?

You accept to live by how you react to what is happening to you or give up asking whether your story is fiction or reality.

In fact, "Acceptance" or "Renunciation" are the two parallel lines that do not touch, derived from the evolution of past and present - which in its turn determine the future. Two decisive forces that divide people into two categories: winners and losers, those who strongly defends their condition, and those who disagree their role, beliefs and mission (which support leadership).

In order to add a huge value to your life, seen as an intervention in the formation of personality, you must respect the essential condition of your initiative to accelerate your transformation: the acceptance.

The acceptance of change, the progress towards a fundamental transformation at all levels, is like a life insurance policy: choosing whether to sign or not is yours. The great experience of the authentic living that your life assures, in many dialogues with yourself on account of the interpretation of your reality, your grandeur, your perfection, gives rise to the mood of revealing yourself as a progressive philosopher who tries to give personality to an entity of cognitive type that it will wholeheartedly call a "GUIDE".

Leadership: How can you navigate the maze of life without getting lost in the mirrors of the past, finding the balance between keeping personal secrets and opening up to new experiences?

If you are looking for a renewal of identity, of reflecting and acting, you must be willing to relate more to the dimension of beliefs that either sabotage your life, or channel your perception of what you are struggling towards a uniformity of philosophical thinking. That is, to put your personal reality and personal evolution into the forefront of the mirror image of the central cause that causes your conscious "perturbation" of what is happening to you.

With responsibility without raising objections, which do nothing but to lengthen the process of evolution, you must sign the agreement with your own person, to confirm the fact that you understand the terms and conditions imposed by your future status.

Do you easily respect the essential condition of your initiative to transform yourself into a different person? Do you detach yourself from the misunderstood part of you, or you easily accept it? How do you cross the steep slope of the alternative? Do you show yourself open to change or continue to hide yourself in the shadow of the one you were?

Leadership: Do you monitor personal perception information about meeting the evaluation requirements that you attribute to a silent and powerful opponent?

Accepting the change in terms of redefining the concept of "self" is the first step towards the great transformation of the leader profile. It is given by the feeling of plenitude from that key moment, in which you manage to define yourself, when all your qualities come together into a single nucleus, and materializes into a set of actions that lead ultimately to achieving your own potential.

The acceptance is applied to the entire spectrum of your existence as a Man and as a leader. It is realized and manifested practically, when you are running into the direction of the "shadow" that you glimpse on the horizon. When you channel your efforts towards the misunderstood part of you, when you come to understand in a new way and clearly something you always felt intuitively. You must support yourself on the "shoulders" of acceptance if you want to add value to your life.

An insufficiency or a lack of decisions that must be taken in times of uncertainty, when suspicions are hanging over you, when your horizons are misty, then reflects over your entire evolution – may diminish your ability and willingness to get deal with those defining aspects of your character that support your practiced leadership style.

The silent and powerful opponent who can take you by surprise at any time, sabotaging any attempt at your own self-denial, is the habit of always seeing yourself with the same eyes, unchanged by the daily thoughts that trouble you.

I Left Behind Me, A Shadow is a "goodbye" to day-to-day thoughts that have troubled you greatly, but from which you have fed a new understanding of yourself and of life.

Each of us is his own leader regarding his future, but it is a proof of maturity to accept transforming yourself and becoming a person that people can rely on. Into a man who has a constructive "modus operandi" for his own well and of the others, and who accepts assuming the major responsibilities deriving from his new status.

Respect the essential condition of your initiative to accelerate your transformation, so that to resonate more easily with the entire spectrum of the leadership.

I Left Behind Me, A Shadow (I)

On January 09, 2013

Respect the essential condition of your initiative to accelerate your transformation, so that to resonate more easily with the entire spectrum of the leadership.

I felt somehow a winner, finally free and able to do anything. I was offering to myself the possibility of a self-assessment, through a retrospective of my own disappointments and searches. A tacit separation of the past, healthy and complete, like an indispensable thing into my existence. Something gave me to understand that I had to do only one step towards the direction of the complete change that I glimpsed on the horizon.

A rough agreement with myself. I had to face that devouring fire that burned in me incessantly whenever I tried to initiate something. And how else to extinguish the fire, than with boldness? I was imposing to myself a last attempt, and if I failed, I was to change my route, finally and irrevocably as a hard law of life, scrupulously respected. And to look for something else, for a force of attraction, not of rejection.

Inner evolution becomes possible only when you assume the role of creator of your own identity, without imposing the beliefs of this identity on others.

An imperative renewal towards which I aspired for a while. The ideas, the persistent images, based on the combination and transformation of my defining features, never ceased to haunt me. I felt into the skin of a magician, the guardian of a strange artificial creation, which does not want to impose anyone his own visions, and who opposes a fierce resistance to all those who want to impose him certain constraints.

Winged by a renewing blast and by the specific impetus of a new beginning, I was totally dedicating myself, caring, to my inner needs. The elaborate form of the Ego's projection that says "Yes" to change. I was the ardent defender of my aspirations towards becoming someone else, towards the consolidation of an individuality significantly imposed by my own examination and assessment.

I was closer and closer to a tough "landing". I was living the illusion of a self-imposed reality.

Leadership: Can you differently highlight the subtlety of soul experiences, even if you are compelled to endure those personality traits you do not want to show to the world?

Without hesitation, I left myself worn by the steps of an inner alchemy, on which I relied, silently, with all my being. Animated by the same spirit of sacrifice, and by the same enormous will, with which Orpheus, son of the Thracian king Oeagrus, descended into hell in order to retrieve his beloved nymph. However, just like Orpheus, tormented by fears as I was, I could not respect the essential condition of my initiative to accelerate my transformation: the acceptance.

I escorted far away my desires and ideals, towards the place known only by me, towards the place, where I was not really sure I want to reach, towards the place where, through a small space between the two columns of the transformation of "to be" and "to become" could be distinguished the vulnerability, doubt and fear. Three components supported by the reality of others, three goals scored in my own gate, in the overwhelming game with life.

Identity formation is the art of guarding your creation against external constraints through constant introspection.

I was running into the direction of the "shadow" that I glimpsed on the horizon. Towards the incomprehensible part of me, the exponent of a contradictory attitude, of uncertainty that claims a monotonous uniformity. I was unconsciously capitulating before the unknown.

I was not aware of what happens with me, with my soul and mind, with my experiences, with all that was composing me in relation to everything that surrounded me. As if an unseen force rised me to an unexpected acuteness of the senses. And, the same force brought me down then, into a total exhaustion.

Everything seemed to mix into a perpetuum mobile of the identity, of remembrance, of the passage of time and regain. I was crossing the steep slope of the alternative: acceptance or renunciation. It was a big challenge for someone, who became the slave of a state on the time axis, in relation with only two references: present and past.

Does the one who I am permanently take the place of the one who I was?

Leadership: Do you show yourself open towards change, or you hide into the shadow of the one who you were from the perspective of self-realization that suffers certain imperfections?

Do you aspire to a total renewal? Do you have to do a single step towards the direction of a definitive change? Does this step involve an acceptance or a renunciation? Do you dedicate yourself entirely to your inner requirements? Do you live the illusion of a self-imposed reality? Are you escorting far away your desires and ideals, towards the place where you are not sure you want to reach?

I remember what was saying at one moment the expert in terms of leadership, John Maxwell: "To my delight, I discovered that a leader can be built." I agree with this view.

However, all this process of building the leader, who can always be put into operation, the important part of self-realization into present or future, can be pursued on two levels: the acceptance or renunciation. The desire of conquering some new frontiers, or the capitulation before the unknown.

The only imperfection that self-realization can have is the contrast between how to look at yourself in the context of giving up the ideals in which you believe and the reality you impose as the limit of a weakly-dampened oscillation between what's happening to you and what you know you cannot change about yourself.

The shadow symbolizes man's state of being in relation to the act of perceiving the self-impacted reality from the point of view of a specific momentum to a new beginning of the cycle for the relationship between the blurred image of one's own identity when you forget your roots and continuity, and surrendering to the unknown regarding transformation can guide you to fulfillment.

I left behind me, a shadow brings to the fore the removing resistance towards change and reopening of a bright path, of real interest to life. Be prepared to decide the moment of separation from the past, of the one you were, bringing a major contribution to the identification and exploitation the potential of getting into a better version of you.

The decision to change yourself fully belongs to you. If you want to make from you a leader, you must rely on the analysis of your potential, of the not imposed acceptance to follow an upward trend in accordance with your personality and your capacity of transformation - the acceptance of renunciation to the past, and your anchorage in the present and future.

I Like Your House

On February 23, 2014

Experiment new forms of control over the stimulating components of reality, so that you produce an efficient correspondence between aspirations and self-realization.

I like your house and I wouldn't have believed it. I'm a bit old-fashioned myself, which means a little grumpy. I love old houses, old buildings. I don't like all the match boxes that keep getting built everywhere. Big crates. Gigantic beehives. I like buildings with some ornaments on them, with a certain grace.

But I like this house. It's simple and very modern, I suppose, but it has style and it's bright. And when you look out, you see things differently than you did before. *

Leadership: Did you form a vision of what you want to obtain over what you already have, in terms of a reality that continues to always show a different perspective of it?

In the "income" area of leadership, if you measure exactly what you truly want to obtain from your own investments in everything you like, you must first have a vision of what you want to obtain over what you already have.

And to form a vision of what you want to achieve in addition to what you have, in terms of a reality that continues to always show another perspective of itself, is actually to recognize the triggering factor of an intrigue, of unexplained desires to reinvent yourself in an aesthetic manner (which is pleasing to the eye rather than financial interest).

But above all, you need to know the limit beyond which this pleasure may overwhelmingly diminish. It is that perceptive limit over a reality that pressures you and doesn't assure compatibility with the norms of damping the "fixed asset": your consistency in restraining your desires.

Leadership develops when you experience new and different sensations of control over the stimulating components of reality, through a deeper and more useful understanding of your needs of fulfillment. Which allows you to see things differently than you did before. You are the center of leadership and people follow you depending on what is most important to you, depending on how you see things and on the aspirations that fuel your goals.

Leadership: Can your aspirations produce an effect of "alteration" over your inner authority, as compared to the offer of selling a house with a unique aesthetic look?

How do you create your own expectations? Do you feel that one thing fits you best, that it belongs to you and you alone and that nothing can change this fact? This is an approach that brings an increase in the demand for all that is beneficial to your science, which means that you have a healthy attitude by experiencing the feeling of accomplishment.

Maybe that is why writer Anthony Silard, president of the organization "The Center for Social Leadership", strongly urges his readers to invest their energy in finding the congruence point between thoughts and feelings.

Because the evolution of your model to perceive you in the administering of a new appreciation of the directions of exploring of aesthetic reality (accounted for as an adjustment of your own experiences to the imperatives of the moment) is due to your capacity of accepting a certain "offer" that fits your own perception of the existing situation.

This "offer" is consistent with what you feel satisfies your needs, a feeling of kinship and close connection with everything around you, giving value to your own life.

By focusing on the values of things in the understanding, with faith and gratitude, that you will benefit from your investments, material or otherwise, you will be able to assume that vision and those personal aspirations that do not produce an effect of "alteration" of your own inner authority.

From the perspective of a house's aesthetics, leadership presents itself as a need to take advantage of a quality thing that can help you achieve the desired uniqueness by giving you a new vision of what an obsolete image means related to what mirrors a new reality.

I Like Your House highlights the compatibility between what you are, what you feel and what you can achieve, adapting to market offers. Something that imposes the analysis of realities under many aspects, so that you can obtain a correlation between aspirations, uniqueness and self-realization.

I Look At Myself Without Stopping To Look At The Target

On February 19, 2022

Self-image is not only a means of artistic expression; it also expresses a point of view of the compromise made between what is seen and what is not seen.

Art is a world in which imaginary aspects predominate. Or the conceptual renewal of the content of images that seem to be detached from another world presupposes, in the case of my creation, a synchronization with the embodiment of a character on a larger scale, placed between what is revealed to be real, powerful, rich and significant, and which turns out to be imaginary, where I myself am added as an honorary member of a holographic universe.

In a way that only creation glorifies and materializes, I have managed to introduce myself as an invisible instance into a reality that speaks of the need to render a new representation of this world – as an ambivalent one, in the relationship between its outward and inner face, in the form of a fairytale composition, organic, cohesive, daemonic, which makes the connection between the divine and the human.

Take for example the character Prospero, from the play "The Tempest" written by Shakespeare. Although he is exiled to an island for 12 years, he manages to turn his exile into a kingdom of God on earth through magical powers and esoteric teachings. But here too there are inherent ambiguities. For it is not about exile in a purgatory that makes you judge yourself harshly and realize the value of what you no longer have, but it is the exile of an artist in a macrocosm made up of many autonomous worlds, managing to encompass the whole existential human space.

And this artist, instead of a brush or chisel, has at his disposal a multitude of scenarios with various appearances, which are more and more impossible to comprehend with the mind.

Leadership: Can you lay the groundwork for a vision that inspires your inner transformation, provided you are accountable to the consciousness of a metaphysician who ensures the expansion of your being into an effect of chiaroscuro effects?

In general, art has a magnitude of magical content that, taken as such, seems to be supported by the satisfaction that imagination gives in terms of the consecutive representation of an illustration in a literary work that transposes you into other worlds and that also makes you reflect on the events that take place in secret, without the eye being forced by circumstances to see a scene that you do not want.

Let me be clear. I am an artist because I know how to borrow the most conquering charm of the spiritual vision, completely original, from a painting that could easily be classified as the setting of an inner world lived to the absolute superlative. Then, to meet myself in a visual pictorial complementarity, soothing and disturbing at the same time.

Let's be honest. In the representations of the great masters of universal painting, the chiaroscuro of the enigma predominates, glimpsed through the veil of a unitary spatial-temporal duality, in which the miracle has its part, turning ordinary reality into another face of the world: the World of God. Is it not so that art, as in Ovid's "Metamorphoses", contains a mixture of the most heterogeneous elements of decoration, but also endless disparate comparisons?

Not in vain does the whole set of features of my creation give the impression of representing an articulated narrative scene, being supported by the science of physics and natural phenomena meant to prove abundantly, veiled, imperceptible, the incomparable value of a superior power which, in a certain gallery of paintings, could be composed of disparate fragments, converted into symbolic information.

Leadership: Do you focus on completing a larger area of representation of the "power of being high above" by adapting your boundaries to a context in which the ideal vision of you follows multiple directions of interpretation of a mythical image?

The artist in me demands the authority to master the art of magic, despite his intention to place the research of magic in a scientific direction. In this sense, my creation is also manifested around the vision that makes the given objects look like human silhouettes whose outline is symbolically outlined on the canvas of events, with the most unimaginable shapes. They are like shadows looming against the background wall of strange images. Or, they are seen as spirits working through supernatural matters to protect me from all evil.

Ultimately, a creator does not stop at a single creation, but continues to create other refined models for applying comparisons between two or more distinct entities, and yet in a relationship of organic unity.

And if I ever feed my soul with the idea that no creator will be considered brilliant if he does not create his own "Absolute", then maybe, just maybe, I will admit my guilt of being strong, protected, ancestral and immortal. Slowly, slowly, I will camouflage my power in the immortal entity of a spirit that binds them all, by which every created thing is a partaker of the order of the world.

Then I'll let my character speak for himself. Like Prospero, I will bury my books of secret teachings deep in the ground, I will bury the magic wand, and I am determined never to use magic again. I will embark on another pleasant journey, to the natural and worldly, under the watchful eye of the good spirit, Ariel, who is also one of my creations...

The ideal vision I have of myself, in the perimeter of leadership, has as a point of tangency the characterization algorithm of a character who has the courage to proclaim the arbitrariness of the individual will to self-transcend, but without being a product of the will of egocentric sovereignty.

I Look At Myself Without Stopping To Look At The Target when I manage to be a double of mine: first an artist, then a magician. And no magician can call himself an artist without his art encompassing both painting and that little dose of madness that transforms him from a universal creator into an immanentist God.

I'm Alive

On May 28, 2016

Redefine your foundations on which you base your approach to life, so as to be at peace with yourself.

I am caught in a sort of unknown fear and at the same time, a sort of contagious admiration, the expression of a moral conflict between the domination of the ever so tense Ego and the ever so passionate writing, unable to tell if, by any chance, I received a certain gift from nature that gives me the ability to modify or destroy the truth with which I am burdened to live for all my life.

The essence of my virtues (discipline, concentration, self-control and temperance) included in this escape of the mind from reality, always fueled by new discoveries and maintained within the limits of expressive formulations, helps me to accept myself as I am, contributing to the willful acceptance of my personality in a space of uniqueness called Limenilodhis (the brilliance of a secret writing).

This thing with the truth, passion, actions and their effects combined, of which I am afraid will propagate towards an intense state of love and gratitude, all of them taken as a form of reaction to the duties of existence, lead to two systems of equations that allow the determination of the values of the intensities of my participation to the causality of an escape from the comfort zone. Which, the more comfortable it is, the harder it is to abandon.

Leadership: Are you in a position to consider yourself more than you are in a context that demands the application of a Creator's vision beyond the grandiose impact of a coming from non-being?

I write about myself not because I am passionate about the adventure of knowledge experiencing the unique learning experiences in an experimental space of pure thought, accepting everything that goes through my head as the sum of universally valid truths, but because knowing far enough from the point of view of philosophy I manage to translate myself into a Papus, whose words are worth remembering:

"When a man thinks he knows something and considers himself an equal to the gods, working only for his personal salvation and retreating to an ivory tower to purify himself, he receives nothing, for he has everything he needs for to be great and spiritual."

The man caught in this trap of systems with different potential for predominance, a moral one that begins with the belief in himself, and an imaginative one otherwise born from a desire, is looking for a middle ground on the threshold of a desperate choice, a relevant qualcos'altro within a variable time frame. That is why I have sometimes decided to fill my writing space with some light reflections, such as: "what I say is echoed only in the world of those who believe in stories that clarify the vision of a Creator, beyond the curtain of time, beyond the purity of the line and of the drawing, beyond the grandiose impact of an advancement coming from the non-being".

An advancement into non-being is a perception of the self in a parallel universe, like when you say magic words without anyone hearing you, or when you write about something that no one else sees but you.

Like a painter determined to destroy all canvases ever painted only to start over again, he doesn't stop pressing harder and harder the most sensitive point, the content of a written page, contemplating the beauty of a scene from nature. Completely, he is caught in his own revisionism, the redefining act of the fundamentals on which he based his approach to life.

Leadership: Do you always return to that "point of intersecting meanders" where you must always be a contributor in order to truly say: I'm alive from the perspective of creation shaped by the labour of a life full of Ego structures?

But what cannot be seen, cannot be imagined and it not disclosed, in the case of these systems of equations with a single variable of support – the endless satisfaction of hitting Replay on your own performance, is the fact that outside of all of these something else exists, of a bigger importance. Namely, the ambition of finding myself, like between pliers, in the matrix of a polishing of the performance with which I tend to accommodate.

Permanence is the relentless human condition of educating yourself, with the purpose of understanding and accepting yourself the way you are. Permanence is the culmination of the art of living according to the quality and calling you have, a point where you don't have to always be a contributor unless you have a use, only if your moral duty always passes by.

My supreme ego tells me that I can be more than a creator, that I can be the imagination of an unusual writing. At the opposite pole, my ego tormented IN CUGERO tells me to stay with my feet on the ground. So, my quality as a contributor to achieving and satisfying a fullness of the meaning of life, by discovering and including certain truths of foundation in the relationship with what is happening to me, aims at that colossal effort I make to be at peace with myself.

The revealer of truths of foundation of life, the moment he will be asked to be a leader, will turn the horizon of self-experience into a sort of assumption of a distinction between what happens to him and what depends on him to change.

Leadership: Do you reveal your creation of being reconciled with yourself by virtue of the awareness of the uniqueness of finding new correspondences of life that allow you to permanently have new experiences, again and again, always in comparison with "a weapon of seduction"?

A confession of Miranda Grey from the work of John Fowles strengthens my belief that in order to have a purpose in life it is not enough to be good at something, but to always turn that something into a different experience of expression, of freedom, an exceptional show, otherwise, you will be stuck in routine. Which does not necessarily require a deep emotional involvement.

"I fell asleep under the trees and when I woke up and glimpsed among the leaves the cobalt-blue sky and thought about how impossible it was to paint certain things. How could it have been possible to find a shade of blue that could convey the vivid and bright intensity of the sky? I suddenly felt that I no longer wanted to pain, because painting meant to showboat, that the only thing that truly matters is to live, to always live new experiences, again and again, always."

Superiority, that leadership often denounces, is the consequence of an excess of attitude.

And an excess of attitude imposed by the acceptance of an experience of freedom in creation, to a man devoted to a certain occupation, is the unconventional way of showing himself as being strong in the face of life, with the awareness of that return – again and again, always – towards what matters, towards what makes him good and responsible, towards that point where he must always be a contributor in order to be able to truly say: I'm alive.

The weapon of the seduction of a creator, the most productive direction of his nature, is dedicated to revealing new life experiences passed through the setting of a reality that can unexpectedly become unpredictable, exceeding any power of understanding, any imitation of our times.

I'm Alive is the motto of a man who tries to free himself of that burden of regrets and of the feeling of being helpless in the face of the ephemeral character of things and life in general. Creation, deepening into a reality that goes beyond the competences of ordinary human reason, is the only way to feel that you are living in full agreement with your own nature, with your own judgments, with your own vision, with your own conscience.

A man who says with all his heart: I'm alive, is the one who turns life itself into a lesson of consciousness – of being a world full of options for yourself. A world that depends on truth, passion, actions and their combined effects, all of them taken as forms of reaction to the duties of existence, propagated towards an intense state of love and gratitude.

I Only Count The Sunny Hours

The way in which science takes on the world and its things imposes new landmarks, a new language and other representations.

I am particularly interested in finding the way to penetrate a superhuman state of perfection and drunkenness, as a succession of moments of intellectual effervescence, spontaneous overflow of the life of a different Person within me, so that I can begin building a new empire of reality and become a symbol of the greatness of embracing the world's transcendence.

The triumph of this intention is the conquest of the means of language that make up the outer appearance of an artwork: color, line, volume, but also the inner aspect of the New Man with which I come into contact, relevant by the sensibility of receiving the world into the details of an era that had both lights and shadows. Here floats not the ephemeral shadow of things manifested in terms of value or price, but the visual density of the information I provide through a juxtaposition of the colors defining of a great master of the palette.

Obviously, the means of achieving something as spectacular as transforming man into a much more sophisticated double of himself with the representational means of words, without going into conflict with the laws of nature as soon as I get the chance of an escape from the conventional borders of the natural, is the clarify of the conviction that there are no innate ideas, only invented ones. In this case, I appeal to the action of color over the artistic intentions of representing an association between visual contrast and the image expressed lexically.

Therefore, the operation must be exercised not so much on external sensitive objects, but rather on the operations of the mind, perceived and reflected by an imaginary line separating the past from the future, the upper world from the lower world, a simple outline of the content of the inspiration that ensures the chaining of creative notions in a logical and readily accessible form to readers.

The predominant color of the painting I am describing is the dominant argument in a text of whose translation is the following: "I only count the sunny hours."

Leadership: Can you develop a new vision of the notion of "author" and "masterpiece" around a "You never get tired of reading it" experience from the perspective of reporting a storytelling that once started cannot be finished?

To raise the word to a level of expression, and expression to the rank of virtue is the testimony of a vision that takes place in full connection with the world – from the point of view of the content of an art full of deeds. But in terms of meaningful content, the visibility of a different person is greatly emphasized, who strongly accentuates their presence in a storytelling takes you on a mysterious journey. You never get tired of reading it !

My mere presence in a framework of aesthetic thinking with the purpose of defining a new feature of the progress of creation, especially the leaping course towards defining an identity of the Perfect Man, even if it seems to be an utopia of absolute reason, denotes the characteristics of my style of constructing a successful story. A story whose striking quality is not exactly in the life of a life lived for beautiful things, but in the necessity of focusing on the mystery of a creature of another time, which blends lucidly into the rules of an absurd game of lights and shadows.

The proof of an artistic intelligence and authenticity of the writer's fiber is given by the content of meaning on which the relationship between the visual and textual is based, integrated into an impactful story.

In a sense, this is also a way of addressing the highest science: how far am I willing to meet myself so that reality will gain the immanence of absolute materiality evoking the compact corporeality of the text and the sign, subjected to the need to be truthful, to support a reference to the truth of the real world?

Maybe perfection is to experience alterity, to treat myself as a living being in a virtually inaccessible place, or in an infinite universe, in a secret space of unforgettable experiences full of the adventure of a total science. So, I feel a duty to my other half in another space-time. I feel that I have to listen to it and at the same time give it the opportunity to make its beliefs, fears, anxieties, my dreams about the miraculous universe of art known.

The author is the symbol of "the hand that writes everything" through a person interposed between the subject and the object, by a relative and subtle agreement to everything else that is different. He associates language games with acting games in which dominates the feeling of dependence man to another man, that creation truly needs.

The masterpiece of an artist is what is distinguished beyond the visual force, it is the continuous process of symbolization that requires the experience of showing an inner world, a spectacular micro world, from a revealing angle.

Leadership: Can you easily read your thoughts like a picture in a mirror, according to the skill to capture what seems incomprehensible in a space where everything is interpreted as an endless creation?

In Umberto Eco's novel, "The Name of the Rose", there is a fragment that reminds me of the way I was struggling to understand a certain direction imprinted on the science I was serving and cultivating in my writings:

"I headed straight for the labyrinth. I was entering it alone for first time, the long shadows cast by the lantern on the floor terrified me like the previous night's glimpses. I was afraid at any moment to not find myself in front of a mirror, because of such nature is the magic of the mirrors that even if you know they are mirrors they do not stop worrying you."

Always when you approach an answer to your dilemmas, there is another common denominator, another face of reality, another way and a new beginning. Science is measured in the ability of intuition to capture what originally seems incomprehensible. On the scale of pride of being different, belonging to a privileged elite in front of which every reason gains a dominant position, through a subtle mirror of reality in consciousness, this is a kind of parallelism to my original way of being, with that important part of me I was telling you about earlier.

Even now there is a conflict between me and leadership, between the requirements of the Ego that wants to say everything and the protective requirements of the higher science that only wants itself picked up and understood by the reflexive spirits, by these dominant straights particularly positioned to the coordinate axes of the total force exerted on the formation of a new form of thinking.

How will I let others know all my secrets without making haste in meeting that basic need of leadership, which more than anything demands patience, perseverance, caution, and discretion?

An endless creation has as a main feature the ability to see things from the perspective of a science that deals with a topic of great interest as a whole, but also, in its diversity, to change the reality you know and in which you live.

I Only Count The Sunny Hours is the outline of the content of a painting rendered by the delicate interpretation of an inner reality, by the accuracy of artistic evocation and the power of imagination. But especially through the chromatic power of the contrasts between two different beings: one that portrays its purpose in the design of the literary approach, the other that tends towards the beauty of a world laid out on the canvas.

I Paint Only In Words

On March 10, 2019

A writing following the twists and turns of the soul is the movement of a brush on a canvas of a subject caught between two similar worlds.

What provides my understanding with all the materials of the highest thought, from which the plans of the universe make up most of my belief in the concepts of superiority, is the care of my creator essence according to an exceptional artistic destiny. The understanding of the generating mechanism of authenticity, referring to the visual density of the images meant to constitute a revealing event, was obtained by a correlation of the symbols arranged in an extension of the holy things attached to human existence, but also for a stricter incarnation in the rules of science.

Symbols are produced under a modeling influence of a being which in itself carries the reason for the meaning of an existence detached from the horizon of timelessness, extracted from the greasy machinery of an "eternal" world so different from the narrow and vapid mundane. The aesthetic resorts used to vibrate the human soul with symbols are the pure color of turquoise, in the case of painting, and in the case of a writing of great finesse, a connection is made with the expressions of wide circulation in the literary space of pleasant secrets (metaphors, personifications, epithets, associations, analogies).

Authentic leadership involves the ability to combine seemingly disparate elements, creating a harmonious composition from different themes and perspectives.

Not even now do I recognize my hypostases, I do not know what I have metamorphosed into over time, but I feel caught between the quicksilver of the highest knowledge and the broad universe of meanings of spiritual retrieval.

The painting is similar to writing as nature resonates with the visual function, as the soul resonates with what the eyes observe in a deterministic system. The expressiveness, finesse of execution and the brightness of the color resonate with the depth of thought in defining the concepts of identity, alterity and artistic and cultural diversity from the necessity of the relational perspective in the study of social phenomena.

Thus, I am entitled to consider myself more than a painter who oscillates between erudition and the brush, but as an entire universe of artistic expressions involved in the writing act.

Leadership: Can you make permanent proof of an aesthetic superiority describing the psychological experience of attachment to an image that even if it is directly related to the characteristics of your personality, has an unmistakable existence and destiny?

When I relate in an innovative way to the act of painting about the way I have to convey an emotion, I remember what literary critic Hippolyte Taine said about the French writer La Fontaine who felt and immortalized everything in true images:

"He not only describes the passions of the soul, but feels that man's imagination is organic, that in order to understand the diversity of feelings, the diversity of gestures and attitudes must be observed. That we see the spirit only through the body. He describes in the same way he narrates, visualizing and in detail: for to describe means to narrate, and the only difference is that in the second case the details succeed one another, while in the first case they are together."

The first provision in the act of writing, as in the case of painting, is the richness of details and the search for particular traits meant to trigger certain emotions. Something urges me to imagine my life in the mirror of things around me, to organize the whole space of the painting, the play of rediscovered representations and the possibility of looking at things from the perspective of a dream, a poetic delusion, a flashback as a revelation of an absolute reality or as a thought about what I want to do for God.

From a psychological point of view, the artist is attached to a picture of reality by considering the study of man in all his hypostases (both that of a creator and that of a muse), interpreting his destiny, his consequences and his role in society, depending on the visual impression of the (chromatic) details that would be beneficial to a collective memory. The unmistakable destiny of man has to go through the famous metaphor of the statue that comes to life thanks to the love of the Creator for art.

Leadership: Can you treat the subject of a painting from the point of view of a dominant idea that goes through the beautiful metaphor of a territory where you can coexist for a long time through the role of Alter-Ego?

A writing following the twists and turns of the soul is the movement of a brush on a canvas of a subject caught between two similar worlds: the symbol of a divine creation given to man with a high sensitivity coefficient and the symbol of a spiritual resurrection. Here we are dealing with a reality seen from the perspective of a way of confronting the being with limits, with destiny, but also with the image of an idyllic world on the line of capitalizing the elements of language assimilated for the consolidation of improvisational skills.

This is true literary improvisation: to think of the fine brush movement that triggers a whole range of extraordinary feelings in the viewer's soul. The visual density of the information I provide through a balanced color matching is therefore the point of strength in creativity that does not hesitate to qualify as an exceptional art-appealing artistic environment for the image of a symbolic reality, updated by the message of emotional thinking of great beauty.

An autonomous agreement in the big orchestra. Before you come to the intrinsic content of each color and theme, you must explain a revelation that cancels the theories of the classics, just as an excellent anatomist explains the human body springs from its own experience of a good observer of isolated facts and a profound analyst of various, mysterious phenomena.

A revelation can be illustrated by the intimate dialogue of: what you are when you are tracing on the canvas the features of the reinvented model of memory strategies and what you are when you finish the painting, seeing yourself as the model. It is here that the Alter-Ego comes in, "the stranger with whom the creator makes a provisional peace", only to make a new variant of his personality.

Leadership: Can you perfect your art of maintaining your authenticity using the "symbol-meaning" ensemble from which to translate the image of a reality that is more than the sum of its components?

In the face of a mixture of bright and bold colors, the proportions of the essential and objective determinations of the present, in the case of an authentic artist, nuance the magic of the fantastic, and can return with heart and mind in the world of tales and mystical substrates in which the "body of Christ" or "the Elixir of Youth" are viewed from surprising angles. One is to order the whole semantic of a symbolic universe, and something else entirely to express the "height of a sky that has never been the same" within the depths of space.

A way to achieve a writing full of spirit by using the "symbol-meaning" ensemble is to explore the necessity of renewing art from the awareness of the specific properties of each color (emanates heat, attracts attention, stimulates nerves) and their spiritual correspondence. The impasse that occurs in this case, in addition to the fact that it is necessary to explore the "ineffable", between figurative and abstract, is to define a space of reality that inspires a story.

In concepts related to aesthetic superiority, consisting in the decomposition of ideas into units and in reducing sensations and reflections, dominates the cross effect: attention, understanding, expressiveness and erudition are rendered by metaphors such as: "a comforting touch of galaxies", "the sun of righteousness", "mercury womb", "a death that is not the end", etc.

The qualitative change of the whole image, which can produce dependence on a succession of facts and events, gives me for analysis the experience of a painting that comes to life, aging while the owner keeps their youth. A simple contour line that in terms of classical art is an elemental category of plastic syntax.

An image of reality can mean more than the sum of its component parts when it is based on the metaphorical instinct, on the non-perceptive resources of imagination that possesses the freedom to combine perspectives, forms, elements, entirely different themes of art, from compositions with characters, with abstract compositions.

I Paint Only In Words whenever I want to control the feelings of the image that I have formed about reality. This title is a suitable metaphor for a conversation with myself, like a spring landscape painting, where the mountains stretch out in many ways, melting into the sky, where only one color catches my eye: azure, a color of nostalgia or infinity.

I Promise I Won't Kill Myself, But I Don't Promise I Won't Die

On April 01, 2019

Repairing the past requires dedication to your own actions and choices to turn the wheel of destiny for good.

- Christiane, continued Julius with a serious and almost solemn tone. You said just now that because of your too long silence Frederique and Lothario are now separated. Well, it is your duty now to act to bring them together, and instead of opposing what I will undertake to that end, you must support my projects, help me to carry out my plan, whatever it may be. Let us repair the harm we have done and, if we suffer afterwards, at least have done our duty.

- I'm ready, she said, resigned.

- Here's what you need to do. Frederique is at Eberbach. You will go there, bring her secretly to Paris, so that Samuel will not suspect anything. She is probably restless. You will inform her. Here, she will live with you, you will protect her, you will be her mother. No one will know that you are in Paris and that you are with her. I, in the meantime, will continue my plan.

- What plan?

- Do not ask me.

Leadership: How might you combine the contrast between past mistakes and present actions to shape a perspective of your life in which symmetry and harmony become fundamental principles?

- Oh! she burst out, it's something terrible, since you don't have the courage to tell me, I who revealed such terrible things to you!

- The first condition for me to succeed, said Julius, is an absolute secret. If the walls knew what I wanted to do, everything would collapse. Samuel must sink into a deep silence. Let him not be afraid of anything, let him think that he is pulling me on a string like in the past.

- What I want to do, I know only myself and I try to think as little as possible about this thing, for fear that no vague intention will be read on my face. When the moment comes, everything will suddenly break out of my heart, like a lion from its den, and woe to him who will feel a claw in his throat.

Leadership: Have you ever felt the subtle balance of your decisions shape the destinies of those around you, at times when your self is faced with existential dilemmas?

In the effort to repair the wrongs of the past, taking responsibility and collaboration become essential pillars for correcting the situations created by one's own actions, highlighting the healing power of solidarity and personal sacrifice in the name of the common good.

Count von Eberbach paused, as if regretting that he had spoken too much.

- It is enough for you to know, he continued, that my plan is twofold: I will serve my family and my country. You, who love me, would not, would you, banish the supreme consolation of accomplishing such ends with my already cold hands? Come, be generous, be intelligent, be above the petty interests that prefer reality to the joys of the soul, and give me your consent. Tell me that you allow me to die and that you promise me to live.

- I promise you I won't kill myself, said Christine, but I don't promise you I won't die.

In leadership, the only reliable teacher is the awareness of choosing a course of action that combines the clear intention of the proposed goal with the correction of situations in which you do not feel seen for what you do.

I promise you I won't kill myself, but I don't promise you I won't die, these are the words of a man who would like to right the wrongs of the past through personal sacrifice. But repairing the past requires courage and dedication to your own actions and choices in order to turn the wheel of destiny for good. Sometimes the delicate balance between the desire for revenge and its consequences leaves you feeling torn between the values you identify with and the guilt that prevents you from being happy.

I Think Of Myself Every Day

On April 14, 2021

Try to discover your inner vision beyond the boundaries of your own search, through the prism of what art has to hide in it regarding a universe that is self-constructing and evolutionarily self-feeding from its own resources.

I think of myself every day. I seem to ask myself increasingly difficult questions, which highlight the artist's predilection for everything that is in perpetual change, movement, for everything that is fleeting, transient. Sometimes, through a strange knowledge, I consider myself the prisoner of another world, more spectacular, described in so many books with oriental mysticism, it can be admired only in a painting by a nameless artist.

And like any entrance into another world, where every day is different from the other, my captivity being more spectacular through the charm of technically unfeasible existence in this world, I delight in the maximum knowledge springing as if from the vision of a worthy director, accustomed to link the actor to the set, filming him in a counter-dive, in the cutout of other times.

Such is my world, it traverses as deeply as possible the horizon of an imagination created with an astonishing ascension to the sublime. It is an intellectual referral that refers to the way the artist juggles the elements of the unseen world, to highlight the complexity of the dialogue with that work of art that revitalizes your courage to believe that beyond reality there is something beautiful, sublime, divine.

However, why am I worried? Because I constantly feel the presence of something different from myself inside of me, something that anchors me in an "I-Origin-Unreal" that needs to be interpreted with meticulousness and full wisdom in order to be fully included in the work of a thought called Tranormhisys. It signifies the vibration of the corresponding point in the microcosm of the human being recreated through words, directly and indirectly, through parables, through silences, through the way in which the artist manages to weave the context-support for the notions expressed randomly.

Of such a twisted nature is my thinking, still thinking of myself, that I often forget to experience and feel the whole substantiality of the work.

Leadership: Can you change your view on the act of making art, understanding that you could actually be known under several types of being?

A preliminary remark. From what I myself notice, being a much more evolved world than it seems at first sight, in case I have full confidence in the cosmic scope of a permanent genesis, I understand that in fact I could be known under several types of being: one without end, one inaccessible who does not communicate personally with anyone and one who works in the world, however not directly, indirectly, through energies. Here art has a hard word to say: what can make me understand what I experience, has no comparisons and variations in this world.

And if the sophisticated structure of my brain revolves around the defining features of art, the creative process, and the created act, then it goes without saying that everything I think suggests the artist's devouring desire to turn his realistic-fantastic vision into new symbols, metaphors or allegories. I'm just saying that giving my brain to art is done by virtue of the natural dispositions of the original self to face that phase of symbolism that favored the birth of surrealism, engaging in more mature forms of relationship with what is called Kriplansetikes(a dynamic of feelings placed in a fabulous, imaginary lyrical narrative).

And whenever I speak of a mind that can only be studied through the science of art, I feel that I find myself in the words of Patrick Drouot from a purely spiritual book:

"Suddenly, I felt like I was switching to 'turbo'. My higher consciousness and other levels of myself seemed to be looking for me. But which 'me' and who was looking for me? Me and myself, as if various scattered parts of myself reunited. At this stage, once again, everything was becoming simple, obviously, I had no body, I existed, I was like an artificial satellite in orbit around the Earth, I was very close to this border that separates one universe from another, a dimension from another... I felt like I was getting an original dimension, MY dimension, the one I had, the one I have and will have in eternity."

Leadership: Can you strengthen the connection between art and the universe by reflecting on the search for a destiny that can be read shortly before it is forgotten?

I think I have made myself understood, even if the meaning of my self goes beyond the meaning of the convention of avoiding otherness, of the double state of consciousness present in many worlds. And if I continue to revolve around myself, observing the light radiation that haloes me from all sides, around the essential features of a reality where the color of the soul counterbalances the drawing inspired by the atmosphere suggested by a certain state, then I tend to look at an image in which the invisible is visually represented by a metaphor for the rediscovery of a paradisiacal universe.

Or, this is my universe, crossed by a clever, inventive mind, united by a color palette of warm, natural and delicate tones, such as red, yellow and orange that highlight an image in which I always find myself the same, and however different. Here's what actually happens. I walk behind the scenes with the thought of finding myself in depth, in art, in science, in the same state and situation, at the moment of opening the time capsule. Therefore, I use metaphysical knowledge to understand as much as possible this phenomenon of greater thought than greatness itself.

At the same time, I have learned to be someone else, very different from someone who constantly whispers to me to stay the same. I have learned that only on the basis of the logic of beauty, in which metaphor plays a major role, is the unity of my own being found, which is also part of the "Odyssey" in search of the Great Alchemical Work (under the sign of the Sacred Mystery).

Even if one day I will be forgotten in this world, even if my words will be forgotten without guilt, and if the forgetfulness will take the magnitude of a descent into obscure territory, at least I have the faith to believe that the universe has come to greet me. I opened up to it and it to me. I understand that the mission of art is to be the mirror of a universe that is inconceivable without you.

Therefore, here is the conclusion:

A man who seeks himself is a man who thinks of himself daily, as if he were thinking of someone else in the shadow of fervently spoken words, with that prophetic weight with which only he is set to hear them.

Every Day I Think Of Myself, just as every day I recognize myself more and more as someone else. The universe has given way to a wonderful man with whom I have reason to assume that true pleasure in perceiving art is the path that must be taken so that I myself can become a universe. One day I will understand why an infinite Universe can be reflected in one man, just as complex, deterministic and amazing.

I Will Continue To Always Be My Own Creation

On February 26, 2022

Try to accomplish a special artistic task in such a way that the truly superior science you demonstrate is the testimony of the artist that contains the signature of your own personality and authentic style.

In my hermetic writings on science, in which science is often seen as an unexpected encounter with a star whose formation cycle has become essential in the record of mythical time, I have tried to stand horizontally: between the secret of a great work of art and that epic of matter and spirit integrated into a vast and powerful "Star Trilogy" that knows no programming of the unpredictable.

In particular, everything seems to be different from what it really is. Nothing is more misleading, just as nothing is more tempting in a transient conjuncture than finding refuge in the midst of an encouraging but ambiguous present that can lead to the formation of a boundless horizon called the Universe. Here is the brilliant artist, the sculptor in light, the imitator of the appearances of the real world, who can transform into any character, without stopping to live when he encounters an "Eternal Darkness".

I have to admit one more thing: during the process of reorienting science towards an innovative representation of reality, finding myself in all seven parts or genres of harmonious and semantically consistent coloring, I was prepared to experience the matrix of all the main characters in a fantastic trilogy of self-search and universal meaning. I could not have been an imitator of the appearances of the real world, without capturing the essence of an "unexpected" or an "unusual".

Leadership: Are you able to perceive yourself as a result of the expression "I am a hero of another time", which can also be applied to an art form meant to describe the origins of a sustainable creation?

In a literary or pictorial work, comparison is a means of artistic expression that helps to improve the meaning of an action, an object, or an event. You have to be an artist to make the parts of a painting or other work of art hang together – as a whole – through unique visual relationships in the realm of science, at different levels of complexity, as in the case of Gilgamesh's Epic.

In the Epic of Gilgamesh, in this epic poem from ancient Mesopotamia, there is the story of a journey to another world, attributed to a very gifted mortal. In other words, in the well-known story of Gilgamesh – considered "the one who saw everything" (Sha Naqba Imuru), the historical account of the failure of the first mortal who aspired to obtain immortality is followed. Even if no evidence of this has been found, nor in previous cases, one thing remains certain: the work of creation can be imposed as both abstract-geometric and emotionally-fascinating only by gaining a greater reputation for wisdom.

Especially the artist, in order to be able to sign his writings under the pseudonym "The King of Heroes", so obviously oriented under such a mentality, he must demonstrate his ability to successfully use science and consciousness at the same time, under the same sky and in a constant, two-dimensional frame. It relates to spiritual reality due to unimaginable circumstances that can tear down the whole ideological and artistic scaffolding built over the centuries. And he, the artist consecrated by the Byzantine mosaics, can reach permanence only if he is mediated by the gods and only after passing through various initiation stages.

Leadership: Can your creation follow its natural path in the continuity of a vision whose ideational support is directed towards the acquisition of a true image that is perpetuated between parallel planes?

An artist who metamorphoses into substantial pictorial compositions, epidemically conquering the whole universe through his ideas, becomes a symbol of Creation. The same is true for an artist of words who metamorphoses into images of higher forms of existence, or of completing unrealistic options by making unexpected encounters with deeply spiritual beings.

In both cases, the artist does not make a law of hiding any of the real purposes in which he conducts his experiences of traversing time in relation to an allegory or fictional story that may take on the proportions of an archetypal metaphor, or the proportions of a struggle between Good and Evil in the "most ontological" sense.

But, without a doubt, the artist follows a contrary maxim, well integrated in the result of a prudent realism that supports the guiding idea of his entire work in a world where nothing is a certainty. This maxim says that "those who follow false flashes may discover important truths, and that you may often come across one thing while actually looking for another."

Here comes the measure of my creation, stating the hypothesis that the existence of a spatial horizon of the Self must be involved in the formation of a double positive, as an effect of an alterity that must be, in turn, external to the subject that generated art. And here, without saying it out loud, I secretly confess that this is the measure of my creation: to make accessible to me the mirroring of life in fabulous ways about an identity that is based on unique and unrepeatable symbols.

Understanding a work of art involves both recognizing the resemblance between the creator and the character in which it is metamorphosed, and understanding the convention between what you know you are in reality and what you feel others see in you.

I Will Continue To Always Be My Own Creation whenever I build a character after my own likeness, knowing that what defines me completely is a permanent assimilation of reality through knowledge. This is not because what I call creation is in fact an encounter of the intellect with the imagination, but because by reflecting on how to create a single whole from disparate elements, I am perfecting my functions of synthetic and analytical thinking.

I Will Leave The Choice To You

On August 23, 2010

Learn to properly manage a situation in which you are put in a difficult position, in an attempt to find the truth that empowers you, or to justify your actions without hurting others.

I insulted you. Of course you will ask me for a repair. I offer you. At six o'clock, today, be on the bridge of Saint-Denis. Cross it, turn left and walk along the river for about ten minutes. When you reach a thick curtain of poplars, if you don't see me, wait for me.

Come alone. I will also come alone. I will bring two pistols with me. Only one will be loaded.

I will leave the choice to you. If you kill me, the letter itself will serve as your justification. I admit that I provoked you and slapped you, that I put you in a situation of absolute necessity, under the threat of being publicly disgraced, and that I decided and demanded the terms of the duel. If I kill you, you need not worry about my fate, I am in a situation where nothing scares me anymore.

But one of us must die. At least one, maybe both. I am too unhappy and you are too mean, Julius von Eberbach.

This letter extinguished the last glimmer of hope in Lothario's heart. He said not a word about Count von Eberbach's grudge against his nephew, and by demanding a duel without witnesses, deprived Lothario of any chance of learning the truth. However, he felt more and more that at the base of the terrible situation was a horrible confusion that he had to clear up at any cost. He rummaged through his memories in vain, he had done nothing to allow or even justify his uncle's rage.

Leadership: Can you form an objective perspective on yourself in a context such as: "I cannot know the truth unless I know the cause", to indicate that you should not overestimate or underestimate yourself?

He had been wrong, perhaps, towards his uncle. Engaged and married by him to Frédérique, he had perhaps not sufficiently managed the susceptibilities of a delicate and completely unusual situation. He had not, perhaps, respected Count von Eberbach's jealousy, he had not been careful enough not to give pretexts to his suspicions, he had disregarded his orders, seeing Frédérique again two or three times on the road from Enghien.

But from these disobediences, excusable at his age, because of his love and the relations which the count himself had established between him and Frédérique, from these slurs of love, to real accusations, to a serious insult, to an insult that would justify retaliation to Count von Eberbach, it was a real chasm. His uncle was certainly not referring to such mistakes when he attributed to him the word with which he ended his letter: a scoundrel.

Yes! beneath their things there was something, some scheming, some betrayal! But who will reveal the motive of this enigma?

Leadership: Can you establish a link of causality and tension between efforts to search your memories and the chance to learn the truth, without exposing yourself to the danger of being humiliated or discredited in public?

To go straight to his uncle and demand an explanation, forcing him to tell everything, Lothario could not even think of. It would have meant exposing himself to new violence in front of the people who would have been present, the servants, the whole world. And there had already been quite a stir around the sad and gloomy event.

And then, whatever filial feelings Lothario might have had, and however hopeless he felt at having to contend with one who had always been so good to him, his whole blood revolted at the thought of being obliged to demand an explanation from a man who- She had slapped him twice in one day, once with the glove and now with this letter.

Who to contact? perhaps to Mr. Samuel Gelb! Yes, Mr. Samuel Gelb had given him and Frederica evidence of sincere friendship. He, who had loved Frédérique, who was the master of her future, subduing her both by her past and by the oath she had taken, had had the magnanimity to give her up and give her to Lothario. And after that, his generosity had not faltered for a single moment. He always took the side of Frederica and Lothario, against the machinations of Count von Eberbach. He was indeed a reliable friend, who would not have failed him in such a decisive circumstance.

In order to advance in the knowledge of leadership, you must consider it essential to have an objective perspective on your own person in many contexts of "denying the truth and taking power", to avoid overestimating or underestimating yourself. Only in this way will you be able to maintain a realistic and healthy balance of your self-perception.

I Will Leave You The Freedom Of Choice whenever you face me, the truth, the truth about what you do not yet know about your own person, leaving the outcome of the final judgment to God. In any case, the fight for the truth is important as long as your "opponent" is not the pride of feeling stronger than you really are, or the ambition to satisfy your whims.

I Will Meet Myself Again

On April 08, 2021

Learn to look at yourself from the perspective of a life lesson formed by traversing the optimal distance between what pushes you forward and what characterizes you unanimously.

I ran with my friends, and I covered about 10 km in a quiet run, without any worries, without rules. By and large, it was just a simple run, and nothing more than a daily distance of 10 km, influenced by the desire to keep fit. And yet, at one point I felt that it was much more than a run, it was a state of mind worked to the fullest with the distance between what usually pushes me forward and what characterizes me unanimously.

And, as with any run, when everything seems to stand still around you, and you tend to somehow outrun time, you suddenly feel ready to submit to the will of a world that only reveals itself under certain conditions of observing life lessons so that they teach you more about yourself.

I accelerated suddenly. I ran only with my immense will to outrun time, because time does not stand still when it competes with me, as if it were competing with a photon of light that defies its boundaries, laws and logic. And if indeed my will had been similar to the energy of a photon of light, I would probably have been pleased with the agreement between superiority and concern.

Leadership: Are you able to find yourself in the sensitive form of the feeling of "individual meaning", rather than being deeply related to the measure of a time that no longer wants to flow in its natural logic?

And just the same, all of a sudden, I stopped abruptly. After about 800 meters of maximum intensity, I simply felt that I could go on no longer, I could not breathe, and so I toned it down again at a leisurely pace. And only this quiet step, without interruptions, without energy emissions (which I felt was repeated from the depths of the Universe), being the result of overcoming the vain ego, full of ambition and desires, taught me a life lesson. A brilliant life lesson.

It's better to be indebted to time than to be a time thief. It is better to show your affinity for a certain group of friends than to be the result of passing time. It is better to find yourself in the sensitive form of the feeling of "individual sense", than to be deeply related to the measure of the clocks that also transmit critical alerts.

It is better to evolve as a rediscovery of one's own identity beyond the mental decisions and projections of others than to evolve as an important indicator of the intense dynamism you experience fully, but without feeling vitalized on the inside.

Leadership: Is the measure of your own revelation about yourself deeply related to the measure of a time that no longer wants to flow in its natural logic, but twists within a constant of the type of "a rediscovery beyond the projections of others"?

Thus, I learned to feel good about myself, more deeply connected to myself, more at peace with myself. I have learned that I myself am the intuitive assertion of one extreme that turns into another, especially if the free framing of my conscience and vision in those life lessons that I have learned only by understanding myself, by cultivating my piece of mind, giving myself a more individualized self-image, compared to that of the group.

I'm not just a long-distance runner, a sprinter who focuses only on the race, but I'm the probable version of a member of a whole group of runners who has defeated himself. I will meet myself again at the next training session. And time will be more patient with me...

It should be noted that the feeling of "individual meaning" is formed at the intersection between what I expect to happen, what defines me and what I experience when my world intertwines with the world of others. I am no longer the man who amazes an entire world, but the man who hides an entire underground world, often shrouded in mystery.

Leadership is the idealistic formulation of the duality between the superiority of the vision understood as an inner expression and the exteriorization of a subjective experience seen as a fulfilled fact.

I Will Meet Myself Again whenever I feel that the events I am taking part in have failed to change me, either mentally or physically, but rather have strengthened in me that experience of self-knowledge through interaction with others. For what characterizes me unanimously is connected not only with the intuitive assertion of intellectual functions, but, to a certain degree, even with the decisive contribution of the experience of having one's own world.

I Will Now Reveal To You Part Of The Nature Of The Phoenix

On April 05, 2010

True wisdom begins when we recognize that visible reality is only a deceptive illusion.

The Great Seer enters through the door on the right.

- Find out, he said to Cheops, as they walked, that each of these galleries leads to narrow halls or crossroads, reached by a door. However, each one has seven doors dominated by seven spiritual entities, called divinities or demons, it is not important. And each of these doors leads to ten other doors. You can thus realize the complexity and the intricate way in which these galleries intertwine, which can be closed next to each of these doors. For you must also know that these places are the image of the Duat, as the souls of the dead pass through it before arriving before the judgment of Osiris. But you will gradually be able to discover that these are just visions that do not represent reality, because reality is the opposite of appearances.

- Are you saying that what we see, what we hear is not reality, that it is just an illusion?

- Cheops, I admire your insight and quick thinking. You have understood correctly, which makes me happy, because I have the feeling that it will not be difficult for you to follow the teaching that I begin to convey to you from this day.

They arrived at a small hall, from which three galleries opened. Benu invites Cheops to sit down.

Leadership: How do you relate to the idea that each personal reality is just a fracture in a much larger picture, completed by a horizon that transcends individual perception?

- I will now reveal to you part of the nature of the Phoenix. Do not lose sight of the fact that this temple, inside which we are just entering, is his dwelling, the place of his manifestation. He is said to live in the Land of God, which is south of Egypt. Some say that this Country of God is nothing but those immense lands situated on the other side of the Eastern Sea, which borders our coasts, inhabited by nomadic tribes. In the south of this country, towards the regions we call Punt, there would live the Phoenix, which would feed on frankincense and myrrh. He would be born from himself, so that he is his own son and at the same time his father.

When the father dies, he is enclosed in a coffin made of myrrh, in the shape of an egg, and taken to the temple where we are. As these funerals only happen every five hundred years, I have never had the opportunity to verify the truth of these sayings. AND neither is the version preserved in the books of our temple, which says that the Phoenix, after living five hundred years, makes a bed of nard, of yellow myrrh, and cinnamon, sets it on fire, and lies upon it to be consumed on this pyre funeral, to then be reborn from its own ashes. This new Fenix would then fly here, for this temple is where he emerged from the mists of time.

Leadership: Can becoming eternal be a reflection of your personal nature, revealed to the outer worlds through an image that transcends the boundaries of time and space?

- Is this story written in a book? Cheops asked.

- So the Great Seer told me before me, but I have never seen this book which, according to what they say, could be in a secret hiding place in the temple of Thoth at Hermopolis. But this story contains deeper truths. In reality, God's Earth, where the Phoenix comes from, is located, no one knows where, at the edge of the world or the edge of the universe. Because the Phoenix that is reborn from its own ashes is the symbol of the man who is reborn in another body of light.

That is why he is the soul of Ra, emerging from the primordial matter. It is eternal becoming and Eternity itself and there is also Infinity, and Eternity is day and Infinity is night, for infinity is closely connected with eternity, one cannot exist without the other, just as day cannot exist without night, each being one of the hidden faces of the universe, their union forming the All, the One, the Eternal and the Infinite. Therefore, I am already revealing part of the veil of Isis to you: learn that at the heart of the labyrinth is the Phoenix.

But you will not truly discover its essence, its nature, until after you have passed through all the doors of the inner world and reached that hall of revealed Mystery. Today you passed the first door. Now let us turn to the visible light of the sun, which is only the reflection of the true light of Atum-Ra, so that you may meditate on all that has been revealed to you.

Learning is a journey that begins under the guidance of those who can reveal the deepest buried secrets. And overcoming the illusions recognized by reality prepares us for the encounter with the essence of truth.

I will now reveal to you part of the nature of the Phoenix: what appears to be reality is only a shadow of the truth hidden behind appearances. And the road to truth is paved with doors of perception that must be opened with the key of knowledge. Especially since often the search for spiritual knowledge is a journey through multiple layers of symbolism and hidden meanings, requiring passage through many stages of revelation.

I Will Recognize Myself When I Will Be The Same

On January 22, 2021

Try to access your inner world from the offer of an outer world that you are tempted to move away from when you recognize yourself as its prisoner.

I came home from the Tudor Vladimirescu neighborhood on foot, without being visible in this whole world except for myself, for the one who was changeable and remained unchanged in a kind of constant thinking, sensitivity, unitary faith. I didn't think about anything on the road, not even how I felt, nor what I wanted, nor what I was. Yes, surely, as if I were to think intensely about something, I would have discovered something interesting...

And seeing as how I wasn't thinking about anything anyway, because nothing catches you and surprises you when you are empty inside, especially when you feel that you have real affinities with some wandering character extracted from the works of Mika Waltari, I looked around with the silent gaze of nothingness, when everything seemed to be taken from an inner state, from the need to pay attention to something that is secondary to something main. Well, in the face of deep thought, the emptiness of nothingness cannot be reached, especially when in the background is the affinity for the experience of a loss in the crowd as anonymous, the soothing loneliness of the soul, the intrinsic measure of human value.

From time to time a car passed by, one made a muffled background noise, like a rumble, which intensified during acceleration. The street was lit with a dim light, dull, slightly diffused, and it seemed as gloomy as the weather. And no noise took me away from my peace, no light rejoiced me, did not let me be carried away by the cool caress of a night that would have wanted to look for its stars in a sky full of stillness, the same sky from which someone would could have looked upon me as upon a fixed point in the flight from the phenomena of life.

Leadership: Can the message of your inner world strike a balance in the relationship between permanence and change, insofar as circumstances do not establish a different interpretation of present reality?

The good part is that my mind was still there, my heart was still there, even if my mood was far from what I expected to see, to feel, to meet. Rather, I was anchored in a deep unitary depth, that is, I became acquainted with the essential features of the echo of a world that lies on the verge of choosing between a bunch of strangers and a bunch of alternatives, all numb with an expensive boredom, a cold wind, an early exit with valences of abandonment.

It took a way out of the tight chains of the ego for me to feel like someone else, closer to the vision of a tolerant, open attitude, of acceptance and natural understanding of the relationship between the present and the absent. A kinship with the latter truth was needed:

Everything around you and everything that concerns you is the expression of a transition from thinking to the consciousness of your presence at the point of intersection between permanence and change. You are always where you feel yourself, unconstrained by any convention and custom. I think this is the definition of authenticity: to be yourself without any effort, without masks, without compromises, without the approval of others. Be yourself without any imposition from the outside.

In the end, I think that peace is what really characterizes me, it helps me to stay focused, to have a clear mind and vision. Maybe there is a vision in my mind that concentrates my thoughts and cleanses them of impurities, an expression of the call from a metaphysical plane, or a fixed point where I concentrate my entire effort to understand life.

By extrapolating the present, I and only I count. The silence is still in force. In fact, this is the message of my inner world that can strike a balance in the relationship between permanence and change:

I count only for my potential to experience the same moment of lucidity in any given place, with the same impetus to breathe clean oxygen without stopping, and in the same impulse of thought to embrace both the abstract and the concrete.

I Will Recognize Myself When I Will Be The Same, even if circumstances lead me to believe that I am different, channeling my thoughts into gratitude for a change that must continue only to test my patience and faith.

That's the only way I'll feel good, doing whatever the feeling dictates to me – and it dictates that I stay the same.

If It Was About Love, I Would Have Understood You

On December 07, 2012

Learn to grow your self-image even when your self-knowledge includes the specifics of someone else's identity.

What did I deny you, Olympia?

- If you will obstinately stop me from singing in front of your friends, or forbid me to appear on the stage of any theater – for I am not, thank God, under your tutelage – I will engage without your signature. Do you think, somehow, that I did not guess that you are the one who secretly prevented my employment at the Italian theater? Do you think I'm so naive as to imagine that a theater can reject a singer like me, who offers herself for nothing? How much will this cost? I think quite a lot, don't you? At least give this satisfaction to my own love, by confessing that, in order to prevent me from singing, you have spent more than you should have to enable another to assert herself.

An imperceptible smile appeared on Lord Drummond's lips.

- Confess, then, continued Olympia. Why did I come to Paris for then? Concerts, for me, cannot replace theater, passion, art, life ! Even at the Duchesse de Berry's costume ball, where you were so kind as to let me appear in disguise, I felt that it was not the theatre. So, I repeat, you have to come to terms with the situation, I don't like to submit to your fantasies. You are noble and rich, you have whims. It is your pleasure to have a singer who exists only for you, who sings only for you. If it was about love, I would have understood you. But you don't love me, thank God ! You never made any statement to me. And if you had done it to me, you wouldn't have been here with me today. The woman, and this is what I first liked about you, does not exist for you. You only know the singer. You are not jealous of my face, my person, me. You often torment me by forcing me to dine with your friends, on the condition that I do not sing.

*I have heard stories about some millionaires who had the enormous egotism of renting out all the seats in a performance hall in one evening, for the pleasure of reserving their performance just for them. As far as you are concerned, your selfishness is even more terrible: not just one performance, but all the performances you would like to belong to you. You confiscate me. But for this, you need my consent, and I withdraw it. **

Leadership: Is the way you feel about yourself due to the life experience that begins with the intensity of emotion that someone conveys to you in a circumstance beyond your will?

The way a person feels about himself, turning the moment into an even more memorable one, is actually due to the life experience that begins with the intensity of the emotion that someone conveys to you in a circumstance beyond your will. So, let's take into account what the moment of feeling conveys, when your will is rather the fulfillment of someone else's will, transforming the relationship between memorable and subtle into a game of influence whose stake is humiliation, loss of credibility, shame, defamation.

What strikes us more is not so much the sovereign irony of fate that we must respect if we do not want to go through much harder times, but the painful faculty of capturing beyond the visible appearances of people their hidden being. This is where that peace with yourself can begin, regardless of the pressure that others exert on you, as a realization of the experience of not being recognized by others as weak. Or the intensity of the emotion you show towards the individual events of an experience that tasted of moral defeat, must be managed in such a way that your merits, value and good deeds are recognized.

The true wisdom you learn is not a sprint at the end of life, but a marathon of a life whose stake is not first place, but the fact of enduring to the end without selling your soul. And if you open your soul too much, high expectations may betray your heart. And, as a result, those who remain closed, those who wither and self-destruct are precisely those whose emotional experiences are not recognized. The intensity of the emotion with which you treat good news or an unexpected situation depends on the circumstance that can shatter your opportunities to be good, to be generous, to be evaluated at your true worth.

If you want to learn something new about leadership, then learn to grow your self-image even when your self-knowledge encompasses the specifics of someone else's identity. In other words, the specifics of other people's identity (including their character, attitude, mentality) will become a part of you as soon as you give them the slightest support. No one can defend himself from the influence of others, but what you can do is fight not to cripple your soul. So, don't open your soul to anyone !

In leadership, the "measured emotion" of a certain way of being in the world is cultivated. We are talking here about the emotion you expect to lead to influence other people, without making yourself a sounding board for their sad stories.

If It Was About Love, I Would Have Understood You. But many times, in life it is not about love, but about a kind of interest without appreciation that does not widen the sphere of truth on which actionable steps can be built on an individual level. That's what a wise soul does: don't set your expectations too high, because most people won't achieve greatness. And what makes a man wiser is not to tie his soul to the present, but also not to make his conscience a deep passion.

If The Film Breaks, A Terrible Projection Results

On January 14, 2010

What you expect to happen depends largely on what you are about to see.

Despite the rush, the film was still not ready on December 21. The director Sergei Eisenstein was still editing the last reels when the presentation of the film "Potemkin's Crusader" had begun at the "Mare Theater". The coils, as they were finished, were taken by Alexandrov's motorcycle. But even now, under these conditions, the search continued. The squadron rendezvous is made up of very short pieces of footage. Eisenstein tried, one by one, several editing options. In order not to waste time, in these tests the film was not missing with the classic acetone, but with his own saliva. One variant after another is unfolded.

Only after he finalizes them, he hands them over to the assistants to be glued. But, having reached the last coil, in a hurry, he forgets to give it. The dozens of pieces of film, glued together with nothing but saliva, are placed in the box and Eisenstein climbs into Alexandrov's motorcycle with the box. I hiss with desperation. In Red Square the motorcycle stumbles. A feather. The two run half a kilometer to Balsoi. I arrive on time.

Is the ultimate joy that validates your leadership in the ability to transmute effort and fear into a thrilling triumph of art?

At that time there was a pause between each reel, the light was turned on in the hall. The last break lasted 20 minutes. Finally, the reel is loaded and the projection of the last part of the film begins. Eisenstein does not enter the hall. He has no patience. He walked restlessly through the corridors. They are empty. The guards must have entered the hall as well. He hears the sequence of applause. Stormy. Like explosions. Guided by them, he watches the film unfold in his mind.

And suddenly a cold sweat floods him. He remembers that the sequence that is now being projected is the one that he forgot to paste. Horror grips him. The film will break, the pieces of film will scatter. Everything will end horribly in this solemn hall, which hosts a cinematographic show for the first time. Overwhelmed by a terrible despair, he runs aimlessly through the corridors. But a miracle happens. The film ends well (later at the editing table, he will once again look in horror at the pieces of film that were no longer held together). The standing ovation. Eisenstein is persistently called to the stage. Appears with Tisse and Alexandrov. The audience rises to its feet, the orchestra also rises and strikes the instruments with bows. A triumph.

Leadership: Does the creation you give authenticity to have the strength to face moments of fear and despair so that the ultimate triumph is all the more glorious?

The process of screening a film is central to the presentation of a cinematic work and involves several distinct stages. At the beginning, there is a pause between each reel, during which the lights in the hall are turned on, and the film is ready to continue. This pause is followed by the loading of the reel, the actual projection and viewing of the sequences. During these stages, film sequences line up, roll and are continuously presented to the audience.

If errors occur, such as missing a sequence, the film can break, resulting in a terrible projection. Each stage of the projection is crucial to ensure a correct presentation of the cinematic material. At the end of the process, applause from the audience confirms the success of the projection, similar to how cytokinesis completes cell division successfully. Eisenstein, persistently called to the stage, enjoys a triumph with his team, just as proper cell division ensures the health and proper functioning of the body.

Leadership is manifested through the presentation of a creation whose artistic projection takes place in the direction of cultural transformation and innovation.

If the film breaks, it results in a terrible projection because the director could not fulfill his artistic vision. Moreover, this interruption undermines the viewers' experience, shattering the illusion created and destroying the intended emotional impact. But we always have to keep one rule in mind:

"What you expect to happen depends a lot on what you're about to see."

If You Cross The Line, I Too Shall Cross it

On April 16, 2009

Strengthen the "immunity" of your leadership by developing those skills that help you correctly and objectively evaluate your staff.

No emotion, no experience did not seem to pass through the mind and soul of this unscrupulous man, good manipulator, guided by a strong desire to succeed, whose tremendous ambition to achieve goals had no limits. Bill was investigating Drew without blinking, as if he expected to see a trace of concern on his face, or uncertainty, or at least hesitation, or even any sorrow. Nothing. Drew seemed indifferent, and sure of himself, proud that he managed to defy the authority of the great Bill Parrish, founder and president of Parrish Communications Corporation.

Basically, Drew wanted to be the president of the company, but for that he had to put the current president aside. However, everything changes when Joe Black has occurred, "the IRS agent" which smelled Drew's involvement in illegal business, and gathered evidence that could incriminate him. From a confident and courageous man, Drew suddenly became pale-faced. He was lost, and knew it. He was even liable to criminal punishment.

- We offer you a deal, Drew, not to go to jail, told him Bill Parrish. Confess to the Board of Directors every detail of your involvement in this illegal business, and then submit your resignation.

Leadership: In order to get a "YES" from someone, is it absolutely necessary to change their perception of what your higher self knows about you and wants others to know?

In fact, the movie "Meet Joe Black (1998)" shows us how far we get involved in personal and professional life. And, especially what happens when you forget what is the route we need to follow for our lives to be meaningful and full of joy.

The biggest mistake of Bill Parrish, because of which he was to regret enormously, was that he did not know to properly evaluate his employees. He was careless and indifferent towards the perceptions that they had to him. As a leader, he should be tactical in judging correctly the intentions of those around him. However, he was not worried about anything at his people, he did not doubt, not for a moment of his own perceptions, apparently well-founded on them. Furthermore, on this account, he was on the verge of losing his company.

The perceptions that you have about people, are closing the circle of the support system of your own beliefs. Perceptions are like a fence that surrounds your subconscious, and that protects your values and principles that guide you in life. Perceptions are giving measure to the reality you live, that you want and preach, they are the mechanism that generates your confidence, enthusiasm and motivation to perform at maximum capacity.

Bill Parrish's higher self was a unit of content in the form of image, ideas, beliefs, aspirations, and faith. But Bill put all his trust not only in his instinct, but also in the justice of his practices, in the justice of a noble cause, or in the correctness of his brilliant judgment which he applied in any situation. The problem with this higher self is that he did not know how to find people's appreciation in the name of the company's future and believed that he depended on others to find a strong stimulus to performance.

Leadership: Have the changes in your life in recent months marked your beliefs about what you want to become, given that what makes you superior does not make others happy?

This circle that supports your own beliefs that surrounds your whole value system might crack, and even might break if you do not always strengthen the "immunity" of your leadership. In order to heal the bridge between your present and future that ensures your success, it is imperative to develop those skills to evaluate correctly and objectively your staff, those skills that help you identify their true intentions and feelings, and to try to prevent any abuse and "blows below the belt".

Just as a customer-oriented corporate culture is often the key factor that allows competitive companies to prioritize the interests of clients when they face pressure from competitors – so, an effective thinking, based on intuition and reasoning lets you give priority to those aspects and elements that overshadow your leadership when one or more of your subordinates deviate from the criteria of integrity that they must comply.

Leadership is a praise of the past, when what propelled you to the top of people's preferences was related to those beliefs that began with "I am – at the level of superiority" and continued with "I am – at the level of value".

If You Cross The Line, I Too Shall Cross it is an expression indicating a sudden change of your attitude, when you notice an inconsistency between fair, and well-defined principles that characterizes your personality and your leadership - and inconsistent moral values that guide your subordinates.

Failure is like an oppressive feeling that you can hardly endure, as an anxiety that you cannot pick fault, as a regular game that can make you lose everything you built, everything you have gathered a lifetime. Any person, any leader changes his vision, thinking and behavior when failure knocks at their door through their own weaknesses. The one who falls into the trap of assuming that he cannot be betrayed by his own subordinates, sooner or later, he may have a big surprise.

Be vigilant, dear leader. Strengthen the "immunity" of your leadership by developing those skills that help you correctly and objectively evaluate your staff, not to wake up with a nasty surprise.

Conclusion: A novel character once said: "Behind your words are hiding criminal thoughts..." which meant that he elucidated the intentions of his interlocutor in his words and behavior, other than the ones appropriate to his title and position that he has claimed to have. It is proof that there are people who hide intentions and reprehensible acts.

Such people have existed and will always exist. Therefore, as a leader you need to develop and this ability to know people that surround you, to track their reprehensible intentions in due course, "blows below the belt" that they prepare in order to put themselves forward, to prosper materially, or simply from the desire to harm.

With this skill, you strengthen the "immunity" of your leadership, you strengthen your position where you came, and you remained supported by honest people. Learn how to determine unscrupulous people to expose alone in front of everyone and punish them harshly, as they deserve.

If You Know How To Look, Your Eye Tells You A Lot

What you see when you look inside is what art reveals outside.

In the penumbra of his workshop, where the shadows of the past fight with the light of the present in a "Xenthoria Ulmivent", an integrative vision of existence, a fusion between physical reality and spiritual transcendence, takes shape. The artist contemplates the silence of the ages. It gives them some significance, other than a mere record of time, but as an extension of the need to explore the unknown. His name has been whispered through the ages under various masks and guises: alchemist, physicist, magician. But, in all his incarnations, one constant remained unchanged: the burning thirst for knowledge, that "Epedysasis Harrexhium", the eternal call of self-transcendence.

Something in it testified to a depth of the creative spirit:

Closing my eyes, I sink into the depths of my being, slowly, contentedly sipping the expanse from my immortal soul. Here, in a space of absolute silence, I discover an infinite universe, full of mysteries and beauty, as if I were in the middle of a cosmic revelation waiting to unfold before the eyes of the mind. With each breath, triumphant in the transformative power it brings, I feel the boundaries between reality and imagination blur, and art becomes a bridge to this inner world. Well, in the sanctuary of my conscience, I find the answers to the questions that trouble me and a deep peace that I can't find anywhere else. God is the one who guides me towards the harmony of creation.

In the value chain of existence, every experience becomes a lesson, every question becomes a gateway to new dimensions of deep understanding of creation. Of course, applying the principles of creation in everyday life is meant to transcend the limits of ordinary perception. This may mean that beyond any apparent obstacle lies an unexpected revelation: "collective consciousness facilitates communication between all elements of creation." The divine revelation thus becomes a neural synchronization on a universal scale, in which each being contributes to the action potential of the entire cosmos.

Leadership: The art you create, transfiguring everyday reality under the impulse of knowledge, can be considered an expression of real artistic feeling meant to highlight the value of your self?

- How can I be sure that what I create has value? I asked God as I reflected on the deep essence of my work.

God answered me: "The value of art is not measured by the world's standards. A work of art has value when it resonates with at least one other person, when it touches their soul. You don't paint for me, but for people.

- What if no one understands my art? I continued with doubt in my voice.

God: "Even the greatest works of art were often misunderstood during the lifetime of their creators. The important thing is that you created it with passion and sincerity. Let time judge. The artist's inner gaze is manifested in every stroke of the brush , visible in the depth of artistic expression."

In my case, past and present are painted like a living Salvador Dali painting, where time melts and reality bends under the weight of knowledge only God can understand. Each line, each shade, each shadow, traces the story of a forgotten age, each form being an enigma deciphered regarding the hidden identity of God.

Leadership: In the face of the eternal struggle against the measure of time, can you perceive your creation as a primordial force that transcends the predetermined order of existence and the limits of immediately perceived reality?

To the left of my painting, a figure pushes a giant pendulum, in an eternal struggle against the measure of time, refusing to obey the established order. This is a manifestation of me in one of my previous lives, when I was manipulating the elements of nature, trying to turn lead into gold, decipher the codes hidden in the stars, and defeat time itself. Creation is a primordial force of the universe, while art transcends the limits of perceived reality.

The Gaze attempted to penetrate the veil of time, accessing past lives and experiences. In this context, the words of Jorge Luis Borges from the "Biblioteca Babel" jump out of nowhere in my mind:

"The Universe (which others call the Library) consists of an indefinite, and perhaps infinite, number of hexagonal galleries. In the center of each hexagon is a ventilation shaft surrounded by a low balustrade. From each hexagon the lower floors and superior, interminable."

Like Borges' infinite library, my multiple lives form an infinite series of experiences and knowledge, each representing a new gallery in the valuable library of my existence. Painting is a way to decipher the mysteries of the universe, and the viewer's eyes are invited to see beyond the immediate reality of my painting. And if the visual perspective oscillates between concrete and abstract elements of my composition, reaching the stage of artistic transcendence, then the viewer's conscious perception is challenged to go beyond the limits of ordinary reality.

Leadership penetrates the veil of time through artistic vision, accessing an infinity of experiences and knowledge that invite transcending the ordinary limits of reality.

If you know how to look, the eye tells you a lot about the inner and outer reality, knowing that each work reflects the deep essence of your soul. Moreover, artistic creation is a mirror of the inner universe of the creator, when your self transcends the limits of ordinary consciousness. You just have to surrender to the creative flow of the universe.

Immeasurable Power

On April 05, 2015

Push leadership towards new dimension with all the powers that take place in your bosom, building a mental image of what is outside of you.

My reasoning gained momentum for a different kind of existence, one subject to the unwritten laws of the world, against what was already defined as primordial. It was a complicated composition of fantasy, realism and magic, beyond the significant deep of the mind through which I could accede to an immeasurable power, which didn't fade under the induction vector of empirical observations. As if I had quickly jumped on a train that took me far into an unknown land, amidst a true madness, providing an imprecise measure of the order of things and the experiences of life, precisely because I didn't know how to unravel the thread of my reasoning to create a general logic.

The search for a meaning of life to ascribe to a higher reason implies a certain relation to other Egos. In fact, I think that my whole being was encompassed in the image of a world that feeds on the substance of an absolute imaginary, specific to creators, from a philosophy of otherness that floods reality, brain activity, all things around and penetrates into the phenomenal world of a secret life, explained only through the perspective of the dream. Yes, some people discover their reason of only existing in a dream.

Wandering, like a man detached from the things of this world, as a character of Dumas, oscillating between being and nonbeing, with great difficulty I tried to penetrate a mystery whose cause I didn't know, whose effect I saw, but couldn't understand its purpose. Power showed itself for what it was: at times me, at times another, borrowing fully from the ideas of time. A power that detached me from this world and synchronized me in a nameless infinity being – like symmetry in art – a condition of beauty.

Leadership: Can you ask your reason to believe in the authenticity of a rupturing from the world, to fulfill the destiny of a being that is totally fulfilled by approaching a creation meant to reveal the experiences that make you stronger?

The beautiful. The sublime. The mysterious. The power to be everything in a new landscape, in a different moment, at the same time a mirror, a reflection of the world, a body of knowledge creating through feelings, energies and sincere ideas, transmitted into a cloud where they were analyzed and interpreted through a series of complex algorithms that could predict, with a certain margin of error, the answers to unanswered questions.

This too was a way of bringing to surface things that I carried within me and I was unaware of. Overall, within me existed a dimension of consciousness close to a delight of the senses that was not known to me before. Somehow, I was inspired by that break from the real world and the entry into a dream that continued to produce images, sounds, smells, lights, movement, linear force, movement in time and space, constantly having control. I could make anything disappear or change it to my liking.

Leadership discusses the special importance of seeking the meaning of life from the perspective of what you are capable of becoming to change its course.

Increasingly, I wanted to become a creator of order, who knows the relationships and characteristics of all things and who can put everything in order. Rather, my story seemed to be the destiny of a being that is totally fulfilled by approaching a creation meant to reveal the experiences that make it stronger: experiencing the novelty that far exceeds one's expectations, experiencing the transcendence, experiencing the time that is no longer consumed, experiencing the reality beyond the physical world, beyond what is tangible.

The one who seeks within the attitude of the maker of worlds his inner beauty, the pure simplicity of the heart, that depth without which he cannot act, multiplying itself then endlessly through series of resonances. The one who seeks within him the spiritual candor in the ingenuity of that conviction gained through the experience of the balance sheet of life, under the incidence of science, will surely feel tangled in a figment of thoughts at times from the past, at times from the future, disorientating him and leaving him without so many answers.

Seeing a world beyond personal experience means developing your ability to artistically express your unique and unrepeatable personality experiences by continuing to work on the foundation of a dream that will become a reality.

Giving life to a creation that makes you feel in the midst of a change of perspective is aimed at the direct experience of reality beyond the visible, beyond what you know about the world, beyond the tangible, beyond what you can simply explain in words... and never ceases to amaze you.

Romanian philosopher Constantin Rădulescu Motru confessed: "It is enough that the system we trust remains uninfluenced from outside, to see that all the powers unfolding in its bosom, with all the variety of their quality, form a closed circuit of transformation and represents a constant quantum. This constant quantum, under which the manifestation of powers is subsumed, took on the name of energy.

The mental structure pointed towards the exploration of space, time and parallel realities, in connection with that peculiarity of accomplishing an association between them, has the filter of the personality of the one who feeds his thirst for knowledge by deciphering and assimilating mysteries, science. From the border of unknown truths.

Such a creator is not devoid of the power of finding himself in a different time, in a different world, engaging his existence in a dynamic of transformation and openness to horizons known only by him.

What you know about yourself must be analyzed as a means of accessing the process of relativizing the reality beyond physical representation, beyond what resists the rationalizations of the vision, as if you were part of a dream that overwhelms your soul with emotion.

Through the presence of the mysterious, of what is outside its own consciousness, beyond comprehension and control of immediately, offering new allocations, improbable, of the unknown elements obtained through revelation and through an effort of imagination, a different being develops, an invisible part of the man confined to infinity... limitless.

A maker of worlds is able to see himself and know himself immeasurably by exploring and assessing the mysteries that surrounds himself. Basically, he exercises his power by appealing to a difficulty to understand "superior". Power shows itself, in this case, as what it can be: at times, he himself, at other times, someone else, a power that detaches him from this world and synchronizes him to a nameless infinity.

The mysterious, this invisible presence, crossed by an energy that avoids a comparison to life, is more real within him than ephemeral thoughts and emotions, transient, of the many Egos.

The specificity of the subjectivity with which you see things is part of the art of exploring meaning deposits hidden in a being with a dreamer status, who experiences and feels everything as an extension of the reality that cultivates "news" rather than "another weekly paper", from the prospect of a journey to another time and space.

Immeasurable Power is the one out of the ordinary, the one that can be reached only by interpreting the internal feelings, by the sensations related to certain moments of life. In order to produce innovation you must convert mysteries in beliefs, in a positive and appropriate way of your life and personality.

Improve The Quality Of Your Employees

On March 30, 2009

Develop your ability to look at a project from the perspective of the client you care about and represent in a field of knowledge, focusing it on becoming aware of the possibility of it transposing itself upon yourself.

If you are passionate about the art of photography, if you like to work in Photoshop and if you are aware about the news, then you probably heard about the famous training "Photoshop Top Secret". Mark Monciardini and Melanie Stimmel, the authors of these courses, show us step by step how we can create top graphics and sophisticated special effects.

Through these training courses those two specialists in graphic and design want to help those who are not instructed in the domain to develop their dexterity and creative sense. Using an appropriate language, clear and simple, they explain in a more accessible way how to make things easier apparently very complicated. And with the exercises they propose they manage to arouse the interest of all those who attend classes. Actually these courses are so well structured and interesting that more and more people who are passionate about photography are interested in them.

Leadership: Can you implement a "Create Your Own Series" method that will deliver better business results and overtake competitors by adopting an outward-oriented, rather than inward-oriented way of thinking?

In their majority, the little firms appeal more often to external trainers, very competent, to prepare and instruct the staff so that they could improve the efficiency of their work. This kind of training courses, like the ones Mark Monciardini and Melanie Stimmel sustain, are very quested especially in the little and middle firms who have employees without too much experience in that domain. The managers need to have the certainty that his employees dispose of all information regarding the opportunities of developing their career in that firm, this is why they appeal at specialists who can train them and help them to adapt in a short time new abilities and knowledge.

In fact, Mark Monciardini and Melanie Stimmell surpass their competitors in design by having founded an outward-oriented thinking instead of an inward-oriented one. Basically, they don't limit knowledge to their own benefit, but rather transfer their loyalty, competences and know-how to other companies willing to survive on the market. Yet, at the same time, they implement a "Create Your Own Series" method after completing the training through which companies are required to further develop their consultancy in the design field.

The firms that resist on the market despite a strong competition are those which are intensely preoccupied about the professional training of their employees. The quality of the employees and their commitment towards their place of work are criticised factors in the surviving of each company. Therefore, more and more managers reach to be aware of the importance of this kind of investment - appealing to the services of professional prepared trainers who can offer information, that can open the minds of people that can support and ease up the learning and development process.

Companies need employees who can fulfil their tasks in an efficient manner, who take their job serious, who put passion in what they do without being forced and who have the feeling of usefulness. This why, the duty of a human resource manager doesn't mean only motivating and making loyal the employees, it means forming an efficient and competent team. Appealing to the top experts, they want to ensure that all employees will maintain a high level of performance and will face the challenges of a relatively uncertain environment.

Leadership: Is the quantification of the results you can get through an external information and advice source recommended when assessing the potential impact of different personal value management options?

A company is assessed based on its employee's quality, on the level of their training and on their experience. This why, not only the large companies, but also the little and middle companies invest considerable in the professional development of their employees. With other words, appealing to the services of an external and very good trainer is a good business, but needs a big investment.

The trainer can be a blessing or a curse, a good investment for a company or a nuisance. Considering every day appears on the market new training and coaching firms, some more specialized, some more expensive or cheaper, so finding a trainer is not very simple. And now because of the crisis, the companies don't afford to invest time and money in a bad quality instruction.

Training is oriented, mainly, towards the improvement of the employee's performances for their actual job and the rise of their efficiency. A good trainer has to be an expert in the domain, who can explain to the employees in a simple manner how the hardest tasks can be solved. Without a doubt, his duty is to make the employees more interested in their work, helping them develop their skills and creative sense, teaching them new work techniques.

The potential impact of different personal value management options depends on your level of experience in managing and customizing unique concepts, as well as the strength of the asset, investment and service portfolio your company has allocated to the market index.

In conclusion: The most important capital of any company is given by its employees. The more they are comprehended, the more they want to work and their activity is more efficient.

So, invest in the quality of your employees and support them in improving their performances.

In 2 Eternity

On March 05, 2018

Learn to spend most of your time in your own universe derived from that flux of thoughts that helps you discover the mysteries of the infinite possibilities of creation.

It was about the time I started to enjoy reading. We easily accept the symbol of a final journey called Eternity, as gold becomes expensive if you manage to separate it from the other metals, perhaps because we perceive that there is a chemistry between the real and the imaginary, a sort of separation from the temptation of the temporal in the struggle with all the worldly rules, as stipulated in the testament concluded with the blood of the greatness of being One with Everything.

Do you jump with me Into eternity? Don't be afraid, with all your memories, come one and follow me !

Delirium or exaltation? For I seemed myself to be a creation originating from the midst of a multidimensional universe, only if someone could have imagined this gigantic universe by the inversion of its laws, which acquire their specific character through a harmonious structuring, corresponding to the needs of expression in the making of a new art. An attempt to develop a philosophical aesthetic based on the revealing data provided by the writing of an immortal idea, in an unwavering delight of the senses, behold, this is what the material of the mind of an artist, maker of senses, is made of.

Starting from the idea that there is a process of absorption of the unknowable in an image of the world perceived and experienced immediately, there exists therefore an art whose essential function is that of a reflexive contemplation of the apparent reality, I have ventured into making the process of creation more efficient with that of the motivation with which the artist relates to the art he had subjected himself to, as to a providential mission.

In my stead, pointing rapidly towards the same destination, introduced in the same version of symbolic reality, as an eternal flame, Jorge Luis Borges would have added with respect: "A thousand and one hundred years have passed since I have made it."

The only way to encompass the infinite is to realize that you are the universe !

I seemed to be an expression of determinism stemming from the need of a giant pencil to use black on white in sketching a two-dimensional illusion in which, although they seem different, the Universe and Infinity, they materialize in the archetype of another existential relationship with God – which was the very reality of my creation.

And when for the universe, together with the means it controls, it is necessary to penetrate into the spirituality of the form, not only as a factor of sacrificing life, but rather as an extension of the visual aesthetics regarding the art built on the pillars of the opposition between the outer and the inner, then we are witnessing a redefinition of the concept of "Eternal" that could defy the archetype of a world fed with myths and magic. The core is just the wrapping.

When you try to reveal the most vulnerable side of "Wherever you are, in any place and at any time", that long gate of the soul in faith is opened, and today, less well-known, but well-grounded over the centuries, called: Renaissance.

Leadership: Do you show yourself as superior in terms of creation beyond what you can access with the help of a reality that calls for its "insolvency" through the insufficiency of the artistic funds defined through the act of dodging what you do not know?

If what I wanted to access was related to the birth process of an abstract universe circumscribed to worldly rules of which art and aesthetics were just a piece of the writing space in which metaphysics and prime philosophy were fortified, then eternity was the sum of the plastic expressions used to encourage the substantial truth: "there is nothing that never existed and which would not exist in the future."

The writer Vladimir Nabokov remarked at one point in the novel Lolita: "There are two kinds of visual memory: the first one, when you skillfully recompose, with open eyes, an image in the laboratory of the mind; the second, when you suddenly evoke with eyes closed, on the inner screen of the eyelids, the objective replica, perfectly visualized, of the loved face, the miniscule phantom in natural colors."

If you have the curiosity to predict my lines and movements in the game of confessional expressions, then you must know that my interest is not limited only to the stylistic effect of an isolated work of art, but rather the image of the entire production of an artist: the praise of the matter and the recompositing of the living and unlimited space of expression in a continuous exercise of personal optics.

Transforming the real condition of my existence into an unrecognized poem, under the sign of infinity, as if I had been in front of a paradise that is supposed to be assumed and overcome, basically meant seeking a relic of the Precious Blood of Christ in the triple game of correspondences – body, spirit, the soul of the world. Burdened, I would wander with the goal of finding the place in which the power and the measure of all that exists meet.

Leadership: Do you encourage yourself to go through the phenomenon of eternal return to the level of artistic individuality, through a description of "living-type" that always comes under another form?

Here are just as many aspects of the new artistic current expressed by equivalences in the world of visual space, of the new modus operandi of the alchemical transmutation that I interfere with in my ranks, being a praise of the joy of creating another hypostasis of modern writer expressionism, constructive, with deep spiritual meanings.

To dodge what you do not know, in the great journey towards Divine Thinking, is similar to reading an adventure book: you insert yourself in the midst of a world you imagine as being real, without seeing the possibility of constructing a parallel universe in which you exist only as a theory.

Eternity in writing is a reflex of the infinite gained by the adequate use of the means of expression used in the fragile relationship between what you imagine you are experiencing and what you experience while you imagine.

In 2 Eternity highlights the labyrinthic space, worthy of one of Borges' fictions, structured by abstract symmetries, with antinomic images that mutually replace each other: death and immortality, the part and the whole, the finite and the infinite, which lead to the imperious necessity of returning back to the essence.

Essence is something that determines the cause. Be an artist of self-exploration. Transform yourself into the Great Creator by molding your own creation into the Big Bang of the opposite of objective and subjective reality. Can you?

In Front Of The Mirror We See Naught But Ourselves

On April 06, 2008

Focus your sphere of self-building action on what underlies your existence, so that your image reflected in a mirror passes through the focus of a correspondence with spirituality.

Do we make a resemblance in the mirror? You say what you think of me. And I about you. Do you dare play this game, even if we do not fully understand the truth of the other? Do you want to? Of course. You start, the idea was yours, so you have priority. Good. It's not hard for me. But when I'm done, I'll wait for you to tell me. Do I have your word?

I promise to be honest, and at the same time impartial. I know it's hard to be a mirror, but if you manage to reflect your personality in someone else, sharing the truths of your inner self, then maybe the ray that passes through the main focus of the mirror would return to the environment it came from, in the souls of both.

Well. In my opinion. First of all, I think you are very organized in what you do and that in a certain discipline. When you are forced to refuse something, you do it only if it agrees with your personality. You have a good soul and you are perhaps too meticulous, including in setting your moods, which being too high does not resonate with anyone. You like to have freedom of thought, of movement, to be yourself, always at ease. Physical and especially spiritual harmony with a person would make you fulfilled, but you did not discover them in a person at the same time. You don't like loneliness and yet it's your natural state. You want a change, but first it has to happen and somehow you have to accept it, because you feel that your life is like going against the flow. Finally, you like the things you do, you are disciplined, you are not resentful and if you were truly loved you would feel that you are a whole. Period.

Spirituality is the result of the point where your self meets the outside through a confession that does not turn against you.

Ha, ha. I thought you'd tell me everything from childhood to adulthood. Yes, what you said about me is okay. Expect for this "life against the current" thing. In fact, I think life is going well, it's just that things don't work out the way I want them to. On other levels, it's going super well, still ahead, but eh, in other chapters I'm far behind... And you forgot about the Universe, this rationality of the colossal Creation that controls me, no matter how hard I try to change things. That's why I'm not even agitated... I'm agitated in vain... I let everything happen. Okay, so I'll give you 9.50 for presenting my psychological and sentimental profile. You could have become a psychologist...

The similarities and differences built into our mirrors are optical components that work well based on the reflection between the flow of thoughts and the ability to express them fluently. They allow the propagation of the revealing "light" in the direction desired by a strange universe, in the rectilinear way of propagating causes and effects visible in every stage of our lives. We just have to confess to each other the truths that can awaken us to augmented reality, in the context of the cult of the universe about human survival and man's destiny in the world.

Leadership: Is your image of "enlightenment" affected by the difference between the flow of thoughts and the ability to express them fluently in the context of the other's search for self-perception?

Now it's my turn. What can I say about YOU? First of all, I am firmly convinced that you are in close contact with another person who admires me immensely (you can be a good friend, or a close relative), so you are not really the one you claim to be.

Then, I think you are a very read person, in love with poetry (which denotes romance, delicacy, dreaming). I absolutely don't think you're married, because no married person is on Facebook every day at such late hours. I also think that you are an emotional person, and a little shy, here on Facebook you talk a lot, in reality you are a bit silent (especially towards someone like me). You feel comfortable with your girlfriends. And I tend to think you're afraid of something, I don't know, like you're abandoned or deceived.

You are a possessive person, and this usually happens to single people who have not had any attachment from anyone. You often get upset quickly out of nowhere. You want to have a romantic and challenging life at the same time, but you don't even take a step forward for that, even a kiss scares you. More jokingly, more seriously, but that's the way it is. You are also up to date with the news. You have a good soul, but life has made you a little worse. You want love, but you're not ready to receive it. That's about all I have to say about you. Am I wrong somewhere?

Enlightenment is a perpetual search for the truth about the world and the universe that we believe we find when we find our moral and spiritual guide in someone else like us, or when we confess the truths that force us to be ourselves. Thus, the sphere of self-perception can be correlated with the images of light objects formed by spherical mirrors, with reference to that automatic part of each human being that allows others to align with a common cause, in the structure of a predetermined harmonic order.

Explore the universe in augmented reality, and present it with all its "finesse"; can you?

Leadership: Does the sphere of expansion of your self, based on the spiritual, allow the orientation of the image that represents you in the direction of an activity with a "liberating" impact whose angle of incidence can be changed in certain values?

The mirror, as a mark of discreet and sincere confessions, is the essential part of an activity with a "liberating" impact whose angle of incidence can be changed in certain values: the power to assume who you really are and the courage to accept yourself as you are. The image that represents you in the world, or in front of the mirror, is what you dare to say about yourself without feeling overwhelmed by what is happening in your life, without feeling guilty because you could have been someone else and have not managed to be.

Okay, can I answer your point now? I swear I don't know you and I don't know anyone close to you. The simple association you make is just a coincidence. It's true what you said at one point. But you got it, you were lucky. But you still need to know that I'm married... my husband and I aren't the kind to suffocate one another... we have room in the house... enough room. Yes, so I got closer to the truth. I'm not emotional. Not at all. I'm very sharp. People who know me already know this. On the contrary, I am too combative.

That being said, our mirror fits perfectly, it doesn't steam up over time, even if our ideas change. It obviously shows the things we believe in. The mirror does not change the way we see the world, and ourselves included in the journey to the light, to the source of life, to its divine source. Maybe our heart is still looking for a treasure to cling to, to find peace. In front of the mirror, we show our dignity. In front of the mirror, we find peace. In front of the mirror, we see ourselves as a single entity, as a single image. And only in front of the mirror do we easily add notes...

The mirror, as a hypostasis of the Truth that we capture in relation to individuality, symbolizes the upper part of man that stands out from the relationship of the self with the Other and of the Other with the Same.

In Front Of The Mirror We See Naught But Ourselves whenever we try to know ourselves better or to overcome certain patterns and personal obstacles. I learned, conversing with Ioana Sarah, that I can be the same self that I will see again tomorrow, even if God did not create me perfectly, but only chiseled my spirit to be a form of pure conscience. Amen.

In Search Of An Oasis That Doesn't Exist

On April 14, 2015

Control the depth of the value judgements you make and transmit, by entering the tortuous paths of misunderstandings that offer science net superiority over common knowledge.

I was gripped by an intense feeling, in the whole configuration of the moment isolated from any content, in a tangle of meanings of existence neighboring nothingness. Supernatural, the insatiable outbursts of my characteristic inspiration and inventiveness, in the cry of passion for the unfathomable mystery of everything that could be but isn't, everything takes on the value of the absolute. It was as fi everything died along with the chaining of my thoughts in a sequence of transfers of meanings involved in the calculation of the interest for what does not exist. Or, rather, for everything that exists in the unknown.

As a man in semi-darkness that hides a well-kept secret, I planned so many things I needed to change without anyone noticing, through a multitude of conflicting information, betwixt the lead wires of denying everything that exists. Only so I could've been there where something ends and something else begins to be. Everything was happening in my brain. As in any novel by John Fowles.

Like the Wizard of Oz, whose secret trade could turn something bad into something good, the incomplete into complete, within the kindness of the possible, I intended to pull out of a chest a small heart tailored from silk, filled with sawdust and place it proudly where everything is impossible, incredible, unachievable. Then, by stimulating the impulses of reason to perfect a mechanic which could give the heart understanding and fit with what I was trying to project unto others. This equates to the discovery of my significant valences, represented the power of being different.

Undoubtedly, it was the voice within me, which rose towards the infinite and came back towards the end, at the crossroads between art, deviations and exaggerations, as a structure of meanings in the story of a life that resembles a walk through the desert in search of an oasis that does not exist.

Everything could be turned into an illusion, knowing that it is the means for my search in certain background circumstances, at the limit of natural possibilities of pure intuition, with its various faces of combination and creation, between said and unsaid, of plausibility and implausibility.

Leadership: Do you get involved in creating a reality that allows you to see the various faces of an unintended thought, by the fact that everything you regard as a vision turns out to be a problem of interpreting your own person through ambiguity and concealment?

He who wants to determine the impossible, in terms of the numerous possibilities of the shape of being, in favor of deepening knowledge from other perspectives, continuing the reality beyond words, slipping towards contradicting principles accepted as being true, first needs to impose upon himself the care for imaginary creations, just as the sculptor creates new and interesting models out of stone pieces thrown at random.

The idea is that the style if expression and the depth of value judgements that you make and transmit, in the equation of leadership that expresses the relationship between what you think and what you are, must be also be understood as a science of the type of knowledge that doesn't only come through reason – but through the senses.

It is a science of complex feelings tried in the conditions of that kind of knowledge, reporting to a supernatural – sometimes it is imagination, other times it is reality – which creates an evolution based on the phenomenon of seeking and collecting information, followed by the its use and transmission to a superior level of leadership.

The science of sensations, impressions, emotions, imaginations, frequently returns in the dimension of leadership, according to the meanings attributed to concepts founded in contact with the imaginary. Which, albeit not having a specific correlation, but is expressed through a process of deviations and exaggerations, lead to the planting of different types of beliefs that science uses in defining new directions of thinking. But also, to defining certain aspects of interpretations of what can be perceiving only in contradictions, in the experience of creative uniqueness.

Leadership: Can you give a new interpretation to your own creation, coming at a time when the resources of its original core seem hindered by the attempt to represent the complexity of the imaginary?

Since knowledge obtained by means of imaginations can only be achieved at the level of contact with the inherent forms of implausibility, it results that the great miracle of creation can be understood as a science of the forms of manifestation of thought, and also of the forms of founding new untold meanings from the sphere of the existential. Contributing to the shaping of new points of view, a new identity, a new orientation, a new approach of everything that is "secret."

Figments of the mind lead to the shaping of certain untold truths and give increased confidence in the steps you will take in the ever uncertain and changing future. And to get involved in a real that allows for the faces of misunderstood thinking to be glimpsed is synonymous with entering a world, beyond your sphere of experience, trying to make a substantial change.

Which means that leadership, through an elasticity of thinking, through the possibility of feeding yourself with "misunderstandings" and detaching yourself from circumstantial beliefs, givers of blockages, which you experience through the direct interaction with the real, has gained the foundations of a large-scale construction, one of the type "If-While-Else..."

A new interpretation of one's own creation, at the crossroads of art, deviations and exaggerations, can be treated as a composition of senses in the story of a life that can be characterized by a conglomeration of totally wrong ideas that lead in an unknown but constructive direction.

The interpretation I give to my creation is closely related to the desire to stand out in the perspective of an expansion of associations and matches, in the epistemological or metaphysical plane, so that what can give me uniqueness is as subjective as possible, a kind of arbitrary idealism that does not take into account the reality that the average person sees around.

In Search Of An Oasis That Doesn't Exist highlights that journey into the unknown, seen as a leap forward on the evolutionary ladder of the universe and creation. The point is that what you try to note is somewhere else, in another form – but it exists, and it can be used as fuel to produce a change of mentality, propagating new coordinates of knowledge. Which involves transforming the way of thinking by embracing the incomprehensible.

In The Search Of The Emerald Land

On September 10, 2010

Put the mark of your being in the human soul, so that their final perception of you to be in accordance with their tendency towards full completion.

It is nice to meet an old friend, to stay with him for a coffee and to spin memories. However, yesterday's meeting with Mihai was a short one. He actually looked like a man troubled with doubts and ashamed of himself. These are the words that he shared with me, with a great discontent in his soul:

"Being happy means not to feel the disgust, sadness and compulsion, but to enjoy the sunshine that enlightens your mornings. But I can't enjoy anything; I can hardly relax because, every day, I must go to that demanding and stressful job. Every morning I'm terribly afraid to open my eyes. I'm tortured by the idea that I must return there. Please, believe me, I can't endure, I can't stand this job anymore. For a long time now, I've started thinking to go, to leave that cursed hell.

I can't perceive but a single word: To leave ! To leave ! To leave ! To leave that job once and for all, to escape from that prison where I'm restricted only to the personal desires of an authoritarian leader, to run as far as I can from him, look for something else to enjoy, to banish from my heart that bitter taste of disappointment and weakness. And, sooner or later, I'll really do it: without thinking, without giving any explanation, without saying a single word of goodbye, I'll leave. I'll simply leave."

Leadership: Does your tendency to judge a certain cause grow with your reporting on the awareness of the "I" elemental instinct of the "decision maker"?

It was assumed in a very irrational way that the act to protect the value of freedom, condemning in a way or another the attempt of leaders to shape their subordinates at will, is in fact a violation of an ethical regulation – important for understanding a pragmatic vision of a reality perceived as standard foundation of sustainable development strategies. This is totally wrong.

Because, on the one hand, a man can be decisively influenced only if it is willing to sacrifice itself voluntarily, by directing its motivation opposite to the initial advancement towards normality. On the other hand, the introduction of expansionist measures to promote practices, regulations and policies, exclusively under constant forces of "cutting" the pieces that complete his personality through overload indicators only manages to annul the rights acquired by education and qualification, by assuming the fact that he is working for the benefit of others.

The inner world of an individual starts to shiver if he is dominated by the feeling of sadness. Certainly, Mihai is not the only one overwhelmed by the bitterness of life, disgusted by his very demanding job and by the whims of the boss, which probably draws some very complicated tasks. The only joy of those who are in Mihai's situation is, inevitably, to resign or to find something better.

Self-worth has the full effect of that manifestation of decision-making power linked to the sublime idea of human dignity, the inalienable quality of every person endowed with the reasoning of serving a higher purpose.

The highest ideal of a man is the victory of the freedom obtained by justifying the fastest means of denying his own vulnerability.

The leader is not always the embodiment of an angel fallen from heaven for watching over you. You cannot always adore him like he would be a saint who has appeared on your way to remove your life's anguish and bitterness. Sometimes, or often, he deceives your trust, feelings, devotion, causing instability, anxiety and uneasiness in your heart.

Leadership: Can you change the climate of your organization from "arctic" to "tropical"?

A skilfull leader enflames in people the desire to fulfill the activities they carry out, by unlocking their energies and amplifying their enthusiasm. If one of his subordinates is facing difficulties, he, reading his emotions and his feelings, takes a load of his heart (which lies with all its weight on his present) and helps him revive.

A skillful leader removes, following an ethic in the forming and propagation of elite and models, all that is oppressive in life of his employees, by inducing in them a sense of success. Not one of frustration or dissatisfaction. Just as a doctor, he takes care of people like of some patients. That's part of his duties.

We consider it an essential value that the sublime of an ambition, that of imposing yourself and daring to manifest yourself as a free man, is considered a modified form of beauty, an exercise of authenticity that has escaped any conditioning. And just as aesthetics is the science of beauty, in which a treaty of perfection cannot be framed because it is relative, so too must self-care not speak of grandeur unless we see it as an interest in capitalizing on new territories of the war between what it means to experience the results of others' thinking and what it means to live in your world.

Because the art of success and the aesthetics of life, as a result of self-creation, portrays both greatness, as it depicts the comedy of identity, as it depicts all that can be an interest in the liberation from the bitter slavery of inferiority to all those who dominate the position and by role.

The merit of the decision-making power of the people belongs to the leader who is not evaluated according to how to connect to their subjective views.

Just as an acrobat asserts himself by the sense of balance and through a special motric coordination, so you, to shape people's attitudes, to change the climate of your organization from "arctic" to "tropical", you have to impose that provider which immediately makes you popular, and to adopt a style of leadership in light of their needs.

Put the mark of your being in the human soul, so that their final perception of you to be in accordance with their tendency towards full completion.

In the search of the Emerald Land is running every man jack. It is hard to find it. However, the leader has the role to provide a favorable climate in the workplace, which allows both the development of interpersonal relationships, as well as the development of creativity, the increase of individual efficiency and the decrease of professional stress.

All the people need an inner break, a relaxation of the too tense feelings. They cannot be oriented toward performance as long as the activities that they carry out exhausts them physically, and mostly mentally.

The happiest moment of a man should not be only when stepping in the company; it must persist throughout the period of employment. The company must also be a kind of spiritual refuge, a comfort of the mind, an emerald land where people can be crossed by that sublime feeling of great joy, of the true "green" of hope, and of safety, at the same time. Their enthusiasm there must be so intoxicating that they would lose all concerns.

In Search Of The Miraculous

On November 03, 2010

A leader can't impose himself only by his intellectual superiority, but by providing the brilliant proof of his virtues of great artist.

I really hoped I would become a consummate artist. Deep inside, my heart filled with hopes, thirsting for novelty, originality and innovation, I felt I was able to build a career and do more than other aspirants for the title "The Greatest artist of all time" did. It was the only thing that mattered to me. But I had a hunch that things wouldn't please me.

One day, I sat beside my master, close enough to see him work, but far enough not to disturb him, because nothing should distract him. However, while watching him without losing him from my sight, trying to assimilate as more as possible of his pictorial tricks, I impatiently asked him:

- Will I ever be able to succeed in imposing a new ideal of beauty in my work, as you did, and get famous one day?

The master, who always talked with enthusiasm about the art he served to, answered me with his untroubled peace:

- Nicu, you must be fully mature in order to undertake something great. And then you must provide the brilliant proof of your virtues of great artist.

Leadership: Can the meaning attributed to the creation you represent become an overview of what the "EXPRESSION" type of impact means?

A leader transposes his traits of a great artist into the work he creates !

In leadership, skill and personal experience are a preponderant criteria. To lead means to focus on your own point of view, but also taking into account other people's point of view. Means to learn how to put your talent to good use, astonishing those around with your special qualities, pointed out through the leadership you create and practice.

Any fact perceived by reference to the artistic traits observed in someone else becomes a possible transparency, a reality by which you enter into another reality, in a realm of infinite analogies and associations. The liveliness with which the master continues to share thoughts, memories, impressions, experiences, desires, questions, and answers, come to transpose me into a beauty-filled universe.

Just as my master's ability and flexibility never cease to amaze me, even after so many years spent with him - so your leadership must be consistent, coherent, flexible, so that people always leave themselves trapped in your power to spell. To leave themselves trapped I'm not going to say by curiosity, but rather by the well articulated interest you inspire to achieving a quality "work".

Expressiveness is a form of art presentation that contains artistic images and figures of speech by which you forcefully convey the ideas and feelings that other people are enlivened by. It is latent in the incipient stage of creation and can be deduced through the perspective of the experience with which you fulfill your emotions with reflections referring to the impact the final image can produce (resulting from certain situational contexts).

Leadership: Do you try to undress the shirt of the perceptible concrete in search of something deeper, vaster, that speaks beyond the ineffable, when you come face to face with the abundance of compositional elements?

You will more easily identify the feelings and thoughts of an artist if you manage to identify the essential compositional elements in the interpretation of a work of art, with the help of artistic means (including figures of speech).

It is worthwhile to remember the words of Romanian writer Cornel Ailincăi: "Everything, no matter how humble or insignificant, in its precarious appearance, conceals an alterity. Following that, each sensible trait, each shape, color, brilliance, texture, materiality, each shade or partial alteration of these traits can become a place – a crack in its material opacity – through which we penetrate beyond, into a realm of infinite associations."

Art has its secrets, it's all about knowing them. For an artist's art to get a boost, he must not be content with making simple and graceful paintings. His technique can achieve a high degree of perfection only if he translates himself into the work he performs.

A great artist allows for a victory of the compositional elements, that nobility of the masterfully executed finish of emotion "essences" with the help of associations between the reference objectives and contents, between life experiences and artistic variables.

Are you accepted for your creative attributes in an equation that includes all the elements necessary to achieve a movement of search and initiation into something not yet known in the world of art?

Like an artist, seeking to satisfy his innate aesthetic sense, turns all his qualities into a quality work - so the leader, enlightened by hope and faith, based on his reason and possibilities, must apply his creative qualities in his work.

Certainly, the leader has dreams for his future. Reason and ambition can push him forward, but without some chosen attributes, able to meet a number of qualities valued by people - such as vision and intuition, dedication and emotional strength, he will not be able to impose his own model of leadership.

A leader can't impose himself only by his intellectual superiority, but by providing the brilliant proof of his qualities of great artist. And to be a great artist means to let yourself get carried away towards ideas that lie beyond what the ordinary intellect can grasp.

The greatness that an artist must demonstrate reflects the liveliness with which he continues to look at a colorful masterpiece as if it were the embodiment of determination and significant hopes in a new world that does not attempt to unify and control aspirations of intellectual or spiritual nature.

In Search Of The Miraculous starts every individual who aspires to high ideals, namely to achieve the title of "The Greatest artist of all time". What certainly encourage this evolution are his intellectual, moral and emotional qualities, which reflect in the quality of his activity, with which he effectively achieves his own work. They indicate his certain possibilities of success.

In search of the miraculous, it is necessary to struggle hard in order to improve and self-improve, in such a way that your "work" be the brilliant proof of your qualities of great artist of leadership.

In The Defense Of The Accused

On October 17, 2010

Develop your ability to transmit to people a new understanding of your values, reconsidering your attitude and position towards them.

As human beings, which, in essence, we want to act righteously, by faith, with a positive thinking, we do not want harm others in any way. Nor moral, nor physical. We are characterized by a complexity of passions, emotions and human values , in the acceptance or rejection of which we have the power to choose, we try to use them as best as we can, despite any obstacles or any weaknesses that we have.

However, Joe Black (the main character from the movie "Meet Joe Black") was more an evil spirit than a human being. He was the Prince of Darkness, which only had taken a human face. He could not realize the feelings which animate the people, the feelings which try them in hard times, their stringent needs, their thoughts. He could not forgive, could not forget, could not feel pain or pleasure, not even love; he did not know what it is joy, no sadness, no tears.

Until an old sick woman, endowed with a special ability to distinguish people's hidden features, admitted his true nature. Who gave her the right to drop her eyes deep down in his soul? No one. Even so, as more clearly he saw in him, the more increased her sense of insecurity.

- Your place is not here, sir. Go back from where you came. And take me with you. I'm too ill, my suffering is too great, I don't want to live anymore. Take me with you, sir !

Leadership: Can you stay away from the upper threshold of the power of enduring the adversities of a life that does not ask you if you are prepared to endure it, but hastens you to judge your deeds fairly?

And then, hearing her words, for the first time something came to life in Joe Black. Suddenly, surrounded by a strong sense of guilt, he changed his whole outlook on life, on the world and people. Moreover, he has realized that his place was not among people. The prince of darkness cannot shed light where there is none, he cannot defend a cause where there is no hope.

Joe Black felt like an accused of murder, which was incapable of assuring his own defense. He had to solve this problem so as he could, according to his own convictions, without asking anyone's help. How? By reconsidering his position towards people, his mode of action and plans.

Nevertheless, what can be said about you? What do characterize you? Is there an issue that could make others to suspect that something is wrong with you? What is the thing that you do not perceive it in you, and that only others succeed to observe it? If yes, how would you solve this problem?

Leadership: Does enduring life's adversities mean having the power to accept the fate of a destiny ruled by the desire for power?

Leadership is in direct relationship with the ability to influence human nature. For your influence to be at maximum, you must notify earlier the existence of that "critical point" that limits your potential, and to always know to restrain all your unhealthy tendencies: hatred, contempt, hostility. Otherwise, you'll end up like Joe Black, you will feel like an accused that cannot plead guilty, which cannot reject the accusations, but can only wait for his trial.

Just as a good helmsman stops his ship, or makes it wind in order to avoid dangerous vortexes, which the oarsmen do not sight - so the potential of your leadership, not to diminish, and for your influence to continue growing through the medium of others, you must first become aware of the dangerous attitude and mentality that you create and show, and to avoid them, concerning more of people's perceptions.

In The Defense Of The Accused marks the beginning of a long process of consciousness, when you weigh a hard to solve moral problem. You are your own lawyer, and you have the duty of pointing out anything that can be invoked in your defense, without breaking your true feelings that continuously define you.

To be acquitted, and to be deleted to you any attenuating circumstances, you must always bring solid evidence in your defense. And the most solid evidence is given by your own understanding of the people, and of that you really are.

Often, a person who holds power is not the same person who can provide power to other people. A true leader accepts that no power can stop anything, that no power has the right to damage the unparalleled dignity of the human person, created by God.

Power must not prejudice the dignity, honor, private life of a person or their right to choose.

Conclusion: In any stage of life, any person can go wrong, any person, and especially a leader can be considered guilty by others, or he may come to consider himself guilty by his own conscience. To be better understood your need to know to communicate with yourself, to express clearly your position and views, the motivation of your actions, so that they can understand you and judge you correctly.

In The Depths Of The Abysses Other Abysses Open

All you feel about life and people is the idea you have of the hidden will of God.

Marius was in love with Cosette, but she did not understand who this Jean Valjean was who accompanied her everywhere as a protective father. He knew nothing about the past of Jean Valjean, who was a tall and imposing man compared to the wonderful and sensitive little girl he loved to see again in the park. How to approach it, if there is this mountain of man between the two of them? What is such a monster looking for, with a wry and frowning face, scars left by the storm of life, next to such a cute and innocent angel?

Finally, one last question, but no answer. Marius felt like a pair of pliers. How could Jean Valjean's life have been so close to Coseta's? What does this incomprehensible game of fate, which had put this child together with such a man, mean? Then, are there chains for two made in heaven? Does God like to mate the angel with the demon? Can crime and innocence, then, be companions in the secret pit of misery? In this endeavor of the condemned (this being human destiny), can two foreheads pass side by side, one ignorant, the other frightened, the one bathed in the divine light of dawn, the other withered forever by the gleam of eternal lightning?

Who could decide such a misunderstanding? In what way was it possible for this angel to live with this old man? Who could have tied the lamb to the wolf and, more incomprehensibly, the wolf to the lamb? Because the wolf loved the lamb, because the wild creature worshiped the weak creature, because for nine years the angel had leaned against the monster. Coseta's childhood and adolescence, her birth, her virgin upbringing to life and the sun, had been protected by a devout devotion. Here the questions unfolded in thousands of other misunderstood questions. In the depths of the abysses other abysses opened, and Marius could no longer lean on Jean Valjean without dizziness. Who was this man? An abyss?

Leadership: Are you able to fit into contexts dominated by secondary aspects of life, without accepting a "circumstantial" limitation from a reality that is shown in different appearances?

Everything we experience in different moments of life, especially in those contexts that we are willing to accept a limitation of our own capacities for social integration, is part of us. And through any kind of image we create of ourselves, whether good or bad, we share the intention with which we formed that image.

Images do not stay long in our decision-making sphere, but are transferred to the outside world to the surprise of an entire world. Here, God has the last word, and what we see in ourselves is what we need to feel (as acutely as possible) to fight for change. In fact, God never lets things go about their way in peace.

None of the images we see in ourselves are neutral, no feeling is merely circumstantial, but pre-set by God in our being, not to rebel against HIM, but just to gain that shred of wisdom that books can't give us. But can we gain that self-confidence that we want when we have a bad image of ourselves? Perhaps it is very true what someone said on the web: "Not getting caught up in the drama of disappointment means being open to seeing beyond appearances, gaining that flexibility in relation to life."

And even if behind every image there is an intention, a fundamental form of guilt that encompasses all the spiritual capacity of the individual, as it is religiously speaking, there is still a spirit that will try to enliven you. I do not refer in particular to a ghost as a ghost who deals with the deception of man, manifesting itself in various noises, smells, movements of objects and so on. Rather I am referring to a concentration of energy that directs your soul and mind in the direction of a more sustainable way of life, and it all starts with choosing alternatives: to believe in what is eternal within you, to believe in what you cannot yet see, or to believe in what does not exist.

Leadership: Can you look confidently into the future in terms of that self-image that life shapes for you by experiencing affective-emotional and actional experiences, guided by the meaning of a vision centered on God's will?

God is an image or likeness of something perceived, but not physically existing in the active environment. And Jean Valjean seemed just the opposite, a well-known stranger physically, but just as imposing as the Devil. And Marius, it is easy to understand why he was so distrustful, because he seemed more to delve into a stranger whom no one had the courage to approach, a stranger who brought him a lot of moods and question marks. Or this stranger was not powered by any engine of the desire for adventure, but by a high voltage battery that is charged from the holy source of life, called: ambiguity.

There exists a spirit in which the image of good was created, depicting man in that angelic position, and all the images we face are loaded with that spirit. But who decides the image in which a spirit is integrated? You finally receive in your being the spirit in which an image was created, even if the spirit does not give you order, but it does not give you the power not to lose hope that one day you will arrive wherever you want, and then you can understand everything.

Even behind the image that man creates, which we always see in our own mirror, there is an intention, because behind the image there is a person who speaks through inspired feelings.

However, it matters a lot what we look at in terms of the self-image that life shapes for us by having affective-emotional and actional experiences, because when we look at something the reality of that image is imprinted on us. We could say that the intention behind the image is soaked in us. I believe that the image itself has this function of language, because it conveys to you a certain teaching about people, or an essential conclusion about faith: "All you feel about life and people is the idea you form about the hidden will of God."

Before using augmented reality in leadership, you will often feel placed in front of that image of vulnerability that becomes the image of God by way of man being able to have many faces, good or bad, depending on the meaning you give to life, but also to self-image.

In The Depths Of Abysses Other Abysses Open, if you understand that in every chapter of life the vague message of God is interposed, and that in spite of all the appearances of life you must keep your peace of mind. Remember that all you feel about life and people is the idea you form about God's hidden will.

In The Face Of Eternal Silence

Measure your character based on how you are perceived by others, taking into account the requirement of living with yourself in the name of serving a lost world.

Mercedes changed quite a lot. And this was not because in the time of great riches she would've prided herself with the arrogant glamour that clearly removed all traces of social status and makes it so you can't recognize the woman she once was who appeared in simpler garbs. And also not because she would've fallen into the miserable state of being forced to wear the garbs of poverty. No. Mercedes seemed changed because her eyes were no longer shining, because her mouth was no longer smiling, because, at long last, an unabated uneasiness stopped on her lips the very words her sharp mind once enabled her to utter without pause.

Mercedes had never known true misery. In her youth, she often talked about poverty, but this is something else entirely. Need and necessity are two similar words and yet are terribly far apart. But it wasn't poverty that drained this woman's mind, and it was not the lack of courage that made poverty seem oppressive.

*Lowered from the world she lived in, lost in the world she now chose, similar to those leaving a parlor with enchanting lighting, stepping suddenly into darkness, Mercedes seemed a queen descending from a palace into a hut, a queen having just barely enough to not starve to death, failing to recognize even the pottery she was forced to bring to the table herself, and not the shabby couch replacing her bed either. Only saddening things were surrounding her... In the face of this eternal silence, she felt as dazed as the traveler reaching the edge of a precipice. **

Leadership: Do you undergo a process of knowledge that pegs its way through the ignorance of only seeing the facet of reality that suits you?

Although opposite in terms of personal assessment trends, the knowledge of what you once were and the knowledge of what you have become, on different planes and stages of a process that pegged its way through the ignorance of seeing only that facet of reality that suits you, in the composition in which you will never return unless life "abandons" you, lead to the realization of a harsh request of leadership: the request of living with yourself at last.

The end of grandeur in the name of the service of a lost world, isolated in a truth focused on pain and limitation, has as a matter of utmost importance the willingness to accept a pressing reality as an irreducible fact following the consequences of the events you have witnessed with indifference. A man who worships such an end, complacent in an extended suffering, obviously cannot accept his condition as a superior destiny, but he can find a meaning by trying to reconcile with his own consciousness.

The relationship between destiny and acceptance of the finitude condition, an alliance in itself, composed of both hopes and non-motivation, can explain the seeming contradiction the individual is trying to self-assess in terms of how he is perceived by the world. When you are no longer mindful of what responds to the needs of your nature, meaning when you are indifferent to yourself, you begin to capture the attention of others as a criterion of your kind of spirit, of the mood of contentment with less.

In reality it is not a contradiction, but only two different ways of viewing ourselves. The first, the image of a spoiled man, without truly getting involved in any important aspect of life, as a type of sweet cowardice, conservative by ignorance and duplicity in assuming certain preferences or certain major responsibilities. And the second, as consequence, in the form of adversity, as a completely unrealized man.

Leadership: Do you meet your individualization needs in terms of your positioning at a point of utmost visibility from which a fatalistic view of life flows?

Your attitude of guilt in a process of interference between experiences and actions amplified by the hazard leads to a corresponding result: rejection of everything that is to your liking, removal of everything that enlivens you. Producing relevance in highlighting the gaps in one's own mentality, as a brief analysis compared to the existing situation, must give rise to a reason from which you'd tether your suffering and cancel it, such as not yielding to the insistence of the conscience of delimitating yourself from the world around you.

Thus, leadership must be, to some extent, the measure of regularity, of order regarding your formation and your essential values, in such a way that you prevent your fall into the abyss of guilt, of pride or self-exaltation. Positioning yourself at a point of utmost visibility from which a fatalist view of life flows means focusing your interest on the limits of self-objectivity, giving up what is important and valuable spiritually.

Being able to recognize you were wrong, to be willing to change and to do it before it's too late. First in the plan of conceiving a new world, or in the mental project stage of your hidden life. Next, in that of the concrete realization of the meaning of your authenticity, through the direct intervention of the hazard, of the random and the unexpected, sometimes having the role of "awakening" or "reminder", and then to act towards dignity.

This is the condition of a transformational leadership that serves as a pillar of becoming and the power to escape the edge of the precipice of life, by assuming suffering or happiness: to know how to appreciate yourself depending on your desire to escape the limits of individual consciousness.

Before adjusting the level of confidence of others in yourself, measure your existential journey by experimenting with accepting the presence that can be forgotten.

In The Face of Eternal Silence will be the man that has only ever known that side of reality that suits him, that he imagined, realized it, but never truly lived it. The capacity to perceive a different reality, sometimes going hand in hand with the pride of facing it, and the strength of becoming that reality, are two similar concepts. And yet they are so very far apart.

In The Name Of The Father

On October 08, 2010

The more you know about leadership, the easier it will be to recognize the talent of a leader.

Despite the evident endeavors that he strives, Tus did not advance at all of his father's expectations, Sharaman, who was the king of Persia. In secret, he nourished the hope that he will manage to become king, just like his father, convinced that the decisions he had taken had been the most skillful.

It was time for Tus to give explanations for the siege of the holy city of Alamut. The king, on whom you could read the disappointment on the face, looked sternly at his son and talked to him on an authoritarian tone of reproach:

- This. . . Your adventure will not please our allies. But I guess you have not thought about this. . .

Tus remained stunned to the blame of the king, he could not justify his actions. His total and pathetic aspiration to aggrandizement, especially his excitement, turned out to be negative. He was unsure of himself. He did not stop to look worried and his uncle, who was present, as if he wished to take his defense.

Sharaman King, thanks to knowledge's and his extraordinary wisdom, coupled with his unerring instinct to detect the strengths and weaknesses that were present in people, but especially in his son, told him gently in voice:

- I know you hardly wait to wear the crown, but believe me, you're not ready yet !

Leadership: Are you aware of the significance of the ascension that gives uniqueness to your own decisions, weighing what is bad from what is good, in an attitude that reflects your dependence of being at the forefront?

Paraphrasing the Spanish diplomat Diego Saavedra Fajardo (1584-1648), I would say that leadership is rather a burden than an honor - like the worres of a father burdened with children. It is very important for a leader to know the unusual impulses of his "children" hearts. And especially to distinguish the feeble nature of the proud ones, ambitious and eager to assert - but superficial, and the really strong and powerful that are able to take wise decisions and handle the power intuitively and safe.

The King Sharaman from the movie "Prince of Persia - The Sands of Time (2010)" did not appoint Tus as his successor, for the simple reason that he did not see in him the qualities of a skillful leader. His duty as a father was to instill in his son the love of virtue, to inspire him in gaining wisdom. But he has not heeded his advice and exhortations, but full of ambition and penchant for brilliance started an unnecessarily war, using more a pretext than clear evidence.

Tus's attempt to prove his leadership skills proved to be disastrous. His performance was to cost his father the honor and fame in front of the allied nations. The shame was to be a catastrophic sense for King Sharaman, at his age he would hardly have endured scorn and hatred directed against him.

Leadership: Does your personal inclusion in a more advanced evaluation state confirm your withdrawal from the foreground of value?

Someone who doesn't follow the affective dimension of leadership, in various points along the way towards personal inclusion in a more advanced evaluation state, would never have his merits and reasoning acknowledged with the purpose of generating new competencies. This accentuates the leader's tendency to submit everything to his own wishes, wasting his power to overcome himself, not taking into consideration the meaning of the disconfort area.

The personal assessment before ascension, on a discontinuous line of exercising power in terms of assuring the efforts to serve a need of self-fulfillment, contributes to gaining the merit of being rational, flexible, and adaptable in any situation.

This assessment encompasses all those aspects that drive you to act and cause you to behave a certain way or to aim for a certain purpose. But above all, it has first and foremost the role of a winning of the guarantee of keeping your commitment to any feeling.

The most eloquent proof that private initiative is efficient, is almost entirely extracted from the process of suitable „confessions and justifications" only through taking responsability and through diligently fulfilling one's duties. While the power downfall in the equation of performance denotes that rupture between the universe of experiences and the world of greatest ambitions that enter in a new surveillence and control structure with the isolated actions that disappear in the meaningless sphere of the coincidental.

Leadership: Do you weigh your leadership potential according to the time and place criteria in which you feel ready to discern between your absolute beliefs and someone else's suspicions?

One can't present to a leader the sustained confirmation in the succession of his real evolution stages within an ample process of transformation at the level of Mindset or Mastery Orientation, unless he can make a giant leap over all the reasoning errors that can occur in matters that don't fit in the action sphere of honesty, proffessional probity and self-restraint.

That's why consolidating authority and a resistance position in front of a whole set of cumulative conditions (such as the price you have to pay for the lack of vision, willingness to give up the harmful purposes and principles, the willingness to accept the worth of truth), are the most important lessons that you learn in the meaning stage of an evolution that can prove itself full of uncertainty.

After what criteria do you scale the potential of a leader?

According to King, his son's reasoning was only of a novice one. Only the thought that his son waited eagerly to take his precious place, although he was not prepared to face the responsibilities of a king, increased even more his pain. Consequently, the decision not to appoint him as his successor was a correct one. For a king, and respectively for a father, the most severe from all the punishment is to see his son (of that must be so proud of) a loser.

Only a wise man takes wise decisions. Sharaman King, who was unsurpassed in wisdom and has a big heart, was aware that leaders are chosen based on their skills. And he knew very well how he is looking like a potentially good leader. As a result, weighing the talents of his three sons, found that the most worthy would be none other than Dastan, his adopted son, who finally become the "Prince of Persia".

Leadership is the impression you make when respecting a colossal task: to be decisive in making a decision that cannot be denied by any contestation.

In leader's life comes a moment when he has to entrust the relay to another one, but not everyone. Possessing maturity in thinking and experience, he must discern carefully between true and false, choosing someone with truly leadership qualities and to be recognized for these qualities by the rest of the team. The arbitrary choice in this situation can become an irreparable disaster. Do the more he knows better the leadership, the better the choice will be easier and more reliable.

In The Name of The Father you must behave like a son worthy of the trust and respect of an entire nation.

The leader is like a parent who takes care of his children. He is like a loving father who never ceases to watch over all that is positive and effective in his children's education, to talk to them, to counsel them and guide them on the right track, and rebuke them when they get on their own guilt on the brink.

The "Children" must be open to the suggestions of their father, who having more experience cannot advise them wrong. But above all they have to realize that whenever they are making a decision or start taking an action, are taken in their names, but inevitably passes on their father's reputation.

In The Name Of The Rose

On March 27, 2016

Try to control the course of a role-play that offers the security of the game.

Do not be fooled: the rose always hides a great secret, to allows for change to happen, the essence that keeps you alive, a sign from God that you have received your blessing, maintaining an inner state of great luminosity. It is the emblem of a man obsessed with words, with the games of meanings that give a face to things, tricks invented for real, creating an expectation in that constant of the work called vision, from the angle of miraculous phenomena. You are immobilized there forever, between the scent of a changing state, as the sun between the clouds, and the sharp thorns of the aspirations for changing the form of the image of time and space, making up the magic formula of the living world.

From a famous spy novel by David Morell, I learned that in Greek mythology, the god of live once offered a rose to the god of silence, as a bribe, to prevent that god from revealing the weaknesses of the other gods. With time, the rose became a symbol of silence and mystery. In the Middle Ages, it was customary to hang a rose from the ceiling of a council room. The council members swore not to reveal what they would discuss in the room, sub rosa, in the name of the rose.

When you will come to visit me, as actors always go back to the stage, because only there does the spectacle truly take place, I shall show you a special rose, a new species: "Crosswords", full of all the colors of a divergent production, demanding the integration of disparate elements, both concrete and abstract.

I could always give that rose a new name, but I think of it in terms of result of the work with myself, of my transformation, that it is almost impossible to play back the feeling of honor I pretend and invoke, that my professionalism imposes. The rose is the result of a word game that creates a fascinating imaginary space in which we all want to get through, a reference to a subject that has raised a special interest and a metaphor that deeply suggests the idea of rebirth and glory from an aesthetic perspective.

I like its double meaning, but you will understand only the one that is left unguarded, and the one that suits you. In my line of work, beauty is required – that one you need to receive, not necessarily the one that defines me.

Leadership: Do you try to introduce others into a game full of meanings by using the variation of its suggestive properties?

This rose, originating from various sorts, for which all the voices of the soul find their resonance in inspirational areas, is an unusual one, completely different from the one from years past, so it will not seem to you that you enter a game without understanding its suggestive properties. The task it does has the role of defending an idea attacked from all sides, like a sort of landscape thief encompassing intense sensations and experiences. Try to clear up the mystery of this rose, return to theory. Do not attempt to hold it in your hand, for it will increase mystery and curiosity.

As you realize, I started to induce a certain image to you, a certain interpretation, perhaps even in error. Only a forger of images can best ensure this state of suggestion, all throughout leadership, which makes you wonder where it is coming from. Sometimes you cannot explain this state, but you feel it in its fullness, that you are carried through a row of surprising experiences, that spark up several questions within you, the interest of finding as much as possible.

Leadership draws all of its traits from the core of a rose that never withers, deserving to be exaggerated through exposure, so that it continues to fascinate and surprise. What always accompanies you on the ream of eternal ideas, is related to the approach of a theme having at its center the "collection and offering of the Rose" – as a result of your transformation. Its place in the context of perpetuating a certain understanding, must be undertaken by the concept of a maximum and unitary suggestiveness that must circulate widely.

Seen as a means of asserting a powerful identity of an idea, by seeking and discovering a unique or multi-purpose suggestiveness, the rose has a special creative significance – first, because you find yourself in the presence of an active spiritual state, sheltering confidence in a sort of victory over the representation of reality.

Then, it is born within you that quality of controlling the course of a role-play, which offers the game's own security. You decide on what you insert in the minds of others, but what you insert needs to be directly proportional with what they are willing to see and accept.

The suggestiveness with which you continue to emphasize the parts of concealed agreements is similar to the conquering aroma of the rose: it dares you to dream, as a foray into the brilliant world of aesthetics, but also takes you back in time, evoking memories you might have thought lost.

The revelation that confirms the impact of leadership distributed in the form of surprising experiences is an extended image beyond the beauty of conceptual structures expressed through the direct comparison method.

In The Name Of The Rose must always be solidary that forger of images that wants to turn knowledge, his own transformation, a true spectacle, a genuine leadership, calling to the discovery of a unique or multi-purpose suggestiveness.

Such a man has the task of keeping secret the identity of an idea that others need to find under a different angle. This is what makes him a leader, because he manages to always find himself in the shadow of a game, whose center is made up of that interpretation through which the support of an idea or theory is attempted.

Roses draw the world's eyes not with great costs, but due to the elements of relevance their traits present. Do you find yourself in them? Can you draw from them? Can you lead based on them?

In The Name Of The Truth, I Abandon You

On March 08, 2009

Always support the greatness of your leadership, by impressing on people a well-defined scale of values which could not allow for any diversion from the professional code that you have established.

Bill Parrish, the founder and president of the Parrish Communications corporation invites Drew to his anniversary party. Drew was his right hand, who had proven to be an impostor – "the man in the shadow", who, cowardly, had worked behind everyone's back to take him down from the company's leadership and to ease its selling for a great investor.

If you have seen the movie „Meet Joe Black (1998)", you most certainly remember the end of it. Bill Parrish, with the authority of an intelligent and lucid man that he was, together with Joe Black, sets Drew a trap in order to make him unmask himself in front of the company's board of directors.

As a consequence of the well set out de-conspiracy plan, Drew reacted, even though only instinctively, in the most eloquent manner possible, exactly as Bill and Joe expected. He fell into their trap, revealing the board of directors his true intentions and the illegalities that he had made in order to take down Bill from his manager position, so he may sell the company.

Leadership: What is your vision of the business you run, taking into account how to protect yourself from a reality that almost "escapes your grasp" but which challenges you only to test your values that you do not appreciate enough to you?

Drew, though for many years Bill's wingman, did not keep the trait that united them in a certain period of their activity: the respect for Parrish and the quality of his leadership.

Leadership is like a calling to order and correctness, to truth and virtue, and must be a model of integrity and professional exigency, which has a single measure: the personal one. And everything that represents you, all your traits, all your qualities, if not tuned to a maximum level of integrity and trust, shall directly affect your leadership just like pollution affects directly your brain.

They say lie has no legs and that the truth will always come out, meaning that duplicity and dissimulation of the truth about one's self will, as well, be found out, sooner or later. Woe to those who hid their pas, who hid their flaws and their eventual refutable acts. Once revealed, people's trust will disappear and they will be removed, and then they will fall into the abyss of oblivion.

However, Drew's deceptive character was always in plain sight, for he did not value his relationship with Bill Parrish's youngest daughter at all. And Bill didn't notice Drew's precarious nature for one reason only: he left everything in sight, he didn't care about the details, he didn't care about his science, so often it seemed to him that the real visionary in the company was Drew (the one who so cunningly acted as a responsible person).

In fact, Parrish's big mistake was this: he didn't seem to notice the world around him, he had reached an old age that no longer aroused his curiosity or momentum, an old age that had hopelessly alienated itself.

Vision is the quality of the leader to submit to a reality that people see differently. But the same vision must go beyond what is immediately achievable, beyond what people have become accustomed to calling "doing everything without sight".

What you have destroyed in time with your own self and have hidden from everyone else can no longer be repaired. Rebirth, just like the Phoenix bird, from one's own ash rarely happens with a leader and it is even rarer to be accepted. So be honest and fair with people, don't lie to them about your past and maybe you will have mitigating circumstances. A clean and fair consciousness will push your leadership to a higher level, while a character observing a code of honor will prevent you from destabilizing your moral quality.

As far as a resistance challenge is concerned, the winner is not the one reaching the finish line a meter ahead, but the one who crosses the line. It's the same thing about integrity, as well. Only the people who are fair until the end will win the great battle with themselves, with their weaknesses and vices, and that is the only way they will be able to show their personal quality and will regain an ascendant on others.

As a key person in a company, you must be a prominent and unanimously appreciated by others, not a contrasting one, with accents that do not complete the sought after and appreciated qualities and abilities. In a company, everything resides on the moral substrate, and your decisions and actions must not lead to your moral depreciation, because, otherwise, you will be discredited, despised and your image will be compromised.

Always support the examples your leadership can give, impressing on people a well-defined pyramid of values, that would not allow for any diversion from the professional code that you have established. Remember that values you don't value enough about yourself (such as fairness, sincerity, good intentions) are values that other people can use to your detriment, just to hide their theft.

Leadership is a reality that can "escape from under your feet" if your moral quality is not in line with a vision that everyone supports, with all the resources.

In other words, do not arm yourself with a vision that the "numbers" support, but with a vision that can be explained as follows: "This is the time when any man draws the balance line at the end of the year."

In The Name Of The Truth, I Abandon You represents the moment when any agreement between you and others disappears, an agreement that wasn't set on reciprocity and common interests. This moment appears when one of the parties doesn't take into account the interests of the other party, when it doesn't contribute to imposing and efficient leadership model and does not have a guaranteed performance.

Integrity shall never cease to represent one of the reference points in leadership. And it's not one of the reference points in leadership. And it's not hard to decipher someone's superficial leadership, one that belongs to a personality that evolves on different trajectories, often times diverging from yours, and that has nothing in common with ethics.

Conclusion: In leadership, it is hard to appreciate on who's side lies the truth, but when contradictions, different opinions, emerge, in the moment that the common interests disappear, one can say that leadership is over, despite the good initial intentions.

In This World I Find Everything, Even Eternity

On October 05, 2018

Try to give reality a voice through a work that finds its representation in an existence that is preserved in the memory of an ever-present time.

The contacts with the most dynamic arts in the visual world, which time itself made in the chase to a point without turning, made me believe that every artist is limited to certain themes, to certain ways of identifying models of inspiration among the many versions of works previously brought to their attention.

But always the art that drew my attention most is a kind of combination between the coloring of the canvas, increasing diversity and flexibility, and the light ray that passes through a prism in a dark room, decomposing into different colored rays, similar to the colors of the rainbow. Light dependence is an ideal of beauty springing out of the darkness of a century without a compass, the existence of a world without landmarks, or the soul of an artist who knows how to look at it with other eyes.

When I look at a painting by Christopher RW Nevinson, I feel as if I experience a hallucination, according to which I can perceive events or things that do not exist, satisfying a primordial impulse at the root of my existence built up by responding to the demands of an endless universe. The visible spectrum of the viewer for an immortal artist can be counted as a shadow of doubt in the focus of a mirror that reflects the parts of the court of a curved space-time following the imagination of a "beyond" empirical knowledge.

This artist, characterized by a sober realism, spent his hours of insomnia discussing with me plans that lightened his mood, as splendid guiding stars, whose success interested him more than the crumbs of existence that he would have acquired in addition if he would have painted through a gray cloth all the horrors of the war he had gone through.

Leadership: Are you able to capture the beginning of a world whose time accumulates in one place, but has ramifications in any future of any major event?

I did not agree with him about the meanings attributed to the image of a major event played by mirror and lens games, as was probably the violent collision of the Transatlantic with a dike. But Nevinson continued to claim that all the mysteries of art and all its subtleties are manifested first and foremost in the skill of gaining more space to explore, combining more functions into one and at the same time giving the feeling of fusion between several worlds.

Without further additions, but linked to a red thread of destiny, "The Arrival" captures the beginning of a world whose time accumulates in one place, but has ramifications in any future of any major event. It is not about a surprise trip in the wonderful world of fantasy, but about twisting a mirror towards a new beginning of the artistic universe.

The great artist was fascinated by the idea of "simultaneity", drawing attention by the complexity of the hard to imagine details in an attempt to capture in one composition the many views and movements in one single moment.

In fact, his whole existence took into consideration the nature of a mirror that reveals only what is reflected in a time without language consciousness and death. Light composition, whose original properties are distinguished by colors born from refractions or reflections of natural bodies.

"The Arrival" is a kind of mirroring of a way to amplify events filled with the unexpected within a supernatural or metaphysical space. The image seems to be a means of expressing the true dimensions that the universe gives to the world in a short time of reality.

Thus, I began to think about myself what Nevinson himself believed about his art: it is made up of a materiality whose phenomenology can be understood only by the elaboration of a spatial chromatic system.

Leadership: Are you prepared to benefit from the accessibility of wider territories of content, revealed by the mysteries of a life lived by chance that envelops the destiny of a special relationship with the field of spatial representation?

In each conversation, with every representation of a pencil line, to the smallest details of the pictorial construction, I experienced with anticipation certain phases of my future understanding of the deep connection between spaces, times, events and the realities of the world. Because this is the standard artistic attitude of the one who wants to embody the infinite in a single place.

The mysteries of a life lived by chance, a rarity of great value for an optimal fictional mode of expression, are ensured by the testimony of my reincarnation in the obscurity of an endless night when the British painter finishes his painting, giving it the last brush stroke with a transparent varnish.

The artist most useful to the universe is the hero who follows the path of destiny with the inner necessity to provide proof of the immortality of his glory, living through all centuries only because of the overwhelming size of what he has left as an inheritance from a life dedicated to art beyond profit.

It can be seen from here how hard it is to apply an expressionist, reintegrating style of the "multiple in one", beyond the mirror of the Self, to capture a reality that must be experienced like an enigma that must be untangled. A spatial representation that makes room for subjectivity has the effect of a far-reaching exploration in the work of an artist who knows one thing: creativity is everywhere, in any format.

If you want to be accepted among your favorite images of the universe, in a night full of stars, accompanied only by the mild light of the moon, you have to treat this artist, no matter how many classes he has, as a superior being, a plan of the universe to give birth to the world in which YOU are unfathomable, having a hard mission where he works and lives.

And obviously no one understands him. Because he is a part of you, and you are that urge to the totality of existence, a forceful start to the absolute totality that is impossible to reconstitute in an empirical way, only spiritual.

Leadership: Are you enchanted by the creative spark of a definitively foreseen emotion to constitute yourself as a form of spirituality in a fundamental and causal pattern for all your manifestations of sensitivity and beauty?

I alone always believed Nevinson, precisely because he was confident in the trumps of a new spectacle of mirrors and reflections so well anchored in the majesty of his own being, as if he had something of the eloquent splendor of eternal life. I was tempted to believe that this man never sleeps, never eats, laughs and never jokes. But in him could be felt that experience that compensated for every worldly care, any lust, any fleeting necessity.

Whatever the case, you should not treat such an artist of the smallest detail as a man, but as a genie without a lamp, hidden in an art gallery full of the savor of the passion for timeless themes, in which there is no dampness, but only that indiscreet glint of the eyes that capture the mirage of atypical beauty.

If I had to constitute myself as a form of spirituality in a fundamental and causal pattern for all my sensibilities and beauty, as a road divided into several artistic directions, from banal to subliminal, I would actually program myself for a kind of understanding of the condensed universe in a heavy materiality of mystery, becoming less and less communicable and more and more fortified.

I will never forget that art is a drop of light, a drop of darkness, a drop of immortality. Each epoch still operates a sort of openness to every aspiration towards the high poetic of a blue perceived only by the whirlpool of a memorial carousel. In this world (of the futuristic painting) I find everything, even eternity, the infinity of matter, even if it walks disguised in a very old but always renewing spirit.

The beauty of a spatial representation encompasses the greatness of a life that reflects the endless prolongation of a constant called "memory".

In This World I Find Everything, Even Eternity, if I begin to think like a painter who knows how to develop a broad, colorful composition from a life experience that allows him to see the world through the mirror of an indestructible universe.

Include Me In Your Forgiveness

On March 19, 2012

Manage carefully your emotional resources, in order to acquire and keep a place of honor in the souls of the people.

Annie, Peter and their father, Royce Garrett, were swinging suspended on a rope to the abrupt slope of the mountain, at about 450 meters high. No one of them, were not anticipating the consequences of that escalation. In that terrifying moment of waiting, Annie makes a last attempt to reach the stone wall, but the piton that sustained her has moved from its place. The rope could no longer hold all three of them.

Royce becomes unshakable as a statue where only the lips had life. With a tremor in his voice, he tells to his son:

- Peter, I want you to take out the knife. You do not have too much time left. You must do something for me, ok? Cut the rope. We are too heavy, and a piton could not keep all three of us.

- No ! No ! No ! screamed Annie. Do not do this, Peter ! But the tears that started to fill her eyes could not cut her father's voice, which become more and more harsh:

Leadership: Is it worthwhile to fight to move on when the link between you and a person is stronger than what separates you from the experiences of a life lived at the limit?

- Shut up, Annie ! ... Listen to me, Peter ! If you do not do this, your sister will die ! exclaimed their father in tense emotion, with that exhaustion of the man who knows he has no point in fighting against fate. Then, with an expression full of conviction, strengthen even stronger his decision: Cut the rope ! Cut once ! It does not matter what happens to me ! Cut it ! We have no time ! Cut it !

Can you assure the rescue through sacrifice? Something suddenly changed in Peter. The words uttered by his father with a responsible fierceness – the supreme testimony of the love shared through sacrifice, made to flow over his whole being, as a torrential rain, impetuous, those feelings of anxiety - giving rise to that form of courage, to the firmness that gave him power to overcome his limits.

The key to understanding today's leadership and its future perspectives does not lie in what the leaders do or believe in. It lies in deciphering and anticipating the new emotional circumstances in which they are placed. Like any other people, the leaders are also involved in a wave of emotional changes - just to another level, more profound, by sharing their experiences in a different way.

Your personality will evolve linearly and predictable on the trajectories set by your emotional charge, in accordance with the principles on which underlies your leadership, according to your way of being, with your commitment, according to the care that you give to the other people – hence, it will evolve depending on how you direct your own resources.

Leadership: Do you practice the virtue of believing in yourself at a turning point when your vision and values do not match the condition of a moral man?

I go back to the movie "Vertical Limit (2000)" in order to establish exactly the idea that I want to transmit it. Peter cut the rope, saving his and his sister's life - and causing the death of their father. However, his action was blameworthy. It produced the greatest unhappiness to Annie, by making to flow in her soul, like lava, painful feelings, full of bitterness and hatred.

In the end of the movie, Peter manages to save Annie, with the risk of endangering his own life. He coordinated and participated in the Annie's rescue mission in the Himalayas that after an avalanche remained isolated under a wall of ice.

Annie looks at her brother with an expression full of love, as if her whole being was brought back to life. All her feelings of hatred disappeared. His courageous act defrosted her astonished heart. Her face, full of the joy of very deep feelings, mirrored a single thought:

- I forgive you, Peter. I forgive you because I could have been instead of you. I forgive you because you had the second time the courage that I never had. You did a wonderful job there. Anyone else would have given up. My father would have been proud of you.

The most useful capacity of a leader is deduced from a bold thing: to adopt a way of ensuring that you will not get to the place or position you have not proposed to yourself.

The most significant influence that a leader has it – is the one that awakens the deep emotions and feelings. If you are not able to eliminate those negative aspects that contradict your feelings and beliefs, you could never make the leap towards the true greatness. To be great is to get to know people, to forgive them, and give them a chance to grow before your eyes, continually proving your commitment towards your feelings and values.

Just as the human body it is actively immunized against the negative factors that might endanger its proper functioning - even so you, wisely countering all the negative aspects of your leadership, you can immunize yourself from harmful vibration and interior states. You will unlock the physical and mental energies of your being that prevent you from manifesting your full potential. Those negative aspects of your leadership, is primarily the result of the agreement that you have sealed it with your Ego, and afterwards with everything you know and with your reason._

Can you build castles in the air? When you treat people with hatred or disinterest, as if they would be worthless, is like building a castle in the air - your influence is increasingly less on them - you cannot develop a sense of trust because your leadership is not having an adequate and stable foundation that would ensure your development and performance.

Leadership is like an indestructible whole, which unites your feelings of the other people's feelings, by preserving and unifying the common features and qualities. It can break down if it is not maintained with patience and affection.

The position that never favors you as a leader has as a reference indicator the passage of a path leading to the unknown of the situations in which the feelings and consciousness face, because of the impulse to plead for an honorable cause: deliberate renunciation.

Include me in your forgiveness highlights the will of a leader of not renouncing to all the forms of manifestation of his own nature: to his values, emotions, experiences, and beliefs - this being the only way of achieving an honorable place in the hearts of the people and of inculcating in their consciousness his true ideals, thoughts and spiritual needs.

Incursion In The Space Of A Dream Called The Future

On April 27, 2016

Be as much as you can be beyond the widely-accepted limits of normality, trying to perceive the truth that imposes itself on your existence as an experience of imaginative thinking.

However strange it may sound, I had the uncommon impression, to a certain comforting extent, that I was the result of a dream that never ceases going forward, an emanation of a transcendent instance that suggestively uttered the adventure of a being developed on their own. Everything took place unconventionally, surpassing the strict space of a plausible understanding, as an action of entering a magical sphere whose wave function consisted of gaining illuminating knowledge of a reality that threatened to unravel.

And the wave, a vibration propagated instantaneously over a figment of the mind, I dared hope that I could control it (with the price of a crowning of madness) in a stand-alone obligation, in the context of imaginative experiences. For a moment, I felt like I was part of a Counterpart episode. When the main hero, Howard Silk, learns that the organization of which he is a member has discovered the secret of passing into a parallel dimension, he is thrown into a world full of intrigue, danger and betrayal, from which he can only escape by asking himself the question: "What if my life was different?"

In a way, I hoped that if I immersed myself in another reality, captured in images, emptied of any human support, I could inaugurate with my mind's eye a symbolic space of orienting my soul to find a theme of admiration of an Alter-Ego who, at the risk of replacing my entire being, had the power to revolt against the attitude of accepting a life situation without exit, without perspective. Perhaps my life, lived with disinterest for things fleeting, without any consequences that could tempt me to sin, that is, forgetting God, was no longer an attraction for a spirit of breadth, time, and boundless play. I was free to change it with all the attributes of a movie fiction.

Leadership: Does the act of interpreting one's own creation have its source of novelty in the authentic life experience of a high-perspective author who is capable of capturing the essence of a new form of subjectivity through what he is able to constantly pursue?

I wish the mouth would dare say what the thoughts had discovered, in the stuck twilight of a fruit of imagination, including a piece of the universe's infinity. I'd want to deny my mission of giving meaning to the dream that always asked of me: Where are you hiding? It was so thrilling to stay there. The creator never forsakes his madness that constantly pursues him, this unstoppable desire to be seen living in a cinematic, virtuous and wise space, projected into the infinity of space and time, into the infinity of the feeling that he can experience from the soul of someone else a "limitlessness of the act of creation".

I would transpose myself at certain points in the role of the Count of Monte Cristo in a black cloak, amid dark times, and at other points in the role of Isaac Newton, blinded by the perfection of formulas of interpolation, amid a large-scale work whose outcome was uncertain. I even assumed the inherent qualities of Charles Chaplin in a double role. But the urge to continue the vast history of experiences from beyond the tactile, this process of filling the fingerprints of oneiric revelations, this series of experiences of transcending time and space, only slightly true, could have transformed into disillusion.

Did French physicist Loup Verlet not say, referring to Freud and his dreams, that the inquisitor clouded by his formulas and blinded by their inner perfection, always risks to consider the things he created through thinking, in imagination, as being what exists effectively and detach himself from the real world?

Leadership: Do you reorient yourself towards the memory of a previous state, as an action of entering a session of recovering the essence that makes you whole?

In fact, over the evolution of man seen from a broader perspective hover two great forces, one of understanding carried out beyond the immediate reality, the other of understanding projected into consciousness in an imaginative process. These forces, overcoming without prejudice the frontiers of existence, from one state to another, are conclusions of revealing experiences obtained by employing man in relation to the self that makes its usefulness felt in a forging more than creative.

As an aesthetician cannot give new meanings to art without descending to the very concrete of the artistic fact, which means mobility, transformation, becoming, neither can the man who tries to develop himself give new meanings to his identity if he doesn't stimulate his memory, transcended beyond time, with new ideas and perspectives.

To reorient yourself towards the memory of a previous state, as an action of entering a session of recovering the essence that makes you whole, means to immortalize in that framework of your own mind, containing within it something else, something more valuable than all others. Namely, the conception of a perspective, of a particular subject and to continue to exist along with it. It is madness, but at the same time a great wisdom, the only way of acceding to a higher knowledge.

Man summarizes in himself and synthesizes the essentiality of a self-evaluation caused by reaching a certain stage of acceptance, which resides from the correlation that is established between creation and ideation, between imagination and existence through it. The memory that you have to use to broaden your horizons, while also acting as a determinant of artistic creation, can be used with reference to the copy of a larger reality, imagined as a two-dimensional representation, to immediately make you think of a movie, a photo, a painting, a novel by Zimmer Bradley, a walk in another world.

In the future, when technology will advance and man will be able to communicate with other worlds only with the power of the mind, leadership will change its criteria of impact and development. Alexandre Dumas and Victor Hugo have often inserted this truth in their works.

Leadership will start to take shape along with what man will represent within the empire of his imaginations, through a condition of the type "be as much as you can be beyond the widely-accepted limits of normality."

Thus, in order for man to better know himself, it will be necessary for there to be present within his sphere of existence two similar forces, merging into a single essence: the power to turn into another being through metamorphosis and the powerful feeling of the Ego that will make him feel separate from the rest of the world.

Evolution, under leadership that contributes to the effort of transforming personality, by developing the ability to understand the essence of what you are, contains new understandings and perspectives in the context of the experience of rediscovering yourself as an entity of the universe, organizing itself depending on what the mind imagines.

Incursion In The Space Of A Dream Called The Future could significantly change the perception regarding the cerebral potential man has, by which he attests his quality to be transposed in another place, in another time, in another character, in another reality.

The evolution of an authentic man takes place when he starts perceiving the truth that imposes itself on existence as an experience of imaginative, associative, and emotionally involved thinking.

You will more easily understand the notion of tight interdependence of the outer with the inner if you take into account the fact that beyond the immediate reality exists a world full of mystery that waits to be consulted.

Initiates Have A Better Knowledge

On April 18, 2020

Learn to turn your evolution into a work of the divine, which is intended to be a faculty of the soul that knows things before they take any form.

- This works for fools, for the simple and uneducated. The initiates have a better knowledge. We do not despise Christians, because there are initiates among them who are holy people. The higher we climb the ladder of knowledge, the wider we open our eyes. At the end of their search, initiates know that all countries glorify the same God. I see him with their worldly eyes, I feel him in their flesh. This is the supreme knowledge. By acquiring it, the saint can heal the sick and restore the sight of the blind with a simple touch. Even a piece of his clothes is enough, and the bones also retain their strength.

We believe in the one God and his prophet, the Qur'an and the Hadith, and we follow the right path. Our cadets and ulema spoil their sight by studying the Qur'an, just as Christian scholars dedicate themselves to reading the Bible and exegesis of the Holy Fathers. To become learned, it is enough to have diligence and a good memory. For the initiate, every writing, every worldly thing is revealed and clarified in the supreme knowledge, finally, as a metaphor of God. For the initiate, the moment comes when he lives in God and God lives in him. *****

Leadership: Can you imprint a movement on what is immutable and ubiquitous, by revealing a knowledge based on the interpretation of an understanding obtained by integrating information into an entity of the same nature, but superior?

Not only does the book symbolize the means of penetrating the mysteries of knowledge, but the very mental faculty of man to discover, to appreciate the ridiculous or the absurd inconsistencies between the requirements and rigors imposed by the rules of society, can symbolize initiation, the beginning of true knowledge.

What does that mean? Well, my advice is to follow the right path to the most chosen knowledge, replacing the reality of many (followers of the demands of society), in which the road is strewn with uncertainty, with that reality in which we discover passion, what we want to do with our life. And the rest will come naturally.

Based on the analysis of the situation in today's society, when everyone runs in any direction but few reach a precise destination, I must point out that the notion of power and the elite are closely linked and occupy key positions in accelerating the importance of knowledge in the context of the process of "viewing beyond the veil of appearances", a view beyond what is immediate, beyond imperfections, beyond concrete manifestations.

This is because the world's elite, despite what is believed, is not made up of presidents, senators and CEOs, but precisely those scientists, often forgotten or remembered on the run, they are the ones who open our eyes and the mind towards new horizons and understandings.

And knowledge still, synonymous with the notion of power and having the sense of covenant of wisdom with the sharpness of salvation, can lay the foundations of a strong faith in God, under the mantle of an enlightened one who can read the secrets of the soul and reach pure consciousness. Challenging this fact, or distrust of the act of knowledge provided for the purpose of Creation, leads to a kind of objective crisis of power itself, which can no longer be enhanced by understanding the harmony between the ideal ego and the miracle of existence.

Learning to turn your evolution into a work of the divine means giving priority to research, knowledge and innovation, so that the study of the process of knowledge becomes your main occupation. And knowledge is intended to be a faculty of the soul that knows things before they take any form, when you share an invincible faith that can move mountains, that can save, that can cope with pain, hunger, and persecution, which can open any soul and disarm any resistance.

Through leadership, we try to imprint a movement on what is immutable and ubiquitous, that is, we begin to follow the right path of faith which consists in the possession of knowledge gained through research, practical experience, mental self-control, thoroughness and interaction with other professionals.

Initiates Have A Better Knowledge if we think about the fact that everything that is factual, built on spirituality, like everything that is useful to this world, has its spearhead in thinking up the phenomena offered to intuition, that is, to highlight their essential properties or assign them certain meanings. And if we draw a parallel with the "essence of all things", we must know what the writer Francis Barrett said a few centuries ago:

"If there are hundreds of virtues of the sun found in as many animals, plants, metals or stones, we will have to gather them together and bring them into a single form, in which we will find unified all the virtues we need."

The moment you allow yourself to see beyond the veil of the world, looking at the realms better left unseen, and begin to rediscover yourself, it means that you have reached the peak of knowledge, and your connection with God is impeccable.

Initiation In Leadership

On December 04, 2010

Before transmitting to people your own vision, first strive to understand deeply the essence of your leadership.

Master told me about an hour about his own art, obtained with difficulty that could not be learnt at school or college. It was the first time when I heard someone speaking with such conviction and power about painting. I told him what I want: to transmit his teachings to me to be able to get myself a great artist.

- To get a great artist you must have talent Nicu, not only will, he told me frankly.

- I think I have talent, I responded calmly and simply in the next moment.

- Wonderful ! said the master, with a voice that mingled astonishment and joy. I'm glad you feel so. But I want to prove this. Sit at the table and draw to me ... an angel. He gave me a sheet of paper, a pencil and an eraser, and told me to start working.

I sat at the table, but when I start drawing it, the master said:

- There is one thing, Nicu. And I do not like to tell you this. The angel should not have wings.

Leadership: Can you assure the creative expression of your individuality, without distorting reality under the pressure of your own affection towards the effects of unending admiration?

Everything starts from a single mental design. I sat there with the paper in front just a few steps from him. Somehow I was a little afraid to embarrass myself. Yes, I really felt it. Maybe I was not so talented that I imagined or I just developed a pleasant hobby. And besides this, master wanted to test my imagination. I had to remove my negative thoughts. I had to control all my energy to do a nice drawing. I consoled by the fact that many other pupils' faces this kind of test, and anything bad happened to them.

For that moment, I had to focus on my highest virtues: patience. And, armed with will and imagination to succeed in drawing an angel - an angel, but not how do imagine the entire world in general - with white wings and yellow halo around the head. After all I wanted to impress the master, by imagination, by style and daring so I had to draw something special. Nobody could understand the full responsibility that pressed on my shoulders in that moment.

After about half an hour I left the pen from my hand, I breathed deep, and full of confidence, I showed the master my own vision of how looks like an angel.

The master looked the drawing in amazement, then exclaimed with satisfaction: "Indeed no whatsoever resemblance to the world of angels."

The creative expression was best defined by an internet user as the never lost "back-up language" of the human being, obtained through the infinitely diversified forms of drawing, improvisation, the invention of new scenarios, the metaphorical situations etc. In leadership, it is important that the creative expression does not distort reality under the pressure of one's own affection towards the effects of a limitless admiration.

Be mindful of your level of admiration and appreciation for those you respect, so that you do not turn into a subject of the utopian mentality, always accustomed to being at the center of attention.

Is your personality reflected in the expression of an unthinkable emotion through the logical and more experienced thinking filter? Is it built on the basis of emotion and excellent memory, and from memory getting more and more into imagination?

Leadership: Are you grateful to your position as an artist for what you are going to convey through a supportive vision of a pre-existing work, without losing the quality of the learning experience that defines the pursuit of true knowledge?

Just as a learner can construct his own vision about the angels, and you can be able to build your own vision of leadership by your imagination, by style and daring, And indeed, there is apparently a fairly easy way to guide people: to create a favorable leadership to you and them, by your own recipe, just as a painter creates his own original art and develop his own style of working to give life to a qualitative work.

What is the essence that fits to your leadership?

It is a real art to know to create your particular vision. First, you need to print a well-defined essence to your leadership that would make you feel in harmony with yourself, and that would not disappoint the others around you. This essence deserves to be seriously welded inside your own operating structure, in your process of thinking and action - if through its content has the property of approaching your beliefs to the beliefs of other people. And for it to continue impressing by its style, imagination and boldness.

Leadership: Do you try to clarify your CONCEPT and IDEAL of self-identity more than your experience admits, by visualizing a model of making art through your own perceptions of the value you give yourself?

Their most skilled leaders develop their original style of management. They are able to arrange things so that they can see the "work" that they create exquisite and renowned. Everything starts from a single mental "draw", but a realistic drawing depicting another dimension of leadership, a very special design that offers a unique perspective about their ideal to make art, which they are projecting then in the mind of their supporters.

Every leader sees things in his personal way, each reading their own model of leadership (in terms of their own perceptions and values) good enough, in the smallest details, firstly taking into consideration the quality. In a way, everyone is a little afraid to be embarrassed, at least initially, so all are working hard to make many plans and use all their resources and power of work to give life a new message, a very special one, through their "work".

Leadership: Can you express your attachment to a much wider perspective on art, viewed from the perspective of a self-contained experience embedded in an image that gradually changes into another image?

In leadership always "angels must have wings" – in other words, leaders must always conform to generally accepted rules and which must be in line with the reality that everyone perceives. Self-experience incorporated into an image that gradually changes into another image is aimed at the manner in which a correlation between information, experience, analysis and opinion is made, leaving room for interpretation on the method adopted to achieve an as accurate as possible picture of reality.

Each individual who aspires to a leadership position has its own views on arts management and many ventures in this area, but without knowing the "rules" and without respecting them regardless of their obligations. As, of course, and here there are rules to be observed and here must be certified skills, written or unwritten, and adequate experience.

Therefore, there must be in advance an initiation into the leadership but is not sufficient only a personal view on this area, because your imagination can play tricks. And if you do not have the ways, means and experience, everything can crumble in the shortest time.

The essence of your leadership can be found in the fact that the notion of art, despite its indeterminacy, involves a value judgment that pervades dream and reality, breaking the invisible walls of emotions, minds and souls through a change of the way of seeing the world.

Initiation In Leadership involves the transformation of the simulated self into a reality experienced especially by the artist who gives his creation valences of expressiveness in the order of a new vision in the art of jointly connecting authority and the freedom to think differently, to overcome the conventional, find new ways of enriching the vision of the world, of being beautiful or ugly, of good or bad.

Initiation Into The Mysteries And Wisdom Of Atum-Ra

On July 24, 2009

The path to greatness is strewn with trials that forge the spirit, preparing it to inherit an ancestral wisdom.

- The god Snefru, gave me all the power to prepare you for our mysteries and to initiate you into the mysteries and wisdom of Atum-Ra. Before I reveal to you the first secrets of the Phoenix, I will let you know some truths that remain foreign to most mortals, but which a king's son, destined for high positions in the state, may even occupy the throne of the Two, must know Kingdoms.

Although it could make him foresee difficult times, this introduction was pleasant for Neferu, as it showed him a bright future.

Leadership: How do you think your intelligence, a particle of universal intelligence, is reflected in the symmetry and harmony that marks the separation between reality and its subjective interpretation?

- Begin by convincing yourself that ideal wisdom, perfect wisdom consists in silence. An outer silence that forces you to turn inward, to dive into your own heart, where there are treasures hidden so deep that most people never glimpse them. For you must know that the god is in us, that our intelligence is His intelligence or, more precisely, a particle of His intelligence. Only through it do we reach the understanding of God, the universal understanding that governs the world. But this intelligence does not consist only in a series of reasonings about the nature of the essence of divinity.

Because this nature and this essence cannot be directly perceived by simple reasonings, by simple efforts of the intelligence that is in us. He needs, first of all, the help of others, the help of the elderly, who transmit a primordial science from man to man, a divine knowledge that can only be reached through initiation.

For any initiation, a more or less long preparation of the soul is required and, at the same time, an asceticism of the body, thanks to which the soul separates from a body torn from the domination of passions and earthly goods. But this initiation cannot be an end in itself and cannot allow us to come to know everything unless it is fulfilled, perfected by an inner illumination, that illumination coming from a god which makes an initiate an akh, a spirit bright, a vision of what the initiate's soul will be after passing the gate of death.

Leadership: Do you behave carefully towards the content that your own spirit elaborates, so that you do not become a dramatic author who presents and exposes on the "stage" foreign persons?

The substantial content of your life can break at any time, isolating the subject at one pole and the object at the other. At one pole - divine knowledge, at the other - self, at one - form, at the other - spirit, at one - meaning, at the other - commitment. These moments of lucidity, which presuppose each other, even if they appear as opposed to each other, estranged, without even suspecting their intimate kinship, are important to clearly recognize a spiritual truth: "Everything that inspires you, at the same time change and dominate you".

Without severity, but with determination, the universal meaning of the interconnection between you and the divine can be completely lost, the connection between wisdom and enlightenment becoming insignificant, contradictory, equivocal, if you fail to find the key that opens the gates to the world of your soul.

That is why, I would say, a special visionary behaves carefully towards the content that his own spirit elaborates, so that he does not become a dramatic author who presents and exposes on the "stage" foreign people, other people. Undoubtedly, he introduces his genius into the work through a kind of asceticism of finality with himself, weaving into it his own spiritual material, but only what is particular, not what is accidentally his general.

From a mystical perspective, we must relate to the process of spiritual enlightenment. Along his spiritual journey, man faces a series of challenges and tests that can shake him from his foundations. This deconstruction of the self is necessary to make room for a new, deeper and more authentic identity connected to divinity.

Wisdom fills the path to greatness, sowing it with trials that forge the spirit, preparing it for the inheritance of ancestral wisdom.

Initiation into the mysteries and wisdom of Atum-Ra is a process of spiritual enlightenment achieved through the silent understanding of profound truths. And what is silence, other than a form of meditation where silence becomes a portal to deep awareness of self and the surrounding universe?

Regardless of the specific interpretation we give to wisdom, through our relationship with divinity, but also on how we live our lives, we must find ourselves in silence. How consistent are we in our values? How much can we afford to be authentic? How much do we sacrifice our integrity in "pursuit of spiritual fulfillment"? Each individual has their own path in relationship with the divine, and the answers are never simple or definitive.

Inner Vision Reveals New Horizons

On September 25, 2024

An inspirational leader sees beyond burning ambition, accessing an inner mystique that transcends ordinary boundaries and opens new horizons.

My sister, Oana Fântânaru, won numerous medals in mountain half-marathon competitions this year. Commendable records. But all these well-deserved medals, these achievements are due to the daily training carried out against the background of dedication and perseverance. And his training wasn't just preparation; they became a form of dynamic meditation, a delicate balance between brute force and mental clarity, a "dance" between mind and body, like a yoga of movement. The breath became the mantra, and the steps - lines of an endless poem, in which every detail mattered. It was as if the entire universe folded around her rhythm, supporting her run, guiding her direction. Running turned into a sacred pact, a union with the forces of nature, where the goal was not only to reach a physical limit, but to transcend it, towards that mental and spiritual perfection.

The path to records was lit not only by burning ambition, but by an inner mystique. This mysticism, however, was not easily defined; it seemed to come from deep within her, from a place inaccessible to ordinary reason. It was as if a subtle, unseen energy accompanied her every step, guiding her not only on the physical path, but also on the inner path to a higher awareness of her own possibilities. This energy was her mysterious guide, the unapproachable light that led her away from doubt, as running became a form of prayer, a call to divinity, an invitation to commune with the pure essence of life.

He optimizes his training not through classic techniques or strict rules, but through a permanent dialogue with his own body and mind. Each adjustment was a path to greater awareness, each adjustment a step toward perfection, not just of technique, but of soul. Running, for Oana, was a sacred ritual, a moment of communion with invisible forces, with that subtle matter that exists beyond ordinary perception. It was as if every run became a prayer, and the road, a sacred way of self-knowledge and closeness to the divine within oneself.

Leadership consists of guiding the steps toward self-transcendence through the communion of mind, body, and the subtle forces that define destiny.

Thus, Oana's running training was no longer just a preparation for performance, but a spiritual journey, in which body and soul intertwine in perfect harmony. Each moment on the trail revealed to him another facet of his existence, another part of that universal energy that flows through everyone and everything, but which few truly feel. For Oana, running was a way to reconnect not only with nature, but also with that part of herself that tended towards infinity. In every step there was a hidden universe, and running was no longer just a sport, but an art form, a cosmic dance that he repeated, day after day, with almost divine precision.

The clear vision of one's purpose is reflected in every step along the way. So each competition was not just a test of speed or endurance, but an attempt to get closer and closer to that pure essence, that energy that seemed to pulse under every blade of grass, under every breath of wind. Running transformed her, freed her from all the daily constraints, taught her to listen to the mysterious rhythm of the world, to become one with everything that surrounds her.

Ultimately, running was more than a sporting challenge; it was a call to oneself, to that "there" inaccessible to external eyes, but so alive and present in every step, in every moment lived on the heights of life. It was, in a way, her way to eternity. Here we need a clarification: not only the physical run, but also the spiritual one outlined his path to self-discovery. Constant physical exertion can become a meditation in motion, balancing mind and body in perfect union.

True leadership is not measured in records, but in the ability to turn every obstacle into a moment of self-awareness and growth.

During running training, the body and soul are subjected to forces of harmony and balance, which allows them to reach a state of profound transformation. Every step of this spiritual journey is important to reach both physical and mental fitness. Human existence must be resilient but also flexible to adapt to the complexities of life. Controlling one's inner energy is essential to maintaining balance between mind and body, and every little detail in the rhythm of running can have a major impact on the art that this form of sport represents.

To initiate a well-designed spiritual journey, it is essential to follow the principles of harmonizing body and soul. Each step must be clearly defined and perform a specific function. The purpose of harmony is to enable efficient development, and universal energy seeks to ensure a harmonious interaction between the various hidden universes. Continuous transformation and analysis of spiritual performance are fundamental to identify errors and optimize the inner system. The performance of a run is not only a matter of speed, but also of stability and release, allowing the body and soul to constantly evolve towards infinity.

So, running is not just a means to achieve a physical performance, but becomes a journey to eternity. Every competition is an opportunity to get closer to that pure essence, an experience that transcends everyday constraints and reconnects us with the universe within ourselves.

Leadership is that form of active prayer, a balance between brute force and deep meditation, that leads to continuous improvement.

Rather, Oana's run functions as a complex spiritual circuit, allowing the controlled flow of universal energy. Components such as breathing, footsteps and heartbeats modulate the intensity of the experience, creating specific effects of harmony and reconnection. The Law of Effort describes the relationship between distance, speed and internal resistance, and is essential in designing workouts.

The subtle energy that accompanies each step can only be seen by the attentive and focused inner eye. I would say that each stroke becomes an elaborate circuit that processes the body's signals, stores memories, and performs subconscious calculations, forming the basis of personal transformation. Running is not just a physical activity, but a cosmic dance on the path of infinity, where Oana becomes both conductor and current, in a circuit that tends to eternity.

Leadership is about leading your journey not just through ambition, but through a sacred connection to your own inner potential and the world around you.

Inner vision reveals new horizons when mind and body align in deep harmony, allowing access to the authentic source of inner energy. Especially when you manage to free yourself from distractions and focus on the present moment, discovering the latent strength within yourself.

Innuendo (II)

On August 04, 2015

Resort to new forms of artistic expression through the contact between creation, manifestations, theories, experiments, so as to efficiently validate the final image of what you've come to be.

I think up ever more pronounced understandings of my separation from the world, tirelessly, prey to the diversity of creations, manifestations, theories, experiments – first and foremost, those that harmonize with the specific of a pure mystery, produced under the action of the forces of oscillation of the mind that cannot live in the present, but rather always runs back and forth, as a fraction of universality. In a way, the image of my life resembles the description of a picture represented by a harmony given by bright colors, the nuances, tones being perfectly harmonized, which highlights the sensitive side of an artist who knows one thing: creativity is everywhere.

It is what moves my curiosity along the invisible outline of a "superstition, false religion". Slowly and steadily, my mind enters the imprisonment of a possessive convention with an unclean spirit, between dances, broken rhythms, syncopated and songs with engaging tempos. The starting point of a new artistic thinking relates to the description I give to my forms of expression: the imagination, the intellect and the intuition of obtaining "perpetuum mobile" structures as an expression of the whole, so as to give a certainty to the events experienced at a given moment and at a certain intensity.

But, such is born the sensation of supreme living, whose laws of tolerance, concocted in the way an artist stays connected to the elements readily arranged by nature, make the object of precise notes arranged in a stormy chord: "You can be anything you want to be / Just turn yourself into anything you think that you could ever be." Who dares hum my delirium?

Leadership: Can you reinvent yourself during your experience of receiving and analyzing the artistic dimension so that you get a subtle argument for the definition of "being one with everything"?

I would compare the isolation of the genius with an eternal depth where silently and without a trace sink all the feelings with which he is greeted by a world fragile in the face of the unknown. Or, rather, as a deep ocean that covers no man's land. Permanently, exists around him a coldness, but at the same time, a particular form of validating the rule: "Show yourself – destroy your fears – release your mask". Something moves within me when I thoroughly search what I do not know about this artistic spirit, in relation with the circumstances of a specific case.

Once again, Freddie Mercury delights through another creative attribute that is not really in anyone's grasp: the amazing ability to reinvent one's self through a new vision, through a new range of perspectives, color abundance, stage costumes, pantomime improvisations on given themes to explore and cultivate the imagination of an artist who can ask for the elements of decoration and stage motion to conform to him.

The artistic dimension of his personality finds a correspondent in a plane of depth of spirit, the depth of penetration of the world through an association of ideas that generates continuous energy, momentum, more and more accentuated astonishment, new tendencies, debates and currents of opinion. His greatness of becoming one is the mainstay of genius that cannot be stopped by absolutely nothing.

Meritorious, to this complex carrier of plastic opportunities in interpreting emotions, movement first attracts attention, and only then do you think of what moves in a tempo furioso, hundreds of times unpredictable. Proving itself as being beyond Newton who seeks to discover the operations of nature, Freddie Mercury is himself the nature of the world, a revolutionary energy system that ties together all free spirits, a small universe won through the reasoning winged with each thought, with each dance, between minor chords and dominant septa-chords.

But to the supreme art is not needful only the merging of imagination with various sounds, in a vast arcade of musical chords, in order to turn into a universal arrow that crosses the infinite. It is built vividly, in an elementary rotation of the frames, when the man of time suddenly crosses to another scene, substituting himself instantaneously to any phenomenon of culture: portraits, landscapes, objects, animated or not. And they produce through contagion forces of attraction and favorable tendencies that articulate the visible outer world, played out by moralizing microscopy.

The actor who stands on stage as a brilliant talent is the image of a world that does not cease to broaden, amazed by its constant tendency to evolve towards a dependence on the sphere of the fabulous.

Playing out a form of artistic expression through the contact between creations, manifestations, theories, experiments, compressed to the extreme in the fractions of a volume of thoughts that brings certain emotions, experiences, feelings, not only modifies your temporary reality, but also leads to a completely different result in the final image of what you've come to be.

The art of letting yourself get carried away by the wave of thoughts, of the freedom of creation and expression y relating to the limits of an autonomy that estranges you from the world, from the positions of a philosophy that reflects the complexity of the function of creator, is an invitation to the subtlety of a game behind the scenes, of a high level, which does not include the true acceptance of leadership: of coming back to where you started.

Through isolation the genius, the free spirit, ends up including in his perceptive field the implications of certain cultural phenomena that find the shortcut towards modeling ideas through the power of renewing themselves under the impact of events. Benefiting from a new and unexpected approach, they force the "orientation of the weapon's edge towards your own body." Meaning, to a deficit of values, to the lowering of credibility, to the cancelation of those beliefs that safeguard him from the danger of radically concealing himself in the magic of fictions created by himself.

Leadership: Can you outline a new perspective on art, that, however, acknowledges the existence of the phenomenon: "Don't touch that high peak, always hidden in the clouds"?

For leadership to become an act of substitution for the process of manifesting an authority, an individual force, a new perspective on art needs to be outlined, one which acknowledges the existence of the phenomenon: "Do not touch that high peak, always hidden in the clouds."

And this not only due to the fact that a number of visions and fantastic objects are compressed in a succession of forms that lead to confusion. But because the inclusion of man in another direction of development of science roots the convention that the specific of a development doesn't resume propagandistically, condensed, to elements and characters that become emblematic through the exploitation of a new form of expression, culture, philosophy or knowledge.

Evolution may have as a constituent element the journey of imagination towards heights of glory not yet reached by anyone, which becomes an initiatory act in your development into a man of creation. But imagination needs to be consumed not only through intrinsic empowerment, but rather through sharing and networking in the confrontation with reality.

The noblest form of art, to astonish and surprise, is the vision of symbolism that you bring to the construction of a world whose only reality is you.

Innuendo is a form of self-improvement through practicing creation, meeting the criteria of imagination and ingenuity, which is only evident at first sight through the attempt of suggesting a new perspective on the world, including in terms of self-awareness. But which affects the way in which you feel linked with the idea of being yourself in a battlefield for a several terrible opponents: morals, identity, your place in society, generality accepted conveniences, suggested experiences and the right of being understood and appreciated.

Innuendo (I)

On August 02, 2015

Try turning leadership into a substitute for the magic of staging an inner reality through external analogies.

There is a side of my life traversed by the depths of a never before seen spell. An ambiguous space formed of many fluxes of expression cultivated in the hemisphere of feelings cut globally by the circuits of creations, entering into contradiction with the Marquesan concept of the world, life and time. Somehow, the calculus formulas of these elements of individuality, pre-established by the shifting of the constituent poles of inner turmoil, in gripping memory with mood, gave double values to the events of reality that never missed a thing. "While I rule by blind madness and pure greed."

Somehow, I began to position myself in relation to the surrounding reality, pleading with the idea that life is an art through which the beautiful expresses itself with the amulet of time, an art through which the act of creation satisfies and cultivates, delights and corrects the spirit of a free researcher. Engaging, supreme ideals, enigmas of time, do not change with how you perceive and experience an explosion of energy and well-being, but with the spell of the impenetrable, with the manifestation of the shadow behind the light. "Through the eons, and on and on."

The endeavor of the inner life of a man who openly assumes his belonging to a phenomenon of interrogation of the contemporary world, which only fiction can poetically reconfigure, is directed to the composition of a unitary image of an evolution in time through any means of the artwork capable of suppressing the disappointment of the days lived under the motto "the ends justify the means".

German philosopher Heidegger believed that thinking acts upon the thing man has in front of him, always decomposing and recomposing it. The expression of the thing didn't take on the usual form for me either, because I stoically threw myself in the face of the inadmissible with the extraordinary instinct of a seeker of impossible worlds. The space of my own inner world was in fact the beginning of a journey to diversity, to transcendence, to the creative states specific to the aristocrat imagining the world as an echo of divinity and beautiful things, of harmony and the indissoluble structure of matter.

The force of imagination with which the genius constantly occupies the mind is the challenge of succeeding in shaping the unitary image of a deep-seated creature that seeks to understand its existence, express its emotions and points of view through its external analogies.

The absolute genius knows how to get out of his own depths, like a dervish from a poor parish, and arrived in the world of a new knowledge, of a new order, slowly transforms in all the things he imagines. He is surrounded by a permanent conflict between color and black, on the edge of a trilogy of spectacle, in the motions full of energy of mountebanks, on the background of historic images, in the novel images of the books read in one breath, between a drummer, a pyramid, balls and fire, between jumps, masks and applauses, in a crescendo whose climax no longer consumes itself. "Surrender your ego – be free, be free to yourself."

In addition to the love for the most noble of arts and sciences, in the impenetrable darkness of a special "Gateway Time". My individuality only had but a single scratch, the more the extremes of my radius of action could not be guessed. An elementary lesion consisting in the combination of faith with the greed of being the owner of other realms of reality, hundreds of times more dangerous than the sum of high frequency currents of the insistence of being perfect. "Don't take offence at my innuendo."

From the outbreak of an Ego that doesn't lack veracity, from a discharge of imagination that would stand to destroy it, in the paradise of graphical and audio art drawn with the blood of the twisted vision, the metamorphosis of reality is triggered, brining liberty to colors, dreams and expression without boundaries. The man of encyclopedic knowledge in the sciences of the humane gives a different meaning to the outer world, and his creative spirit, multiplied to infinity through the corridors of a bookish labyrinth, becomes a sort of synthesis of the universe. "Oh yes we'll keep on trying / We'll tread that fine line / Till the end of time."

Leadership: Can you equate the dynamism of becoming with the hidden universe of the work of art, placing yourself at the extreme of communicating an experience that permanently enriches itself?

The music video for Innuendo is a triumph of the art of storytelling, passed through the filter of irony and humor, of naturalism of vision and playful spirit. Which turns leadership into a substitute for the magic of staging an inner reality loaded with existential elements of the type: "Carpe Diem" or "Feel free."

Leadership is due not only to the artistic contrast between the appetite expressed intellectually and the appetite expressed through the force of expression and suggestion, but rather, filling as much a repository space of human manifestations and traits, follows the entry in the limits of causality and the exit from them. According to physicist Max Born, causality is a law that requires the existence of an "effect" entity that depends on the existence of a "cause" entity, an entity being any physical object, phenomenon, situation or event.

Basically, if you try to capture the entire area the visionary field of a leader-artist perceives, all the antics of his mind expressed vividly, you are overcome by an unsuspected sensation of self-dissolution in the indeterminate, which sends you to a chaotic pulverization full of color, a melding with an unstable equilibrium. Turning the frame 180 degrees, the flux of creation that crosses you is minimal, but does it have the courage to open the gate through the sorrow of all through our splendor to the question "What is our destination?"

In particular, the question you must answer is the following: How can all these entities contribute to increasing freedom of expression and action, freedom of thinking of yourself in relation with the surrounding reality?

If you manage to answer this question you will be able to equate the dynamism of becoming with the hidden universe of the work of art, placing yourself at the extreme of communicating an experience that permanently enriches you through things, facts, situations, utterances, gestures, attitudes, language, which you love or do not love. But which cultivate the freedom of creating and experimenting based on what inspires you, based on the forms and type of artistic vision you prefer. Be firm in your demands and expectations.

An aspiring artist, analyzing a few of the particularly important practical consequences of elaborating a compositional aesthetic, first tries to distinguish between knowledge of surrounding things, often seen subjectively, and knowledge that resides in their relationship with objective existence.

Both types of knowledge progress through accumulation of information of the type "Did you know that" and the environmental aspects with significant impact, which are about to be included into a guiding landmark, being predestined to some abstract certainties. These certainties represent the benefits of the creative platform for innovation and identification of the possibilities of improving the efficiency of the final product: the art you promote.

In the psychology of creativity, external analogies are terms of comparison between "what is" and "what should be" a world governed by emotions, whose criterion of excellence is the mastery of art to translate into reality the perfect image of a complete and authentic relationship with what is called "Genius".

Innuendo represents an indirect referral about a person or a thing, with its basis in the imperative of the freedom of being authentic related to what is called creation, even if the risk of being put into an unfavorable light rises significantly. The important thing is to build something relevant for your own development, natural, through an inspiration that is a winged reasoning.

Inspirational Leadership

On October 07, 2016

Try to obtain a result of the answer another form of knowledge gives to your needs, as a result of the experiences lived in the process of observation.

Perfect silence must reign in the room. Even in the breaks necessary for reloading the film in the projector. Woe unto him who address him at this time. If the question is asked with a low voice and doesn't interrupt the composer when viewing, only a growl is heard instead of an answer. If, however, he is interrupted by the stridency of the question, Prokofiev looks fiercely at the one speaking, or even lets a foul word slip.

After each viewing, Prokofiev is tired, but always happy, satisfied. Perhaps because, in fact, during this time he composes the music for the seen fragment. During viewing, the composer's fingers rhythmically drum on the arm of the armchair.

Russian director, Eisenstein, observes him, curious to find the answer to the question even his clever chauffer asked. He predicts that Prokofiev, drumming with his fingers, chants the structure through which this montage crosses with the durations and rhythms of the fragments through which the actions and intonations of the actors intertwine.

At one point, Eisenstein gladly exclaims: "Superb ! " This was the fragment from the montage in which, he remarks: "is deftly woven a counterpoint with three different movements in rhythm, cadence and direction. The protagonist, the group that makes up the background and the columns of people who cut in the foreground the moving device." *****

Leadership: Can you capture these points of view emphasized in an analytically unified construct that may unties all the approaches you never thought of?

The critic of a work of combining several frames, making an anchor between viewing and analysis, becomes the partisan of a unitary point of view. Referring to the assertion of the need to capture the totality of a broader vision through a "YES" found behind him, translated in his language, which demands to be emphasized. Would it be better to first work on what can be found out through others, in order to evaluate ourselves?

He is obliged to formulate a point of view, a link between various fragments, insufficiently consistent or consolidated in order to create a work, in the use of a different "owner of knowledge" near him. In order to be satisfied with his creative work, the director must intersect the actions, words and experiences of the actors, their interactions and roles in a visual construction that gives them a broader approach to the subject in question. A dose of color and personality, attributed to each actor, becomes the center of gravity of a background which, being subordinate to the subject, must give a note of naturalness to the film.

The process of intuition – to predict what this owner of knowledge wants, what he likes, what he wants to say, what is inside of him, what fits him but cannot be seen – is rather related to that "Yes" that transforms all "No's" (stemming from the belief that he is always right) in undeniable changes. Nobody knows what is in the director's mind until he puts together all the elements of scenography and all the representations of the actors.

A unified analytical construct is a montage that can turn you from reality into illusion, and from illusion into reality, highlighting the director's multilateralism and talent through a thorough visual inspection and a thorough approach to a current problem.

Leadership: Is the fairness of the image that your montage reflects the answer to a knowledge of the observational experiences lived in the process of evaluating a self-devoured being?

To watch a movie is to get into the essence of the ideal image that the director carries in his soul. The art of the director is primarily a result of the answer a different form of knowledge gives to your needs, especially as a result of experiences lived in the process of observation and assessment of the connections between the image, sound and the acting game. All of these develop your intuition to personify an idea or a message.

At a subtle level, the "Yes's" are those points of view emphasized in a unified analytic construct, which unties all approaches you haven't thought about. They are clarified by listening to and observing those persons, their training, knowledge and ability in a certain field. The art of the director is the experience of the "Yes" to the self-gratification regarding the fulfillment of the vision from which the foundation of the assembly is constituted. But it is also the experience of the "No" derived from the "mistakes" of the actors, from their parasitic gestures, which they must always play in another context.

In leadership we follow a dual purpose that introduces a new model of the progress based on observations and the novelty imposed as a value, whose causal relation is reflected in the exclamation "Superb ! "

First, capturing the sources of confirming a knowledge and a dimension that we do not consider as being a "conquest" but rather a "unification". Then, harnessing the elements of contrast between what we know and the representation we formed of a different form of knowledge, relevant for the understanding and processing of a new learning experience.

A self-devoured being is the image of a creator who manifests in three forms: observer, evaluator and critic in terms of how they relate to that form of knowledge meant to achieve the synthesis between the real and the ideal.

Inspirational Leadership reveals an experience, a powerful impression, a belief, something beyond emotion and which gives birth to the passion of that consumer of knowledge, never tired, but always happy with the way in which others address certain topics, the great ideas, the great challenges, the great questions of art.

The answer to these considerations, being supported by the establishing of a categorical "YES" following the process of observation and evaluation, always ends in the light of an exclamation: "Superb ! "

Interactions And Interpersonal Relationships

On January 01, 2009

Further develop your emotional vision, turning yourself into an example of faith in relation to the cost of living.

A climber was reported missing in the Bucegi Mountains in February. At that time, the snow had a thin layer, creating optimal conditions for mountain activities in conditions of maximum security. Nobody knew where he disappeared. He could not be located. Other climbers' searches did not yield any results. Where is this man?

"I think he's alive, I can't wait to find him. Thank you to everyone who continues to help us" – said the head of the mountain rescue team.

And suddenly something comes up. Evidence. A red glove attached to a ski stick. It was actually a sign that eventually led to the climber's discovery. He had sunk into a pit caused by a landslide. At the last moment, knowing that he would sink, he was inspired to stick his ski stick into a moss.

Leadership: Can you bring out the best in yourself in the face of an unexpected threat, turning a balance sheet into a space of clairvoyance?

Leadership brings together those inner actions and resources, oriented towards the emotional dimension of other people, which leads to the increase of your performance potential in offering the true knowledge of the good. The good that you can do by your own strength and originality, that is, by personal example of survival.

Convincing people that "you are alive" means setting the tone for your personal transformation process, it means that you are willing to be an example to others through your own successful experiences, your thinking, your emotional power, your actions – what you managed to become after the struggle to be an example of faith, at the cost of your life.

Your evolution as a leader may be delayed if your leadership does not allow for the best qualities. Just as copies or reproductions of paintings indicate situations when you are faced with objects that cannot be confused with artistic reality – so too does the optimization of a relationship, which requires a deeper knowledge of your own being and matures with countless transformations of your life, indicate a better relational competence, which determines a higher probability of achieving success in the battle for performance optimization.

Man's entire life is dominated by interactions and interpersonal relationships. The role of the leader is to optimize these relationships, to guide them in the direction of achieving outstanding performance and to achieve a common goal for the benefit of all.

How long, or what does it take for you to understand the true nature of a human being? Building and maintaining a relationship is an art that combines the science of relating to the spiritual state of people, influencing their actions and decisions, trying to intuit their future – with your ability to value their qualities, to develop them and sustainably stimulate the potential. This is, in a word, clairvoyance.

Leadership: Can you find the balance between what you see in other people's eyes and what defines a situation from which you would like to escape, but you can't deviate from the flow of events?

Overcoming a relational impasse or optimizing a relationship requires, of course, a deep self-knowledge, the ability to be aware of what is happening to you, to others, what is the context in which a relationship takes place. But after knowledge, the next step is change. You have to be willing to set an example for others in your life.

Using all the feelings, values and beliefs that your being builds, to reinvent them, or to restore their emotional and mental structure, to live differently, in accordance with themselves, with what they are and what they love. Change is therefore a personal one and is based on your power to influence the emotional in people. As a leader, it is up to you to find the balance between what you are and what can define other people.

A leader must have the ability to bring out the best in people through his own charismatic strength. I consider this a positive feature in the development of the power of influence. I believe that one of the qualities that stimulates the qualitative progress of leadership is the emotional vision, the essential component of the mechanism of guiding people to a certain point.

How do you bring out the best in people? Simple, leaving them for a while and leaving behind a clue about you, without deviating from the thread of events, with rare exceptions and only to give explanations or a broader understanding of the ideas started.

Is emotional vision an essential part of your leadership? Are you capable of leading a morally sound job?

Always consider this possibility, otherwise you risk limiting your potential to increase the size of your leadership. An important part of the art of driving is to compose this vision. Many leaders forget to do this because they are engaged in management, focusing more on "maintenance" and being inclined to rely on systems and commands.

Leadership: Is the concordance between your Ego and the soul nature of other people 100% based on the background of an event that does not change its outline, but rather the perspective from which you look at it?

In one of my articles on my personal website, I made the following statement: In order to elevate your leadership to the rank of art, you need to maintain this brilliance of people by focusing more on the character that defines them, researching their feelings with artist sensitivity, establishing their "composition" of spiritual qualities – such as compassion, generosity and clean conscience.

If you want to change people's beliefs, you must resort to a more delicate shaping, spread out over many approaches (emotional, mental, not just professional) and you must offer an inexhaustible source of stimuli that will perfectly fit in their emotional and cognitive system. Therefore, the concordance between your Ego and the spiritual nature of other people must be 100%.

Would you be willing to end any relationship with people in order to truly feel a sense of satisfaction?

If your leadership is too "poor" in content, it will never pay off. By educating yourself in the spirit of leadership that does not promote strong emotional benefits, that does not bring important sources of motivation, that does not meet the desires and expectations of people, you will eliminate the elementary unity on which relationship building is based.

It is like removing a loved one from your side and ending any relationship with them to truly feel fulfillment, happiness, and contentment. And this will create a negative outlook on your emotional qualities, you will be treated without consideration by those around you.

And I must point out that, unfortunately, the world is full of such cases of leaders lacking warmth, who have lost all emotional authority in the eyes of the people – they are being pursued more out of obligation than out of pleasure. That being said, souls hungry for fame and power do not know where to look and how to alleviate the pain of others, they go through life driven by the instinct of their progress and material well-being, instead of gaining spiritual well-being.

Leadership: Do you care more about your prestige than the spiritual state that is created when the last episode of events becomes even more dramatical?

Just as excess oxygen burns fat more efficiently, so too will you by contributing to improving the quality of your leadership through a better adjusted dose of your emotional side, burn more effectively any "evil", any negative factor inside of you.

The way you exercise your qualities, especially the power of influence, reflects that part of you, that negative or positive impulse that you impose on yourself when you want to change others. Consequently, be more concerned with the nature of your being, the interest you give to people, their spiritual condition than your prestige. Relationship optimization requires a deep self-knowledge, the ability to be aware of what is happening to you, but also to others, ensuring the "context" in which a relationship takes place. The context is given by the decisions you make so that the collaboration is as close as possible.

How do you contribute to improving the quality of your leadership? Does the way you exercise your qualities reflect the positive side of you? Are you willing to make personal sacrifices to enhance your emotional nature? How did you set out to accomplish great things?

To be alive = to reason + to relate

To be alive means to reason and relate to others, it means to know them and to know yourself. *"It would have been good to know all things only by instinct and feeling. But nature has denied us this good, and on the contrary it has given us little knowledge of this kind, and all the others can be acquired only by reasoning."*Said Blaise Pascal.

Leadership is the moment when you feel defeated by a situation that promises to be catastrophic, realizing that your salvation is the people's response to your willingness to take risks in the short term, with a view to greater long-term performance.

The Closest Interactions And Interpersonal Relationships are created when events become dramatic. Be careful what your self-voice dictates in such moments !

The Intimate Emotional Structure

On April 07, 2009

Try to find a way to experience the higher frequencies and dimensions of consciousness and life, through what enlightens the minds that live in the vision of your reality.

Russian director Sergei Eisenstein's editing combines the objective existence of a phenomenon of patriotism with the subjective attitude of its creator, and the great composer Prokofief perceives the intimate emotional structure and gives his own sensitivity to it. It is precisely for the success of this tuning that Prokofiev changes his music if the image demands it, just as Eisenstein does not hesitate to make editing changes to allow the music to have its say.

The only misunderstanding will arise when all the music will be completed. Eisenstein asks Prokofiev to compose an overture. The composer refuses: because the film begins with a tragic episode, the overture should be triumphant-heroic and does not see how the transition between these two different types of music could be made. He is willing to write any kind of music, he says, but artistic considerations prevent him from writing it.

Eisenstein insists, however. Then Prokofiev agrees, but only on the condition that the director change the sad episode from the beginning of the film. But because Eisenstein believes that the editing plan can no longer be changed, the film remains without an overture and the credits are projected quietly. However, many commentators see here a special effect pursued by Eisenstein. *

Leadership: Can you combine the objective existence of a topical phenomenon with the subjective attitude of the creator who perceives the intimate emotional structure of other people and gives his own sensitivity to it?

In cinema, the transition between two different types of music, like the transition from one theme to another, is actually the transition from the subjective attitude of the creator to the intimate emotional structure of other people, meaning it is a way to highlight the sensitivity of a hypostasis of the world, of a constantly burning collective mind.

Also, a cinematic creation in which the direct contact with the spectator is made through music and images, so we refer to an art in which moral, emotional or spiritual characteristics are reproduced, being transmitted to the public with the help of editing, involves special modulation of the actors' voices and a composition of all the senses.

The image and the music are reunited in a unitary image of great scenic scope, especially if the music knows a spectacular evolution due to the image and the way in which it is delivered to the spectator public. And, given that music is an expression of emotions that cannot be spoken, and the montage is the result of a creation of different emotions provided by the use of sound and image, then perhaps it is good to pay attention to the effects involved in combining them.

Leadership: Do you take into consideration the onset of a high-intensity emotion with the full experience of real life transformed into an artistic creation that highlights the subjectivity of the characters?

When it comes to directing and film, the first thing that comes up is an "antidepressant" effect, because film can make you feel good in a pleasant way, it can motivate you to impose a change in your life. And then there is an effect like "maturity", against the background of an identification of the action with the feeling, because the film teaches you the values of life, teaches you to give meaning to your life and to overcome your limits. In any case, film is a directorial art that expresses with the help of sounds and images feelings and attitudes meant to contribute to the triggering of certain behaviors, actions or events.

This is where the objective existence of a topical phenomenon comes into play, which means taking into account the onset of a high-intensity emotion with the full experience of true life in a film, behind the film and beyond, or at least the experience of a unique, beautiful, even ecstatic moment.

It is certainly easier for a director to perceive the intimate emotional structure of other people and to give his own sensitivity to it when the action of the film is directed towards the goal of changing mentalities, strengthening the desire and feeling of belonging to a way of being and to think, on moral landmarks, on the conception related to work, respect and responsibility towards experience and life.

Leadership refers to the director's ability to find a way to experience the higher frequencies and dimensions of consciousness and life, through what enlightens minds living in the vision of his reality.

The Intimate Emotional Structure is a variable of the process of communicating the vision with the help of music and images that the director edits in the context of the film, so as to keep alive the viewer's interest in the action and play of the actors on stage.

The director must also keep a keen interest in a script drawn in dynamic but refined lines, with clever claims of "Premium Creation".

Try to make room for your inspiration to manifest itself freely at the urging of motivation to understand the meaning of life suspended between the soul's need for an inexhaustible intellectual appetite and the experiences of a reality that transcends what is transient.

I have to tell you Nicu, as I often like to say about certain things that I know too well, that everything is relative. Relativity itself belongs to the physical principles that represent the foundation of the creation of this world. Science is like a building with separate floors, or like I would say a body is moving if it has another as a guiding point... otherwise everything is static in this world. Therefore, you sometimes have to endure the appearances of perfect lives, the appearances of great truths generated by fiction, or the appearances of scientific realities such as evolution.

We all experience a wonder as a special fact when we read books, we see statements given by this science that you keep talking about, and we still find alternatives in the seemingly logical answers. In mathematics, three heights meet at one point, but although in a triangle any doubts were not obvious, axioms sometimes have to be accepted without proof. Behold then that the world in which we live is a higher stage of science perceived only by one who observes only what is built, but who does not observe the existence ended on a stage of the celestial ascent.

In this world we must make room for inspiration and intelligence to manifest freely. A healthy mind in a healthy body, this results in something harmonious, not everyone possesses the two at the same time. You can only assume certain things about life and the world, you don't even know when you know, and when you know it's important to know what you don't know... Do you know how important that is?

Marie Curie said it well: "In life there is nothing to be feared, only to be understood. It is time to understand more so that we are less afraid." You may want to fall into the "unique" category, but many have both, many do not. It's good that it's good, otherwise it would've been bad. In this world, the more you read, the more you understand people, their nature. You have all the answers about them and they appear before you at the right time.

A piece of advice for the future. Always be honest, don't act, don't pretend and never lie to a rose. It will feel and know everything, because it has seen more than anyone. And the signs, it knows how to read them better than anyone.

Leadership: Is the core of your being formed where you find everything you need to turn any event in your life into a story that oscillates between memory and forgetfulness?

The world is a life you experience with your head down and your chin up. Sometimes everything is misleading even if you think you see everything very clearly. You think you know the truth, but in fact you only tell lies because something new is always being discovered that makes your hypotheses difficult. And never do unto others what you wouldn't want done unto you. This is God. In this sentence you will find Him. That's all I know.

You know... I like talking to you... but I'm telling myself that maybe one day you'll disappear... I'm saying this to accept it with ease when it happens. Would I like it if you were to disappear? I don't think you'd like it. Because the disappearing man is like the sheets of paper that time erases: you can consider this as an involuntary fact, but in the spiritual world man must himself create a situation in which there is no transient feeling.

And life is lived the same way you read books: you try to react to various challenges and in fact you find that you are just a character walking with a cane, unable to control his own story. You hope to start reading from it until a new cover appears that makes you forget it. For this reason, I believe that the core of your existence is formed where you find everything you need to turn any event into a story that oscillates between memory and oblivion. This place is, in fact, a summary of the feelings you want to experience and mirror in a world that is constantly changing.

I believe that the truest books are written from real conversations. And maybe you'll say that you won't disappear because you wouldn't like for me to disappear either. I mean, let's be honest. Two people do the same things when they are in the same situation. Then everyone pulls unknowingly, a little to the left... a little to the right, and thus increases the distance between them. But you can't start with something you like. In which you find yourself and complement yourself. No matter how crazy you are. And, of course, all the books are interesting, but there are some interesting ones about life. Such as the books written by Mika Waltari, Ştefan Zweig, Alexandre Dumas or Victor Hugo. I preferred Zweig. From him, from the more than 20 books, excellent novels, I learned about people. Quite a lot.

You know, reading more and more you feel like you are experiencing real life stories and you are learning to be a character that is "rebuilding" himself at a late age. No one has time to learn only from their own experience, it would take too long. Even communication with various people falls under the chapter of life experiences. You will understand the man. People. Women. Obsessions. Beauty. And the soul. Men. Their wishes. For example, "Burning Secret" is a book of rare depth. I like to think I know a lot. Not everything. But there aren't many questions I can't explain if I ask myself. Read it. That's it. He has an artistic writing. And the deepest thinking. And many secrets... burning. Of the people. Their souls, their minds, hide so much.

Leadership: How do you approach a revelation about yourself through the prism of a reality that exists only in a prose that moves the whole world of another being in a personalized picture of the soul?

And you say so much... about ugly and beautiful. I just have to guess the truth. Can you guess it? It's like I'm the sand, and you're the sieve. Predict. You realize what the truth is when you predict what the other person wants. How he feels. What surprises him. And more. Everything is revealed to me... anyone can lie to me. That's easy to do. But you can't lie to "The One Above".

I like how you get back to something we talked about in the evening. And you'll be back the next day with remarks. Night is a good adviser. Isn't that what they say? It's like I left on a train from the train station and you're still there. So I have to go back. To the train station. With any luck, I'm going to write something like this today. Know it's for you. When you read this, it's like accounting: you draw a line involuntarily and make an inventory (what states you lack, what you have, what else you want). You text me once normally. Then inverted. Another in length in a strip of telepathy, and imprinted on space, time, existence and infinity. You got me dizzy. The phone is to blame, it captures images poorly. But it's fine this way. To make sure you read. When you doubt that you are reading, please ask me to bring out the main ideas. Would you be able to? I read every day when I wake up. An hour or two. Beautiful. You will write a poem about all this anyway.

I'm telling you a secret. When we talk. Do you want me to tell you now? So... I was talking to someone a long time ago. I was not willing to post what I write. I would give it to him and he would post it in my stead. He was happy. Although they weren't his. He had been telling me for a while that he had nothing left. He lived through your words and emotions. I told him I was keeping them now. I want to impress someone. Yes. He lived. Like in another world. At one point he upset me. I know. The guy died. Actually, no. I've deleted him. He asked an acquaintance that I unblock him. Then he began to put a profile picture up. He was crazy about how many likes he had. Did he want me to be his wife? I don't know, maybe he would have loved me madly. He said that sometimes he envies me that he can't write like that. I write with my soul, not with another's. I'm writing for you. I wouldn't post what you write either. At this we also match. I admire what you write. I write what I can.

Everything seemed so real to me that I didn't know when there was an illusion and when it was prose. It's interesting what you read and it has to do with reality. The real touch is the physical touch, the desire... the emotion. All that remains are word... that pass... are forgotten. And that's true. Don't forget what someone makes you feel. Yes. I meant that too. It's good that you're writing for someone. You are in love. No, I'm writing for you...

A personalized painting with the ego of another being captures that boundlessness of feelings, of passions of unspoken longings, great thoughts, all these piled up in a life (like from a story) that is no longer experience, but only a state of mind.

Ioana Sarah is, in a way, my alter-ego in a world full of thoughts, which is confused with the story of an ordinary man who stages his own writings and the positions he adopts towards the most concrete topicality, or of a man who meets several people in one and thus manages to become someone else.

Be more receptive and attentive to everything that happens to you, so that your ego does not get stuck in a reality that exceeds your ability to assess its potential to capture attention.

I finished the book. Mine was romantic, about people looking for and finding each other. Conclusions. Impressions. Summary. Should I do it? Well, you read it... Tell me what you liked, how it ended... Something that would make me interested in the content of your book. So curious you are. But look, in a nutshell. Two young people met by chance, each with a sad story, memories hard to comprehend in the mind of one man. They felt complete with each other as individuals, and after some trials and tribulations they remained together. Each thought they were not good enough for the other. It was like when you meet someone you were expecting.

Yes, a romantic book, about feelings, experiences, expectations. It's like something taken from reality. Exactly. After waiting and waiting and waiting, you have to be lucky... Find the one you need. Only then do you really live. You want the same things. Do the same things. You have the same passions. You sit in silence, side by side and that's enough. Now I have to go, I have to pack. Often such people rarely live together. They meet only sporadically. Passing moments. Hours full of memories. Maybe it's something that lasts a lifetime, I'm not sure. Yes, and whoever has the desire and patience to look... then let them look.

You say you've found someone close to your soul and you're thrilled. It's still good now. I hope. Just don't change. In time, both change. They rarely attract each other continuously. They will both strive... just one will not be enough. It's about you now. It's about people. About the two of us. Yes, of course, thanks for the summary, I think the book is wonderful.

I haven't talked about the book before. I told him that the great science of writing develops in the spirit of the word that you allow to take control of your life, without making it a cross or a source of enrichment. Yes, but writing, like the great discoveries of science, belonged to modest people from whom others became rich. Great theories are not always properly translated into practice, once in many years we all fail in order to be reborn later.

Leadership: Can you unlock the vibrational potential of a being that experiences everything through the flow of consciousness, and at the same time increase the meaning potential of a perception-feeling experience that fulfills it?

I say how the writer feels, it's a continuation, not an acceptance. It's a way of walking on a wire in parallel... the man who falls doesn't feel life, its pulse, its pleasures, and it doesn't pick up afterwards. A malfunction occurs. Something is breaking... At the risk of repeating myself, I tell you. When it is meant to be, then it is. Bluntly. That's why I don't make plans anymore. When the road is too winding, the dust is chosen, to be exact. I tell what I experienced, what I saw, or what I was told. I mean, if you like someone and they like you, then that's obvious. When you wait too long, it means something is squeaking. When it squeaks it breaks. When it broke, it meant that the relationship was not based on soundness. They were just hopes through dreams. Ye, that is how it is. Life is simple. People complicate it every time.

I wish I could have taken some revenge on you so that I could feel better. Again you will say something against my will... so evil ! Yes, of course, you are very good. I mean, you deleted me from your friends list a long time ago just to get revenge. No, you forced me to delete you then... you were arguing with me. I'm on my way home now... and there are lights here, everything is lit tonight. Okay, good night ! Sweet Dreams ! But where are the people? You're kind of alone... You're alone among people. From me to you, look at a bright kiss, brighter than your night lights. How long will the kiss last? My whole life or your whole life?

I draw a conclusion, so far. I think the vibrational potential of a being who experiences everything through the flow of consciousness is very similar to overcoming the attitude of underestimation and depreciation – associated with a stage in life where you want to see who you really are (not to be told from the outside), but you still can't find the right path for yourself.

Such a being is vulnerable in terms of its weakness to translate into a virtual reality that can be experienced through glasses with special lenses, called: "AlterEgo".

To increase the meaning potential of a perception-feeling experience that fulfills a being full of sensitivity, means to give this being the acceptance to see itself as the protagonist of a memorable life story, able to make yourself better.

Nooo ! I want to know how long this condition of yours lasts. No, I'm not sad. Not at all. I think that if we make friends again, when the world is dearer to you, then I will delete you from my friends list. It's my turn to do this. The great secrets are revealed only to those who appreciate the simple and accessible things that surround us in our daily lives. The great secrets are about the two of us, on a night when only a kiss can light our way. In my opinion, these secrets appear in stages, about feeling and about the objects of feeling, about affective logic and about the imagination of the mind.

About one would be when you let yourself be transposed into reality without many prior analyses and feel what it is like to delude yourself, you dream up illusions for your entire life... The second appears when you know the secrets and you feel that you have the key to understanding them: you either run, because you feel all-knowing, or wait for the events to unfold as if you were watching a movie. The third stage is simple, any secret takes you by surprise and if you have nothing to lose you do not lose anything following the development of simplicity in life. It's like an autumn in which ironically, even in real life you have a leaf falling here and there, in perfect harmony.

He who does not believe should watch, although a tree has many leaves, they do not fall two at the same time and in the same place...

Nicu, if you are a good writer, please write about an event that you or someone you know has experienced, but from the point of view of someone who has no direct connection with the action itself. Don't try to think of me, don't try to remember our conversations. Forget me, and if you can't forget me, at least try not to put yourself in my place. If I was I a writer, like you, I would give myself this advice: "Be what you are and allow everyone to be what they are."

The potential of the Ego to capture attention is highlighted by widening the position towards that reality of the desire for emotional recognition, by relating to a life that is lived through the "lesson" of suffering expressed by confessing some spiritual oscillations.

From This New Conversation With Ioana Sarah I learned that the man who says what he feels is the man who feels what he believes. And that the man who seeks to obtain an acceptance of his own life, freeing himself from the desire to be otherwise, is a man who experiences himself, does not fantasize about himself.

I've also learned that I should never step on the gas too hard: I risk getting too fast to a place that can't find its place. There are places in certain books that look for us when we go in search of other places. It is also a specific writing that announces the way the writer is: sensitive or greedy for glory, or generous and always willing to compromise.

The mode of manifestation of a sociable man depends on his way of expressing himself as if it were the sublime manifestation of the choice to experience life as in a two-sided mirror.

What fantasies you wrote here... horror. Well, you were distracting me, how was I to use my imagination if you kept calling me? Come on, keep writing, I'll be home in a heartbeat. I wrote, but if Facebook doesn't let me know when you post, what should I do? I'm not related to the people running Facebook. And I didn't write for you specifically. That's for you to know. I'm a bit angry, so I won't comment on anything. I liked your post. The lines are ok. Thank you. Take care.

Do not forget that a book is not written only in words, but sometimes from the lack of a character's presence in the real life of the writer.

There's no point in you laughing. Of course, but you're the one making me laugh. Do I tickle you for you to laugh like this? Yes, you tickle my feelings. I refrain from saying more. Stop reading. I want to be someone else, completely changed, different, like a character who would have influenced Andersen's work, which by its nature makes you think of the fragility and innocence of a child. I mean, what exactly do you want to be? What don't you like about yourself? I still like myself. Yes, you like yourself so much... that you want to change. Sometimes I test my personality. I only change in relation to someone else I could have been, but I am no more. It's not me you're testing, you put yourself in front of the mirror, otherwise I don't see how you can see someone else in your place.

The mirror answers: "You look great." Come on, I'm kidding. You should really try to see yourself as a writer, I think you would like to be the most beloved character on earth. I already told you. I'm a little nervous. I speak differently in such moments, so don't take everything I say literally. A book is written from images of a mind that eternally improves its initial utterances, playing its own tricks to avoid horror. It is the very nature of a mind that is not awake to discover what is true. My book is the nature of the man captured in an image, like a fantastic toy, which reflects the details of a reality that changes and becomes unexpected, revealing itself only to a child's soul.

Leadership: Is the way your mind works a broad synthesis of the most successful explanations of life that have been proposed in terms of an exchange of ideas and information that supports the truth about what you are going to experience as an expression of a deep experience?

I keep looking at myself in the mirror and wondering if the people that love are always beautiful? You can write that there, in your pages, if you want. You can do anything. I don't care anymore. You can comment whatever you want regarding my attitude. So, should I or shouldn't I write about your way of seeing yourself? This is the question. Maybe I see myself wiped from your eyes again. You can. No, I won't even erase you from my memory, even if I only see myself at times, and I often forget about you. I'll write about you tomorrow, now I don't have a chance to understand much. It doesn't do me any good to delete you, if it would've been of any use... would you have done it? I do not know. It depends on the mood. Do people only think of use... nothing spiritual?

It seems that I am your mirror, because you always share with me your vision, and not only does the vision bring you closer to the measure of my ideational, spiritual, invigorating dimension, but also the fact that you can be my reflection in everything I do, in everything I think, in everything I experience, in a mirror of time that determines me to like what I see in it.

Good thing you're not with me now. No... I wouldn't kiss you even if I saw you. You're lucky. Did you like what I wrote to you on Facebook? I'm on my way, I'll look at you tomorrow. I torment you, I think, with my comments. I read something, but fleetingly. Wait, I'm giving it a better look now. Yes, I read, I remember what you wrote. I told you that you have a great gift for developing and composing ideas about life, even this idea of mathematics, the way you inserted mathematics into my subject, that's what I liked the most.

You have a wider horizon, don't just limit yourself to something static. I told you, and I repeat. You're perfect as a teammate, at writing. Of course, I don't even think you'd go into more detail, write a novel or a movie script, but if you had support and had someone by your side, I think you'd come up with some super cool stuff. And I believe that. Know that I feel a lot, and I think I know how to write too. By the way, wherever I go, where there are more people, everyone opens their eyes to me. I look good, on top of that. So, I'm both beautiful and smart.

A man's deepest feelings are seen when he manages to personalize his mood in the experience of being different, confessing the difference between being unique and understanding the fact of "being in the world" as a horizon of authenticity.

That's what I say without modesty. This is the truth. You've finally learned that it's not good to be modest in general. Either you're good or you're not. That's clear. Time and people show the truth. Know that I like this. Wherever I go I don't get bored. I was once at a boarding house. We, the friends, with those who had the cabin. And there was a guy about your age among them. Some discussions started. My husband left in the meantime. We were talking at a distance. It was funny. What can I say... he was my age...Yes, kind of like you. But he was bent on talking. His wife I think had panicked. It was in the living room. Combinations... I was talking from a distance. I meant that he wasn't my age. Can I tell you something else? Say: I'll stay 5 minutes longer. I'm not saying anything else. Go to sleep. You're tired. Say good night, and get out of here. I'm going. Don't ask me tomorrow how long I remained there...

SAT 09:38. Good morning. A colorful day ! I read what you wrote to me last night. Thank you. And, what did you understand from what I sent you? Can you explain more? Yes. I'm at the gym now, I finished today's workout. I'll take a shower and tell you after. You can comment on what you want in the poems. I wrote them for you. Otherwise I rarely write. The text is about the strong connection between them. There can be no rejection. It is an unconditional attraction. That's how I feel about you, you're here, aren't you? I can't get mad at you since we've been talking. Okay, I finished reading. Although I get upset in vain sometimes, but I only comment on your poems. I don't get involved with others. Yes, well, what do you want, I commented yesterday. Write more... so I have something to comment on. Or how you want to write to me only when you miss me. Truly !

Leadership supports the truth about what you experience in a dialogue that allows your spiritual association with another person, by comparing what you feel in a moment of maximum sincerity - with what you feel when you are super convinced that the world is the reflection of a mental attitude, repeatable from the point of view of a consubstantial, non-conflicting alterity.

Ioana Sarah reminded me once again, in these lines, as in a supreme attempt to understand a "beyond me", that everything that makes me feel authentic in a space of self-confession is looking at myself in a mirror and constantly surprise myself with news and good news.

As someone said on a website: "We understood each other, a connection was established, we looked at ourselves like in a mirror, truly in the enigma of our existences."

The essence of a figurative composition valid and lasting in all the days of your life, is the return to the deepening of true art.

You just have to be more discriminating with the help you render toward other people. Two points that join together create an explanation. This is an imperative. For example, if we were born, I really don't understand why we die. Maybe we should've had a name or do something in this world. Of course, no one needs explanations anymore, because they are not necessary either, no one asks for them anymore. People leave, more recently walking on tiptoes, some longing for the lives of others, others carrying their burdens. It's hard for me to do that, so I'd better talk about the wonders of my life, and what I owe it to myself to talk about. All that remains is to look directly at the side closest to a cartoonist...

At one point you said that lightning and fire are like painting and brushing: you have to know how to handle them and what to ask of them. I agree, with just one clarification, that I ask you to let me do it. It is an almost logical simplicity between lightning and fire. But painting is a naturalness that strikes a man, if somehow it was invented by being born a few times. The reality is exact, and in order to paint you have to limit yourself to all the unconfirmed phenomena. Maybe that's why angel-winged painters are still being born. When two great forces unite, it is only then that "the power of God in Christ" is revealed.

We should talk about it in a whisper. God is not something that can be defined, we cannot say anything about it as if we were describing some colors, for example red or blue. Perhaps God is the meaning by which we justify our life between two points: between death and immortality, between matter and spirit. And if the sky tolerates the earth, it is because the earth and the sky exist through light, or because the earth feeds on the light of the sky. And you have to tolerate people, because you're human too. And all people are under the same sky and live on the same planet: Earth.

Leadership: Have you become the subject of a permanent investigation, by repeating moments-themes, of various units of voices, emotions and truth, which become part of a psychological message?

You are right, our dialogue does not exhaust its theme, but only extends it among thoughts, emotions and words, in the form of a psychological message: that similar beings have more in common than those that differ. We are like two voices that are heard, complemented and harmonized, even if they give the feeling of confusion. In this case, we are witnessing a real dialogue between the two voices, each focusing on its own thematic material. Just like in Tudor Cătineanu's article, which seems to best outline the relationship between the two of us:

Here two voices enter into dialogue, which intersect continuously: One says: "Three steps to the left nicely / And only one step to their right", while the second sings and sooths firmly: "Three steps to the right nicely / And not a step to their left." The end result is either a stumbling motion in a circle, or a standing position waiting for a statue.

There is the law of nature: We love others, we forget about ourselves, we experience rain, then we regret. We make a kind of choir out of longing; we sing estranged to ourselves. What passions we have. And we woke up, we didn't even really love. Oh, what a pity ! Yes, Nicu, the love and passion we have in us is the song sung by the choir of longing for ourselves, it is the star in the sky that illuminates the earth. Only the sun can be seen, both when the sky shines and when the earth shines. And only those who take a decisive step forward, with much courage, towards the creation of a valid and lasting music, will be able to return to the deepening of true art. And he will be helped by God.

After all, I think we all strive to make music with a ticket to escape from our own shadow, an escape from our own consciousness as if suffocated by dreams, ideals and desires that are too difficult to fulfill. Perhaps, however, the music that pleases the mind is not a ticket to popularity, but the point at which the soul longs for something it does not receive. What does a vanishing point look like?

Leadership: Can you give color and dynamism to inevitably static plastic frames, given the entry of a second voice before the first has exhausted its theme?

And the pictures you take with you don't change anything, Ioana. And you're going to cry. And you will experience longing. And you'll regret it. And you will lose. And you're leaving. And it will hurt. And you will learn. You will learn to live with everything. You will learn to look people in the eye and face their unjust words. You will learn to walk straight and confident. You will learn to leave people behind and continue on your way. You will learn to be strong.

Your movement in pictures is not the same musical image that surrounds your self in real life, but represents a new dimension of your being close to a new collective reality, generating a certain performance. The performance of being authentic in any role you approach, whether or not you are attracted to some aspect of your life. But it is not a phenomenon based on illusion techniques to create any new art, such as the art of film, which is based on the dynamism of inevitably static plastic frames capable of generating the metaphysics of one's individuality over life experience.

Your first image was a composition technique, specific to baroque music, which involves the entry of a second voice before the first has exhausted its theme. Then, the technique of composing images and creating the illusion of moving images, which turns your life into a philosophy in which two people maintain eye contact through words and dialogues. Or rather, it is like in that physics problem. Two people are struggling to hear the sounds of an approaching train. One of them put his ear close to himself, and another did not...

Leadership is an image of life in which everything can be accurately calculated at the level of the positions adopted by similar people: a position of compromise assumed when each tries to turn the palm of the other in a position of submission.

Ioana Sarah highlights the connection between two people whose lives intertwine through the message: "we are the same, so I miss you". Out of a desire to truly understand the other, each tried to study their own way of being, as they kept it in a few photos, or in a few moments of real life, where the improvised music of a state of mind and a conception of life meets somewhat with the soap opera through a pile of whispers, mysteries and different expectations.

The dialogue between them gives the viewer an image in which everything – words, emotions, feelings, consciousness would not suggest a fighting attitude, but the intention to unleash unsuspected energies: their energy is insufficient to perceive concordance, harmony and endurance, but it is still an auspicious beginning.

Or, as someone rightly said: "it takes time, dedication and attention to grasp the subtleties of this painting and to fully understand the artist's intent."

Learn to observe your own mind in ordinary life situations, and then in situations in which the self receives and structures the informational contents about itself and the world.

Nicu, you go to dancers' parties every weekend, I saw the pictures with you on Instagram. However, I don't like this kind of fun... if you like it, that's all that matters ! What does it matter what we like? The important thing is that something moves things in one direction. They do not stand still as the rocks do, nor do they go back like crabs. I'm happy for you. I don't like such activities, if you like them, I can only be happy. I was in Herăstrău Park today... it was a beautiful day. I will not go out in the park until April, it is still dark at 19:00. Well, the day is big. You still have work to do. Yes, this is also an option...

You drove me crazy. I'm not passionate about this kind of fun. I understand you like it, but I don't like it. I'm learning what I want. You go there and be happy. I don't like places where you step on your feet and scream at each other. I understand you like it, but I don't like it. However, Ioana, know that winter passes more easily this way. It doesn't have to be easy. Everyone spends their time as they please. It's not about the season. You can do the same in the winter. If you have someone with you. I don't think you understand. I'm not interested in these videos or pictures you take at parties. Don't send them to me. Enjoy them yourself. I know, I say this earlier. They took a while to load. I don't mind seeing them.

But for me, life is in two. Not in a pile. And here are two at a time. I was just saying two by themselves. Not looking at each other. If I want to move, I go to the gym. I don't like gatherings of people that make fools of themselves. But, you know, dancing is also a sport. Perfect, but I prefer meetings where you talk, look at yourself, surprise yourself. Not screaming and bodies that emanate desires. I am built differently. Sensuality. That's what you're missing, Nicu. I don't resonate with this. I show sensuality to whoever I want. Not to the empty crowd. I'm not missing anything. I'm whole. Pleasant. Loved. I just choose where and with whom and especially when. Don't rush to opinions. You don't know me.

Leadership: Are you aware of things that are going well and try to rebalance the negative-positive balance a bit so that you can change the plan of your decisions based on other events given to sensitivity that "sees and hears too much"?

I'm in town now, walking alone. You? I'm on my laptop, I'm caught up with some projects until the party at 9:00 p.m. You just had to mention the party. What does party mean? Music that shatters your eardrums? Women and men who mimic well-being? Is anyone really happy there? Parties are great, otherwise I wouldn't go. It's just kind of ruining my sleep. I haven't been to any in the last 2 weeks. I'm sure they're fine, congratulations. I'll be there up to 11:30, something like that. Stay as long as you want. I don't like random gathering and noise. You like to be alone. I am at the moment when I like to be alone and with the one I like. I don't want much noise for anything. Stay alone like this, let me know when you're ready to change something. Be it that I am enough for one, and he enough for me. I think you're fighting hard to be by his side...

I don't fight much to be by his side if he doesn't want to, I don't fight for anyone, if I don't deserve to fight. I want us to take equal steps towards each other and to fight to keep each other. Then that's it. I've seen this before; I've heard this before. Only words. That's what I want. What I aspire to. As much as it is, that's how I accept it. When it's gone, then I leave. Yes, you are a dreamer. The same story everywhere. I'm not dreaming. I'm in a beautiful, beautiful story with someone. Everyone sees themselves in a story. I don't see myself, I really am. I'm not talking crazy.

You are right. I said it to you just because. It doesn't matter what you think. Then, if it doesn't matter, why are you telling me? What you think neither helps me nor confuses me. I told you the truth, if you don't believe it, it doesn't matter. The bottom line is that I'm not dreaming. I always prefer reality, facts, not words.

There are people who only need us. If we find them, we're lucky. Initially we are attracted to a face, then we discover the rest, soul, thought, if it is what we want we stay, if not, just one face is not enough. I like both man and soul in this case. And the face. I don't know how long it will take, but I'll see how long it takes. I hope you find someone in your soul at the party. You always limit yourself to yourself. What you like, what you prefer, how you are... etc.

Leadership: Can you look at yourself by expressing a sensitivity that cannot be virtualized into objects, according to a reality that leaves too much of a discrepancy between lucidity, dreaming, and self-suggestion?

Are you thinking about the other person? I'm thinking of the other person, otherwise the mechanism wouldn't work. Know that I envy you. Yes, it's a huge deal as well, this envy, as if something eludes your grasp and you can't quite put your finger on what it is exactly, because you confuse yourself with my being, with my attitude, you confuse yourself with the price caught between self-esteem and the quality of intimate life. It is absolutely dangerous to confuse yourself so frequently with the role you're playing, because it could become an obsession and later, it will resemble the schizophrenia of reality and existence that leaves for too big of a discrepancy between lucidity, dream and self-suggestion.

Don't you understand that I don't resonate with these parties? To me they are nothing, zilch. I'm not passionate about such encounters. What's so impressive about it? You're definitely missing something you need. But at least I'm not alone at home. This is true. I really apologize for what I said. I'm glad you're there. You're right, too. Stay calm, no couples are created here. It's just a matter of time. That's all. I understand. It's funny. I had 2 choices for the 8th of March. One was to teach for a few hours at school, and the other was to go out with a friend. I don't think I'll choose anything. I'll see. I have nothing to choose from. You don't, but I have a choice. And I don't choose. I expect to leave town every week, but I'm waiting for the weather to warm up a little. I really hate the snow and the cold.

In my case, I have about a month left of dance classes. When it gets hot outside, I stop. Dancing is also a sport, and what a sport it is, it requires all the muscles, although some do not realize it. It's also cardio. Can you believe it? I have a different opinion. Dancing doesn't really require the physical, only the mental. In winter. Yes, winter passes more easily, that's about it. I'd rather you'd called me; it would've been better than asking me why I go dancing. Okay, I'll call you next time. It's a little late now.

Leadership is the language you use in a moment of existence that highlights the lucidity with which you observe your inner experience, so that what surrounds you does not represent an anger directed at the self.

Ioana Sarah introduced me to the following important thing: look for the character of man and you will find his ability to suddenly open his soul by using the most common language of words. Someone was right on a webpage:

"It's not hard to find the wrong side of a person; the hard part is finding the right side of a person. We often look at these parts together. We do this to help them feel positive, to be aware of things that are going well, and to try to rebalance the negative-positive balance a little bit."

On August 09, 2020

My friend Ioana Sarah's comments on my FACEBOOK page. Our conversations. These are interesting things to know, because what you learn from others takes the form of questions that require key decisions at the turning points of life.

Listen to my heavy words and weigh them well before you remember the idea behind them, their sense of art, of dream, unforgettable, their concrete view of the world. Sometimes they are words of complete silence, other times they are taken out of the hell of despair. Reality is made by people and sometimes serves to meet the needs felt for pain relief. This must not be forgotten if we are to understand spiritual movements and their development. Correct me, I haven't cleaned up yet, on a blackboard it is written only in white. It was a word... if you want to balance the situation, I say let us share reality and dreaming, I leave dreaming to you and then we trade, to look from both perspectives.

Sometimes transformation is a matter of quotes, accomplished through therapy for the soul. Poetry is not a scientific work, it is a reflection of the word in terms of the soul, I think there is an always unanswered question: why does man write poetry? The feelings are sometimes given to us by the fluency of the verses through rhyme... (I am waiting for the next poem). The intention to write is like a particle in free motion at a certain moment of time... hope is a real situation with two different particles in action.

Trust does not come from theory, and theory is not allowed to contradict the facts of existence. Destiny is a kind of simultaneity of distant events, a kind of remote action.

Existence is closely connected with the events of the world, with the destiny of mankind. Therefore, existence is the totality of attributes attributed to a possible intellectual notion. Any notion becomes a subject if it is a living reality. Many are willing to believe that it corresponds to the world's problems. Changing the subject occurs objectively when mistrusts or oppositions arise that we cannot respond to, we can only defend ourselves.

If we could have refused time from the beginning, in one way or another we would not have been born, time is like a book without depth that browses as it pleases. Probability is part of life more than it exists in mathematics. Life is always probable, never certain.

Let me tell you something. Self-control assures you a remarkable clear vision, self-confidence and intuition of your own substance that cannot be altered, or more correctly, even these ensure it. So, in order to understand life, you need to have the self-control to stay in a state of peace at all times, to accept certain unexpected situations and to face cognitive challenges and threats.

Lack of sincerity leads to clumsiness, which can take many forms. Sometimes it is waved to justify nonsense and then the gestures become imperfect and clumsy. And diligent planning leads to madness and then fools think they are wise. It is a kind of wisdom that spares us from applause... problems in general are insoluble anyway...

I'm on the verge of laughter, you see that autumn is coming, the leaves will be colored in thousands of colors, or as you would say they will be forged...

Then man is the least sought after, though he is the most precious... in unforeseen moments man is uncontrollable, terrified of perplexity as if he were going to war with everyone. A world that has the familiar face of everyday life.

Write a lot if writing is a practical effect of improving science, if you make it possible to invent things that enrich life. Books are the result of thinking, they are certain and necessary, some talk about what happens in nature, as the observer sees, others talk about the action on the human spirit, about the insecurity of man in front of himself. Each generation improves the treasure trove of knowledge and understanding by writing... I'm just saying, so I don't waste time.

Leadership: Can the way you perceive reality start from the way you perceive your own existence caught between an unforgettable moment of self-transformation and a landmark of cultural reference?

We write because somewhere in the depths of our being we hope that someone will travel through our minds. We need others, others find themselves in us... some rush through our writings like in a jungle, others look for untold events, some are confused, we receive everything and everything is to be given, this is the charm of life.

A guy from your list of friends, named Vasile Nemeș said at one point: "Inspiration does not come to us from someone like us. When you have eyes only for yourself, you drink from a lake. When you explore, you drink from a fresh spring."

Only what is not like us completes us fully, no one adds another hand to his, but a pleasant touch leads us to dream.

Science capitalizes on things that we would otherwise only know they existed, it is like a pencil in the hands of some and not others, because regardless of the scientific field, science is not available to everyone. Every human being is a sensitivity, a dramatic emotion, sometimes passionate, clear and sometimes weighted, man is a science in which all the outside world fits. This results from the remarkable and extremely clear view given to the substance of each individual that appears in the setting of science.

A cultural landmark can resonate with the popularization of one's own version of BEING, transposed (through emotions, sensations, thinking) into a story full of art that highlights the fact that everything you experience is part of a gradual spiritual ascent.

Both the old and the young fade away. What is outside consciousness is not necessarily below it. In every man lies a painter who has never opened an exhibition. And an expression without metaphors is like arid ground, whether it is painting or writing. The way you express yourself is the way a color captures the human soul, the property of a color to be warmer or colder depending on the character and the way the person is, no matter what scene he chooses to capture in life. Every scene of improvisation is born on the spot, in front of you, in the mirror of your soul. You participate directly. You can also give suggestions to others.

Life is a kind of science in which we first exist, it is a kind of play in which it doesn't matter that we played well or badly, it only matters that we made our debut. Someone else said that before, but in other words. It is important that these words exist in the science of your life, allowing you to develop harmoniously, both physically and mentally and spiritually. It's not good to be an actor without a cause, without a stage and an audience, without art. But it's good to live an actor's life through the story of an actor who impresses at every appearance.

Let us keep something of the character of a Robinson Crusoe, let us never let the spiritual fire go out, but let us maintain it, let us always allow for an inner fire within us that cannot be snuffed.

Leadership denotes the way you express your personality, character, emotional intelligence, so that what you leave behind, as in a high-impact story, is worthy of a Robinson Crusoe who goes through a lot of adventures that mature him, make him strong, and teach him to educate himself.

Ioana Sarah is the name of a simple anonymous woman who became my friend at a time when I had no friends. Her thoughts, so deep, sensitive, free, transposed me into a real mirage from which I never wanted to leave, to the point when the mirage contributed to the construction of a story from which not even now do I think I can find a way of escape.

The story is called: "Our story".

Irresistible Temptations

On November 28, 2013

Fulfill the role you must assume, by reducing your vulnerability in the face of the uncontrolled tendency to expand the excellence area.

The rarest flower of human genius must be purposefully used, cared for like a jewel with the utmost quality. In any case, it shouldn't be abandoned on an empty field, in full blooming and harvesting season. And Clarice Starling, aware of the precious attributes of this magnificent creation sees herself under the necessity – just like a clever gardener – to take care of it. And not just that, not with limitation to enjoying its perfume and colors. But to extract the sweet honey of virtue. Because this honey, continuously mixed in well-determined proportions, simmered until it reaches the boiling point, produces that first quality oil with the property to energize and amplify mental functions.

Clarice wants to achieve the passage to the challenging stage of diagnosing man, to travel and intervene in the area of subtleties that nobody notices. She wants to reach that finesse of understanding the elements that make up man, to identify the secret motives that support his personality and to determine the best control options. Just one thought doesn't seem to go away: "I can't be passive in front of the magnitude of the depth phenomenon; I want to learn how to think in the detriment of mediocrity and formalism."

Just like a maniac who follows unknown people, Clarice carefully follows the strand of advanced hardly-accessible judgment of the psychiatrist, Hannibal Lecter. At any cost she must exploit the energy in the deepest abysses of the human being, from the inferior to the superior limit of thinking capacities and patterns. To explore the extremely variable dimensions of the highest senses, inverting the percentages of complete harmony. Here is what a grueling ordeal she has to endure because of irresistible temptations.

Leadership: Are your limitations on what you cannot control experiencing an opposing force from an existential motivation when deciding to escape from the extremes of a sense of psychic overwhelming?

Clarice's entire existence seems to revolve around the idea of traveling through the map of Hannibal Lector's life, her whole motivation being to imitate her idol, but for this she must escape from the extremes of a sense of psychic overwhelming, such as that something terrible will happen and that she will lose everything. The work of an FBI agent is not based only on the awareness of the destructive repercussions of tragic events, but rather on the manifestations of the soul to a certain form of response to threats of perceptual nature.

But wanting to make an impressive example of way of thinking and attitude out of herself in the elusive game of finding the most fertile understandings and perceptions about man, hidden in the mental shell of doctor Hannibal Lecter, she distances herself from her role. A reluctance towards the obligations and responsibilities of her profession in the stages of the individual decision-making process.

These justified escapes of the professional area blocked by regulations and directives come alive through "the step forward", which has become the fundament of her evolution. The decision of not telling her boss every detail, keeping for herself key elements of the investigation, is the fruit of a determination between the dream to reach a higher professional level and the tendency to acquire an advanced knowledge of man. Maybe even a higher IQ.

The biggest weight Clarice has to bear is not that of entering the killer's mind, inspired by Hannibal Lecter's thinking, but to accept his negative parts and mistakes that increasingly make her forget that there is any joy left in the world.

The attachment to a thinking that is found in all particular consciousnesses highlights the mental effort that you are subjected to resisting under the conditions of a decision simulation made by a superior reality.

Clarice feels that she cannot rise to Hannibal's way of thinking because she cannot adapt to a higher-order reality that can cost a lot, even her life, a reality that no longer reproduces the simplicity of the ideal of fulfilling a destiny, but rather producing the fear of the unknown. In order to turn into reality the adventurous thoughts, perfectly adapted to the personality that directly and openly receives messages with empowering character, a certain capacity and certain orientation are needed in front of human suffering.

The capacity to see in man's depth, destined exclusively to extending his own potential. And the precise orientation over the focalized point, dedicated to training the self-regulation mechanisms for self-worthiness. Both variables correspond to the decision-making consequences induced by a certain dose of non-conformism.

But between capacity and orientation there is always a third element which comprises both: the tendency to hide aspects directly or indirectly connected with the gradual identification and amplification of using resources that are absolutely necessary for continuous training and personal accomplishment.

And a persistence of focusing the efforts of being as faithful as possible to the reconstruction of personality, determining an ambiguous reaction, a certain unpredictability and imprecision in decisions and actions, will create the domino effect in your excellence area, reducing that constant of collaborating with other participants to the narrow and profitable sector of professional assertion.

Leadership: Can you highlight the extremes of a career decision to clarify the choice you are going to make in a context of closeness and emotional openness to an authority that manifests without any explanation?

Clarice Starling is forced to make a very risky and dangerous decision: she agrees to keep in touch secretly with fugitive Hannibal Lecter, who a few days ago had committed two of the most heinous crimes in the history of the city, being more dangerous than ever. We find only one explanation for this gesture of psychological and emotional attachment: she knows she will need Hannibal's knowledge and thinking to solve the most important cases of murder in the future.

She practically agrees to keep in touch with the most hideous of criminals to catch other criminals. It's a typical FBI procedure. She points out this decision in the absence of any remorse, which denotes vanity, because her only purpose was to capture the serial killer Buffalo Bill, with no regard for collateral victims.

In leadership, this more resembles an attitude of pendulum between responsibility and hypocrisy, between morality and necessity, between the thirst of sensationalism and the heavy burden of consciousness.

In leadership, things should be looked at from two angles: a positive appreciation of man by enhancing his value, admissible only because it keeps him away from smashing into old limitations. And a negative appreciation because of the tendency to "transit" towards a different form of being, towards a different professional destination than the one foreseen by his role. It is the destination of a fulfilled life by freeing the pain caused by the tendency to see things in opposite ends of the spectrum, the sign of a weakness, of a fear, of a self-defense tendency and of internal conflicts.

The predisposition to taking risks is often the main correspondent of the decision-making process that is influenced by factors external to your own consciousness, for the benefit of an experience that brings you more prestige, or by virtue of your preoccupation with what others around you will think of your performance.

The motto: "Intoxicate your senses with honey, without tasting its sweetness", used in relation with the process of responsibility, having a critical connotation, becomes the landmark necessary for thinking and being aware of the risks entailed by a deviation to the role entrusted in the expansion process of the collaboration and association agreement signed by the other partners or superiors.

We are considering here the actions on your own which have as objective extending the operating area, as well as individual insubordination plans can have a positive interpretation, representing an evolution, but only if they win ground in front of mediocrity and formalism.

While the tendency to eat too much sweet honey will trigger that phenomenon of being against everyone, pursuing only your own interests, fully taking advantage of the role that was entrusted to him, and will systematically oppose general tendencies.

Leadership is the voice of consciousness that you assume of a present action, insofar as the Ego that animates your existence is unrelated to what you find appealing in others.

Irresistible temptations highlights those leaders who, wanting to excel in their activities, get lost on the twisted paths of human subtleties. If you don't want to add a permanent minus to your career, then fulfill the role you have to assume, reducing your vulnerability in the face of the uncontrolled tendency to expand your excellence area.

Is There A Vacant Role Taking Shape In Your Work?

On January 03, 2009

The story you create can take shape in a "call to life" type image, only if it continues the idea of the subtlety of human sensitivity.

But which actor will tell the story, who is the most suitable? And what role should be given to him? There is a vacant role. It is true that it still has no outline. It only appears in the wish list. A representative of a social category is missing: the craftsmen from Novgorod. That's it! The actor Orlov will play the role of the goldsmith Ignat.

The role takes shape, acquires the flavor that we also know. New ideas, new images appear now. From a notion, Ignat becomes a living character. In Novgorod, he is the one who decides to call Nevsky to the head of the army. Then Ignat distributes chains to everyone. He himself remains without chains. He asks himself the only question he can find. She's too small for him. Too short. The idea is funny. Ignat will comment: "It's a bit short!" The invention continues. The idea of Russian losses in the battle must be suggested by the death of a character close to the audience's sensibility. So, something like the death of Ignat. Because of jealousy. His throat is exposed and the traitor's knife will cut it. The comic of the line, repeated now, will turn into the tragic: "Make it a little shorter!"

And so the abstract ideas, the previously given theses take flesh in images. The reins of the two opponents - logical thinking and imagination - are equally stretched and the Pegasi gallop hand to hand.

Leadership: Can you shape a visual narrative of external reality so that you become the representative of continuous invention, where reality is transformed into a living character of your own sensibility?

In his role as the actor of the expressionist vision, the artist is not content to simply outline a visual narrative of external reality; he becomes the representative of a continuous invention, where reality is transformed into a living character of his own sensibility. Expressionism, therefore, outlines not only a form, but also a notion full of "real flavor" through the vacant role of standard interpretations.

Using logical thinking in combination with imagination, this style evokes a call to emotions by transforming shapes and colors, suggesting more than it shows, and questioning abstract ideas. Each form of expression is a replica that continues to dialogue with the viewer, each contrast is a visual idea that suggests new interpretations of reality.

Leadership: Does the contouring of a character in your work explore how the contrast between expressiveness and visual reality simultaneously captures the flavor of life and the value of sacrifice?

In the context of your narrative, the tragedy of Ignatius reflects the space between the vacant role and the harsh reality of his tragic destiny. He is an actor who not only interprets, but also deeply experiences the contradictions of the role he was given. By outlining this character, one explores the responsibility of the representative of Novgorod craftsmen, capturing the flavor of their life and the abstract ideas of sacrifice and duty.

Ignat's continuous invention, to offer links to others while he remains uncovered, adds a layer of irony to his narrative, turning the comic of the line " Cam curt abreve; -i !" in a tragedy that resonated with the audience's sensitivity, suggesting the inevitable losses. This duel between logical thinking and imagination that characterizes every moment of the story, finds its echo in the metaphorical fight between the Pegasi galloping hand to hand.

In terms of creation, leadership is supported by the sensitivity and perspective of viewers, which provides a balance between the contrast between expressiveness and visual reality.

Is what you render in your creation what the viewers see in their life story?

Is there a vacant role taking shape in your work? Ask yourself this question whenever you are faced with a new artistic or conceptual challenge. And if your vision of creation embraces the mystery of the unknown, then the life story you unfold will be an engaging and memorable one.

Is Your Leadership Model Worth Taking As An Example?

On June 06, 2009

One of the burdens you will face as a leader is not just the direction you're taking and whichever path others take, but rather the way you position yourself toward change and progress.

Take heed of these examples. Exactly at the time the Wright brothers invented the airplane, scientists were conducting studies to show that a body heavier than air could not fly. Ray Kroc's friends told him that his intention to sell cheap burgers was pure madness, but he did not listen to them. So it is important to cultivate our ability to see possibilities where others see only difficulties, or even impossible things. Sam Walton, founder and president of the Wal-Mart chain of stores, explained in his book, "Made in America", that his phenomenal success was based on his ability to recognize opportunities out of sheer necessity . *

We learn from these examples that people who have succeeded in life have found their creative genius at a certain point in life. Their success did not depend on other people's influences, but on their own intuition, creativity, vision, and perseverance.

Do relationships hinder or facilitate your development? In order to constantly maintain your noble character, you must appeal to those ideals, values, and beliefs that give you stability in your relationships with other people. For it is always very difficult (and at the same time risky) to trust people whose values and beliefs differ greatly from yours, or if they deviate from the ethics you respect, follow, and promote.

By looking for as many areas of common interest as possible, not unjustifiably falling halfway to progress and achievement (as is often the case with aspirants to quick and immediate success) , you will be able to move forward steadily and confidently toward the common goal. It is important that the leader-people relationship (an objective reality) is complemented by a value judgment, by understanding, by common characteristics, by everything that means leadership. Leadership reflects your own human, emotional and intellectual value, it is not a concrete pillar that does not feel or know anything.

Leadership: Does the evolution of your life reflect your attempt to make big changes to the "previous stage" of the cause you are serving, in terms of a situation in the area of a higher level of comparison with yourself?

A leader compares themselves only to one's self, from two points of view: the conscience and the price he has to pay in order to go further than other people. Acceptance or rejection, admiration or antipathy are attributes of the leader's personality.

It is a prerequisite for the proper functioning of your leadership that these attributes are, on a larger scale, preceded by mutual knowledge. The limited space between you and people will not allow you to be a creator, to find new opportunities, new ways of development through which to gain full power, or to manage efficiently and the potential you have.

One of the burdens you face as a leader is not just the direction you're taking and whichever path others take, but rather the way you position yourself toward change and progress. More important is the way you live and deal with the consequences of possible leadership mistakes. In order to reach your maximum potential, in order to evolve more and more, you have to make a permanent exchange of experiences, knowledge and information with other professionals in the field, just as the cell makes a permanent exchange of substances, energy and information with the environment in which it is located. And if they are willing to choose to improve and change their attitude, then you will not encounter any obstacles along the way.

Remember that leadership means first and foremost influence. Just as you can only connect one lego piece to another lego piece in order to build something, so too your knowledge must first be linked to that of the people around you so that you can then develop your leadership skills.

Renowned leadership performer John Maxwell once said: "If you have an innate talent for leadership, you probably have a passion for development. You like to see how things are built. It's part of you. Keep it up ! If you're not very talented, don't yet lose hope. You can gain a lot if you start learning, making the most of every opportunity. So work hard to surpass your current level.Only in this manner will you be prepared for the future."

Leadership: Is your vision model worth taking as an example from the point of view of that whole unit of your character that reveals the antithesis between what you really are and what makes you more prone to reactions that surprise you?

Oliver Goldsmith, an eighteenth-century writer, once said: "People seldom improve when they have no other model to follow but their own."

Will you become the role model that people will follow? Do you have any character defects that could slow your growth? Whenever something bothers you, do you wonder what your attitude was that triggered the reaction of repulsion in them?

The full power of your influence can be both beneficial and harmful. Your ability to get a positive response from people is crucial – by changing and reorienting their thinking and feelings toward (and in line with) an objective reality. The percentage that guarantees you access to their system of values and beliefs, and that gives you authority over them, will increase significantly only if you succeed in convincing them that your decisions will bring them hope for better, peace of mind and professional success. Do not allow people to be overwhelmed by thoughts based on feelings that will evaporate over time, but instill in them a new winning spirit in a way that benefits you as well.

At what level are you in a relationship with the people around you? How does your influence determine the way you lead people? Do you treat everyone the same? Are you on the same level as each of them? Do you have the ability to recognize the potential of each person to move to a high level of leadership? Do you accept leadership challenges? What is the best way to amplify your positive impact on others?

Leadership: Can the revelation of knowing who you are and how you are be quantified by the mirroring effect of a future situation during catalytic events for the "believe in something more than you can see" reaction?

As I mentioned in the "Membership" section, the power of influence is a true science of manipulating people's emotions and interests. However, it requires good knowledge and good interpersonal communication of the people you interact with. By focusing on positive outcomes, focusing on your own development in order to facilitate the evolution of those around you, creating a solid professional and emotional foundation for those who have leadership potential, you will become a role model for the art of leadership, you will serve as a benchmark for future leadership models that will continue your leadership.

You are the first person responsible for finding the right leadership model, with the most valuable traits, with the best qualities, with the best character, aligned with the noblest beliefs and values. But before reaching this stage, you yourself have to respect an axiom: "Maintain your noble character constantly, appealing to those ideals, values and beliefs that give you stability in your relationships with other people."

The success of leadership is given by the crowd of people on the same step (of an escalator). They will reach a higher level first and foremost. It is important that at this stage the crowd is larger than those on the lower steps and this depends on the leader, his power of influence and persuasion on the one hand, and on the other hand the people around the leader who must be willing to engage in the struggle for obtaining performance.

Leadership is an effective way to materialize your vision in a process of interaction between "an introspection that helps the person pay attention to things they thought were unimportant" and "an introspection that gives you the opportunity to act truly responsibly."

Your Leadership Model Is Worth Taking As An Example only if you know how to make the right decisions when all other people are challenging your decisions.

A true leader creates an inspirational vision of the future and motivates people to develop with that vision. The leader gives a rich picture of what the future will look like when people's visions are not necessarily compatible with his.

It Is Hardest To See What Is Directly In Front Of You

On January 11, 2023

An image of amazing expressiveness is not eternal if you do not remember its limits and if you do not amplify it with the depth of your feelings.

Here, on the seashore, where the fine sand borders the open sea, under a sky where the nuances intertwine in a dizzying game, I have built a corner of heaven, a threshold through which I step in time to meet myself again. And only here I can absorb with my eyes the same expressionist paintings, enslaved in a single extremely current theme "Maritime chromatic jewels", along with the transition from landscape to message, from the past, to the present and future.

Somehow, my familiarity with this theme, being a recurring one in the space of an expressive realism in which the visual field of an "open to the outside" psychology comes to identify the character with his inner side, gives me hope in a world of the consumption of appearances. The sea will always be my sight open to a horizon of immeasurably pure spirit, a horizon of Being deeper than any object of its transitivity.

Leadership: Can you immortalize an image in such a way that it acquires artistic meaning in the light of a vision without limits, so that you achieve a correlation between continuity and permanence?

The place I return to reflects the subject of an artistic work, made up of several independent parts, depicting nature in all its splendor. In this way, I use light and colors to reproduce my own vision of the correlation between continuity and permanence. In the version of my eyes, the sea asks for its sand back, but not without a price: to be agitated and bring algae to the shore, which disturbs the vision of a pure, natural beauty.

Of course, continuity is what gave me the feeling of being part of a great expanse: the sea, I always hang my most beautiful thoughts and dreams on it. But permanence means being part of the sea as an extension of it, as a kind of consciousness expressed through the symbols most charged with emotional power.

Unfortunately, I haven't seen the Black Sea for two years, and it seems like an eternity has passed since then. The motif that dominates the whole setting has neither precedents as a bridge over the long years that have passed since we have not seen each other, nor relations with other memory gaps outside the chromatic and plastic space, from a virtuality that exceeds me and dominates a spatial, psychic dimension.

Rather, it has to do with a kind of eternity that gradually completes its forces and organizes its unity in the present time. Here, a fragment from "The Time Machine", by H.G. Wells, when the main character confesses his belonging to a life beyond time, hits the mark:

"It seemed to me that I was experiencing the sadness of a dream rather than a real loss. But that morning I felt absolutely alone again, terribly alone. I remembered the place where I had found myself so many times, of the peace I had there, of some people, and, together with these images, a painful longing came over me. To the place where I had moved my soul so many times, because only there I found myself. And to this perfect state of melancholy something was missing to reach a perfect mechanism, namely, absolute permanence. I was saddened by the thought that the dream of my intellect had been so short..."

Leadership: Does the image that creates a special state of mind for you focus on acquiring the objective approach of re-establishing in a natural place an often-overlooked fact of life?

The stake of the long-lived constructions in art, raised from the passion of the soul, to which is added the diligence of the efforts made in the direction of illustrating certain concepts, is the acquisition of the objective approach to resettle in a natural place an often overlooked fact of life, bringing back to consciousness the need for spiritual fulfilment.

So, the focus is on the set of aesthetic values (harmony, beauty, the sublime, balance) regarding the content of images that touch the soul because they inspire strong emotions, move you, encourage you or even make you look at life with different eyes. Of course, some pictures can tell a whole story without any words.

Could I have seen everything I saw in my favorite place at any time? Because the eyes must be trained to see beyond the act of seeing and experiencing, reaching a more advanced level of deepening the perception of a reality recorded as a memory. And when the lines of reality are not always parallel, avoiding as much as possible any repetition of the shapes that the surrounding things take, then the viewing angles of the eyes do not have the same degree either, precisely because the diversity is obtained by assigning symbolic meanings to the shapes themselves.

Yes. The sea imagines that the sand is part of its contents, while the sand considers the sea to be a living entity that perpetually creates, sustains and regenerates life. Therefore, whoever is tempted to dwell within the perimeter of a single reality that encompasses the symbol of infinity, as such being able to encompass the steadfast presence of all nature's creations in a single image, will have to be content with the apparent absence of the "absolute form" that distinguishes neither the particular nor the general.

Leadership can be compared to the field of art when it adopts as a landmark for the representation of time and as an essential place of memory, those experiences that are not limited by the perishable part of man.

Do you have the ability to express feelings that can induce similar feelings in others?

It Is Hardest To See What Is Directly In Front Of You. Above all, it is difficult to see the sea and the sand, under a sky where the shades intertwine in a dizzying play, if you are not well trained in the field of art, and especially if the images imprinted in your memory do not bring back to your consciousness the need to spiritual fulfillment.

Only in the field of art can you discover something new every moment of the day. Remember that the limits of an image are given by the ability of your eyes to observe its background, its resolution, its features, its reflections, its effects and the messages it conveys.

It Is Not Allowed To Touch The Spirits

On February 25, 2017

Before you create for yourself an original concept of art, learn to perceive yourself as a force between other forces.

It will be many days before I become something like the person I was once. The intensity of the existential field produced between the turning point that led to the present situation and the point of exit from the world full of appearances on which the thread needed for the stitching of a stiff turn of destiny was twined, producing itself at a lively, tense rhythm, became a sensation of strength, a strong push. Something that cannot be described in words. But which developed dependence on the feeling of belonging to something bigger, stronger.

With me, the portrait of Nicolas Flamel, on whose expressive visage could be read the energy of fire condensed into a connecting factor to an esoteric law: "Do not believe anything ! Seek the truth yourself", transmits to me a strange state of exaltation, mixed with regret. Sometimes I am sad because of the secret of the power by which the intellect sees itself, acquired by taking into account the indirect value of a universal law: "That which is Above is as Below, and what is Below is as it is Above."

Intensely, I feel embedded in a set of neutrino fluxes, quantum numbers and gamma photon waves expelled into the surrounding space, in the light of a strange invisible intelligence, as if between me and the great alchemist an indisputable proof had been fixed for eternity of the materialization of spirits.

Without being a scientist, I feel caught up in some seemingly heterogeneous manifestations, with the blessing of certain highly evolved spirits, more like in a poltergeist phenomenon, completing my thoughts only with the idea of the intervention of a special intelligence in a game of energies to which no one has more access than me. The proof of their eternity is the very nature of my reality, governed by the fatal law: everything transforms, everything flows, nothing is frozen, static.

Leadership: Can the perception of your reality undergo a change that proves to be incommunicable at the level of image, but communicable at the level of transmitting the feeling of permanence of existence that you experience at the level of a pure transcendental consciousness?

This bizarre phenomenon of perceiving the spectrum of a discrete signal, of a positive enlightenment with the avowed desire of totality, focused on acquiring advanced knowledge and understanding of virtual reality, is passed within the framework of immediacy through the edge of Nietzsche's sword: "When you look into the Abyss, and the Abyss looks into you."

Rasputin, the Russian mystic, was using his sight abundantly, which impressed his interlocutors until he paralyzed them. It was the Hypnotize effect through the interpretation of an enigma. The same is the figure in my painting, it takes away any chance, any power to really see the cosmic light of "Chi sono veramente?" only through the effect of a gravity that exceeds the electrostatic forces of a reaction field: "The great secrets do not belong to our world ! "

Without wanting to be a force between other forces, so that from the outside one cannot perceive the existence of any supernatural occurrence, any cause of inadmissibility, amid the feverish search of the signs of an afterlife, which is only the privilege of a medium, I feel stuck in a gravitational field that becomes strong enough to alter the intrinsic nature of my present function: that of a messenger of a past world.

To experience my existence at the level of a pure transcendental consciousness, in the sphere of pure and strong thoughts, means to revive my adventurous spirit in a single historical manifestation of body and soul, capable of knowledge, of that freedom of which today's people can only to dream.

Leadership: Are you guided in shaping your work after a perceptual factor representing the subjective mood that accepts the meaning of a vision beyond the real?

Victor Hugo had peer-to-peer talks with prophets like Moses, Muhammad, or Jesus. It seemed very natural for him to be chosen by the most prominent dead people of mankind to carry with them noble talks so as to reveal works of rare universal inspiration. Just like Victor Hugo, I have learned that interacting with the spirits of the forerunners of science and culture, thus gaining a penchant for mysticism, like any action that leaves a mark on time, actually means laying the foundations of a philosophy of transcendence which would be at the same time a poetic of existence and pure knowledge, a poetic of the imaginary which should know no other way of expression than symbolic language.

The essence of a development based on the resources of a revealing reality is obtained by interpreting an enigma like finding the difference between two almost identical images: the image of the world from the perspective of a man that exists only by comparison with something "unknown". And the image of the world from the perspective of a content of communication with something very deep, vast, outside of you, but which is connected with an earlier existence.

Before you create your original concept of art, learn to perceive yourself as a force between other forces, as an evolution between two such images. Art is the ability of the scientist to see himself above sight, the degree of reality and its value depending on the reflective reflection of his soul in someone else.

Leadership: Can you share the experience of your spiritual guide in an effort to transcend, being primarily a soul -level communion with the reality of a world that cannot prove its existence?

What is the privilege of the most enlightened minds? They concentrate the whole essence of intellectual capital in the same message, coming from the intersection of the meditations that allows the superimposition of the two images, which determines the particular phenomenon: "The great secrets do not belong to our world ! "

A work of art exists only in the sense that it impregnates the painter of his image by referring to a whole constituted by the summation of traits detached from the analysis of an experience corresponding to belonging to a subtler intelligence and with a more generous conception of the world and human nature.

Such an artist is orienting himself in shaping his work by a factor of perception and superior knowledge, representing the subjective disposition that accepts the meaning of a vision beyond the real.

He discovers the actual idea, the general significance of an image in the particular phenomenon of a match between an earlier existence and the consequence of a mature existence by developing features of a certain specificity: "Do not believe anything ! Seek the truth yourself ! "

The privilege of an enlightened mind is the truth you find out about yourself in the way you represent reality on a higher plane, that is, on a completely different plane of existence.

It is Not Allowed to Touch the Spirits, but you can always carry with them noble discussions if you have the power to consider the particular phenomenon of a presence felt at the level of emotion which you can use as material of rare inspiration in order to achieve a work of art.

It's A Sin

On January 04, 2016

Test your level of faith, acting under the impetus of seeking truth and optimizing it in a particular context.

I had to assume the responsibility of sin to allow me to overcome the limits of understanding the "truth" to the level of self-sacrifice in the context of the philosophy of value given to every possible outcome of an action, but which was undoubtedly antagonistic to the Bible. This unique philosophy, the ultimate appeal of the criterion of critical and erudite rationality that develops hermetic theories, seems to derive from the algorithm of an existential pathway expressed in no intelligible language, often called destiny, an intense mixture of falling into time and being outside of time.

It was a sacrifice consubstantial with the outward appearance of defeat, doubt, contempt, compared to what was permanent, solid, stable, and generally "obsolete", forever with a sense of shame, leaving me as if hypnotized by what riled me up even more: the violation of the connection with the divine. "Father you fought me ‘cause I didn't care and I still don't understand."

To believe what cannot be seen, to imagine what may not be true, under the guilt of my destiny as a magical chant, that is, being surprised by a repetitive sense of shame, in an exercise in futility and despair that I could not manage to control, was congruent with the object of my obsession for highlighting the mysterious and amazing discoveries.

Doubtful discoveries, dependent on the unknown of invariable laws, were made through contractual clauses of travel financing in an enigmatic, symbolic, perhaps unintentional reality. And the reward of this delicious act was to proclaim what I never thought I would see: another face of learning the Sciences of Life according to another face of God. "Father forgive me, I tried not to do it."

Leadership: Do your forms of protest against the "inadmissible admitted by reason" answer the supreme appeal of a single criterion: truth cannot be possessed, only expressed?

Dostoevsky conceived his characters from sensibilities and attachments against something considered holy, which burst at one moment, but which he compensated with some special qualities. For example, the Prince Mishkin, his soul did not know evil because he could not conceive it. When he was obliged to take note of the offensive presence of evil and attribute a blame to it, he found legitimate arguments and explanations, ready to convince himself to accept it as a fatality. At the sublime level of experience and knowledge, good and evil reached the definitive phase of coincidentia oppositorum.

The jarring threads that linked me to a sense of my own importance stemming from the assimilation of science at a higher level, an exile close to the center of the universe, connected to the sense that masters any subject of knowledge and understanding, for whatever I wanted to do, they offered coherence to the confrontation between good and evil. Thus, the change manifests itself again and again as in an open book, without setting up associations with the pages of a denied and unknown power.

The good and the evil, which were only bearable if I reasoned for them to exist, if they had a goal worthwhile to bear their effects, validated my obsession with the significance of the happenings that took place in my life independent of my will and intervention. Few of us take into account the hazard factor. "It's a, It's a sin."

Everything I've ever done, Everything I ever do, Every place I've ever been, Everywhere I'm going to, It's a sin. Because the very force of the soul, the experiences and beliefs that go out of warranty during the course of events, disturbed by the presence of thoughts accumulated throughout the day, imply the regret of not having interpreted the sight of those on the outside, the will of God, the loneliness of a philosopher without mercy in a universe of unlimited possibilities.

The sin a seeker of truths is guilty of is that of reflecting upon things and situations he wants to rid himself of, without trying to use them for personal development in order to serve God.

Many obstacles to investigating acts of unknown nature that I wanted to access through the perspective of a fixed point, when I look back upon my life, as the flight of the eagle that leaves no trace, could translate into an artistic creation that wants to say too much, but it fails to do so because of the complexity of the non-linear path of life and its contradictions. And especially due to the aggressive projection of an imperfect world, determined by the appearance of a tragic or hostile consciousness.

A very painful feeling determined by the belief that something is wrong with me, it made me worthy of vanity which takes void of a precipice, a relentless sentence issued upon an imaginary world that announces itself with the strange pretenses of discussing the consecrated doings of a supreme authority, determined my symbolic annihilation in a space of captivity without exit.

Thus, I had come to turn into a prisoner of a terrifying limitation, which had as a consequence the undertaking of an increase in punishment, no matter when or where has one thing in common too: the effort of understanding life, to touch its enigma and – in an incomparably huge degree – the impossibility of catching it in the vices of an implacable force.

Living by faith is an expression of your need to be closer to those which are not seen but are required to be examined and weighed depending on the degree of valuing the unique gifts you have been endowed with.

Seek and you shall find. Knock and the door shall open for you. Ask and you shall receive. On one condition: to believe in something that cannot be seen, nor demonstrated, nor denied.

The truth that will make you live in your world, not that of others, can be optimized only in a context of evolution that allows you to test the experiences of a good which harms, or of an evil that does good, with another way of understanding them.

It's A Sin whenever you try to understand something beyond humanity, beyond its earthly relations, beyond all the interests of fleeting life, because you lose sight of the beauty of the moment that must be experienced in immediacy.

Here the saying remains true: "Sin costs you more than you are ready to pay, but it can lead you further than you would want and keeps you longer than you wanted to stay."

It's Not Easy To Be A Leader On The Market

On April 10, 2009

The goal of a company must not be to survive, but to win in an area that rises to the level of opportunity status that a certain Start-Up represents.

To start a company and to enter into a continuous developing market it is, from certain points of view, similar to entry into a battle. If you want to set up a company just to survive, to assure a decent life, with certainty you will lose in front of those who start from the beginning to think that they will be victorious, that they will succeed to affirm themselves on the market with noticeably higher performances towards any other competitor. In this case, you will do only what is necessary to float on the water, while the more determined competitors, will do everything to make you drown.

What I want to say is that if you decide to start and to lead a company, you have to turn seriously to work. You must prepare yourself in advance for a quick and efficient move. It is not enough to believe from your whole being that you will reach the top; you have to get involved with all your courage and strength. You have to set up a strategy that would include realistic purposes, and that would allow you a long-term development. Besides all of this, it is imperative to be ambitious, persevering and tenacious.

Leadership: Can you strongly and determinedly uphold a view opposed to the dominant one on the product market by fitting yourself into an area that does not require any presentation to be used for commercial marketing by visual marketing?

In the book "The 75 Best Managerial Decisions", British journalist Stuart Crainer said:

"Just as the best computer companies, Apple has begun its life in a garage. In 1977, Steve Jobs designed Apple 1, considered by many to be the first personal computer. Jobs and his brilliant technical partner, Steve Wozniak, have built the first computer in that garage.

But Apple's decision to get the trophy to produce the first affordable personal computer has created an industry. The Apple 1 variant led to the Apple 2 variant, then to the VisiCalc version and, finally, in 1984 the Mac computer was launched on the market. Also, Apple's decision has cast a cover over Xerox's decision to not continue developing computers after its team working on the PARC computer had made a vital breakthrough."

It you want to reach the first, especially on a highly dynamic market, which attracts every year more and more players, it is a pretty strong motivation that will make you work faster and better. However, to ensure success you have to consider certain things. First of all, you cannot afford to enter a market where the competition is fierce without providing quality services. Therefore, it is essential to increase the value of your services in your domain, so that to win an advantage over competition. On the other hand, you have to observe the customers' trends, to know how to exploit them in order to offer something newer and better.

A visual marketing which aims to support a repeatable and scalable business model is distinguished by both the accessibility of the product and the way in which the target audience wants to perceive the identity of the company/brand. This kind of marketing follows the motto: "A missed occasion is an extra tax charge and a negative point in regards to honesty."

In marketing, the accessibility you accustom your consumers with resembles the tip of an umbrella that can only be "climbed" by using indicators such as the ability to turn into a weapon, or the possibility of being used as a concept of orientation towards customized services.

Conclusion: If you want to become a leader on a market where competitors accelerate the rhythm of expansion, you have to make from success your main purpose. In another context, that means you have to do well your homework before launching out in business, to know which road you should take, to act with a greater intensity in the chosen direction, and to avoid as much as possible the risky situations.

If you want to reach the top, you have to run faster than the other competitors and do not ever stop.

It's Probably Me

On December 02, 2017

Try to understand who you are when you lose yourself in someone else.

I have adapted myself to a reality of suspicion, which I have never wanted to admit, though I have been warned by the mechanisms of knowledge, intuition, and the need for truth that extend beyond experience, as if with the purpose of diverting the natural towards something even more pretentious. A traversal of the absurd? Real fiction?

My past, reborn in a present determined by the magnetic forces of creation subjected to a sense that exceeds it and which, at the limit makes it possible between potentiality and act, between subject and realization, refusing almost a deepened theorization, finds no place, being a foreign body that triggers a gigantic reaction in my soul.

I ask myself, who'd watch for me? Forgetting the meaning of the moment that dies, to understand the essence beyond appearance becomes a spiritual awakening of the one experiencing the hidden hurdles to arrive at deductive undertakings of sapient knowledge, desirable but difficult, which seeks to restore the right faith along with the revival of the particular initiative of revision of the theme called: God.

Dynamic waiting? Exploring the limits of understanding some illusions? Some things cannot be captured in words, but only in the constituent matter of the immaterial. Without imagination taken too far, and so lost in decoration and ideas, yet another step without which I cannot climb further, on the verge of a reduced fulfillment to the abstract, never satisfied, resembling Don Quixote believing himself to be defeated, powerless in the face of a lack of success of his deeds.

Leadership: Do you assign probability values to clarifications meant to give you meaning, inexactly evaluating your abilities in relation to the moments of uncertainty that you face?

A solitary voice to speak out and set me free. I hate to say it, I hate to say it, but it's probably me. For like a question to which you do not get an answer, I feel engaged in a pseudo-scientific attempt to justify a possible foreign intervention to which the measure of measurement is applied: plurality.

Something that only asks me about what is hiding, something that only answers about what is known, the compatibility of the combinations of vision and the critical attitude overriding the character of what is concrete. Phew, another parable de-alienation, a continuation of returning to myself from "the something else I had completely lost myself into". A subjective experience that I can't get enough of comparing it to a paradoxical creation in a relationship of joining contradictions between the self and the alter-Ego.

We often find ourselves faced with scientifically grounded situations that we do not know how to traverse, to understand and channel towards different ways of action that we ourselves, caught in our own paradigm, could not see.

The order and matching of circumstances to reach the fulfillment of a proposed result is only a critique of the foundations of science related to the reality resulting from the confrontation of meanings that condition the functioning of the relationship with the unrecognized within an independent experience. An integrated experience in the generous concept "just an ordinary guy". If you wake up in the morning in a stranger's coat, no one would see you.

An ordinary guy is a Don Quixote tilting at windmills, not accepting his passions, so that at the end of his self-seeking he can free himself from the marsh of conformism and the "wise" quietness. He represents a symbol of an active ethic, the limiting moment of a salutary aspiration towards perfection, which he will only touch by revealing himself.

The clarifications meant to give you meaning come from the objectivity that judges your authenticity on the basis of the personality profile obtained through a never-satisfied Alter-Ego, born of turmoil, uncertainty and contrasts, from aspirations that are always subject to lucid analysis.

An extension of self-experience is a reversal of the old constraints that limit you, subject to the intention to appreciate that "something else" where it is present, constantly creating contexts of interpreting reality.

With an increased sensitivity to the content of art (perceived as an object of science), I try to plunge myself in search of answers to all the dilemmas that run through my mind. That beyond everything that torments me, contrasting with my deepest aspirations, beyond the subjective interpretations of personal experiences and the denial of holy truths, lies a kind of madness of the fight with myself.

A non-acceptance of unanimously accepted conventions. A surpassing of limits. An exaggeration, whether it's a passion for an idea, a cause, a mission, or discovery.

Romanian writer, Tudor Vianu, believed that since Sancho Panza was fully "quixoted", it is normal for him to become a Don Quixote instead of the other.

When the world's gone crazy and it makes no sense, there's only one voice that comes to your defense: that voice of the stranger in you. Because I do not recognize myself as being the same as before, devious in everything that helps me be myself, something worthy of an imagination carried on a peak of confusion where there is no time limit, but only a cry in the wilderness addressed to an unseen God.

Thus, loss of self in a game that generates something akin to a utopia of self and nothingness that characterizes a cold, cold ground. Me and myself in the labyrinth of loneliness, too well placed to unlock anytime soon, surrounded by the science that still awaits its answer. You're not the easiest person I ever got to know, and it's hard for us both to let our feelings show.

The real stake of personal redefinition is the acceptance of everything you feel about the living mystery of the dissimulated life between two people: an idealist who does not let himself be beaten and a rebel whose folly is "a form of superior wisdom".

It's Probably Me whenever I try to understand who I am when I lose myself in someone else.

When you are face to face with yourself, do you feel that you are someone else? Is your spiritual evolution accomplished by analyzing and assuming your own qualities and flaws when you think through Don Quixote's brain?

Journey To The Depths Of The World

On December 25, 2015

Ensure the defining uniqueness of the creative act by directing your interest towards what surpasses the limits of a self-imposed subjectivity.

The problem of historic time, of time seen in the extension of eras, returned in several of Russian director Sergei Eisenstein's projects (did he not want to make a film about the history of America?) With "Que viva Mexico ! ", the concern increases and, for the first time, the issue of creating a unique compositional solution to be able to embrace the entire history of humanity is raised. The compositional solution of the Mexican film, however, had the drawback of only creating unity at the end, by merging, in that festival of the dead, all dispersed characters into independent stories throughout time. The epic solution was not found.

*The following projects sometimes sought to solve the issue. Now, in the project of the film about the Fergana Canal, the solution is born naturally, organically, from the very dramatic substance of the film: the figure of old singer Tohtasin will cross the entire film, forming its epic backbone. In the beginning, he sings the distant past, then, in a second song, his own life, and in the third part he no longer sings, but acts directly. Thus, the singer unites the remote eras of history. The idea, once born, is polished. **

Leadership: Can you customize what you develop within the relationship with the essential side of a past existence, so that the uniqueness of your creation gains some certainty as to the image and reputation you represent?

Making a movie means to reconstitute a life experience that does not contradict the image that you intend to be seen around the world. Specific to an approach of obtaining the essence of a personal production, as a trend of extending the compositional key towards the consideration and deepening of a special meaning of the world, is the fact that in this way, a state of being is installed – of the possession towards something personal, later used as a landmark for the modelling of personal vision.

Important in defining a science such as leadership is the initiative of constructing a complex montage of images, without drapes and curtains, without searches and reconstructions of the past, which will capture the side of "preparation for life". Meaning that hidden side of human nature passed through various stages, later transposed in defining concepts. A film that triggers emotions and reactions is a journey to the depths of the world, because it shows a historical perspective that objectively explains the present situation, with dramatic aspects from which you have something to learn.

The uniqueness of your creation can gain a certain certainty as to the image and reputation you represent, if the existence you bring to the forefront of the world reflects a new conception of how you interpret the meaning of the world.

The revelations of existence have the merit of being linked to the director's effort to make progress in the context of theories that describe, from several perspectives, a representative vision of the human dimension. And the "masters" in the art of diversion through image know how to customize what is developed within the relationship with the essential side of a past existence, so that it can attribute equal roles with those of their models to itself.

In this way, we bring into question the "right of ownership" of the world due to the dramatic essence gained from the creation of original compositional solutions. Dramatism is an attempt to highlight some special emotions over the events of an imperfect world. A world whose landmark is the director's inclination towards what surpasses the limits of self-imposed subjectivity, in order to give meaning to an understanding that predicts the depths of a nature or reality from another time.

Subjectivity is what you see through a composition that changes the perception of the world about itself.

And the limits of a self-imposed subjectivity, given by the vision and personalization of a framework of transmutation of life experience, can be overcome by giving a certain perspective to the world that does not judge its course, but tries to find an understanding, an explanation, an interpretation, a story, in the framework of a premiere which announces itself to be an authentic cultural event.

The Journey To The Depths Of The World is taken most often by directors – these creators of facts substituted to personal interpretation, in order to show various images of prominent personalities that, by similarity or contrast, can turn them into equal models of representation.

Joy Never Manifests Only As A Glimmer

On November 01, 2013

Gain moral authority through the power to give meaning and value to your actions without over-extending your sense of self-importance.

Leaving Frederique's room, Samuel did not immediately enter Julius', but stopped in the room preceding it and leaning his forehead against the window, moving his fingers on the window, automatically looking at the yard, breathing and reflecting. He needed, as strong as he was, to rest for a moment from the hard work he had just begun to do and which he had to continue.

In the soul of this deeply clouded man, joy never manifests only as a glimmer. Turning back to Julius, the pleasure he had felt in wresting Frederique's consent with the promise that she would be his after, as before he was rich, was quickly eclipsed and replaced by a cloud of bitter gloom.

Here, then, is where I have arrived thanks to skill, combinations and fatigue, he said to himself: let me no longer rely on human virtue. I rely on the word of Frederique and the honor of Julius !

My whole plan rests on the fact that Frédérique, once rich, countess, free from everything that kept her under my dominion, will remember the oath she made to me when she was poor and submissive; that the rich countess will remember the flower child, that the millionaire will remember the poor man ! All my future, all my calculations, all my greatness, all my solidity rest on this quicksand: the fidelity of a woman.

Leadership: Does the fact that you deny your own experience and the "lessons" assimilated in the past, denote that you still have some forgiveness to yourself for a decision that may later turn out to be a premature one?

My thinking is a revenge of the past, a crossing of my past with the present of others. As for Julius' promise to treat Frederique as his own daughter and no other, I will proceed so that he has no time to yield. He wanted her, even worse so, for himself ! I couldn't do anything else. Parents die before their children. It is the law of nature. Julius will die before Frederique, he will die on the very day of the marriage. I decided.

Things will change for the better. After the death of Julius I will bring Frederique to Menilmontant. I am her guardian. It is enough for Julius to appoint me as his executor. I will keep Frédérique away from Lothario.

Meanwhile, political events will continue their course. The Polignac ministry is a defiance to which France will respond with a revolution. Obviously, this revolution, which belongs to the entire people, will escape from the hands of those who claim to lead it. It will evolve beyond their will and drown them in its waves. I will be strong, I will be rich, I will be what I want, I will dominate the chaos that will result from a world that disappears and another that is established. I will hold Frédérique in admiration. How will the naive Lothario look next to a Napoleon of democracy !

The future is mine. Everyone will love me, everyone will bless me. Starting right with Julius. Hey, hey, it's true ! He will owe me death in full happiness, he who lay in apathy and disgust. But let us hasten to finish everything before Lothario comes. I'm afraid of them showing up too soon and thwarting our efforts..."

Leadership means using the experience of the present, accumulated including learning the lessons of the past, to strategically project your future, by renouncing the external constraints that facilitate the acquisition of negative attitudes.

Joy Never Manifests Only As A Glimmer, but as a moral force to overcome any affective or material shortcomings, to not let yourself be defeated by them, and thus through reason to win the freedom that gives dignity and independence to the soul by dominating the opposite effects that can appear if your Ego is too confident.

Just Look And See !

On November 08, 2022

A creator of great power of expression can grasp with a glance what reality generally refuses to other people, by referring to a theme or an idea given by that transcendental reality that can only be approached by mystical and artistic means.

I have always been attracted to the sea, the call of the waves, the night breeze that blows pleasantly in the middle of summer, that whole atmosphere full of life, but at the same time relaxed. In the middle is an unstoppable rush towards infinity, towards the sky mirrored in the sea, towards the spiritual valorization of life, towards overcoming the boundless condition, because the sea itself, beautiful, laughing, so pleasant in calm time, suggests the infinity of space and time.

Yes, I know what it means to dream, because when you dream the soul of time rests. And something off-scene, like a distant echo, in the hidden eyes of the endless horizon, urged me with a loving voice to lose myself in a torrent of sky-blue and green tones, just as the sea is seen in the color of the sky. Is it not so? How many fleeting but patient observations must I collect to create a madness from a moving circle whose radius is equal to the length of the segment in the drawing, and which the sea completes with the image of an unlimited sky that is always above me, alternating with sunny days and unforgettable moments.

That is how I lost myself in the world of colors, in the sky of the world beyond reality, in an absolute concentration on the easel, parallel to the uninhibited attack of a stoicism of a special nature, which does not wonder at anything, a stoicism condensed behind the looks (of time) immortal, which does not recognize the confusion, which does not know the sadness and the servitudes that we all face at some point. Of course, the artist in me is not only a collector of impressions, possessor of a remarkable memory, at least on the special line of a dynamic and expressive art that intentionally changes the appearance. But there is also a demiurge, a cosmic designer who uses pre-existing elements, a microcosm, a creator of worlds that only a highly virtuoso colorist could capture, with great emotion, in spectacular settings.

Leadership: Can you adopt a visual concept capable of representing the globality of a flat surface against its mirrored beauty, with a role in creating symmetry between things, phenomena and events?

If you have read the work of Borges, then you surely know about the writer Jaromir Hladik, the author of an unfinished tragedy. He realized that he was missing two documents and that he would die soon. So he talked to God in the dark: "If I exist in any way, Lord, if I am not just one of Your repetitions or mistakes, then I exist as the author of the song "Enemies". To complete this drama, which can justify me and justify You, I need one more year of life. Give me these days, You who are the master of ages and times. It was the last night, the most terrible, but ten minutes later he sank into sleep as if into dark water."

In whatever genre of art it falls into, the creator has as his main object of study the man himself caught in a larger universe, as in a nebulous dream whose meaning always eludes you. With this man, you have the impression that an imperceptible thread guides you in a mysterious way in a space full of details that are still realistic, but stylized to the limit of the fantastic, by referring to a vision that is not limited to retrospect, but that rethinks your place and role in a context like: "Don't ask, don't tell. Just look and see."

Just like that, by just looking at the sea reflecting in the blue of the sky, I understood that in order to explain an abstract, symbolic, surrealist art, I have to declare that everything that seems to be the intuition of a new horizon, in the acceptance of an inner, dominant harmony, is only the role of an involuntary effort of abstraction with symbolic purposes. And even if I did not set out to abstract a theme not subject to a rigid, statistical or descriptive writing, something that would attract the abstraction of one world and the postulation of another, look, I happened to connect the sky with the sea, the sand with the shells or the waves with the point where the wind generated them.

In other words, I did exactly what the Creator of the World did: I adopted a visual concept with which I was able to represent the globality of a flat surface against its mirrored beauty, with a role in creating symmetry between lines, contours and curves, between people, things, phenomena and events. This visual concept can be expressed as follows: "What determines the color of a thing depends on the state you have when you look at its opposite, or an equivalent of it."

Leadership: Can you describe your creation as the result of the interaction between the perception of the landscape and its functionality as a whole of its various component parts, so as to build an alternative reality?

The unforgettable experience of a fulminant creation must follow the experiment of mirroring: through a fairly real representation of an image, through enjoying the mystery of inexpressible mirroring, one must be able to visualize the microcosm of your world, just as your world must exist. in the holistic microcosm of the Divine Mind. This microcosm includes those interactions between objects, elements, phenomena, events, facts and processes, structures, with the different properties of their symmetry.

It is interesting for me that sometimes the roar of the sea is reduced to the sound of waves breaking on the shore, appearing through the semicircle of a meridian called Opuninthis Steriadys (the impulse to contemplate creation through the eyes of God), to which is added the perspective of multiple, homogeneous space, open to the imagination by the condition of flatness: the quality of a surface to have all its portions as close as possible to a plane. If we take this into account, then the quality of execution of a painting and the flatness are impeccable only if they go as far as to reach the "mirror" effect.

And, still here, hearing the sea crash against the shore, feeling its salty smell, feeling the sun touch my body, watching the waves as they shake as if calling me to them, exploring the sand, the shells and... their free spirit, an image that takes precedence over the exploration of the appearances of the visible world, somehow I manage to expand my scope of considerations for a wider category of artistic creations.

At the antipode between dream and reality, through the mind-soul connection, I realize that everything I see, as the only plan suggestion solution of a dynamic world, is meant to symbolize an establishment of worlds in the light of eternity. Indeed, I am an artist because I know how to visually represent the hyper-connected globality of the world, in such a way as to convey a maximum of aesthetic information.

In order to expand the scope of leadership, you must visually explore, in your own way, the deep truths of life, but also the images from which unforgettable moments are built. Moments so simple, but so full of story, that connect you to the concept of creation, as well as to its spiritual counterpart, suggesting the existence of an infinite spatial horizon.

Just Look And See ! And what will you notice? A transcendental reality in which only occultists believe and which often appears to be nothing more than the personification of a "hidden force behind the phenomena" underlying the world of appearances.

This transcendental reality can be revealed as a memory of the future, as a soul consolation, as an independent artistic construct, as an endless chain of phenomena, as a kind of succession of "color samples", or as a true manifesto towards the tendency of vision to evolve along unpredictable directions.

Keep Your Eyes Open And Watch Carefully

On October 17, 2021

The real purpose of the gaze is to increase the potential for creation, giving the momentary permission to understand what he wants, with the eyes that present a photograph.

I watch the waves, the gleam of the sun's rays reflected in the sea. A lady has been looking for her beach lotion for five minutes, but she doesn't realize that it fell under her sunbed. The tanned boy, with pretzels for sale, makes his daily route, trying to sell something. Somewhere in the open sea you can see a small fishing boat. Seagulls are everywhere. People too. Sand and shells everywhere.

I did not enter the scene, but I will do so immediately. I'm reading Wilhelm Hauff, something I missed from the library. At the same time, I listen to Roudeep. I'm in the middle of systematic thinking, trying to find out something about the relationship between the visual arts and nature.

I think it is more profitable to discern the purely artistic intention of man to fit into a dream landscape, than to make observations about how necessary a rigorous scientific perspective on art is.

So, the sea still retains something of my ability to dream, to hope, to look at everything through the lens of an age without old age. I believe, after all, that the true science of art begins with the gaze: to try to perceive that "Absolute One" which appears in nature under various incarnations or determinations. And you, remain identical with yourself, everywhere, in these incarnations and determinations.

Leadership: Can you nourish your self from your Creation, giving a space of coexistence unlimited visual proportions through a dominant image, in accordance with the broader meaning of the expression "A bright ray of sunshine"?

Looking at the sea, its beauty, looking at the reflection of the sun in it, I realized that the best and safest thing I have to do is to stick to an image that does not flicker in front of the truths of the world, an image that develops its own kind of visible beauty — that of colors that become more and more transparent as the mind explores the symbol, arriving at ideas that are beyond the comprehension of reason.

And if so, that my thoughts rush across the horizon of an open space, without limits, and a space of self-foundation, as I look at the beauty directly visible in the sunlight that touches the surface of the sea, first in a rather naturally, then in a rather intensive way, then all I have to do is enjoy a beautiful view on a dream vacation.

Leadership: Does deep change come from how you select and interpret what you've experienced, creating a vision that allows you to find yourself in your authentic essence?

But what does art have to say in this regard? And I don't think aesthetics is the only one that has questionable edges to the notions of oceanography or the photography of seascapes. There are many vain arguments that if a certain kind of view pleases my eye, soul and mind, it would somehow satisfy the necessary conditions required by another way of knowing the world through art, through the spontaneous play of the creative imagination.

Finally, if I try to look at myself with the same silence with which I look at the sea, and if I make of this silence a process of listening to the call of the sea, like a melodic line in silence, then art would acquire a new face, another message, a touch of grandeur. This is why it is important to listen to my gaze as it traverses the expanse of a unitary space, the colossal storehouse of restless energy: because I cannot connect intimately with a certain creative process, other than if I turn my gaze into a bright ray of sunshine.

The expression "a bright ray of sunshine" has the meaning of convention between what turns the view into a true joy of the soul, and what your self emits from the perspective of manifesting a tendency to hyperrealism.

In leadership, this translates to: "what you see changed in you is what you expect to see in the image you admire."

Keep Your Eyes Open And Watch Carefully the image that draws you to the horizon, because it is the image through which your Higher Self transmits to you something that you would not otherwise be able to know through life experience or reasoning.

In art it is important not to lose sight of anything, not even appearances when distinguishing between what is due to an overall perspective on the idea of "unity", so something in close connection with the Self, and what is due to the processes of identification of new aesthetic approaches.

Know That Money Is Of No Importance To Me !

On November 02, 2013

To measure your character through the prism of the experiences of others, means to separate suffering from happiness, respectively to reconnect them later in a coherence of the entire complexity of the "time pressure" phenomenon.

- My friend is dying. He lives only for this supreme hope. To destroy it means to destroy their existence. A true crime. Banish that thought? Helpless. He wants to get married with all his heart. He clings to marriage with that stubbornness specific only to children and the dying. My friendship clashes terribly with my love. I feel it is almost a criminal act to deny a poor dying soul the happiness that harms no one in this world, but would help him go with a smile to the next world.

- You are good, said Frédérique, touched by the accent with which Samuel pronounced these generous words.

- But I'm not thinking of Julius in the first place, Samuel resumed, but of you. This marriage will suddenly bring you a wealth of millions and make your beauty, your intelligence, your generous heart take on a greater luster than you could have hoped for in your wildest dreams. Do I have the right to deprive you of a future crowned with splendor? Can I hate him because I love you? Only one who curses love consents to impoverish the woman he loves; I wouldn't want you to curse me.

- Do not be afraid, my friend, answered Frédérique. You know me too well to know that I don't care about money. I don't know what I could do with the wealth. Raised in solitude, I didn't need anything and luxury would get me into big trouble. So don't be afraid that I could ever reproach you for depriving me of the opportunity to get rich. If Herr Count von Eberbach were poor, and if I did not need to relieve his suffering in the last days of his existence, I could regret that I am not free. But if it comes to money, I am happy to prove to you that between riches and you, I would never prefer riches.

Leadership: Are you able to accept yourself from the perspective of a suffering to which you are obliged to submit, in such a way that the ability to see a new face of reality becomes possible?

One of the difficulties encountered by most people who fail to get close to each other, emotionally and empathically, an attempt that often gives them real headaches, seems closely related to the deep aspects of their psycho-emotional structure. More precisely, the failure of their attempt to merge under the same ideal, bearing any difference between them, is attributed to the phenomenon called by psychologists "affective dependence".

In fact, dependence is present in any relationship, in addition to love and other types of interests, especially in the case of those who do not see eye to eye (the primary ingredient in a relationship being attraction), and sometimes it is precisely this dependence that transforms the glorious beginning of a couple in a dramatic ending.

We can find examples of change that facilitate the rapprochement between people everywhere, but on the condition that you train yourself to seek first of all "the Kingdom of God and His righteousness", that truth capable of enlightening you, which can heal you of any mistrust, which will cancel out the raw feeling you have because of a perception of your partner's behavior.

In fact, in a relationship, the "kingdom of God" resembles that model of reality that transcends individual existences, that transcends the horizon of the Ego conditioned by a superior motivation (respectively by the desire to gain), or depends on an inferiority arising from the lack of altruistic and moral sensibility, which you are forced to endure.

Leadership is the empathic recognition you give in exchange for the status of "good Christian" (not victim in a relationship), who must face what he fears the most: the reproach of being one-sided. In leadership you will face the suffering caused by your inability to empathize with people who worry, so who are hypersensitive to negative emotions.

The moment you learn and manage to change your attitude about yourself, through great zeal and confession with a broken heart, through repentance, through forgiveness, through the review of your own life, then God takes care of all other things. Your main goal must be the search for true values – wisdom, knowledge and piety, then the need or desire to exchange qualities with someone else who can complete you on various levels.

Know That Money Is Of No Importance To Me, not even if you challenge me to be your confidant. Such is the message conveyed by Alexandre Dumas in the excerpt above, considering that everything that makes you feel good, everything that inspires you, what you're passionate about, what causes you joy, depends largely on the ability your ability to empathize with the thinking of other people, with their frustrations, with their sufferings, with their needs, without considering yourself a victim of the circumstances (which you could not foresee and whose removal is not up to you).

Blogger Dmitri Gorobic said it well: "We both have qualities of the same value. If the qualities are identical then we get bored of each other quite quickly, if they are different (but in sum they have the same value) then it is better. In fact, I wanted to get to this point from the start. When between us there is this process of sale – purchase where qualities are the product and love is the currency of payment, and especially if they are of the same value, we can easily equate to remove the "currency", that is, love, from this exchange, and to produce only the exchange of goods, better said, of qualities."

Knowing And Understanding

On June 18, 2011

Convince people of the quality of your leadership, directing their beliefs to one indisputable truth.

Do you remember Lt. Col. Frank Slade in "Scent of a Woman (1992)"? Towards the end of the movie, Slade presents himself to the special meeting of the disciplinary committee of the students from the Baird College, to keep defending Charlie Simms. He had witnessed to an act of vandalism occurred inside the college and he should declare to the Commission exactly how the facts occurred. Otherwise, he would have been expelled. But Charlie was not a tower, so he could not sell his colleagues.

Just before the college director, Mr. Trask to give verdict on Charlie's guilt, Lieutenant Slade, without hesitation, interrupted his plea to support his own point on the matter's view, offering in this way a true leadership lesson:

"As I came in here, I heard those words, "Cradle of Leadership". Well, when the bough breaks, the cradle will fall. And it has fallen here. It has fallen. Makers of men, Creators of leaders. Be careful what kind of leaders you're producing here. I don't know if Charlie's silence here today is right or wrong. I'm not a judge or jury, but I can tell you this: He won't sell anybody out to buy his future ! And that, my friends, is called integrity. That's called courage. Now that's the stuff leaders should be made of."

Leadership: Are you willing to resort to the adoption of an extreme position beyond the limits imposed by your level of acceptability?

What matters in defining the impact that the expansion of the relational capacity can have is the factor of changing the perception of the individual's self. Leadership distinguishes itself by attempting to recognize the level of thought maturity, but also the constraining character of integrity that struggles to free itself from doubt.

The most worrisome doubt could be placed under the sign of unwillingness to recognize how much of the others' existence and thoughts is truth, and how much is a lie. But mostly in the attempt to estimate the value that people place on every action they take to keep a right, on all the negative aspects and key values that greatly influence their professional prestige and respect in all its forms.

Opening up towards sharing your convictions often carries the trace of a strong personality. This is mostly due to the responsible role of experience and reference values in guiding every individual towards the potential compartments that trigger response reactions. Of course, within the anticipated and controlled limits, despite the impulse of sheltering one's self and hiding virtue, even fearing the judgment of others.

Your level of acceptability in the area of responsibility of others depends on the effect that your membership creates on a wider framework of approaching resorts of the type "look at any man as a masterpiece in the making."

Leadership: Is your authority under the sign of the dual confessional identity: with self and with truth, when your role can be taken over by someone else?

So, what presents itself as relevant in recognizing "the errors" from the norms of correctness is due to the pulsation of that factor that tends to express itself through a modified or dissimulated behavior. And someone who seeks to distinguish the appearances or to prove the circumstances that he considers a support for their pretenses and objections, in favor of supporting a certain cause, can prove to be an agent that reveals understanding, trust, reason, that focuses on the direction of unspoken or partially spoken truths.

Your authority under the sign of the dual confessional identity: with self and with truth, when you start an investigation over the basic aspects of a deeper reality that people deny because of their tendency to defend – or they accept it as another punishment.

That doesn't mean to confuse the essence of your beliefs with the characteristics they mirror. That doesn't mean to connect the voluntary and conscious acceptance of blame to some consequences that change the way in which you see the world. It means to be stubborn and to look further on, beyond the evil, in order to reach the good in people, the latent potential in them – which can be renewed by confessing and cultivating truth.

Leadership: Do you gain the respect of others through arguments that attest to your level of competence in a relationship of the type: "Separated, but together"?

Slade's intervention in favor of Charlie proved to be beneficial and crucial. He reviewed the essential values of a leader that, from his point of view, the teachers have not reached to understand to a sufficiently large extent. Through his speech full of truth, power and tenderness, and characteristic through simplicity, Slade managed to shake the teacher's firm beliefs, but narrow, about what it means to be a leader, and to put them seriously on thoughts.

Slade was able to convince the teachers of the quality of his leadership, directing their beliefs to one indisputable truth. Thus, they were forced to support his point of view, and to absolve Charlie of any blame.

Lieutenant Slade's participation at the trial meant, in my opinion, a positive fact. It was good to have exhibited the necessary qualities of a leader. Acting in an intelligent and surprisingly way, he managed to support his opinions and to render to teachers the true essence of leadership. For only a man like him who was present on the battlefield, who saw "Charlie's age boys with ripped arms and legs torn off" only such a man could truly know what it means courage, respect, loyalty and honor.

Leadership: Do you feel that people judge you based on how you expose your virtues of honesty and impartiality, in terms of a retrospective of what happened without your will?

It is your soul energy and vibrations that you spread when you really have something to say, and when you really want to convince others of your truth. But you also need to wake up in the people's conscience the conception of what it constitutes the truth from your point of view, and to load them with those feelings that they will feel at a high intensity. It is a change in the essence of people, a change in their spiritual and mental state.

Leadership requires a good interpretation of the role as a leader. Oonly certain personality types correspond to this role. People judge you based on how you expose your inner virtues of honesty and impartiality, in terms of a retrospective of what happened without your will.

That means that your involvement has connotations of respect, subtlety, and wisdom, the quality of being trustworthy, stemming from the authority with which your profile as a role-model inserts you into the world.

Leadership is to expose your vision and values in a convincing way both from the perspective of a juror, as well as from a judge's perspective, including them both into a new version of reality.

Your power of influence is like a light gushing within you and surrounding the others. It is that power given by your inner structure and that gives people an immense trust and confidence, easily uniting them around you. It is that inner strength that reflects your values and that can pierce the wall of beliefs and prejudices that people have formed.

By Knowing and Understanding a situation, you will be able to take responsibility for it. If you want your authority to be recognized, if you want to ensure continuity of your leadership, people must perceive your inner vibrations and to anchor to your beliefs based on truth and to appreciate it as indisputable.

Just as Noah, in his ark, crossed the wide ocean to carry out to fulfilment his sacred mission - so you too, to become a good leader, you must cross the distance that separates you from the other people. And you will manage to do this only if you will support in a compelling way your vision and values.

Lateral Staircase

On July 02, 2011

Bow low before your most important values and always keep your respect for them if you want your leadership effect to be maximum.

Yesterday evening I had the opportunity to meet one of those people we are honored by keeping well-established ethical rules, even though he does not assume major responsibilities. I was in Carrefour parking place, I got out of the car, and I headed to the store. In front of me was a middle-aged gentleman, he seemed an ordinary man.

Suddenly, a person has approached to that mister, in a very strange way, as if he had any important secret to tell, as if he had a supreme mission to assign him. In a moment that person got out of his pocket a proper cell phone, I think it was a Nokia C7. It looked brand new. Even so, the person wanted to sell it for only 150 RON.

When he realized he had to do with a small thief, one of those thieves who just stole something and wanted to escape in quick of that crib selling it at a price well below the market, the answer of that mister came with an unmatched promptitude and decision: "NO"

Leadership: Can you extend the validity of your own beliefs under the categorical condition of obtaining all consensus approvals according to a higher form of responsibility?

Here, I said to myself with obvious admiration, here is a man who faithfully served his values, values that do not allow to act on the momentary impulse to overcome your own principles and moral criteria, well-rooted in your own being. That mister can easily choose a brand-new phone, at a minimum price. However, he did not want to acquire an asset that he was aware it was stolen.

Just as a rocket can overcome all barriers of gravity and to propel to the moon and beyond - all so you must be able to overcome all your temptations and weaknesses and must be skilled and tenacious enough to beware of all the ways that indicate you a wrong route - a by-passing option of your own values and beliefs, and to propel yourself on a step above.

Beliefs, of which we have the impression that they limit us or block us every time we go on a secondary road, a path of lack of temper or a temptation, is a symptom of a habituation deeply rooted in people: to look at everything from the perspective of one's own interests.

And consciousness is the supreme part of us that orders convictions not to falsify the right judgment that crosses the path of good reputation in the context of new experiences and limit situations.

It is your duty as a man of quality, always respecting your values and to make sure you carve your way in life with the best intentions, practices and approaches. Spare yourself for the sad days that you cannot anticipate, for those days when you will not measure rightly the pulse of your own decisions and rules. Bow low before your most important values and always keep your respect for them if you want your leadership effect to be maximum.

Leadership: Relationship type "I-Enemy" VERSUS Relationship type "I-Ally"

In the study of leadership perception sense, we see two criteria of relevance that can be enunciated as aspects resulting from examining your own conscience: whether you're on your good side or your bad side. These two aspects, which appear in the foreground of your concern for training and development, severely rising to the leadership requirements, clear your grill of values in your journey to an improved self.

In fact, these two aspects that can give leadership a plus or a minus of value intertwine to indicate which side you are on. Are you on the side of the relationship type "I-Enemy", which depletes your most valuable qualities? Or on the mysterious relationship type "I-Ally", that secures your connection to leadership through "total commitment" action to its mandatory requirements?

Everyone slips on the path of uncertainty, constrained to choose between the two hypostases, depending on their own cultural and emotional, ethical and rational background. But mostly based on his way to come to terms with himself before and after his decisions.

Total awareness of oneself is obvious and different depending on the circumstances in which it occurs. Sometimes, you can be blind to your flaws and live with the shame of being relegated to the status of tainted self. Or you can paint your leadership with strong colors, to highlight your incorruptible values, such as moral responsibility and obligation to act against "gray spots", against those impulses specific to mentality serving unjust causes and alternatives.

In this regard, different meanings of the leader under the impulse of conditions strictly imposed by the principles he conducts in life, work and different situations thus appear, determining a series of positive or negative effects on the practiced leadership. The evolutionary steps the leader climbs up are in close interdependence with the environment in which it develops and evolves and the measures he takes and fully supports not to alter his identity.

Leadership: Do you realize the differences between how to define the maximum value of your own Ego and attaining the maximum limit of your own ability to assimilate a new way of moving among the nuances of moral weakness?

Not respecting at any time your basic principles, healthy, guiding, underlying your own personality, it means you miss your true nature, it means to climb to a higher level on a "lateral staircase" secondary and obscure, often weak, which does not guarantee long-term success. This staircase diverts you of full completion of your leadership, do not bring you any visible extra performance, no moral benefit. And as you climb higher on this alternative staircase, the more you will distance your own values.

In any moment of your life you will find yourself face to face with you. You will always be faced with a mirror that reflects your own assurances, beliefs, values. You'll be just you, face to face with your own conscience, with what you are wrong or what you are doing well. You'll find yourself. You will realize your true character, your true value, your true inner nature. And you will recognize your strengths, or, conversely, the weaker parts - the weaknesses and defects that you have.

The maximum value of self is determined by diminishing the contrasts between what you are when you have nothing to hide and what you are when you expand your vision of your person in the context of a proof of unparalleled firmness in the face of temptation, corruption and injustice: "NO."

Conclusion: Assimilate those rules that really have moral value in a civilized society, always maintaining respect for them because they are the true treasure of inestimable value. They will allow you to climb the value chain, all with head up, even though the rise will be slower than the "lateral staircase" - apparently more accessible, but uncertain.

Leadership And Art

On July 21, 2016

Expand your horizons with regards to the vision of art, arguing the position you manifest over the attempts of shaping a new profile for it.

Before the shooting starts, director Boris Mihin, caring, seeing Eisenstein's lack of technical knowledge in the field of cinematography, introduces him to the studio atmosphere, picks collaborators for him out of specialists. First, a camera operator. Eduard Tisse. Mihin also explains to him the reason for this choice:

- To you, theater is passionate about acrobatics. So, you will probably be reckless in cinematography too. But Eduard possesses a brilliant experience as a reviewer and is also an excellent athlete. No doubt that you will fit well.

*This prophecy was confirmed by one of the most perfect artistic collaborations. Their first meeting took place in the sunny garden of the Morozov villa, the theater headquarters. The meeting between two clearly different people, between two characters, two opposing temperaments. **

Leadership: Can you establish the creating meaning of the union between two distinct representations of value, under the rapport between thinking and the reality of an "extra-output" in transition?

The result of work is akin to a brand that gives a touch of prestige to the offered product: it has an essence (of the concept that it promotes) and an identity that makes it recognizable. But in order for this result to be defining for a profitable leadership, it has to create its own identity through a common experience of development and multiplication, under the auspices of two different representations of value.

First of all, a value that impresses through an act of reception of experience of comparing it to a knowledge based on the wielding of the power of creation and its appreciation, which underlies willingness to get involved and pushes for action. Such a value affirms itself in a unique way in an artistic career, broadened by opening new ways of perceiving the transition towards a high level of craftsmanship.

And a value designed to encourage the habit and promote an ethical and aesthetic attitude towards the work in question. This integrates the belief (the sum of all principles that guide you) for a certain direction of determining your affiliation to that aspiration of exploration, deeper and broader, of the elements that can confer you the status of being an artist.

The creative sense of the union between the two distinct representations of value is that of accumulating a large need for contribution to build the profile of art, without feeling that "constriction" imposed by a random appreciation of its objective and function. In this regard, we can say that art is the meeting between two worlds, material and spiritual, it is the meeting between two opposing characters that manifest as a unitary whole, evidencing itself symbolically and artistically through the relationship between shadow and light.

Leadership: Can you give a new measure to the revitalization of artistic expression by optimizing the creative experience that comes within the resonance of some minds who understood that "a little says a lot"?

The momentum towards new heights of these two values does indeed witness creation, but does not fulfill it like the love for the virtues of art only by the results of the experience given by attaining the position of an artist. A position in which, usually, two characters are shaped, two opposing tempers. Of which one is dominant.

As we already know, character and temper constitute the combination of traits which condition work capacity, balance and self-control of a person. In exercising leadership, it is vital to learn that version of character + temper that can be responsible for a person's need to connect at a more profound level to that artistic experience which mobilizes towards achieving a higher level of affirmation.

The extra-output is determined by combining the values of the position you manifest over the attempts of shaping a new art profile. And is found in transition when you are at the stage of fitting into a certain variant of character + temper, so that the result of the final creation to acquire the sense of continuous revelation, of deep reason and of absolute value.

In leadership, as in art, it can be said that "a little says a lot" when the result of the final creation is fulfilled by the value given to the glory of its creators of being more than unique, of being privileged in science and progress.

Leadership and Art have in common that value which they suggest under the experience of controlling the creation and the reality of an extra-output in transition. And these two can form bonds, they can transform one into the other when man opens up new horizons in the face of a thinking focused on affirmation.

Leadership And The Copy Paste Generation

On March 20, 2008

Be prepared to give your creation an impulse that will restart your connection with the inner universe, looking for a similarity between the material aspect and the animating one that can create the effect of "Whole".

That's how it used to be. It was journalistic work everywhere: the literates extracted bits of text from various foreign sources, translated them, mixed them and threw them almost ready in a cultural weekly bulletin, without them denoting any pronounced originality, but only a minimal connotative load. In other words, it was a kind of work done by parrots. Massive copy-paste. But it was a legal practice, because the original sources of inspiration appeared in the bibliography.

When someone opened a book and looked at the bibliography for the first time, he could see whole pages only with sources of inspiration. And the more biographical sources there were, the more Copy-Paste there was.

But, in the end, all such celebrities came with nothing new, expressed no special idea, nothing denoting an involvement in the act of creation. At least they inserted a very subtle sense of l'humour among their texts, but even for that you had to rummage through the works written by other foreign authors. Because, with most writers and journalists, the mind did not move faster than the inspiration.

And it is still the same. We're in the century of programming, where tools like Python, C++, and Go find answers to questions posed to technology. And here, the same individuals, aged by time, still insist on shining with the same work as a tired journalist, with the same type of activity: translation and Copy-Paste from various foreign sources. Irrational, isn't it?

And what is the lesson here? Never be old and worn out ! In fact, many have always been old and decrepit, unaware of their pitiful impotence. The great fortune is that science does not evolve thanks to these intellectuals of the occasion, too old to distinguish between originality and banality, between art and kitsch.

Sleepy birds... Gentlemen, don't dream of reaching among the stars... For twinkling without any spell is just a prayer without a horizon.

Leadership: Can you be creative without actually generating real innovation in proportion, knowing that what you bring to light from your thoughts is half real and half fake?

Is it possible to rationally understand very convenient practices, but without actually generating real innovation in proportion? Logic says no, but the facts say yes. These unscientific ritualistic practices of some people – like those soldiers who are always maneuvering without ever going into battle – cannot be understood if they are viewed as isolated behaviors, cannot be supported by the mastery of leadership: sincerity, justice and greatness.

It remains to formulate a rational understanding of the mutual influence between knowledge and wisdom, against the background of mental and soulful exercise, that is, between the material and the animating aspect, something that can be understood as aspects of a unique act of creation. By probing even deeper into the dimension of our thoughts, to reveal a common logic, we will discover that there are so many things that we have left out, and that we can put down on a piece of paper.

Why do we need to appeal to the thoughts of others, if we already have in ourselves the recipes for alternative ideas, undiscovered scientific truths, of the preciousness of free and creative expression, productive in terms of the actual pragmatic organization of a speech or a prose composition that communicates effectively with the intended audience?

Well, just as adding a new brand to a product without elements of innovation will not generate real growth for the company in the long term, in the same way the practice of Copy-Paste will not be able to reveal the true values on which creative characters are built. Think like this: emotional experiences, mobilizations of will, successes or failures that build the seeds of the future personality, all these are the torn pages of your story, because you don't try to reveal them. Do you feel like your heart is breaking (or what's left of it) when you have nothing to say about what hurts you?

I think you figured it out. Originality is based on the generation of experiences, they being a generous area, without borders of creativity, innovation, opportunities. But this effort to copy information from other parts, useful temporarily only to expand the area of informing the population, even without necessarily having experience in a field, will lead to great question marks and mystery vis-à-vis current or future leader's practices.

Leadership is based on the following principle: "Knowing the part that is missing in your own being is the best method of facing the part that is missing in others."

Leadership And The "Copy - Paste" Generation categorically cannot coexist through the methods that increase the capital of ideas necessary to support the development of a scientific field. Leadership is not based on the principle "what belongs to others can also be ours", because science must prove its diversity, through a gesture of greatness and beauty that is not considered worthy of imitation.

Only innovation is capable of arousing admiration.

Leadership Lottery

On August 19, 2009

Differentiate your "brand" by a single offer, so your positioning in relation to other people to take altitude.

Umbrellas, umbrellas ! Take your umbrellas ! 5 penny umbrellas, 10 penny umbrellas ! Only now and only from my hand, you can buy sun umbrellas at the lowest price ! Don't linger anymore and buy an umbrella today ! Take your umbrellas ! Here's your umbrella ! ...

Every day, for about 2 and a half weeks – during my summer break at the seaside, at least twice a day, I used to clog against this umbrellas' street vender that planted himself right beside the beach, and which, through the words and word groups he used, like: "The lowest price ! " or "only now and only from my hand", he tried to liquidate his over-praised and so cheep merchandise to those who wanted to protect themselves against the powerful rays of the sun. At an early hour, from about 7 o'clock, till late at night, the young street vender obsessively repeated, with the same slowness, the everlasting, very familiar and side-splitting roundelay: "Umbrellas, umbrellas ! Take your umbrellas ! ..."

I wonder what went through the heads of those passing everyday by the street vender and listening to what he says? Were they so fascinated by his alluring words and his sun umbrellas, so that they would feel tempted to buy, without regreting their made choice?

Leadership: Do you limit yourself to the notion of "the other side of the context" because of the long-standing use of a product that is closer to a "sharing" area that has not been subject to user perception of the Brand you represent?

I think that when someone organizes its own work, so as to be appreciated by his potential clients, he doesn't have to stop at the concept of "authority" that produces a material gain for himself, instead he should stop at the concept "on the other side of the context", which means beyond what can be appreciated and accepted as a valuable product.

And what else is beyond what is perceptible and tangible other than the irreproachability of the final result, so that others will enjoy all the qualities of a job well done. A product that is closer to a "sharing" area that has not been subject to the user's perception of the Brand you represent may be a short term palpable result due to very good advertisement. But this does not necessarily mean that it is the certainty of a long-term fact: is it enough to experience its capabilities so that you can no longer give it up?

To limit yourself to the notion of "the other side of context" means to provide a service, as being unique in that business, but to be perceived and accessible faster than you are prepared to exploit it to your true value. Not always is what you sell directly proportional to what you expect to get. Because the user's perception of the Brand you represent is dependent on the reputation of a product that knows how to be special without patching anything.

There are different kinds of marketers, those who know how to define their offer and those who transform the idea of "authentic" in a skill (of succeeding by themselves to create new opportunities and horizons) and in a virtue ((to reinvent the business model in order not to lose its quality of being a brand).

The guarantee is what you can admit as a certainty of your value versus what stimulates you after your product or service has met its end.

And there are different kinds of approach that define the procedures structure of highlighting goods or services, or promoting the meaning of an adequate position selection for a product. And this approach, close to the phenomenon called "consumerism", deducting the needs and desires of people, and how to meet them, from the pursuit of innovation and accessibility, must evolve towards an authentic social context.

This context must facilitate dialogue, increase investment performance, and give assertion opportunities, thus allowing predictability and the continuation of services, making a certain brand more relevant than the others. As an indicator of profitability, marketing can manifest in the context of making the decision to introduce a factor value for spreading services and products, in order to improve the process of cultivating a new business model. This can be achieved through permanently extending and creating a representative portfolio of clients.

Leadership: Do you judge the results of your Brand's assessment in terms of what you claim to be the basis of a new orientation?

Leadership, just like sales and other fields of activity, is a lottery where nothing is certain. Regardless of how much you struggle, how much you devote yourself to that particular area, how good and famous you are, you cannot guess if people would reject you and look for another "offer".

Just like a salesman whose main goal is to convince people to appeal to his excellent services and to willingly come back to him, the marketer has to fulfill, as well, a very difficult mission. He has to be smart enough to never let others see what he really thinks about the "guarantee" of the product.

The basis of a new marketing approach is similar to the rise of an unexplored rock peak that offers perfect visibility around. First you have to rise to a relevant and dominant position for what you aim to achieve, then decide that it is yours and from there you can see that the world belongs to you. Your loyalty to the product you promote must be the rope on which only you have already climbed and pulled after you, stretching out and forming a straight line.

If you do not want to fall off the cliff while admiring the magnificent view, you have to look at a single point that, in combination with others, forms an image.

Leadership: Are you looking at the world through the immediate sensation generated by product specificity, because only in this way you can see reality in the essence of an exigency that is above the perceived quality and value of the offer?

Are you fueling your way of selling with a sensation of the type: "Who am I in regards to the product?" A hero climbed atop a cliff or a responsible master?

To enter the race for the draw you must solve the puzzle game with the image of your own "brand" - brand based on the example of your quality and authenticity, on your skills, on your character and personality that define your leadership. You must collect the minimum points that would propel you into the most popular top.

If you manage to convince people that your help is essential, through an open and positive attitude through an exemplary behavior, by the actions that you carry out, and the professionalism that you show, then surely they will be willing to you give you a positive rating.

You could say that you are a winning number if you qualified in the race, and if you managed to earn the highest number of points.

Have you confirmed your participation at the lottery for winning the position of leadership? Are the specific benefits of your leadership style that you have developed, full or inconsistent? Do you differentiate your "brand" through a single offer? On what is based your position in relationships with others? What are the basic principles after which is leading your positioning in the minds of your potential voters?

Differentiate your "brand" by a single offer, so your positioning in relation to other people to take altitude.

Leadership is the unremitting offer that you launch on the market and only transmitting the price it has after its purchase.

Leadership Based On An Objective Structure

On June 27, 2010

Try to awaken in people the changing thought, converting them to that beneficial reality of maintaining a variable such as "long-term perspective".

I want to start this webinar by telling you the story of the poor carpenter from Hingham, Massachusetts, told by the famous writer Russel H. Conwell. Well, this poor man, not having a job, was always wasting his time at home. One day his wife told him to go and find a job. So he went to the shore of the bay, sat down, and carved a chain of wood out of a piece of wet shingles. That evening, his children got into an argument over the wooden chain, so he made another one to reconcile them. While he was carving, a neighbor came and said: "If you know how to carve so well, why don't you make some toys?"

- Oh, I wouldn't know what to do exactly. Said the carpenter.

Then why don't you ask your children? The neighbor suggested.

- For what good? My children are different from other people's children.

However, the next morning, he asked his daughter: "What toy would you like?" The girl told him she would like a doll's stroller, an umbrella, and she went on with an endless list. For the rest of his life, the carpenter knew what toys to give his daughter. So, after consulting with his own children, in his own house, he took the firewood because he had no money to buy lumber, and began to carve those solid, unpainted Hingham toys that have been known all around the world for years. And he became one of the richest people in Massachusetts.

Leadership: Can you authenticate your entrepreneurial skills by using the "Get Your Own Unique Hand-Made" function that returns a TRUE value in the process of achieving a storytelling performance?

You can only authenticate your skills if you endow your leadership with new powers, just as a magician increases his influence on the audience with new "magic numbers", only if you manage to relate to each of them through your own perception and mentality.

But first of all, in order to develop your qualities, you need to enlighten those around you about common interests. At the same time, be open to their suggestions and wishes, without condemning their reasoning. Because their acceptance to be at the forefront and lead them, making room in your thinking and feelings, will help you navigate your development process and climb the ladder of leadership.

It is a requirement of leadership performance to self-evaluate, to value your qualities, to amplify your positive impact on others, not to stray from what you are and what you can be – beyond any imposed or self-imposed barriers, beyond any form of doubt. Become an ally of any person who comes to your aid, treating him as a possible long-term collaborator.

The carpenter from Hingham, Massachusetts, supports my claims, which I consider plausible. What would have happened if his wife hadn't encouraged him to find an occupation? What would have happened if he hadn't listened to his neighbor's advice? What would have happened if he had not been willing to fulfill his children's wishes? What do you say? He probably would've never gotten too far.

Therefore, you can hone your leadership skills in the most effective way possible, in a way that you only have something to gain, without regret, and without losing, only if others accept the change imposed by a beneficial reality. The people around you will find the right way to give you an incentive to continue, thus increasing your value.

Leadership: Is what makes you different the very reason you chose to give feedback on your own life experience, in the context that everything that makes you yourself is a result of what someone else might be able to do in your stead?

A leader notices those signals that appear around him and takes them into account – because they can lead to the desired success, they can fill that gap in his science and experience, which stands between performance and mediocrity. He can do this by rediscovering that part of himself that wants to be corrected — from the smallest to the greatest detail.

A leader who cares about his prestige and who wants to be an exceptional guide, must not vitiate the impact that the essence of his leadership has by "sectioning" those points of support, those connections with those around him. His relationships with other people are required to be based on concrete knowledge, and the most valuable relationships are those that are established and developed as such.

You can look at the relationships you have with people like the house you live in, which can become foreign to you, repulsive, if you don't get used to it, if you can't decorate and equip it according to your needs, or if it's not lit.

Suddenly you wake up alone, left in your own home, lonely, without any support, which will greatly influence your life, health and sense of security. Relationships are like a solar lamp, a light source that helps your leadership shine depending on how you power it. This flame burns as long as people, after continuous evaluation, accept that you lead them.

Leadership: Is the only way to increase your self-confidence to think about that moment in your life when you felt most loved, without blaming yourself for what you could have become before you trusted others?

In order for leadership to be based on an objective structure, it is necessary for the leader to interpret well the ways other people exteriorize themselves, their way of functioning, as the doctor interprets the x-ray scans and relays the verdict to the patient. Only then should he re-evaluate his ability to lead and strive to develop as a more skilled craftsman that personal side, those personal resources, those directions, those areas, skills, abilities, which improve his own performance and that of the group he leads.

Just as praise or encouragement, criticism, or disapproval of spectators in the stands makes a team take wings or fall, so does the positive or negative impact you have on your leadership (by building relationships with other people) increase your performance or make it dwindle slowly and surely, like a matchstick.

Is your leadership based on an objective structure? How do you interpret other people's ways of expressing themselves? Are your relationships with other people based on concrete knowledge? Do you feel comfortable with the idea that everyone else is following your example? Is your leadership substantial? Do you have systems and routines that help you perform at a high level? Do you customize the way you train and develop people? Are you a mentor to other leaders? Do you help people figure out what works for them? Do you always give them feedback?

Leadership highlights that moment in life that changes your trajectory and perception of the things you do with the pleasure of experiencing them to discover yourself in an echo of unquenchable memory.

Leadership Based On An Objective Structure has as its basic consideration those things that you can do so well that they matter for what you leave as a memory to future generations. And based on the memories for which you strive to make an impact through things done by chance and lacking in external determination, you need to imagine and present an unforgettable experience.

Leadership Between Creation And Technology

On March 13, 2012

Your importance reflects the way you assume the success of the creative act assumed from the height of the need to know yourself caught in a frame of reference of the world's memory.

- You came just in time. I was just thinking about the picture this morning... When I woke up and saw myself in the mirror with my hair ruffled, do you know what came to my mind? Well, I regretted that I am not a photographer. It's a different thing entirely how others see you and how you see yourself in the mirror at certain moments. Several times in my life I have come across a facial expression that I could not find in any of my portraits. They were perhaps my truest expressions. A hole should be made in the mirror so that the lens can suddenly catch the most intimate expression on your face...

- What is being done now is no longer art, Henri Cartier-Bresson told Tournier. It is, if you will, the photographic industry.

Leadership: Are you looking for a sincere confirmation of the answer you give to a reality as present as possible in an experience such as: "If you are not there when you're supposed to, it matters not if you are at a later time"?

We are talking here about the possibility of man to offer his own world another type of experience, starting from the analogy with the picture of reality created by other sciences, to be part of a new page of his own story in the pages of history. Finally, in order to give one's imagination more freedom and a wider horizon, man must approach the traditional understanding of the word "mirror" and its role in the world of science: important here is the harmonious combination of all external details arranged in an indoor unit.

Leadership is reflected not only by using elements of originality, falling into formulas of rethinking the vision and role of an "agent of change". But rather by capitalizing on the potential of new discoveries with the help of technological resources, placed in the support of a school of thought, considered revolutionary, which respects the work-reward ratio.

There may be new directions of constructing a new unit of producing a scientific good, constituting a valuable and indispensable contribution to the knowledge capital – for example, an abstract model of representing ideas and areas of reference for the development environment. And in this case, the general tendency is towards differentiation, diversity. And it is obviously influenced by the perception vis-à-vis the functions and performances that integrates the "scientific product" result.

The stable parts of the mechanism defining the evolution of leadership, closely related with your position towards the phenomenon of "intellectual creation", should be given by a complex development, starting from the possibilities of flexibility between the issues of interest and those of background, which can grant you more control over the attempt of imposing your model of thinking.

A chosen intellectual creation is the example of a reality beyond the one immediately visible, in an industry that is growing.

Regarding this, here is what he writes on the legeaz.net website: "Such a lasting activity or even as a sparkle of human genius can be materialized in literary-artistic or scientific works. First, the author of a literary-artistic work has personal-patrimonial rights related to his creation: the right to be recognized as the author of the work, the right to decide its publication, the right to request that his work not be touched by third parties."

It is true that the leader-creator sees art in a very personal way, accepting novelty as a model of representing concepts, that can have a direct correspondent in its objective reality. That is why he engages, through experiments, in a form of maneuvering science, organizing it and spreading it. And this maneuvering of science is so powerful, so useful, that it requires an act of inner revolution – which modifies in a certain degree the values the leader has appreciated over time.

I am referring here to that complex formula for acquiring new means of creation, obtained through a constant and laborious scientific effort that is dominated by the way you think, by the experiences you choose to use as benchmarks for developing explanations, concepts and comprehensive models of impact, scientifically grounded.

The brilliant artist is the author of a creation that goes beyond the comprehension of the human mind, because it refers to a reality that has never been seen before and continues to fascinate.

Leadership between creation and technology is closely related to the reality from which you build your world, the same reality being meant to broaden the horizon of knowledge of the world around you. By appealing to your own reality, seen as a photograph that does not need words to convey emotions, marked by the logo of a name from your own creation, you will be able to more easily produce an essential mutation in art, even if many people would not understand you:

"Art is my life in a nutshell."

Leadership Between Creation And The Nuances Of Thought

On September 14, 2016

No creation can move forward, if it does not have the perspectives of a renewal of modern and unconditional critical reception.

Eisenstein continues his collaboration with Prokofiev. The composer also worked intensely ever since Alma-Ata. The first thing Eisenstein asked of the composer was the music for the sequence "The oath of the Oprichniki", the sequence he wanted filmed – we're still at Alma-Ata – based on the music.

Eisenstein still doesn't specify the way in which the sequence needs to be made. He doesn't like Prokofiev's music. The composer lights up and declares that he will no longer write music without "handbills", meaning without drawings, because only so can he follow all the nuances of the director's thinking. Eisenstein makes a series of sketches for him, based on which Prokofiev writes a new "Oath."

Then, the composer writes the nurse song "Big Ocean", and afterwards, the lullaby that Staritkaia sings when her son is killed, to Vladimir. Now, the director's intentions are so clear to the composer that Serafina Birman notes the ease with which she can film the scene due to the fact that Prokofiev guessed, understood what is happening in the troubled soul of Eufrosina Staritkaia. *

Leadership: Are you able to materialize the way in which a sequence of openness to the universe of creation must be constructed from a strong framework of reciprocity, through the relation between "edge" and "boundless"?

You will not be able to establish an affinity for a field, also counting among the forerunners of an entire development that puts closer the analysis of certain points of view, different from the grounding of a unitary idea over what it "artistic composition" means, as a basic rule for the development of ideas, if you do not materialize the way in which their transmission is achieved.

The sequence does not only represent a series of images or scenes in a film, which forms a certain episode. But more than that, it is a result of the composition of a team project, depending on the whims and imagination of each. It represents an ordered series of basic operations carried out on an area of using results for the satisfaction of a certain relationship between what is called "edge" and "boundless".

The edge is what happens "offline": you have no power of decision, but you indirectly contribute do advices and professional recommendations, suggestions and insights. The boundless, directly linked to the montage of an interpretation of various experiences or visions, is a catalyst of exploring a continuous line of thinking. In other words, the director must be the shadow of the composer, and the composer must be the sun of a new reality rising above the artistic horizon.

In order to better understand an artistic personality, you have to gain another openness about his artistic creation.

The combination between a foundation of knowledge, located within a given concept, and an external efficient cause, of joining a representative thinking, takes place only when the contributing forces to the development of the project intensify their actions of following their goals. This means to welcome the initiative to determine a certain meaning through an outside observation. Which in leadership is called to strengthen the perspectives of expanding vision through a "like" of others' opinion.

A friend of mine wrote on Facebook some time ago: "Invent what does not exist... because what exists belongs to everyone." A director enhances the urgency of authenticity through the ability to give any surrounding thing another connotation, an additional importance, a higher vibration, so that the reality he turns into a spectacle adds charm through the contrast between "form and background", between "edge and boundless".

Unfortunately, no creation can move forward without the existence of an external impact assessment, if it does not have the perspectives of a renewal of modern and unconditional critical reception. The capacity for creation goes hand in hand with the evaluation of reality in terms of the intrinsic value of things highlighted, which makes external existence the fruit of an impact perspective on receiving the "renewal" of reality in terms of the ability to idealize the relationship between Ego and Everything Around.

Leadership is what happens in the director's soul when his characters are portrayed through the prism of equivalence between the reproduction of reality with perfect objectivity (in all its aspects) and another variant of reality, "as it is in the autonomy of his being".

Leadership Between Creation And The Nuances Of Thinking is made visible only in the presence of an originality facing the evaluation criteria that allow for a certain degree of involvement, and also able to generate a system of gratitude and fulfillment.

Leadership Credibility

On October 16, 2007

Complete your role as a leader by shaping the raw material of your being.

In the last few days, news has spread around our country. It has been revealed that a high-ranking official, namely a politician, has been accused of plagiarism. "Nature" magazine estimated that half of the work written by the politician had been copied verbatim from various sources. In the meantime, the people who took a detailed look at the work increased the percentage of plagiarism, to about 80% of the volume.

The politician categorically rejected the accusations, claiming that it was just a citation error. "These apologies are embarrassing, ridiculous", said Alexandru Toma Patrascu, a founding member of the Secular-Humanist Association of Romania (ASUR), an MBA graduate of the Open University UK. It is impossible for a college graduate and a doctoral student not to know the rules of citation, say the specialists.

Normally, when you take a paragraph from an author, you put quotation marks and some notes. The notes, whether at the bottom of the page or at the end of the paper, indicate exactly the author, the work, the publisher, and the year of publication, plus the page on which the excerpt is located. Both methods are valid.

If this is not done, it means that you have stolen someone else's creation, intellectual property, and this is already a crime and is punishable by imprisonment from 3 months to 5 years.

Leadership: Is your self's reaction to the world and the relentless laws of finitude always controlled by the same whimsical pride, that of hiding your ignorance?

Are you a detective trying to find out the truth? When you intend to get to know people, try to get a better look at them, like a detective, like Columbus trying to find out the truth and suspecting everything. Do your best to find out as much as you can about them. For something can always come to light, something that will reveal the inefficiency in their own promotion, the inefficiency of their own game – a game they play, just like any influential man, but not following any rules.

If you come around to understanding this game, devoid of fair-play, which some people make, you will be able to understand not only where they come from, but more importantly, where they are going. There is nothing better to show you what motivates people, what kind of character they have, than the leadership they practice – this beautiful game of great people, transformed into a spare part, which distorts the character of some, pushing to falsehood and hypocrisy, like a weight sinking deeper and deeper into the sea, leaving no trace.

In order to acquire a more detailed and nuanced knowledge of human nature, in order to take possession of their most hidden resources, you must discern, at least temporarily, the mechanisms that condition the individuality of man. But without giving in to their will, without sinking too deep into their darkness. You don't have to get lost in them to be transformed by them. Like a detective, you have to look for as many clues as possible about human nature, and most of the time they will be revealed at times and in places you do not expect.

1. How do you try to gain a deeper understanding of man? Does this knowledge help you better know yourself and understand where you are going?

2. What is your motivation for knowing human nature? Is the relationship between you and other people based on their thorough study?

3. Are you able to bring people to the stage of handing over the baton?

Leadership: Can you take on the role of judge in a permanent increase in your importance in the realm of greatness, when "defeat" is the only alternative that can give you a real mental challenge?

Leadership practiced by corrupt people, who lack integrity and do not respect any ethical principles, is like the roof of a one-story building that collapses under the weight of the accumulated snow. This snow is not a structure, it cannot be easily removed, it cannot be canceled like a soap bubble. But it is gathering more and more until the roof pillars give way. The roof of a one-story building collapsed...

People who practice such leadership cannot attain perfection, because their functional structure, their virtues, their emotions, their qualities, are more and more affected by their false nature, by their rotten way of thinking and acting. And once infected with this virus, that of bypassing or defying any rules, any rules of common sense, they can no longer rehabilitate themselves in front of anyone.

Because they lose their credibility and support, becoming simple players who are constantly trying to bring remarkable results, but without success. Simple players who stumble in front of the wall built on their own weaknesses, by their own shaky minds – a wall that collapses on them, unmistakably and powerfully. Leaving room for other dodges, other possibilities than defeat.

Sooner or later, the poor leadership of these individuals will completely destroy them. How can one build a program for people's development, direct their progress, give them the authority to carry out their tasks, finally bring them to the stage of handing them the baton, if you have lost your credibility? How can one develop personal relationships with people that cannot be endowed with the ability to dedicate themselves, to mobilize around solid values and principles, unanimously accepted by all people: such as fairness, honesty and honor?

Credibility is like a book full of mysteries: until it is part of your life, you will not be able to feel its story, and the latter will catch your soul.

Leadership Credibility is a necessary condition to be able to carry out your activity optimally, as a person who realizes that he has a vocation and a mission to fulfill, being obliged to shift the emphasis from the role of a simple information carrier, to the one of trainer of fine, moral, assumed intellectualism, passing everything through the ruthless filter of the brilliant brain.

1. What are the top three factors that could affect your credibility? How cheap could you sell your credibility, and under what circumstances?

2. Do you know how much it costs to become a leader? Do you agree with the saying "success comes suddenly"? If so, then your character is still not well defined.

3. Do you think there is success without commitment? Is commitment that great quality of yours, above all others, that allows you to become a successful leader?

Leadership Essentials

On November 03, 2014

Learn to look at those special points of view around you, based on your own experiences that are always enriched with the profound meanings of the subjects under consideration.

Once in Tashkent, director Sergei Eisenstein searches his seats with joy before preparing the script for "Alexander Nevsky". The Iranian miniatures seemed to him, of course, always interesting, but very stylized. Now, here, on the basis of his own experiences, he discovers that the miniaturists – who have not deformed their eye with another painting – knew how to look at those particular points of view that formed around them. Listen to the story of some happenings, legends, fairytales. All this is squeezed in the documentary and emotional material from which the script will be born.

The directorial vision develops in parallel with literary ideas. Eisenstein does not stop the classicism of scriptural construction... Just as he himself said at some point: "The director must break the holiness of specific holy elements of the literary script." That's what he did all his life. *

Leadership: Can you ensure a harmonious blend between the power of knowledge given to you by the vision and possibilities of renewing art with new orientation frameworks?

The conception of art and the ideal of mastering its means of expression is being finalized as pure expressions of ideas in a variety of ways, by adopting a principium individuationis, favoring a transgression of the limits of creative potential. All ideas are born and change throughout your positioning in a space of analysis and reflection, considered an essential factor in the expansion of your own functionality, a catalyst for the innovation process.

In order to access all the functions of science that return values with exponential growth trends calculated for a certain proportion of reasoning and knowledge (based on observation and inquiries) in which the subjective and objective mixture is found, you must be able to recognize the essential. The essential that most often escapes any logic, any attempt to label, any appreciation or forecast.

The essential is a very fine measure of the sublime, because it gives more or less forceful meaning to the favorable meanings that paint the rules of creation. The essential is what novelty you capture at a certain point while it is ongoing. If you want to develop your creative potential you must arrange everything so that you capture "novelty" in a way no one expects.

Knowledge is offered to you by vision when you manage to form the shape of an image whose content is suggested by that intuition that helps you extract the essence from the conglomerate of surrounding data, leading to the conception of a project with interesting stakes.

If we want to discover new approaches to leadership with the same precision and meticulousness with which we analyze art, then creation must conform to the concept of "live scenario" – and for this it is crucial to formulate some decisive notions for the process of initiation in the secrets of filmmaking.

Due to its efficiency, leadership is characterized by an increasing use of resources that may favor the emergence of new topic approaches based on the experience of exploiting sources of inspiration. The subjects analyzed are those points of interest that contribute to the development of a particular vision of the content of creation, the evolution of the relationship between imagination and reality under the pressure of a certain tension of knowledge.

Leadership: Do you try to avoid the condition of consistency of a singular idea to be taken into account even if it claims its merit to overturn the natural towards something special?

Leaders focused on the development and use of knowledge know the potential of forms of content that promote an ideal of authenticity, from those particular points of view that are formed around them, based on their own experiences that are constantly enriched with the profound meanings of the subjects under consideration.

Guidance frameworks that satisfy the possibilities of renewal of art are actually the major impact concepts that can be used in authentic creation, whose understanding and scope is directly related to the ability to discern the outer reality in the most objective way possible. But at the same time, in a way that makes you want to find out more about the subject.

An idea claims its merit in overturning the natural towards something special when the real subject you approach is related to a continuous actuality that does not rely in a simple suite of actions and events, but rather in the echoes they produce in the public space, in the cultural sphere, in the life and consciousness of people.

Leadership Essentials is primarily aimed at all those actions carried out to promote and maintain an adequate state of science at its best, the search for new meanings and extensions of concepts addressed by changing the style and variety of creation itself. But for this, we have to take into account the leader's ability to always be up-to-date, enriching his science to "keep up with the times", but also raising it to the level of art.

Leadership In A Myriad Of Perceptions

On March 19, 2009

Give a high score to your influence, turning your leadership into a meeting ground for yours and others' perceptions.

The psychiatrist asks the patient:

- Tell me, do you happen to hear voices, but not to know who is speaking and from where?

- Of course.

- And when does it happen?

- When answering the phone.

Leadership: Do you always follow the essence of the perception of an inherent reality from which your vision and influence on it has been omitted, taking into account the fact that no reality is more essential for your own confirmation than what you are trying to strongly support?

Most leaders, no matter how you organize them in segments with a certain mentality, vision, culture and professional training, expect that the model of their perception be ensured, meaning accepted by the rest of the world. The difference between a leader and other people is often what separates the thinking of a psychiatrist of that of the patient: one sees everything in terms of mental illness or handicaps, and the others sees everything as it really is.

But only by making a distinction that matters, which positively influences the lives and thinking of others, the leader will be able to add substantial value to his leadership. Take into consideration this aspect because it is basic and, generally, better appreciated than any other particular element related to leadership.

Just as magic is an extension of physics, so your ability to influence people is an extension of your thinking that you transmit to others and which, if it isn't profound and does not capture the essential aspect of things, of the people's system of beliefs and the way of seeing things, it will never be able to provide coherence to the entire changing process that you want. Your complex, performance-based thinking, focused on analysis and assessment, may not be consistent with the simple thinking of others, and in this case, the connection between you and them will be generated very hard, if at all.

Leadership: Can what you communicate from another angle of reality be accepted as what cannot be determined directly, without striving for a logical explanation in this direction?

Do you take very seriously the orientation to people's perceptions? Do you fix as your aim to understand the issues that matter most to them? Do you leave aside the typical thinking of a psychiatrist, who thinks strictly in terms of his profession, and always seek the essential in terms of results that you want from people? What issues should you consider when you relate to people?

There is a saying in marketing: « Customers want, above all, the appropriate type of cement, at the right time and in the desired place. « Your success in leadership will be attributed to a variety of factors. But one thing is certain. The only way to become valuable is to satisfy some conditions, like those in marketing. That is to give people, above all, the appropriate way of thinking to suit their own perceptions, visions and beliefs. In other words, firstly, you must see what they see, and it is then that they will see things as you perceive them.

Leadership is the voice on the phone that tells you that you dialed the wrong number because you got used to everyone else calling you.

Leadership In A Myriad Of Perceptions brings into focus the importance that leaders must pay to other people's mentalities. In order to be highly rated by other people, concentrate on a single aspect: how people approach things, the way they feel and how they use their minds. Your success can be attributed to many factors, but most important is to make sure that you perceive their point of view.

Give a high score to your influence, turning your leadership into a meeting ground for yours and others' perceptions.

Conclusion: Communication is essential in leadership. The way you communicate and expose your ideas and visions must be understandable and appropriately perceived by all people. The level of perception, understanding and compliance are different from what you must create – A solid and understandable communication bridge, in an appropriate language and understandable by all, because what you think and perceive can be far from other people's thinking and perceptions.

Leadership In Order To Establish The Grandiose Goal

On May 29, 2020

Be prepared to conceive the essential meaning of your existence from the perspective of a gaze that guesses the sufferings that await you, being determined to endure them in the name of a destiny that assumes a history.

Columbus and Magellan taught us that more important than setting bold goals is to float straight ahead even if you see nothing in front of you.

And not only to move forward, but to pull yourself out of the clutches of the impossible, to face obstacles, to be poor, to be hit by the distrust of all people, to be abandoned by all friends, family, to be pursued only by dangers, to undertake countless absurd and fruitless journeys, to be at least 20 times on the brink of death, but to be lucky every time. Have patience for about 25 years full of trials, and only when there is no hope, only then maybe, just maybe, something will be revealed to you on the horizon.

When you have no friends, when everyone around you is against you, when you are the only one who still believes in a chimera, when you drift all the time with a completely damaged ship, you still have to know how to improvise and use many tricks... just to survive.

At some point you end up not believing in anyone or anything, all you have to do is tie a cannonball to each leg and throw yourself into the ocean, before you are brutally killed by your angry crew. And even when you are determined to take this step, moments before, to receive a saving news: behold... the shore.

Only then do you come to know God. You and only you. And God hides behind the truly grandiose deeds, made to show the difference between what is transient and what is lasting, between what we are as mere mortals and what we should have become in a higher plane of destiny, in a wider spiritual journey. Of course, without rebuking ourselves for having committed the "sin" of having risen to the heights of too high a claim.

That's about it with grand goals. They are almost useless in the face of what awaits you in the future. So, before you set bold goals, it would be good to arm yourself with another 25-30 years of physical, mental and emotional torture.

You better be very strong. And, more than that, it would be good to have a lot of luck, because dangers and death will be permanently with you. Waiting... for you to give up.

Is there a God? And if there is, will He be by your side?

Leadership: Does the uniqueness of the life you traverse put your motivation in doubt from the perspective of an amazing destiny that presents itself as a science and vision of the world, without being one or the other?

Everything happens after setting the goal that motivates you, but to the point where motivation can no longer support the achievement of the goal. We observe here, on the one hand, a kind of immeasurable ambition that helps some people to venture into the unknown, as far as possible from the reality of the world, on the other hand, a kind of inner boiling that leads man to the limits of what one can endure, when life becomes the mirror of death erased by God at the cost of self-forgetfulness.

Through the considerations I have just made, I intended to realize, at least in a provisional way, a characterization of the victorious approach seen as the all-encompassing thinking of a single character, of a stubborn visionary in the "great search" for the meaning of life and of God's will.

This approach aims at the whole of a vision imposed by the course of history, by its difficult moments, through each approach destined to failure, not only the measurement of the final, glorious or hopeless results. Every approach aimed at the finality of the whole context of travel, from one place to another, includes in itself the man who sacrifices himself, putting him under the sign of doubt from the perspective of what he can endure and from the perspective of what he can discover.

I have tried to characterize the whole destiny of man from a perspective that seems to be a psychological one, since we have spoken so many times about the ambiguity of a demanding reality (simultaneously with its removal or approach from a fulminating discovery). And this amazing destiny, often difficult to understand, bears the traces of a defeated pain, of the sacrifice accepted without hesitation, pleasing only to God, in the name of an idea that does not take into account the uniqueness of the individual life of the victor and his fellows. It is the meaning of "carrying the cross".

Carrying the cross is a reconstruction of the route taken with great difficulty, through the sacrifice accepted in the name of an idea that takes into account the uniqueness of the individual life of the victor who exercises his providence in the face of a great discovery.

This carrying of the cross presents itself as a science and vision of the world, without being one or the other, rather highlighting a tragic feeling in the face of existence, especially the sufferings to be endured, an overwhelming trembling of the heart, a commotion of life full of a deep tragic meaning. It brings us into a state of uncertainty in which we no longer know whether or not destiny is a science and a worldview.

For the soul of a victor, what is important is the supreme outcome, not the path full of suffering and danger, which he must follow under the guidance of a God who offers immortality only to the one who sacrifices everything for Him. It is from this angle that we must conceive the problem of existence, that is, from this risky and painful adventure of "carrying the cross", an eternal fragment from the suffering of a God who belongs to no one, but also from the perspective of fulfilling the supreme existence, by finalizing a journey that no one can do in your stead.

We must also recognize that the essential features of a victor are the natural expression of a soul agitated by great, irreconcilable conflicts, which finds its redemption only at the end of the journey. Therefore, the difference between a winner and a loser is related to that look cast towards nowhere which seems to guess the sufferings that await him, yet he is determined to endure them, because this is his destiny fore-chosen by God. The victor willingly accepts, without revolt, a destiny full of trials and risks, by fulfilling the sacrifice. While the loser puts up vigorous resistance.

Leadership is the strength to rise to the height and responsibility of the position you hold under the burden of a pre-determined destiny, which has its ups and downs, its highs and lows, in a cycle of deed and response that instead of being an end is a continual beginning of revelation.

Leadership In Order To Establish The Grandiose Goal bears the traces of a deep pain, accepted voluntarily, without revolt, because this is the supreme fulfillment of a unique Destiny, decided before God.

Columbus' idea was the promise of a new world, while Magellan's idea was to find a new path to the new world. Something manifested in their souls as a gift from another world. They both rose above the passing moments, towards the moment of eternal duration. You get the impression that they are both the spontaneous creation of a single power, presented in a show about the captivity of a single soul on the border between two worlds, where the real and the unreal become impossible to separate.

The vision with which you can instruct your will as to what is urgently to be done in the name of the evolution of the world is precisely the vision with which God has endowed you to appreciate the distance between what is transient and what lasts in the great becoming of mankind. The goal is to establish a comparison between strong and weak spirits, following in the footsteps of a character who influences the divine work, accepting a destiny that seems to be repeated in each generation, in another version.

Leadership In The Name Of Events

On March 19, 2017

Follow the unexpected trajectory of events, positioning yourself on the path of resonating successes that test the value of the "challenge" variable.

I am Gerry Lane. An instinct of survival favors me in the struggle for existence, too sacrificing in a sustained process of maintain the hazard, while looking at aggression as a pathology of the nature that never saw itself in danger and then suddenly discovered that it was imminent and deadly.

Is there a chronic DNA sequence of infections at risk of a causing brain damage, generating the violent deterioration of motor coordination functions culminating in the emergence of behavioral disorders? What makes this DNA sequence so aggressive that it controls the expression of bacterial resistance genes of any antibiotic, producing serious genetic mutations capable of radically transforming the human being?

The rhythm of my thinking articulated on unconvincing data, the position of my constant to determine a notion by eliminating that which denies it, correlated with the corrosion index of areas affected by une maladie qui produit tant de noms, corresponds organically to the temperatures of the stress that I feel before a match with death. My life, which coincides with "the birth of tragedy", opens a first secret gallery in the future passed through the blow given to the present called: "Survive the Zombie hordes alone" as a consequence of inevitable genetic inadequacies.

To improve aggressive manifestations and counteract the damaging efforts of mutations on cells, the body has to develop DNA repair mechanisms. How do I have to expose myself to the danger, how to better position my skills when facing an event so unlikely that it would provide a remedy, a process so conditioned by the hazard – fundamentally similar to something within me that only seeks the sensational?

Leadership: What is the result of the singular event conditioned by serving a purpose of the type "This is impossible. Unless..." from which resides the greatness of your being?

French geneticist Francois Jacob said that the most important achievement in science comes from observation: to see the union of two germ cells, two micro universes that hide the destiny of a future individual, to see the formation of the first cell and follow its unexpected trajectory, subjected to the whims of the environment, whenever the victim of a genetic error.

I meditate by the instructions provided by the surrounding nature. And the meanders of meditation are pursued by a single question: based on the way in which things are represented, from certain actions that contradict everything I know about life from the perspective of medicine, can I extract key information?

The disease was in sight at all times. Why did I not think to use the disease itself against these Zombies? These beings have a weakness. And that weakness is weakness itself. Our weakness. There is also a precedent. Hungry predators avoid corpses infected due to a pathogen they spread.

From the follow-up to the singular event conditioned by the goal "This is impossible, unless..." can reside the greatness of my being. But such an event, the result of a crazy experiment, requires a sacrificial mission to bring precious information immediately. I must infect myself out of my own free will with a high-risk pathogen, such as Typhus, H1N1 or SARS, and then meet face to face with a Zombie.

The unique cry of victory is based on a reality of the type "I can't believe I did it", from the correlation of the short fragments of certain accidental events to which I am constrained to meditate. He struggles in the immediate vicinity of the field of observation through a deductive inference process. At the same time, he is an answer to the saying: "It is never too late to sacrifice myself."

Greatness in leadership is not born from the desire to position yourself higher to others, but from the ability to position yourself above the course of events by offering a new version of them by activating the sacrifice motivation.

Human nature enters beyond the experiences and lessons of the moments that mark life in the structures of conception of a psychological test that measures not only the cognitive or physical abilities, but also the glorious sincerity of the courage to motivate yourself to bring about change by accepting what you are willing to give up: yourself at times.

The activation and predominance of a strong motivation that leads to unique performance takes into account the uniqueness that it imparts to the eternity of the moment of doubt that marks history and changes the course of the world.

Leadership In The Name Of Events has as its starting point the very condition of man to devote himself to the service of a noble goal in unfavorable times.

Leadership In The Name Of Life

On May 14, 2017

Focus on the risk you take on your own when your image swings between the serenity you know well how to appreciate and the darkness that you are compelled to endure.

I felt that I did something terrible, a work of the mind in an unexpected place, at the hour when one day ends and the other is at the beginning. At the time when time stays suspended between the reflection of a hidden reality in which I was just a mortal, with the pluses and minuses specific to a leading character of an exciting science fiction, and the reflection of an authentic emancipation formula that frees and oppresses at the same time.

Not out of fear or some unnecessary complexity did I refuse the moral burden of a new beginning, the right to guilt, the atonement of the punishment of remaining the only surviving one, being unable to pass into a mature phase of revelation. But simply the feeling of doing something beyond normal limits always helps the winners enjoy victory, withdrawing peacefully in deserted places, but fertile to a reconsideration of the fragility of existence.

As a thief who goes through the back door and escapes the same way, by applying the principles of a new discovery of genetics, at the end of every attempt to let myself get caught in the clutches of an end that announces its arrival more and more, I had continued my incursion into the unknown of the increasingly widespread disease hypothesis, among the many chapters of the secondary pathology. Questioning myself in an objective tone: "Why did I stay alive? Why me?"

Leadership: Can you find the strength of your will to represent yourself in a world whose irreversible change can only be perceived by reproducing the patterns of a predetermination?

I, myself, with my own conscience, towards a reconciliation with myself, with my destiny as threatening as an angry king over his subjects, who in drama and tragedy is always implacable, was seeing in the feelings I expressed – fear, frustration, doubt, anger – a return to faith in a world where only science and technology open up unimaginable horizons. To the humanity seen through the sunlight of a miracle called: "Inspiration."

The true victory of man is seen in the proper reception of a self-image from which is born a reflection of a form of emancipation. To survive in a dying world is the diagnosis of the reason for going through a spiritual phase from the lowest level to the highest one. Or vice versa.

It seems like Master Botticelli was the one who said you could throw a sponge dipped with paint on a wall and see a lot of different images in the stains produced, real starting points for ideas.

In the same way, my mind overlaps the inspirational motives and sources extracted from the patterns of a predetermination, the possibility of the meaning of a divine arrow, a true artwork composed of the all-powerful force of medicine, and the story of a new beginning.

Personal power is the result of being aware of the risk that you take on your own when your image swings between the serenity you know well how to appreciate and the darkness you are compelled to endure.

It was impossible to explain, struggling to understand the logical thread of the conclusions that had to be understood by assuming the hidden side of an absolute regret, compared to the complex experiences of a fugitive condemned to death, the science we considered to be the guide to this deadly game was merely a first step towards a closer union with the aggressive impulse of the virus that infected humanity.

The sensation of staying constantly in linger, in a continuous activation of the connection with the options of a morphology full of contrasts, by associating a décor of the absurd of life, enigmatic as a kind of key to a poem of another language, becoming a central aspect of the philosophy of chemistry, was the sign of an authentic individual emancipation, my first experience in an escape room.

The true power hiding behind authenticity is manifested when you enter a room found in a world and exit into another.

The true power that honors you as a promoter of leadership through values and strengths is to find yourself in the presence of the originality of a reflexive work when the image around you becomes more and more faded.

Leadership in the Name of Life has as a coincidence point the very condition of man to establish himself in positive roles, to serve a high ideal called: faith.

Faith is fidelity to what is earned by inspiration when you lose all that you have invested in yourself. It means winning through authenticity and revelation the only thing that really matters: the meaning of existence in a tough, complex and increasingly misunderstood world.

Leadership In The Rhythm Of Tango

On July 15, 2011

Maintain as well as possible the "engine" that allows human functioning so that they would fit to the exact rhythm of your leadership.

In the movie "Scent of a Woman (1982)" there is a memorable scene where the blind - lieutenant colonel in the reserves, Frank Slade, prey to an internal struggle that obsessed him, wants definitively to take his own life. Charlie Simms, who had to take care of him, was trying to stop him, telling him with fear in his heart to continue his life.

- What life? I got no life. I'm in the dark here. You understand? I'm in the dark. . . Give me a reason not to die !

Then Charlie, who was on the verge of losing hope, replied:

- I'll give you two reasons. You can dance the tango and drive a Ferrari better than anyone... In life, if you are confused continue to dance !

Leadership: Do you train your ability to capture the nuances of seemingly impossible to manage contexts from which to extract that sense of reasoning with the help of virtue?

Charlie Simms understood very well what it feels lieutenant and knew where to insist, he knew the right button to press in order to change his negative and self-destructive attitude. Knowing that one of the greatest passions of lieutenant was dancing, Charlie told him: "In life, if you are confused continue to dance." Beautiful !

Charlie found the right lever whereby to control Lieutenant's emotions, that lever that transmits the pusher energy necessary to restore his forces. He identified very well that strong element that could stimulate Frank's desire for life.

As a leader, you must find the right lever to reach the level where you can cause a change in people's lives, to find that "something" that would keep alive and lucid the spirit that animates people, to recognize that unique essence of energy from them that would revive their hopes.

The dominant attribute of your character is measured by demonstrating the ability to rise to a high level of understanding and feeling, moving from a stage of duty to one of a necessity. Virtue is a formless background if it is not elevated to a civic spirit: "If another does not, be prepared to do it yourself."

Leadership is based on the individual and total utility of "YOU" that corresponds to the motivation to clarify the purpose and the reason for the existence of man.

No work - be it a leadership necessary to a good self-knowledge or an unnatural mask of a desire to hide feelings – can be interpreted outside the context in which man is found. Leadership is, in the shift from the external (material) to the (emotional) internal plan, only a part of a huge, powerful stream of impressions, which get to influence and define man in the ensemble of motivating factors, able to influence his behavior in situations where he is not self-confident.

Is your leadership a duty to fulfill, occurring as a result of past life experiences and how you interpret them?

A realistic environment, which does not provide the necessary balance between absolute power and spiritual maneuverability surrounding man, testing his strength of character, becomes extremely demanding, erratic and harder and harder to accept. Thus, we find it increasingly difficult to understand and differently manage the reason behind decisions to achieve a higher level of consciousness, where suffering disappears.

We find it difficult to capture broad thinking and relating patterns to the social environment and the leader's own individuality if what remains beyond routine or transition, fast approaching the boundaries of human understanding, it's not first an attempt to continuously live perfection based on inner vocation, an ideal of inner fulfillment through others.

It's true. Leadership is not constant in the different equations of existence, but it's worth the attribute of authentic insofar as it meets any kind of unknowns, be it encouraging, but mostly discouraging. Leadership is just one of many communication channels with one's self, through which circulates the image of the versions of what you have become as a result of past life experiences and how your interpret them.

Leadership: Do you impose yourself as an important moment in human life, especially through the content that you create and which reflects your conception of your Self in full?

A feeling of powerlessness often beats in the hearts of all people in difficult moments of their lives. It is that feeling that darkens their mind, which decreases their performance, which brings them only sadness and regret, is that feeling that rushes their "end". Their motivation drops, the engine that drives all their senses, that engine that gives them hope, that provides them energy and willingness to work and to enjoy every moment of life, no longer fulfills its functions properly, loses its operating capacity.

As a leader, your job is to understand very well the engine's limitations that allow efficient operation of those areas governing people's mentality and attitude. You must be able to reach the vital components of the engine and to optimize its performance that ultimately produce more power. And, at the same time, to speculate any error that could cause the engine blocking.

How you experience leadership fully reflects your conception of yourself: the more you realize what you are willing to give to the other, the more prepared you are to accept your own life. And the more capable of understanding and expressing the emotions you are experiencing towards someone, the greater their power to reinvent themselves.

Leadership in the rhythm of tango suggests the harmonious and sustained balance between you and those around you. Leadership is like a dance of energy producer whose movements are produced in a certain pattern. However, you need to know all the steps and to make moves at the right time, you must keep a certain attitude, a way of thinking, to understand all the well-defined ins and outs of the captainship, you must create unity by finding a constructive way of strengthening the feelings of others, you need to know to enable that characteristic of people that lead them to continuous personal development.

Just as persuasion and emotion power of a painting is due primarily to the spiritual vibration that the artist transfuses through image - so your power of influence is primarily due to the intensity of emotion that you transfuse to people in difficult moments. Only through your attitude and your ability to induce motivation, only by impulse full of enthusiasm and energy that people get from you, you will be able to complete your influence.

Give people a strong impulse to change their attitude by awakening in them a sense of credibility that would shake to the ground any trace of doubt to their ego. Maintain as well as possible the "engine" that allows human functioning so that they would fit to the exact rhythm of your leadership.

Conclusion: The tango is a dance with a special rhythm that fits only certain temperaments, and that requires a perfect matching of the two partners. For a successful tango, one partner must lead by setting the pace and the other partner to adopt that rhythm.

In leadership, you must adopt this rhythm of tango, and the way you impose it depends on you - the leader. Find the appropriate ways to increase people's motivation, but also to increase their performance. Only in this way the two partners (you and people) will approach the common goal of improving performance by adopting an appropriate and proactive attitude towards change (including behavioral), and by aligning into the accelerated pace required by the current time.

Leadership's Maturity Stage

On April 11, 2008

Seek to control the functional state of fulfillment at the level of knowledge, through inner experience, in order to define a vision that firmly masters the whole.

I refuse to believe this, because Butler's stone was as natural as could be. With this stone he could cure any disease. I also know that he did not use words, ceremonies or other such elements. According to man's power of understanding, it is not right to use the glory and beauty of God, present in nature. None of those people ever asked Butler for help. His experiences were viewed with an ironic and distrustful smile.

This method of healing will long be suspected by others, because the wisdom of ordinary people is inconsistent and easy. They believe that a good deed is rather a devilish invention and not a blessing from God, the lover and savior of all mankind.

These preconceived ideas can be found not only in ordinary people, but also in those learned, who believe that they can easily understand the source of a cure, but who, however, encounter the same superficial patterns and do not reach the true essence. They are as wise as children who have never left their parents' home and are scared of any story. They do not know the whole circuit of diseases, especially the part determined by the Spirit of Life, which is the cause of most diseases. I would recommend to all these people to read books, such as this one, in order to be able to broaden their horizons of knowledge, although I know that they will limit themselves to what they have learned or read all their lives." *

Leadership: Does your ability to manifest as a unit in diversity appear as individual experience in the feeling and will with which you will be able to ensure the correct use of knowledge?

Maturity necessarily represents the integrity of the personality in terms of knowledge, along with increasing the degree of full awareness of the moral and emotional consequences of managing small situations of daily life. The limits with which man struggles, aware of his condition and attitude in different situations, are placed in an essential relationship with the subtle energy of wisdom, which says that anything you perceive through the senses and through any other possibilities of receiving information, of which you dispose at a certain moment, it can turn into an unexpected revelation.

Here we are talking about the wisdom of connoisseurs and the wisdom of ordinary people, the former knowing how to use every opportunity to broaden their horizons, the latter embracing only the chance to enjoy the small pleasures of life. Basically, a learned man identifies with "a thirst for infinity", with a certain doctrine of innate ideas, while an ordinary man identifies only with a certain flow of changing emotions, with a whole bunch of feelings, discoveries and turmoil, love and sincerity.

And if the true knower is a mediator between man and transcendence, then his science does not turn into a limit of what constitutes the daily condition of man, but rather turns into an exploration of the power to be different, even superior. The house of the scientist, the part determined by the spirit of life, is the purpose of a certain creation related to the will to achieve great things, related to the feeling that you can change the world without censoring opinions against when you are in a crisis.

In order to broaden one's horizons, man must determine his final functional state of "fulfillment" at the level of knowledge through inner experience, that is, to analyze his own ego through his reflection in others, but also to feed his own ego through technological progress or any other kind of progress. Fulfillment at the level of knowledge is a broadening of horizons by discovering or even deepening the various phenomena and situations that contribute to the establishment of this correlation between what must be and what is essential, between formal and empirical.

To manifest oneself as a unity in diversity means to define a vision that leads to gaining the capacity to more clearly see a certain situation from several perspectives: from the perspective of an external causality and from the perspective of a cohesive self-consciousness, generating innovation and originality.

Leadership's Maturity Stage begins when the Ego asks you to see the world from the perspective of the experience of building knowledge, so as to emanate the feeling and the will that you will be able to ensure the correct use of knowledge.

Leadership Of A High Mystical Level

On September 02, 2013

Join the brave heroes in an experience of great significance to humanity, with the conviction that everything that happens in your life is happening to lead you to a future of spiritual change.

All the difficulties and obstacles that the dark forces have invented, through the harsh laws of nature that do not confess their thoughts, have hardened me and diverted my attention from what is called "a riot of madness" as a symptom of a drifting society. Nothing around me was the same as before, nothing more than a Machiavellian plan devised by a Prince of Darkness, whose Revelation was the only work of art he could conceive in the midst of a fragile world.

And I, Gerry Lane, a scientist, had the task of discovering the means of preventing the spread of the virus that brought the world to its knees in the face of an unprecedented epidemic, the origin of which could not be determined by analysis and testing possible by examining the corpses. Life surpasses movies, and these zombies that appeared more and more everywhere, beat any imagination, more like a horror that freezes your blood in your veins, managing to touch some very strong fears – and (literally) bring man down into hell.

The past is the work of the present, for even now I live in a fiction called "A Call from Beyond the Unknown". With the maturity of interpreting the experience that recommends me for any role of action, from here a whole arrangement of images and ideas more and more intriguing, I look at everything that happens in the shadow of a perfect enigma that incites you to discover it, as only yours, to reach the objectivity of a knowledge that cowardice avoids. The cowardice of not being able to understand death through a terrible disease.

Leadership: Do the experiences you go through provide you with clarity about why you believe in a reality that gives you hope that what you see could also be different?

The mysticism with which I was more and more surrounded seemed to be a form of living by which mankind was reduced to an inexplicable type of order, which seemed in itself unassailable by the known means of science. Patient, tolerant, disciplined, I had to be content with the distant experience that participating in the unfolding events of an observer who seeks to understand the subtle meaning of things, instead of turning them into catastrophes greater than they are, could offer me.

The very mystical experience I was living in the face of this incurable disease, in the face of these monsters created as if in the laboratory, provided me with the clarity of why I still believed in a rescue: I know why I believe, I know who I still believe in, I know that if I trust God, I will be able to find logic in everything that happens around me. So mystic is an act of transfer from imaginary to real, and vice versa, an act of conversion with a dual meaning – from appearance to essence, from a simple comparison of individual phenomena to the broad understanding of man's identity and the reality of the world he inhabits.

Every epidemic hides a mysterious meaning, because behind any disease lies the hidden plan of a spiritual force, silent, supernatural, which wants at all costs to be understood only by chosen ones. Continuously, I feel attracted to everything that is a challenge, a curiosity of nature, beyond the psychological form of resentment towards this invincible fatality that is universalizing, against this viral determinism that plays its threatening ace right at the moment you think you understand everything.

Fiction is my life, while my life is the life of a character in search of destiny, but also constantly between fiction and reality.

I am also a survivor. And the only reason I still believe in a reality that gives me hope that what I see could be different, is that I have to prove to myself that there is a God and that I am able to live without his help, only through the rational certainties of science. And isn't this God also a human being who has found the key to understanding all things?

Leadership: Is this transition of science to the consequences of the actions you take the result of a realism that defies the limits of plausibility, especially from the perspective of a belief placed in the realm of fiction?

There is a subtle connection between mysticism and fiction, the first highlights a hidden plan behind all events (and it serves the evolution of humanity), and the other turns the hidden plan into an auxiliary fact that leads reality to a complete break from the concrete. Both the mystical and fiction can simulate reality with new meanings of unknown, the paranormal thriller, the ordeal of survival, to the point where a person would not be able to tell the difference between true reality and one generated at random.

I feel liberated from the constraints of "realism", being programmed by a divine plan that is difficult to understand. My performance as a researcher is marked by a destiny ignorance, marked by the form of revolt against a cause that can neither be foreseen nor removed. Without the slightest remorse, I am often tempted to kill to save my life, and thus to discover new clues about the victims. Perhaps the virus itself appeared only to describe that part of man that continues to exist after death? I don't know exactly, I don't understand very well the biological mechanism of the organism infected with the dizzying virus, but I know that I myself am starting to become more and more unscrupulous. This is a side effect, of course.

A perception of a mind open to miracles, this is what I lack to replenish my spirit with another invisible force: the belief in something that is beyond me, but which is coded in my eyelashes, the urge to ask myself, from time to time: to be or not to be forbidden to leave your soul in the whirlwind of life? For just as the artist must seek his need for originality in order to place himself in the space of the extraordinary, so I must seek my need to act according to the belief that a scientist will find the strength and will to continue his research even when he thinks he no longer has the resources to explain the evolution of the world.

The mystical combines with reality only in a film full of action and suspense, where everything is directed for me, to realize that some can play it and others cannot. Well, I don't understand God, but I hope He understands me, I hope He goes with me through what the whole world is going through. I hope He will feel what I feel when I am in the midst of a reality that cultivates more doubt than dreams. I hope God is with me when I die, and I earn my living by trying to become a horror movie hero.

The path of mysticism is an experience of great finesse in interpreting a meaningful reality, about the significance of transforming the world at the level of personal "imprint" that you leave in the name of what is perishable or immortal.

Leadership Of A High Mystical Level refers to the opportunity to live in a reality that does not allow you to understand the truth of its evolution. It is also the case of a scientist who tries to find the explanation of an atypical phenomenon, taken to the extreme in some places, to finally understand that he is the most difficult subject and the most illustrative copy of the experiment called: LIFE, from the puzzle of God's masterpiece.

Leadership: One on One

On February 13, 2010

I often discussed in my articles about the famous Romanian comedian Puiu Calinescu. And I will always talk about him. Because, on the one hand, is one of the actors whom I liked most, but on the other, because he is a great man - a man, whose value has not been equaled only by very few actors, a man, whose power of understanding of the human nature cannot be questioned.

At one point, he told in an interview something that I will never forget. He said:

- You shall not confuse a showman with an actor. If you are not coming under a discipline, if you have no respect for your master that is the audience – he's my dad, she's my mother, he gives money for you to get shoes ... then you cannot feel accomplished. I never felt disappointed and betrayed by the public. Nooo ! Why? Because we are always one to one: I love them, and they love me.

I think these words represent the "spell" of closeness between people, in them lays all the secret of a leader. In these words can be recognized the true value of the ones who knows how to build strong and lasting relationships. The expert in leadership, John Maxwell, was quite right, when he said: "There is a possibility to like people without leading them, but you can't lead people until you like people."

Leadership: Can your belonging to the "double presence" condition be judged by what you know off-stage, and not on the basis of the ideas you have gained from the experience of being face to face with the audience?

The actor has a double presence: formal or necessary, depending on the role he plays on stage. And leadership remains in the care of those who have understood and approved it as a scene of manifestation of acting behaviors and attitudes. The leadership is usually understood and fully accepted by a genre or a certain category of individuals - as a way of guiding people through manipulation and control. The leadership also recommends you as a genuine person who demonstrates remarkable balance of qualities and virtues.

Leadership is not only an indicator of the perseverance of people toward a particular goal, but it is also an indicator of their ethical value. Do you remember the Evangelist Matthew? He was telling that the Pharisees, wanting to lay a trap to Jesus and urging him to disobedience towards the Roman domination, would have asked him whether to pay the tax to Caesar. However, Jesus feeling the trap which was preparing for him, asked them the coin, showed them the effigy of the king and told them: "Give to Caesar what is Caesar's". These words serve in recognizing the merits, attribution, role and achievements of each one of us.

For your merits, attribution, and your role to be recognized, then people must consider you worthy of representing them, and of accepting you as a competent person who can appreciate what he receives from them: their consideration, respect and motivation to continue their mission. Just like the Romanian comedy actor, Puiu Calinescu, you must conform to the public, to admit that they are right. Your ideals must be of admiration, viable and should be followed. But the efforts you make in their fulfillment can be slowed down due to the criticism that you do it by yourself if your leadership does not rise to a higher level of influence.

Leadership: In order to win people over to your side, must you first step on their side, knowing that what you have to say by the suggestive force of your representative image deserves any conjunctural transformation and any gratitude?

1. How do you transform yourself into an agent of the change?

2. Can you take hard decisions that will make a difference in the world around you?

3. Are you tempted to stop at one point? Or, you continue to increase your power of influence? If yes, in what way?

4. The moral of the people improves when you are among them? How do you build solid and lasting relationships? Are you evolving with people by generating that vibration, the attraction that would determine them to unite around you? Are you creating a consistent and constant imagine about you - that of a man who paints his existence according to some high ideals?

Do people feel they have an ally in you, on which they can rely on? The German poet and dramatist Johann Christoph Friedrich von Schiller said that the world cannot give what it does not receive from you. Namely, be a man of quality and they will give you their attachment. For winning people by your side, you must first pass by their side. You will enjoy as many passing as the others will show to you and for determining them to show it, you will have to earn their trust - by your attitude, by your way of being, by what you know, by your sincerity, by your authenticity, and by the way you juggle with the rules.

No magic is not stronger than this one. People feel a sense of repulsion (or does not feel anything) against the man unconcerned with their feelings, and who is unable to express his feelings by virtue of his role, by the way of using any of leadership's elements and by their simultaneous crystallization. Do you know how it is named this? Charisma.

Leadership: Can you adapt the actual expression of the way you see yourself to the way you perceive your physical, emotional, spiritual, and social characteristics in an ideal context of stage interference?

When you help the ones around you, you help yourself indirectly. If you want to enjoy an adequate attention from people, then you must be on the same wavelength with their aspirations. Your leadership must express the same harmony which they foresee. Alternatively, paraphrasing the writer Alexandre Dumas, you must create a world around them, on which would rule your thinking and feeling.

Your leadership's ability is affected by the way you develop your own potential, by the level of your requirements in your self-evaluation and capitalization. Only by developing your competencies, increasing the requirements towards you and your knowledge of leading, you could approach the maximum level of your potential. Remember that the excellence in leadership is achieved by making serious efforts of improvement and development of the competencies, abilities, along with the increased demands towards you - the leader.

Just as a painter distributes the color with more intensity, without diminishing at all the perspective on which are situated the components - and so your personality, in order to be recognized and understood, you must impose with great caution, diplomacy and tact, with great ambition, responsibly, with more balance, a specific pace of leadership, by which to communicate your emotions, without getting away from the concrete reality that you share with the others. Furthermore, without diminishing at all the impression of continuity by the way you relate to them, and their expectations, to what you can do in order to unite them around a common purpose that would ensure the recognition of your superiority.

Highlighting your personality in an ideal context of stage interference means behaving like an actor: acting naturally, truly, necessarily, depending on the situation you are in, bringing to the surface organic reactions, thus achieving "awareness" spectators.

Leadership One on One designates the positive image of the leader in the people's vision, designates that remarkable personality, that authentic moral, emotional, and professional authority, which represents him in the relationships with the other people. Many positive things begin to happen when a leader demonstrates its ability of empathizing with the other people - their morale is improving, while he gains influence and credibility. In other words, if people follow you for who you are and for what you represent, that is unconditional, then you can consider yourself a King.

Obtaining performance in leadership requires time and a work of Sisyphus with the people. The leader must give his best to make himself understood because only in this way he can win people by his side - becoming true allies in achieving the intended purpose and ultimately to attain recognition and even material and emotional welfare of all.

In this ongoing battle conducted by the leader, he must have reliable allies, because he is not an "Atlas" that can bear on his shoulders all the work and the team responsibilities. A good leader will find the ways, means and the appropriate tact to become a "King" for each of the team.

In the game of chess, in order to make the small rook, the king must not be in check, and the space between him and the tower should be free. Similarly, in leadership, for the leader to have a great influence on people, he must not be in opposition with them. But he must be free in expressing honestly and openly any feelings, to show off his personality, by transmitting positively his beliefs and ideals, and in the same time, to modify their emotions, thinking and the perception about themselves after his own rules and principles of leadership.

Leadership Personality Test

On November 23, 2013

Provide access to the configuration mode of your personality, not to linger too long in a place subject to emotional pressures.

All appearances are against what I have best in me. It could be said that I have willingly created an image of myself. An image that allowed me to face the world. While the world was fascinated by an enchanting, cheerful, intelligent, mysterious Anais Nin. This other woman, the shy, but strong, practical woman, insecure, disinterested, childish, shouts to be heard on the pages of the diary. It was the place where her scattered being was found, where she escaped the defeats of life.

In her diary Anais Nin confessed with sobriety: "There have always been at least two women at the age of twenty-nine. A stray and desperate woman who feels drowned and the other who approached such a circumstance how they would have stood up on the stage, hiding their real emotions, because they were only weakness, helplessness, despair, to show the world a smile, curiosity, enthusiasm and interest in it."

So was Geo talking about me, amazed by what he was discovering:

- There's a huge skill in happiness and terrible despair in you. I do not know how that is explained. You are uneasy, as if someone threatens you.

*I was experiencing that threat. I was feeling it. Who was threatening me? Who was the enemy? Maybe the interim I've lived in since I was born. I'm afraid of tomorrow. And yet I expect it. And I believe in it. Because I'm waiting for a miracle.**

Leadership: With what can you fill up the content of truth that makes you bring forth future generations at the moment of your experiences, so as not to give your image an unsightly design?

Truth is the work of the word that defines your perception of life when you spend some time in the loneliness of your being. And the sublime content of truth that man aspires to in an attempt to freely express the options "to be" in various circumstances, is meant to steady the temperature of reality, which he identifies himself with at the self level through the "self-image" - consisting, in its turn, of ideologies, life rules, existing models and patterns.

This truth can be filled with nostalgia, anxiety, suffering, or things you wanted to experience and never could. But in this case your image gets some doubtful shadows, paralyzed between life and non-existence, suggesting the idea of the end of the world, which can only be dramatic and absurd. Such an image, when the spirit moves to the point of an emotional exhaustion that contains only the unceasing expectation of a miracle of healing, does not correspond to the inflamed, the energy of the sense of security with which one pursues the realization of a great purpose.

What is important is how to solve the form of personality, its innovative configuration, exerting more than occasionally, at the thought level, that mighty influence towards good. In this case, the existence of leadership is primarily due to the unique value of man, suggesting an achievement up to perfection, of a fulfillment that is consistent with the stable standard of its character. An excessive introspection becomes dangerous !

Leadership: Should you use a DOWN trigger with an UPDATE function defined by the end-user of the life-grabbing demands of life to argue for your interiorization as a way out of the precariousness and temporality of a world forever abandoned?

The "Down" Trigger is executed automatically at fulfilling the order "I'll be somebody else", truncating the reality inside and outside of man, rewarding subjectively, biased and threatening, any battle with himself. When you try to be more than you are, you have to forever abandon the world that chains you in itself.

The one falling into the extremes of his own being, between the phenomenal (accessible and visible) ego and the nominal ego (inaccessible and invisible), automatically activates the "Down" trigger and goes back to square one – assuming he cannot substitute for his own image. And in this case, he cannot look outside himself, outside what defines him. He will not be able to distance himself from the doubtful identity that limits him.

In order to highlight that personality side that gives priority to the particular situations and motivations for capitalizing on the positive self, examining the possible consequences of the challenges and opportunities that the desire for self-sufficiency raises, a better synchronization is needed with the reality in which you are located.

Applying an existential knowledge sufficient to cross the realms of more rigid or too abstract thinking is characterized by the true representation of reality by the absence of the idealization of one's own person and of the circumstances in which you act.

Leadership: Can you increase the impact force that acts on the point of shaping your identity of man meant to live without suspicion by altering the composition of that world that demands more and more of your time and feelings?

Gaining experience in elucidating the essence of human character, the most profound possible sense of human existence, through a realistic appreciation of all intentions, values, which hide behind their actions and thoughts, is the first step you need to take in order to begin your apprenticeship in the secrets of leadership.

To try and outline a character, a personality, to prepare the victory of your integration into a new universe, to discover for yourself a new formula of the nuances that value the entire structure of the human soul, this is the ambition that maybe truly bothers you. The Chimera which you tirelessly follow, as if you were walking through a maze and come from on dead end to another, without finding a means of escape.

Leadership becomes a great dead end that produces and intensifies a superficial vision of the whole, but can never be filled with accurate predictions, mathematical, if the elements of order of a set of values, attitudes, opinions and motivations, do not have a well determined weight in the appreciation of human character.

And it is without worth that you pry into the depths of man in order to reveal the good and simple truths that can be accepted in the reality that you compose, if they have no impact in the reassessment of self-esteem and emotional states.

The composition of the personality behind a controlled attitude is supportive of the depth of self-knowledge given to man caught in the whirl of everyday worries when the door of his life is blatantly beating a bell, a piece of soul with a great price that throbs in a miraculous phenomenon of creativity demonstrated through writing.

Leadership Providers

On August 07, 2014

Transform your leadership into a flexible instrument for the reception of evolutionary trends, by adjusting the possibilities of amplifying the knowledge provided by a foreign authority.

The film editing is made under the powerful influence that Kabuki theater shows had over Eisenstein, the art of the Japanese actors he saw during his tour in Moscow in 1928. Eisenstein, fascinated by the group of Kabuki actors, wrote a laudatory article and their method became the basis of his film editing.

*The genesis of ideas, of the novel method of his films, especially from "The old and the New", has one of its main sources here. But things settle themselves organically, ideas stemming from one another and thus acquiring suite, maintaining perfect consistency. At the Kabuki Theater, Eisenstein meets the practical existence of the principals he thought about years before hand, made here, intuitively, through that which he now calls "monistic ensemble". In this theater the future director "heard movement" and "saw sound". **

Leadership: Can you identify the presence of new authorities that can clarify the true intentions of the person you want to become, in the attempt of representing a new Unity of the artwork?

By having the conditions of being a selective connection between influences and achievements, in the pace of new knowledge that gets involuntarily involved in determining a higher science, situated at the convergence of vast areas, the quality human resource plays a key role. This complex entity, called a role model, with the purpose of identifying new possibilities of obtaining desired results, is the key to a unique number of variables, of the additional factor type. It enhances the reputation of a profession.

Whenever you try to perfect your leadership, analyzing in more detail the exciting possibilities of using new practices, ideas or techniques, you will find yourself in the presence of a new authority which can clarify, directly or indirectly, the true intentions the person you want to become. This authority is nothing more than a long-awaited premiere, a part of the challenge of being present at a spontaneous manifestation in which artists create, on the basis of space and the disposition created by context, a montage that puts various life stories in a new context.

What you become in the process of achieving success is a gesture of artistic solidarity, as an artistic and intellectual game between artists and spectators, a more advanced intellectual development where interest is the voluntary attention born from the symbiosis of the old with the new, with which you appreciate work that gives meaning to a eulogy of the mind, an overwhelming passion for the nobleness of the superior thought.

A new Unity of the Artwork can be represented by the conjunction of what an artist specifically has, a certain power to transfigure the hero from a character dominated by fear and humility, into an intelligent being and a leader, and what each of us imagines themselves to be: a character created by a genius that is individualized.

Leadership: Can you clearly establish the evolution tendency of your art content in conjunction with the expansion phenomenon of an area of interest, in the successive accumulations of form and content?

The serious approach to everything related to professional development is an opportunity to sign out of a system of limited thinking and of establishing a connection with a new "provider" of ideas and thought patterns, namely with an intermediary of change. And this connection shouldn't be subject to a "ban" from accessing a higher level of development.

Oftentimes, leadership cannot be applied to the principle of expansion "the more you move forward, the better you'll function", unless you change the provider, in order to avoid the slowing effect of erosion and accumulation of successive innovation potential.

The influence given by the presence of a new source of authority can contribute to providing new scientific achievements, only if it provides you with new sources of inspiration. Then you have to meet the practical existence of these resources and the principles underlying the opinions or ideas that you have been sent.

You can turn leadership into a flexible tool for receiving evolutionary trends only by adjusting the possibilities of knowledge amplification, sourcing from others' art of transmitting a new impulse of development. Your area of interest must be fortified by the expression of personal experiences through a novel method of staging a memorable, long-lived performance as a creation that receives the admiration of the whole world.

Leadership Experience does not start only because of the analysis you apply to yourself throughout the development process, but it rather represents the crystallization of a new form of power, in an attempt to build a new scientific structure through a form of art representation appropriate to your own vision.

The trend of evolution of the art content you create is given by the specificity of an exceptional interpretation, correlated to a large message: increase your significance to the fulfillment of the destiny of the protagonists you represent !

Leadership Providers are those wonderful adventurers that, armed with the latest achievements of science, and endowed with innovative ideas and a high capacity for persuasion, offer and induce an ascending trend, of superior quality, making it an "authority" in this area. They have the responsibility of understanding what is available, which might suit the needs or preferences of accessibility to a higher level of development of a person, putting all sources of inspiration at hand, necessary to the improvement and promotion of their art.

In order to feel change and accept it as a constant of evolution, you first need to find someone who will provide you with a vision, a path to follow and a strong motivation.

Leadership Questions

On May 10, 2010

Are you primarily responsible for finding the right leadership model?

- Is your impact a surface one or a depth one?

Leadership Scenario

On December 12, 2010

Leadership is a scenario that should be put well in place before releasing in the world.

Recently someone asked me a very surprising question, at which added a very special compliment. I enjoyed both. Mr. Sergiu's question was if I created somehow a scenario of work, any method or any particular pattern after which I can guide myself in achieving my articles, so successful from his point of view, articles that really capture the essence of what leadership means.

- Mr. Sergiu, more than anything, I try always to tell a great story in every article or book that I write, trying to get to the essence of the idea that I submitted, taking into account only what it is the priority. The idea that I'm giving should be as simple - as easy to understand, so to be expressed in ordinary terms, to be concrete, credible, and at the same time as deep as possible. In order to keep readers a wakeful interest I must meet their expectations, otherwise my idea will not persist and will not arouse their curiosity.

From where is my inspiration? It's from everywhere. A simple conversation, information found in a book, the latest news, a comic web material, a picture from a magazine, etc., all can offer me inspiration. But I need to have intuition to see the idea ... wisdom to understand . . . and courage to use it by myself.

Leadership: What is the place that your "brand" occupies in an attempt to frame your own experiences of knowledge in the reality of a narrative universe in which no excuse for reflection occupies a central place?

Just as each scenarist creates a scenario and after that he film it, just as each professional football team firstly arranges their game scenarios after entering the field - so a good writer creates at first his scenario and then goes to the book.

The scenario that I create, namely the establishment of the article or book that I follow to "bring out to world", is carefully staged. Under no circumstances I do not pass to the proper text if the scenario is not good. It must have a starting point and an end point. And it is absolutely imperative that the description of the item / chapter (that short phrase that illustrates the essential from the beginning) to match always with the end and the title I choose to be in close connection with the subject that I broach.

My performance will be worth even more with how the scenario will be better.

The brand is the story of how to introduce a new concept, a new language or a new way of seeing, judging and appreciating things and life, which explicitly recognizes the importance of extending your own experience of knowledge.

Reflection is a process of thinking and perception of ideas that has as a first condition (the manifestation of creative potency) that of increasing the amount of information arising from the process of transition from synthetic to the analytic phase. Reflection is needful to examine ways of building new visions, perspectives and points of view, according to its operating conditions arising in the vast space in which you perform artistically.

Leadership: Do your art and skills blend together into a true performance from the perspective of understanding reflection to an Ego that sees itself as the most important part of reality?

The two patterns, art and mastery, must simultaneously blend for your leadership to have an "entering" effect into an accelerated performance growth. The elaborated scenario, adapted to leadership, by which you guide the skill to master your profession, especially those inclinations worth systematically and periodically determined, must be included in a specified reference framework of your value, consolidated into a single foundation of the whole determination to express your identity, through the fertilizing power of thoughts, ideas, opinions and points of view related to contexts different from the conventional ones.

For the artists and masters who alternate in various roles in the assertion of personal identity, the success in assigning art a meaning able to intelligently undermine any landmark of interest, signification and appreciation from everyone, becomes a space that they explore to the maximum and know how to extract the best of it.

From another, more pragmatic point of view, signaling a potential professional failure, due to the lack of examples in the conceptual and expressive plan, but especially to "internal" and "external" limitations or constraints, gathers together the approach versions that are not successive versus differences between successive versions.

Your Ego sees itself as the most important part of reality when the role you assume (as the mix of image, reality, your message and context of taking effect) interacts with the subject and becomes itself a necessity of the world. An actor knows how to control the behavior and reactions so that the impression it induces to the audience will rise up to the intentions.

Leadership: Do you manage to present your "story" depending on the reflection of your own performances in a special reception, so that your impact is recognized and valued beyond superficial appearances?

The scenario is actually a version of truth that you make available to people, a big flirt with the science of composition of value and ideas in the spirit of which you trained and professionally educated yourself, an adaptation of your own beliefs and orientations to others' expectations, if they are worth it or not.

In addition, your position to what you convey, a message, a vision, a lesson, moods or emotions, may be relatively marginalized and even your self-image can be detrimental to the significance that you award to leadership. Sometimes, they gradually develop a sort of inferiority to your Ego, especially if you fail to present your "story" based on the true measure of your performance.

The fact that you have leadership qualities does not mean that you hold all the answers and are able to find the right "story" to attract people. People want the story to be suited to their roles and a scenario to represent them where duty demands it.

Leadership: How can building a plausible and detailed scenario become an art form in itself, considering revealing a void in people's consciousness: "look what you miss"?

The famous character Peter Munk, from the writer Wilhelm Hauff's work, asked the little glass man to fulfill his desire – to have the richest glassware in the region, but without asking him to reveal the mystery of where exactly he could sell the glass at the best price.

If you will venture to go ahead people, building scenarios based purely on fiction, so which do not reinforce that sense of reality control that people want changed, you will end up like Peter Munk. In the end, you will remain with a scenario with purpose, but without verdict and great expectations. The reception of your own creation will be made from the position of an unfulfilled deed.

Look what you know ! Look what you miss ! The secret of your success lies in the leadership scenario that you create and you have to elucidate it well before giving way in the world. I guess you don't imagine that somehow you'll get to the top of people adopting the classic style: only promises and explanations, but nothing concrete and viable.

People will give you the vote of confidence only if you come up with an adjusted scenario that makes sense and is plausible, and where are exposed as many concrete details (attention ! details that can materialize quickly in courses of actions). If you want to break patterns and get as many bonus points, wake people's interest by making a scenario whose message will have a lasting impact. Spark people's interest in revealing a gap in their consciousness: "look what you know" and "look what you miss".

Leadership manifests in the insistence with which you structure your vision, the form of manipulation of art through creation and authenticity, so that the lasting impact of your creation reflects your way in the world, that is, the deep and lasting transformation you inspire in others.

Leadership scenario lies in the power of acumen and understanding of the essence of things; is the only form of pure "art" by which you can express ideas and intentions - and is the safest form of manipulation. It is representing the way by which you can mark the decisive point gaining a lot of supporters.

For the ideas you want to promote to continue, it is absolutely imperative that the scenario you present yourself in front of people to be surprising, to meet their expectations, but also be easy to understand and apply that to allow you to use the ideas immediately.

If you wish to make known the quality of your leadership, then get out into the world with a great scenario. But do not waste time writing an "essay" that will not like anyone and whose essence you'll not be able to put into practice.

Would be ideal if each fragment of your scenario will be very charming to seduce people and to stimulate their emotions – in the way manages a real scenarist or a true writer. You have the right to stage any character, any decor, any action, any idea, any principle or any rule of leadership and to handle all of them as you like.

Conclusion: Leadership requires that you have near native qualities and skill's certificates, and an action scenario well tuned where to be specified both methods and ways of obtaining the desired effect – a scenario to make it known worldwide otherwise you will never have any supporter.

Leadership Unleashed

On October 24, 2014

Contribute to creating a new self-identity by permanently renewing the "truth" that defines you.

The shooting usually take place in good conditions. Tisse is looking for expensive compositions whipped by the director's plastic imaginations. But Serghei Eisenstein's preoccupation for the actor is, apparently, unilateral. Coming to the shooting location, the actors didn't know what they would film that day. He was using them as plastic elements of the frame, without dealing too much with the interpretation. That's why the director had difficulties working with the actors. In order to overcome them, he accepts the help of Elisabeta Telesova, who will remain his counselor in these matters and also, a good friend.

*The problem will still be standing, and later on talks will emerge about the fact that Eisenstein destroys the personality of the actors, suppressing their interpretation in order to obtain plastic expressivity and he will be blamed that he can't stand any critic to that end. **

Leadership: Can you give credibility to a creation that finds itself in opposition with what's happening in a context of authentic reception?

To create new forms of art by delimiting orientations and points of view, but in view of an eventual agreement between parts, it means to distinguish and to sort what authentically belongs to you and what you have borrowed from others. Or better said, it means to get in contact with a certain truth about yourself in order to use the best in others, invoking a so called judgment authority – that has a rejection force.

The truth about you is similar to taking appearance as essence, a distance function that resorts to itself through the stringent need of asserting yourself in a way that forces others to give up or to consider themselves pariah because of reasons that they can't control. This means to give credibility to a personal creation that finds itself in opposition with everything that happens in a certain context of authentic reception.

But these authentic personal creations where the notions of "form" and "substance" give in to a certain temptation of the outside world, by means of test and research subjects that intercept every type of request will have to possess the characteristics of art.

This is possible only if the artistic fantasy doesn't fly away from the fields of human and if they don't cross a restricted space, an exclusive field of science, technique, inspiration and experience that lack warmth – in order to obtain the expressiveness that individualises you on the stage of great achievements.

Leadership: What is the weight that you feel seeing yourself thinking in a world that eludes you?

We remind ourselves of the myth of the car that thinks, in the vision of French philosopher Mikel Dufrenne, symbolizing the malady of the century, understanding this by the heaviness that a person feels seeing himself thinking and wanting in a world that eludes him, where he alienates himself and where he feels uprooted. A kind of a priori knowledge that has taken root in the depths of conscience and that people not only under-evaluate, but completely ignore, in order to focus only on the essential matters that interest him.

And this weight felt with the force of an expressing and expansion addiction of knowledge, on the terms of some requests for approaching and using the art for which "test subjects" don't have enough training, resonates in delimiting one's own individuality from the status of tolerated person.

In order to reach that level of leadership that offers you the chance to "reconfigure" identity according to everyone else, you have to fight against this tendency of organizing creation as a "closed totality" where others represent only "plastic elements of the frame".

Destroying the personality of those who support you in the process of promoting authentic art, suppressing their interpretation in order to obtain plastic expressivity, is the equivalent of your damnation to the helplessness of making yourself understood, vertiginously advancing to the helplessness of accepting and standing yourself.

The truth that defines the director's reason for focusing more on content than on form is a faithful reflection of reality in thinking concerning the approval or disapproval of interpreting roles that are not his.

Leadership Unleashed underlines those orientations towards perfecting art, under the command of a continuous self-identity that exaggerates its importance, powerfully exhibiting itself in a direction opposite to the behavior of being open and tolerant towards others.

Setting a limit to your own understanding of art over which the professional future is built, transited by visions and the passion for detail, they don't have as reference point the quality of being empathic – but exactly this quality is one of the pillars of acknowledging your own superiority or inferiority.

Leadership Up Down

On March 23, 2009

Your ability to adapt to each situation challenges your ability to lead people through the instinct to discern the defining features of a situation such as: "you can't be in control without becoming one with them."

Training from morning till night. Not a whole army, but only a few comrades in arms, which on their own initiative decided to join Colonel Cal Rhodes in the dangerous mission to rescue prisoners from a camp in Vietnam.

However, at a given point, Cal was about to cut loose, he felt tired and reluctantly. He noticed that all those comrades in arms seemed to not be with him body and soul, ready to serve him full of enthusiasm. It was not easy for a man at his age to take so hard and heavy daily training. He seemed tired not only physically, but also mentally.

In what way had to increase Cal people's enthusiasm? His soul was filled with sadness; he felt that he was not able to cope with the load that he imposed it by himself. Therefore, he delegated Kevin Scott, a former officer in the Navy, to deal with training instead of him.

Leadership: Are you able to set the destination you want to reach, but do not have control over what happens around you and what will happen after reaching the proposed goal?

The key in leadership is to have control over what presents itself as a situation gone out of control. That is, you must have control over what happens when you are away from people and your intended purpose. Because, at a certain point in your life, you can lose control of what is happening to you, and thus your life will reach the will of fate.

Remember that if you do not have control over what you think, you cannot control your actions, and trying to control what you cannot influence can be the tragic nuance of a feeling of frustration at the consequences that unexpected events can have on your position.

To lead people, to control and guide them in the direction desired by you is a test that, like most leaders, and you can fail it at one point. Of course, the way you are testing your ability to lead people, greatly changes your mindset.

Leadership: How do you feel and behave about what does not favor you at the level of the destination you have reached, in terms of the control you exercise if you face your own resistance?

To lead people it is like getting into an elevator. You get into the elevator knowing the perfect destination, but you do not hold any control over what could happen when traveling, being dominated by uncertainties. Just like you do not know the outside of the elevator, and you do not have a clear certainty of movement – just the same could happen and in your relationship with people: not to know all the feelings that animate them, not to have a clear certainty of their motivation, of their potential of personally and professionally development, and therefore, no to know the direction in which your leadership will go.

Basically, Colonel Cal Rhodes, from the movie „Uncommon Valor (1983)" remained suspended physically and emotionally in time and space. Just, he does not know what and how to rectify the situation in which he was in. It was as he might have been in an elevator that ascends, without being able to establish visual or tactile contact with someone from the outside, and without knowing where he was going.

A man who faces his own resistance, that is, who understands his role as a stage in life that can simply turn him into someone else, beyond his duties, and who tries his best to fight to regain his lost position, is a man who knows how to comfort himself, a man who knows how to motivate himself beyond pain and who looks beyond the appearance of a known world.

Give your leadership a chance if you want to keep long your position. For it, you must penetrate the inner world of other people, to get close to them physically and emotionally revealing to them the significance of the mission, its importance and the arguments for that they must remain engaged on, with a growing enthusiasm. Your attitude and ability to adapt to each situation apart is the key to the whole process of finishing your leadership.

In leadership you have to take control of what you can control, but at the same time be willing to forgive yourself, because you have no control over what you did not expect to happen.

Leadership Up, Down suggests the stage of your development in relation to factors and difficult situations, stressful, which can affect your qualities and aptitudes. As a leader, you can get up to the highest level of confidence in front of the people, or you can descend to the lowest level depending on how you act, depending on how you are perceived and depending on your ability to adapt to each situation apart.

Learn How To Make Yourself Noticed

On January 26, 2009

Prove your exceptional qualities in a process of generating newly added value.

It's unbelievable ! It's exceptional ! And yes, it's true ! What I have seen today on my way home was the most important business lesson which I have ever learned, which is not tought at any course and which you also have to retain it.

I was on the Stefan cel Mare Boulevard and I was going home, when suddenly something draw my attention. In front of me at five metres a pitbull without a leash was walking beside his owner. After so many accidents that had happened and were discussed on TV and in the newspapers, I thought that these ferocious dogs should walk only with their owners and in leash and especially with muzzle. But today I changed my opinion. This pitbull was looking just like any other dog – just that he hadn't traces of strikes; he was clean and tidy, washed and well trained. He also had a muzzle, but I am convinced he didn't need it.

More than 10 minutes I walked beside the pit-bull and his owner. And in all this time, even though there were a lot of people on the boulevard, the dog didn't jump at anyone. He was always near his owner. Sometimes he avoided people, but always came back. He didn't do anything on the sidewalk, not scratching the fleas, not jumping to any passing of so many who went on the sidewalk and no one unscathed him, even was a large-sized dog. More than this, I have to say that everyone was looking after this extraordinary pitbull well trained and well tidy.

Leadership: Are you able to generate an added value from all the forms of results that can be validated from the angle of perception that you leave to those who look at you?

But not the pitbull is the key of this event, but his owner who really was a professional trainer. Look at a man who knew how to make him noticed between the people. I am convinced that every day he was drawing new clients, new people who were willing to see their dog as well trained. Personal, if I would want to give my dog to a trainer, be sure that this is the trainer that I would go two because he inspired me a lot of trust. The way the pitbull behaved between lots of people assured me that the trainer is a good professionist who knows how to affirm himself in a spectacular manner, who knows to put in value his practical qualities.

Truly amazing is the fact that these kinds of people who know how to make their services and products known to attract clients, don't come across any time and anywhere. But when they are around us it's impossible to not observe them. And this is why they deserve to talk about them all the time because they are remarkable, unique, and the services that offer have a high level of quality and professionalism.

Can you express your uniqueness by associating yourself with the image of a man who masters a particular art? Is attitude the one that sets the tone for your own "brand"? What are your excellent competencies? What do you think is the essential quality that you lack for being notable? Do you manifest a genuine care towards your potential to make things work? Are you supporting the decision to have a positive interaction with the other people?

The results you get through a demonstration of art and the display of a certain state of mind that includes attitude and determination can be validated as a practice of the perspective of relationship from the angle of perception that you leave to those who look at you.

Leadership: Can you prove your exceptional qualities by using an image attributed to an attempt to maximize some measure of feedback that can be used independently or in building a new personal feature?

What you project in the eyes of others has the need to highlight a relevant set of qualities that reveals your singular experience, a self-confirming potential, something that can be traced, but understood only by the function of your attributes if you manage to demonstrate the usefulness of a particular request, cause or approach.

In order to draw everyone's attention, to succeed in making yourself noticed, you have to learn how to promote your products and excellent products that you offer. Your goal is to create a unique image, well placed in the mind of other people, respectively the clients.

Seth Godin, the author of the famous paper "The Purple Cow" said a big truth: "The more intransigent your market, the more crowded the marketplace, the busier your customers, the more you need a remarkable idea. Half measures will fail."

So, it's very clear who will step ahead – people, respectively the firms that have the courage to make known their services of high performance that know how to augment the number of clients and who understand the idea of making yourself noticed.

Being remarkable means to define a form of singularity that only a performer can bring specifically to his art without thinking about the fee to be paid by the interested party.

New added value is a remarkable idea presented as a good that does not exhaust its resources, being necessary to preserve it as a gift of soul.

All that a person can give the best from himself should not be used up, but fully capitalized. The value of an individual endowed with those qualities and ideal features which allow him to provide a reference role in the enviable record of his career - is similar to an operating system designed to function both on the desktop, also on the phone or tablet.

Every such individual is endowed with an "operating system" that facilitates better the progress in their own development by continuous supplying of the communication's flow between his traits, skills and motivation - the three main elements that, connecting simultaneously, optimizes his value.

Have you ever heard about Thomas Edison? I'm sure you did. Have you ever heard about Bill Gates? I'm sure you did. Have you ever heard about Elvis Presley? What about Michael Jordan? I'm sure you did. We've all heard of them because they knew how to make themselves notice.

The greatest benefit to performers is that they know how to make themselves noticed and know how to assert themselves under their own company BEFOREHAND, that is, before gaining anything from the importance they reveal in the eyes of public opinion.

Leadership is between two equal forces: first you gain experience through the passion you cultivate yourself, then you gain notoriety through the image that you build with what you add to "favorites" in the preferences of others.

Learn To See

On January 07, 2009

To be very sure of what you know, you first have to realize what you do not know.

- Lieutenant, have you noticed anything unusual about these riders? Colonel Diego asks one of the officers around him.

- No, sir.

- That's why you're not a colonel. If you had been a good observer, you would have noticed that none of their horses had water cans attached to them. How can one cross the desert in such hot weather without carrying a water bottle?

This dialog from the movie "Guns of the Magnificent Seven (1969)", represents the essence of this article. And the question:" Did you notice something unusual?" you should imprint it well in your mind because you will hear it everywhere.

You will never succeed to get better results, in any field, if you do not train your mind to see beyond the appearances. It does not matter how talented you are in what you do, certainly, if you do not learn to see the things that other people around you do not notice them, for sure, you will never be able to progress in an important function of management.

One of the reliable ways of forming you as a leader, of improving you perfectly is to notice those minor details, those essential things that give you support, just as a skilled painter manages to notice subtle differences related to the quality of a work of art, distinguishing the false from the original. By bringing in your support those arguments and solutions that emphasize your strengths and skills, you could more easily propel towards success.

Leadership: Can you establish a vision that results in a landmark assessment structure that can be identified as attributes of contexts of being aware of aspects that do not stand out?

Everywhere around us there are many opportunities that can propel us in our career, but we do not seem to observe most of them. Why? Because we did not learn to see them, because we never trained our minds to recognize the "invisible" things. We do not filter in an appropriate manner the information that our eyes offer because we got used to see things the way they are, instead of seeing them the way they could be.

Your chance to demonstrate your value and to promote yourself in the company, in the most efficient way as possible, is it found where you are looking for?

This chance to change yourself, to exceed your limits, to reach the highest level possible in the company's hierarchy, is like a magic pebble with magical powers, which is found somewhere in the wilderness of the desert. Do you have the courage to bet on yourself that you will find it?

The capability to see allows you to observe things from the distance, things that are hidden, not only the close ones. As a leader you have to learn to see things with much more interest and in the same time to look at them towards the future, to observe the opportunities it may offer you.

Be flexible, change your way of thinking, and your way of approaching problems, in general. Get used, not to look away so rapidly from a point of interest to another, but look at all with more attention, analyze every situation, every thing, from multiple angles and perspectives.

Leadership: Do you intend to give a background image of the meaning of a vision, through the way in which you think up the future from the perspective of a long-term evaluation of the "intangible visible" effect?

More than three years ago, Donald Trump, one of the wealthiest men in the world, launched on the market a new product of which I am sure you have heard. It is about the movie called "The Apprentice". Suddenly, after only five days since the launch, all the newspapers started to talk about the great idea of the billionaire, while in all the specialized shops were registered record sales. Shortly afterwards, all the televisions of the world began to broadcast the TV show at prime times.

Donald Trump won fabulous sums from the sale of this series. Even so, I ask you, why didn't another business man thought about this idea? Why somebody else didn't make this extraordinary show?

The answer is the following. Nobody, except Donald Trump could see this great opportunity. Nobody, except Donald Trump, thought about making this kind of show of negotiation and sales. I can say that Donald Trump saw this opportunity where all the other businessmen have not seen anything. This is the ability „to see" that I mentioned earlier.

He thought up the future of a new business idea from the perspective of long-term evaluation of the "intangible visible" effect. That is, what you see can be perceived as an opportunity to explore a business concept only by deepening a certain topic of interest on a priority area that has not been explored in terms of added value.

Leadership is an opportunity to demonstrate access to new areas of interest analyzed from the perspective of what you can observe as being unusual where others do not look or where others put and end to it.

Dear friends, today there are no alchemists, only entrepreneurs. I mean people who can see in everything they touch or observe a great idea from which they can make fortunes. And the good part is that the ability" to see" can be learned, but for this you must practice and practice.

Look around and examine everything like a separate event. Look at every thing distinguishingly, from different points of view. Look carefully. What minor thing you are missing? Do you see something unusual?

Optimize your quality and performance, by practicing the ability to "see".

Leon's Ivory Tower

On January 22, 2011

Explore the sensitive side of your personality to facilitate the merger between your world and others.

When she stepped onto the corridor through the front of her apartment's door, Mathilda realized that something terrible had happened. Her father's body lies on the floor at the entrance. No doubt the rest of her family shared the same fate, in a Mafia-style execution. The blood froze in her veins. The voices were heard in the apartment. A creepy-looking man with a gun in the hand stood right next to the door.

She had to pretend careless. So, cautious and full of strength, she hid her agitation and shivers and went farther on. But that man pried her with suspicion.

He reached at the door from the end of the corridor. In which, very recently, Leon has moved. The Killer. The Professional.

Leadership: Are you prepared to try to determine the possibilities of reproducing certain facts or circumstances such as "unmotivated absence", under the conditions determined by the time and space set by the demands of a peaceful intrusion in your life?

The time of the big trial. On the other side of the door, Leon, with the gun on his hand, was staring through the door eye. He was surprised: not expected such a display from the gentle lady who had a great power to control her emotional reactions, to contain her tumult. But his inner voice whispered: "Be careful, curb your desire to get emotionally involved in the affairs of others and comply with all the rules and all the procedures."

With a heavy heart, with her eyes bathed in tears, keeping the pain in her soul like a rock in her heart, Mathilda knocked on the door. One time and once again. As if she had lived there and would be expected that someone close to her to open the door. She felt the chill of fear getting through the whole body. If that scary guy, armed, from her front door would have realized who she really is, he would killed her immediately. She must have confidence in her deep instincts, she must have faith, and she must hope that Leon will open the door, although she was not too sure of herself. Every moment meant an eternity.

Leon, dominated by demureness, but also by the characteristic skepticism of all the professional killers, was still undecided. He said to himself: "Mathilda's just a child, has no trace of malice - but can she be reliable?"

The look of the girl, which desperate expression would move even tigers, has stirred the soul of Leon. Being thrilled by feeling how helpless she is, and being unable to endure the weight of thoughts, he opened the door to the girl and left her to join in. He saved her.

Can you acquire that autonomy and control that leadership can use to create a role of responsibility?

The role of responsibility lies with a person who can give a different meaning to unintelligible or adverse events, so as to completely change the perspective of the outcome that can conclude his destiny.

If we multiply search channels of human beliefs, in his possible state of victim of circumstances, through which representative self-images, designed by his hidden ego circulate, can it happen that we process them and, possibly, pump some positive energy, a little background color? At least until we bring man to the prototype stage safety system or up to the exemplarity generating stage.

To some difficult levels of existence, in the service of a transition power to a certain state of mind giving confidence and stability, people are bombarded with images coming in so many channels, that we can no longer categorize, classify and use. Those images of a lost, essentially vulnerable self, engaged in the spiritual insufficiency.

Suddenly, they get blocked in the stage where they can no longer reconsider their position towards the version of reality that they direct in their mind. And a possible return to the normality accepted, more as a condition for obtaining flexibility in relation to others, especially in relation to what they feel from outside, becomes more a psychological and emotional experience.

To win that autonomy and control that leadership can use to create a role of responsibility, you must climb down from the ignorance and moral weakness pedestal - in the midst of the excitement of life and people who get trapped in the underground of that vulnerable area where feelings, acquiring maximum intensity, defy all reason.

Leadership: Do you have the courage to explore the sensitive side of your personality, without affecting the value of an image that perpetuates itself between parallel mirrors?

Do you remember the novel "The Count of Monte Cristo"? Do you remember what Mercedes said to Edmond when he spared her son from death? - "It is brave, it is lordly, it is sublime to forgive as you forgave."

What about Leon's act from the movie "Leon - The Professional" what can be said? Isn't right? How nice it was from him, how great it was what he did ! How sublime was his deed.

Mathilda saw in Leon what others could not see. And Leon saw in her his own essence, his good part, too hidden, buried too deep in him.

Your image is perpetuated between parallel mirrors when the reflection of what appears to be your most representative attitude is manifested at the most profound level of the composition of meaning that your deeds give in the spiritual life of others.

One of these mirrors is the feeling of belonging to a sense of responsibility, the other is an excess of the sense of guilt that tests you when you know that you can make a mistake by invoking your absence in the midst of events that change the course of others' lives.

Leadership: Does your affiliation to a framework of action broader than that which constantly validates your qualities force a compromise of your credibility in the attempt to say: "this even will be memorable"?

Although he was an excellent killer, Leon does not lose his warmth of the soul, and that has not curbed his feelings. He helped Mathilda, saved her and even "adopted" her. He was easily tamed by her pure soul of child to which he gave credibility – because deep in his heart he felt that, in essence, he is a good and a sensitive man, even if he had been trained to kill.

From the moment he adopted Mathilda, Leon's life took another turn. There was no more that lonely man, desolated, devoid of feelings and desires. But gained a new personality, has become a more open nature, more sociable, more communicative and even romantic, able to appreciate more than other people things around him.

Explore the sensitive side of your personality (the most authentic side of you), to facilitate the merger between your world and others. Listen and learn to trust your intuition and your emotions. Your leadership will be greatly affected if you do not express your deepest feelings. You will end up by being completely insensitive in relationships with others - and from here until the failure is not a long way.

The event that celebrates your personality is the extension of an image that you create for yourself in the eyes of others beyond the apparent hardness with which you impose your rules in the process of reflecting reality in the form of feelings that must be condemned.

The leadership is not an "Ivory Tower" where can have access only one person, it is not a restricted area where no one is allowed to enter. But rather should be a transparent area, easily known and entered, an area where you have to open to others the "door" to gain them access to your world.

Exploring the sensitive side of your own personality and others' you can find bridges to ensure harmony in the team to the benefit of all. The isolation of you as a leader in the "ivory tower" will always be detrimental to you.

Les Valses De Vienne

On November 14, 2019

Learn to spiritualize everything that can impress the soul, in the sense of the ingenuity of performing a work of art that can be transposed into a fascinating story of life.

Whenever I think of my life, discreet and patient as a symptom of the crystallized time and placed under the glass of the most secret memories, I see the film of events that have in their midst the heart of the rose, the monologue of a talented artist, alive and free, the scepter to a young and handsome king, the transformation of an actor who perfectly imitates a famous figure, or the story of a dancer trying to overcome his bourgeois condition in order to follow his dreams.

My life, a psychology of creative seeing and propagating meanings, is something far more than anyone would be willing to understand.

My dear rose, you gave me the courage not to complain about life, even though it started with a spiritual piece entitled "Portrait of a female character" and still continues on the chords of a classic waltz, very slow, but moving. I always said YES to changes, I grew up coordinating our intuitive activity of spirit with the cycles of a culture of research in art, I witnessed all the transformations of the seasons. We did not go to different places, such as the Bedouins who roam the deserts in the long and wide, we did not move away from each other as the sand grains spread from all the beaches of the world, and without you I would hardly know who they are, who I want to be, who I recognize in a double of mine.

You were always with me, sharing your thoughts of love, peace, gratitude, purity, perfection, the one I saw every time I looked away from the things that were trying to rob me of their chaotic force. The expressiveness which you have shown in a spirit-filled image, intertwined in harmony with the vibrations of classical, romantic sound and tone, specific to the first half of the 19th century, seems to be invested with the unparalleled elegance of a virtuoso who must necessarily expresses what he dances in an exceptional collage: Les valses de Vienne...

The cultivation of sensitivity through the reception of the artistic work is achieved by bringing into the consciousness of others an image with a strong emotional impact that symbolizes a spiritual reality.

The characteristic element of emotional fragility, from the perspective of the options that govern the artist's manifestations, consists in the originality of the work that he feels called to perform. This work, based on ideas and aspirations that must not depart from the rules of the alliance between integrity and nobility, combines the constructive sides of lucidity and rigor that prevent the artist from being abandoned to compromises and ambitions that are ethically and socially condemnable.

The rose spiritualizes everything that can impress the soul, even in the study of the portraiture of an older era, keeping the classical line, in the sense of the execution of the work of an artist who captures on the canvas an entire emotional universe. From a dance that maintains the ambiguity of the relations between a painter and a ballerina, one reaches the story full of romance of two special people whose artistic fullness blends with the fruit of their inspiration and joy: an angel with blond curls and a blue gaze that needs by the attraction of a degree of freedom to pour the spell of the soul on the understanding of the world.

By linking two points by similarity, by an elegant gradient between the different shades of red-cyclam and by overlapping colors complementary to gray-white, the artist creates a significant visual representation. His work draws its findings from a spiritual reality that highlights the suggestion of a sincere confession, by describing a beautiful stage of life that will never consume its expressiveness, the purity of an emotional experience.

The drawing begins with sketching a long silk dress, copying to some extent the wedding dress of a young actress, then adding Cinderella-like shoes in a contrasting color, sweetening the ball gown with the delicacy of an opening fan. The little girl draws her power of existence from the hearts of parents, just as their bodies caught in the middle of the dance floor, on a living canvass whose major condition to join art can be defined by the power of time to stand in a channel of light d'un château de province.

Leadership: Do you turn reality into a permanent search for a means of expression of art only to complete within it the imperfect work of the nature that increases the suggestiveness of the striking sensation of "rebirth"?

The rose watches over my associations, always reminding me of our friendship that seems to test, in the clear background of a serious and graceful dance, the character of an authentic act of seeking perfection in a being that delights our gaze and gives us its love without asking anything in return, a being that fascinates us when hearing a rhythmic, suggestive musical composition.

Artistic education creates a harmonious bridge between mind-body and emotions with a form of nourishment of the soul with a roar of sensitivity and lucidity that penetrates, as a subtle and invigorating fluid, into the coordinates of a coherent figure divided between heaven and the wound of a heart hit by ambitions.

The girl's ambition, like Eve de Chazelay in Dumas' novel, is to capture a sound of time, to capture, through art and play, a face of reality that is largely different from social and professional life. It has to show worthy of the three gifts that nature has endowed her, sense of will and movement, so to find a way to express thoughts, feelings and freedom through body movements. Without fear of any consequences. Somehow, she must be born again of her own constraints, specific to the timidity, complexities and fears that the challenges of her age develop.

Waltz is the way in which the thread of life begins to become tense, announcing the abandonment of the self to any suggestion from outside, but magnifying the revelation of a spiritual destiny that seeks its identity in a particular story.

First of all, the little girl develops the curiosity of the heart, then the curiosity of the gaze, wanting to express through simple movements, through elegant waving of the hips and arms, all thoughts dampened by the hearing of a Chopin waltz. Step on the floor slowly, barefoot, with small, timid steps, but always reinvent yourself, in an attitude of dedication close to sensuality, imagining yourself in a live performance. Then, all of a sudden, she ran through the room cheerfully to summon a noble ambition, to shine in the middle of the spotlight like her parents, on their wedding day.

Leadership: Are you able to find a true mirror in a special and memorable snapshot, by the way of building an image that appears in the consciousness of the world in the almost definitive form of an emotion that reflects the coordinates of a controlling thought?

The rose takes my thoughts further: "and not only will she be a beautiful girl, but she will also have a good soul." Dumas' words interpose between our story and the little dancer:

"Magnetism has, like old magic, occult signs and means to disturb the natural correlation of things and even to change the taste, the background and the appearance of nature. The artist uses this power of grief over Eve, his model of cooperation between art and feeling. He gives the roses the smell of violets, causes the fruit trees to turn green again after they have dried. And that was precisely his intention, to create a fantastic world around Eve, over which would reign his thinking."

The rose is the true mirror of a special and memorable snapshot. He boldly expresses the action of one being over another, the irresistible power of the creator over the one for whom the music is food, medicine, air, tending to place himself psychologically and aesthetically in relation to an experience of kindness, purity, something unforgettable, standing in time as a self-image of a dreamer who also became a dream.

What one thinks is guessed by another by pulling aside the curtain of the soul, which, although sometimes leaving room for shadows, always broadens the artistic horizons.

"Eve, said the sculptor of souls, I have so far exercised an action upon you that was necessary for me to take you to the moral and physical point in which you find yourself today, but on which I now give up. The moment I speak to you, I take back all of my magnetic power. I restore to you your triple freedom – that of the soul, the heart and the mind. I restore your moral sense to its full extent. I am finally restoring your free will. It is not me who you will listen to, it is yourself."

Anyone who tries to grasp the art of the spirit animated by sensitive intelligence, does so only to recognize in himself the most important work of nature, by assuming a spiritual destiny that flows from the sphere of an artist's vision during the life of another artist.

Les Valses De Vienne portrays the encounter between an artist and the high aspirations to reach a state of well-being, in feelings and thoughts, by creating the harmony between body and soul, in the sense of expressing the sensuality and refinement of a work of art in a classical environment.

Let Us Fear Ourselves

On July 16, 2014

Change the outcome of the fight with what you represent to the world, preventing any intrusion in the space of your own manifestation.

Bishop Myriel went to his poor mountaineer boys with empty hands and came back with them full. He left with only his faith in God and brought the treasures of a cathedral. He said:

"Let us never fear thieves and murderers. They are only outside threats, small threats. Let us fear ourselves. The prejudices – behold the thieves; the vices – behold the murderers. The great threats are within us. It bears no significance what threatens our head or wealth. Let us think only of what threatens our soul.

And the priest should not take any precautionary measure against his neighbor. All his neighbor does is with God's will. Let us limit ourselves to praying to God when we imagine a threat is about to befall us. Let us pray, not for ourselves, but for our brother not to fall into sun because of us." *

Leadership: Does the meaning you grant to the boundary between security and vulnerability have the expression of "spiritual awakening", fact which makes the distinction between what is durable and what is passing?

Any approach to the concept of value has its origin in the subjectivism of your own person, in the willingness to engage in a fight not so much with the object of your consciousness, but especially with went into habit. That is, with the presence of grace or sin, with the absence of good or evil, with the outcome of the fight with yourself, with the demons of your life, with the unpredictable of a new experience that makes you wonder if you have committed any mistakes that sabotage your efforts of maximizing the power to rise above the circumstances of life.

What you find throughout your life about yourself can be revealed under the appearance of a frightening "natural" if you fail to make compromises, if you fail to create an attraction between what is happening to you and how you react to what has been felt as an injustice of destiny. The freedom to respond effectively to the challenges of life is the combination of a prayer to God and the virtue of doing good in any action or decision that defines your position and intervention in the course of the world.

Durable is what you feel for yourself in the saddest circumstances of life with regard to the purpose you take in trying to prevent situations that do not put you in a good light. Passing is what makes you feel livelier when your only merit is to be generous with people who are strictly dependent on your good and sensitive side.

The main tool that allows the construction of leadership is the very possibility of building a horizon that will light the path you take in life, preventing any intrusion in the space of your own manifestation. And one that permanently limits the areas of negative contrast. The leader within you, fulfilling his mission of presenting world from a new perspective over the development of the quality of life, takes into account the very possibility of modeling the rationality claimed by others and its conscious processing in favor of an orientation towards a spiritual communion.

Leadership: Can you evaluate your power to rise above the circumstances of life through the prism of what you are able to refuse from the very beginning in the stage of inner transformation along which you will attain the height of your possibilities to deal with the meanings of destiny?

Change generates a certain dose of resistance, not always favoring that rationality that seeks a foundation of stability and inner balance. But is rather determined by the existence of a mentality that threatens self-image and the very existence of man. Conscience supports this change, perfectly fitting that norm of rationality, which is faith, articulating itself especially on the image of good and evil that the leader constructs in the process of remodeling reality.

The meaning you attribute to the dividing line between safety and vulnerability has the phrase of "spiritual awakening" only when "outside threats" and "inside threats" do not cause a bottleneck in terms of ownership and identity preservation. Spiritual awakening is only a free form of constructing a new framework of operation and development.

To reconcile with yourself, you must refuse to compare yourself with others, especially if your journey does not coincide with their path.

Leadership generates a sense of vitality and belonging to a reality that incorporates that dimension of personality that you are willing to show to the world. Bishop Myriel has reached the height of his possibilities to deal with the meanings of his destiny when he realizes he is an exception to the rest of the world, his belief being a graduation of any guilt that could have been the object of an endless remorse.

Leadership is presented to the conscience of man under the power of a destiny that finds its meaning in all the facts you are willing to accept as a favor of providence to differentiate yourself from the rest of the world and to reconcile yourself with its adversities.

Let Us Fear Ourselves highlights that blockage that may occur in our inner forum, when we let ourselves be dominated by fear, by our own prejudices. What certainly does not lose value over time is the spiritual power of man, opened before any change, which gives him an identity and helps him overcome the conditionings of society.

Let's Remember Ourselves, As We Looked At Ourselves

On July 05, 2022

At every stage of our journey, we ignore a possible infinity which is nothing but that property our memories have of being able to combine with each other.

The mountain running competition from Slănic Moldova has ended. Many of the runners from Iași gathered for the already traditional party at the end of the day. The sun had set a long time ago, but I still wanted that sunny look from the competition, to be present again in the most thrilling atmosphere. And what applause ! And what cries of delight crowded in my mind, like some rays of sunshine poured inside a heart that still beats with hope, with nostalgia, with its soul in its mouth. The first word that animates me, here it is: Eureka ! Because I rediscovered myself differently: resistant, fighter, strong.

The group of friends seemed to be driven by two completely different motives: some wanted to relax, others seemed to feel superior to their own expectations, as if they had just returned from the most thrilling adventure of their lives.

The first reason, the emotions of success, dreams, possibilities, ideals, seemed to summarize the joy of a reality that can only be found in art, that reality of the soul in which the dream is nothing but an event that was or will be manifested. The second reason, a great leap forward, through a thought that came from a memory, a thought that rises above things and above the times that we went through together, had to fit into the demands of each one towards the aesthetic values of nature. Running across the mountain is a veritable visual encyclopedia.

Leadership: Can you glimpse a world that actually extends beyond the "window" frame, provided you respect the distance of an ideal vision?

While the thought of great performance seemed to belong to each of us, uniquely and prominently, as a result of crossing the bridge between goals and achieving them, each of us could feel the compulsion of the mountain to accept certain circumstances in order to achieve a purpose. Not only was it an exhausting competition, held in full sun, but only in this way we could see a world that really expands beyond the "window" frame, provided we respect the distance of an ideal vision: the power to involve empathetically in the achievement of a difficult task, that of occupying a leading place on the podium.

The window, our opening to the great adventure, as an additional embellishment of the winning spirit, can close at any time if we are unable to see beyond the podium, beyond a symbol of reputation. Sometimes we are too ignorant to see beyond what is presented to us and we take everything "by default".

I would not be able to explain how the content of every thought existing in each of us, if described in psychological terms, could have influenced the reality of the picture that was before me, the picture on which was carefully placed the color of success: yellow. Everything happens inside a social and psychological algorithm well known to top runners. We felt, in unison, that it was just us against the whole world, guided by the indomitable spirit of the victorious ones, especially since we were just about to be caught up.

Some of us won a place on the podium, proving that we were not just characters hidden inside a composite drawing of several forms seen in exhausting motion, which a figurative Creator, very rigorously, presents in contrast to the exterior. The creative imagination, if it still took control of our thoughts, and how, was due to the fact that the distance between us, through which a win-win information was emitted, was very small.

Leadership: Can you feed your soul with memories that allow you to identify a well-rated face in a crowd, so that the crowd facilitates mutual recognition of the image you wish to communicate?

And then a miracle happened. Teodor prepared a refreshing cocktail, and we knew how to appreciate a fresh drink made from the best natural ingredients. Three colors in one glass, three different amounts from three different assortments. The tricolor in one shot was consumed in one gulp. Whoever looked at the photo of us clinking the glasses, would have felt that someone told a story of survival, healing, life and adventure, in just 5 seconds.

Let's put the main character, the bartender, inside a retrospective testimony. Let's remember Teodor. Not in a runner's outfit, but with a kitchen apron tied around the waist, preparing several kinds of cocktails. Let's remember all of us, with a smile on our faces, with great strength in our hearts, as we looked at each other that evening, with eyes that by no means wear a vest. Encountering no hard resistance from nature, but only enlivened by another call of adventure, we learned to use the intrinsic energy of a group representation, building the bridge between ambition and belonging – called Antissitusni.

These life experiences seem to be the engine of the insights that made Borges treat in his works the theme of memory that pours out, from an overflow of facts not yet definitively consumed, onto a present that was not thought of by you for you, but by others, or by Someone Else:

"Something happened. Anything. Something that we won't be able to recover, something whose meaning we know, but we don't know its form, something mundane and ordinary and unsurprising until then, which revealed to us that the universe (which is given to us wholly at every moment, in every place, not only in the works of Dumas) was also there, in that present circumstance. Enter, for here are also the gods, said Heraclitus of Ephesus to those who found him warming himself to the fire in the kitchen."

Leadership: Can you place yourself in that reality of your soul where the sum of memories is the effect of an event that was or will be manifested at the level of subjective experience?

The deep echo of our friendship will always resound. Thirsty for wide horizons, we tried to capture the secret echo of the universe. It can be seen that we were top runners even on the plane of thoughts, in contrast to the tumult of the previous scene, when the mountain put our skills and strength of character to the test. Then, we tested our emotional balance, by no means did we fall into the trap of letting go and forgetting ourselves.

Many of these thoughts can be found in the painting of a painter who, through the mind-soul connection, captures the inner richness of youth without old age.

Among the stories of life without old age, there is one about the runners from Iași who understood that they don't have to stay in the same loop of destiny, plodding along after a great competition. If God looked at us with the eye that never sleeps, then He saw us only as creations maintained in synchronicity, merged in a halo of pure light, which seems unearthly. Proust would thus emphasize this spiritual kinship:

"At every stage of our journey, we ignore a possible infinity which is nothing more than that property which our memories have of being able to combine with each other."

Leadership is a catalyst for retrieving memories that don't leave you when you win a place on the podium, when life gets harder, when common interests disappear, when you have nothing left to offer.

Let's Remember Ourselves, As We Looked At Ourselves, whenever we set a goal greater than the one originally pursued: the joy of being all together, not just a part, when we live in unison the emotion and the magic of a new beginning.

Lets Spend A Few Moments Studying Perspective

On February 12, 2009

Perspective brings the parts of bodies closer together, or makes them move apart by projecting their parts seen through a plane interposed between the eye and the object.

- Durer also demonstrated his love or perhaps cult for geometry through his brass engraving entitled "Melancholia", which he executed in 1514 after returning from his second trip to Italy. It seems that he made this work under the impression of the pain that his mother's death caused him. This engraving, which has been commented on many times and in various ways, Melancholy took the form of Geometry, is winged and holds a compass. She is worried. What is he thinking about? Could he not establish the law that links beauty to mathematics?

At her feet is a sphere, to her right a huge dodecahedron and above her head, on a wall, a magic square of the fourth order can be seen, which shows that in addition to problems of pure geometry, Durer was also more interested in this not an easy problem in number theory. While playing with this square, whose sum of digits is 34, I wondered if Durer did not choose this number as the constant of his square, because that year he was just 43 years old?

— That may be a mere coincidence, but it is not a mere coincidence that you noticed this magic square. I think it can be a very attractive topic for our next meeting. Don't you agree?

— Okay, but until then, let's go back to our perspective, in connection with which I'm going to read you a few lines written by Diderot in the Essays on Painting: "The first step towards understanding chiaroscuro is the study of the rules of perspective. Perspective brings the parts of bodies closer, or makes them separate, only by the mere gradual diminution of size, only by the projection of their parts, seen through a plane interposed between the eye and the object, and connected, either on this very plane, or on some other plane imagined, beyond the object. Painters, devote a few moments to the study of perspective: you will be richly rewarded by the ease and confidence with which you will find yourself in the practice of your art !

Leadership: Can you cultivate an objective perspective about what you want to demonstrate, related to a reality of the same kind as that of material points and the distances between them?

To understand the universe, or how things are in this world, you have to demonstrate that there is a reality independent of the constructions of the theoretical physicist, or independent of the analytical thinking of the authentic mathematician. It is about a reality of the consciousness or the soul in which the dream is nothing more than an event that was or will be manifested. But until then, let's look at the analytical thinking of a mathematician.

Think for a moment, and you will recognize that the body of a prophet wrapped in all his huge cloak, and his bushy beard, and the hair that falls on his forehead, and the picturesque veil that gives his head a divine character, are in all respects subject to the same principles as and the polyhedron. In the end, one will embarrass you just as little as the other. The more you multiply your ideal number of plans, the more correct and true you will be, and do not fear that you will be cold because of a condition more or less added to your technique."

— Diderot wrote these Essays after 1765 and, as I see from the accompanying note, they appeared "eleven years after the philosopher's death (1795)", so at the end of the 18th century. I deduce from them that then, the enthusiasm and zeal for the study and especially the application of perspective in painting had significantly decreased. So, before we touch on this issue, I think we should heed Diderot's advice and "spend a few moments studying perspective", what do you say?

Leadership: Is the worldview you project based on the assumption that things change based on what happens to you when your objective perspective is constantly shattered by experiences that don't align with it?

A mathematician divides his mind into three parts: one analytical, one logical and one intuitive. And then something strange happens to him, because he starts to think everything in proportions and concentrations. His life itself becomes a concentration of meanings attributed to the surrounding events, this representing a type of problematization, which produces a more complex intellectual conflict and has certain difficulties to solve, because everything always turns out "wrong".

- I think it's good, let's begin ! From a geometric point of view, two modes of perspective representation are possible: parallel perspective and central perspective. In parallel perspective, bodies in space are projected onto the drawing plane by a beam of rays parallel to a given direction. It is a conventional method, based on the assumption that the observer's eye is at infinity. The parallel perspective is used to depict bodies in space, in drawings from school textbooks, but also by painters from East Asia: Japan, China, India. in this case, both vertical and parallel lines in space, remaining parallel in the drawing as well (fig. 33).

In the central perspective, things change. In this case, the projection of the object from space is done by a beam of competing rays, the meeting point O, also called the point of view, is assumed to be the eye of the observer. At the same time, it is assumed that the plane we are drawing, P, is transparent, so that the visual rays taken from O to the object pass through it. But it is better to consider an example. Let P be the plane of the painting and O the point of view, and the object to be projected a square ABCD, its plane being inclined to the plane P, and the lines AD and BC parallel to the horizontal plane (fig. 34), namely AD is above the horizon, and below the horizon, the points A and being nearer to the plane P than C and D. The visual rays OA, OB, , and OD pierce the plane P respectively in a, b, c, d, so that the trapezoid ABCD represents the perspective of the square ABCD in space, in the P plane.

Vision is the distance you travel between two points: a point where the time perspective for evaluating the evolution of the world is discontinuous, and a point where the perspective on reality depends on how you apply mathematical concepts to explore new models of materializing ideas and innovative concepts.

Let's Spend A Few Moments Studying Perspective so that we can more easily understand the analytical thinking of mathematicians who, playing with number theories, discovered new ways to imagine a new reality in a world that is not always recognized. Or, as someone well said: "When you look, look without interpreting. Thus, you will connect directly to concrete reality, not to an abstract reality, formed by your opinions on reality. And this will help you to transcend any illusion."

Life Beyond The Experience Of Life

On April 30, 2014

Offer quality to your knowledge, without turning your life into an imitation.

I gradually penetrated a world of values and meanings that became more real and more full of rights than the world of usual experience, in which everything began and ended with me. Or rather with my doppelganger, imitating me throughout, existing only to materialize my passing through this world. A world seen through a wave of compelling metaphors, as if supporting a connection to an artificial satellite orbiting a nearing unidentified orb, which increased, decreased and disappeared.

In the composition of this world created by the power of thought, a jewelry with many perfect pearls could better be replaced with a chain of action full of the unforeseen, supported by an alert rhythm, imagination and originality. Only amid experiences and imaginative understandings. Continuously, I seemed inspired by that area of subjective knowledge to which no matter how much you would try to bring quality to, inherently charged with a production of small or medium complexity, remains only an imitation of life.

Strangely, I interminably felt that I had been administered a single dose of intellectual wealth, as if I had returned full of valuable lessons from an expedition full of unexpected events that carried me through the most delightful corners of the fantastic world, governed by a superior force of knowledge. I invested time into an innovative project, into a vision beyond the "simple", beyond the experience of my own life, gradually becoming an extender of the unknown inner potential.

Examining within my inner forum the life I was about to lead, could I maybe consider it fitting for that harmonious development, so coveted, towards an unknown high?

The reverse phenomenon: Can you help your leadership with the dependency on being connected to an unlikely art by imagining yourself part of an anonymous world that influences the course of defining a higher ideal of reference to a new version of yourself?

The leader has within him, for the mission he has to accomplish as a doer of a thinking that demonstrates the much sought-after superiority of man over everything knowledge represents, two centers: the brain and the heart. Both strengthening his immunity to the widespread disease called "the need of being someone else."

While the concern of a fiction writer, between art and life, is to transport itself into a distant future, dialoguing with the universe in a language unknown to anyone. In the art of writing, trying to reach the novel through a form of imaginary pact with another reality becomes a fashion that returns, a habit that is no longer lost.

From my point of view, the version of the man who looks for the future and aspires to dominate it is the combination of the size of the leader's vision and the creative dimension of the writer. The first builds the ideal image of what he wants to achieve in the future through more realistic, in-depth, innovative thinking and more adapted to the various living situations. The other creates empathy towards his characters, to his story, challenging readers to an intense and unusual adventure starting from a steady point and continuing to a point B with no return.

Here we have to take into account the consideration of self-dependence, having as its constituent the imaginative experiences and understandings – the result being your duplication in a space of interference of reality with the story of an intellectual arriving at a fixed point of the world, from where it investigates the meanings of the frontier with another world.

The ideal to report to a new personal version concerns that knowledge arising from the mixture of self-domination, motivation, empathy, free thinking, tact, diplomacy, and the process of transforming a plot into truth, whose only purpose is to open yourself to other ways of creating a reality.

Leadership: Can you create a reality that exists only in terms of what you tell about yourself in a story form, serving to put things in other perspectives or to highlight an unresolved aspect in your being.

You become a virtual agent when your existence becomes just a story invented to justify your passage through this world. In this case, self-reliance means a continuous return to that which can not be changed, regardless of time and circumstances. You no longer live through someone else or for someone else, but you live only through yourself and for yourself, all the "wonders" of the world being seen as mere inert factors.

This is an unlikely art, the art of losing yourself before finding yourself. The only parenthesis that remains to be solved is: "My only regret is loneliness".

You become a robot who must find the shortest route between a starting point, supporting yourself and goading yourself when you have to make real changes on the broad front of knowledge. Or you can become the final point of destination within a real existential space is populated with many clichés and gaps.

Life beyond the existence of life is not just a reality created to become a part of a competitive world, but highlights an unresolved aspect in your being: the inability to choose between the impulse of the sense of surprise in front of another reality and the impulse of feeling insecurity in the face of the future.

Can you help leadership with the sweet dependency to being connected to the art of functioning as a robot? This unlikely way of "being", obviously wins over progress, but only as a "good" of low utility, given that your scientific efforts rises above normal. You basically come to a position in which you are unable to honor your life duties, limiting them. Or, in other words, your life becomes an imitation that serves purposes exterior to it, above yourself.

It is here that the reverse phenomenon takes place. Instead of you turning leadership into a science, leadership makes you into a product designed to meet need of existing science, in connection with obtaining new variables of individual differentiation.

Leadership can be presented as a manifestation of its own aesthetic-creative temperament that resides in the ability to spontaneously and promptly capture the beauty of a particular reality. A reality built on the deepening of an ideal of reference to a world that anyone can approach and begin to know until they finally become a part of it.

Life Beyond The Experience Of Life highlights that exception from the rule by raising the degree of awareness, which negatively influences the meaning of life. It aims towards that belonging to a world full of challenges, but in the same time full of questions and prejudices, through which the creating-leader violates the obligation to respect the rules concerning the insurance of an additional contribution to his own fund of brilliance.

You cannot "shine" if you remain a contributor to a dualistic concept that postulate a distance between knowledge and life, between the unreal world and your self.

Life, Death, Immortality

On April 03, 2008

Try to evaluate the weight of your creation meant to function as a form of practical verification of a visual image, taking into account the fact that the objective world has an empirical aspect specific to spiritual development.

The basic theme of the film "Que viva Mexico" is: life, death, immortality. Own thoughts, old, mix here in a complicated manner with those born in Mexico ambience. The artist raises the issue of death and immortality. Biologically we are mortal. We can achieve immortality only through our contribution to social activity. We are one of those who teach the baton of evolution from the previous generation to the next. "The purpose of our struggle for immortality, of the people who passed through the volcano of the socialist revolution – thinks director Sergei Eisenstein – is the freedom of humanity."

The thoughts aroused by the bullfights, which symbolized, metaphorized the general idea in their concrete, are now reborn in the artist's thinking with another force, at other dimensions. Now is the genesis of this clue that orders all impressions of the world, which transforms complicated whirling sensations in a precise development of the theme. In the gestation of the work is reflected not only the multitude of perceived facts, but the very dynamics of the creative process.

*This uplifting path to a new life, to new ideas is no longer a simple compositional formula, but the theme itself in the form of a vivid, plastic image, born of countless faces, images, events, customs, festivities, events, in which the gods of life and of death cross paths. Here is a game of life and death, a race between life and death.

Leadership: Do you know how to capitalize on the quality of sharing important creative lessons with the world in the sense of a value given to the direct relationship between "the multitude of facts perceived differently at different ages" and the form of a vivid image of spiritualization?

The explanations and ideas you bring to the artistic field, by returning to the "surprising detail", not by a struggle of thoughts, but by one of the facts that emerge from the field of life and from the parables of some people who have left their deep imprint in the history of mankind, helps to evoke a vivid image of the current struggle between spiritual and material forces, between light and darkness.

And if you are a director who relies on spiritual forces, such as creation or freedom of expression in all its forms, then the form of the image you give to spiritualization will be developed according to the theme: "the encounter between good and beauty." In fact, the development of art in terms of spiritualization is closely related to the strength and expression of an image that depicts the creative encounter between the form and content of the "Work of Art" designed to highlight the beauty of a world that deserves the other half in a dream reality.

The most important creative lesson is the miracle of an ever-changing world, captured in a moment of eternity.

If we think about the fact that the highest aspiration of every artist's soul is to give meaning to a life capable of mirroring a parallel world, and if the dynamics of the creative process must follow the form of a vivid image of the artistic personality, then what you can accomplish at a level of subjectivity is the transition from the near to the far plane. Here, at the same time, we can refer to the transition from the sensitive part of the soul to the "eternal" part of an all-encompassing mind.

Even consciousness, nourished by the word "change", makes its place here through the eternal existence of an all-encompassing mind that mixes times and emotions, lives, and destinies, so that the lesson of creation begins with the value given to the direct relationship between the multitude of facts perceived differently at different ages and the form of a living image of spiritualization. This is what it means, in fact, to look at art through the prism of a life that continues its course in a compositional manner, at the level of the visual, which makes the spectator's imagination pass beyond the limits of a direct reality.

Thus, the form of a vivid image of spiritualization emerges from the immortality you ensure through your contribution to artistic activity, through a creation that expands its reality to a slight fantasy meant to bring new visions about the possibilities of approaching the world that never ceases to permanently reflect in another world.

Leadership is the image of the change that shapes the future of the interaction between the act of creation and the spiritual consciousness assumed through the work of the feeling of significance that a much-dreamed reality gives you.

Life, Death, Immortality are the three factors that contribute to achieving the freedom of scientific and artistic creation, which is why it is also called continuous creation, in a cyclical transformation, and only people of high value mark their succession by a ceremony with shapes, chromatics, images, concept, decor, messages ideas, sensations, emotions and searches.

Spiritual development begins with learning art, just as "Creation" begins with recounting the creation of the world. So, only through artistic coherence can the miracle of a new world be achieved.

And the most important lesson of creation is the following, in the vision of Rudolf Steiner: "Any feeling towards the infinity of the world, towards the qualitative greatness of the world and the possibility we have, as human beings, to live in this world marked by an infinite variety of forms, must be put at the service of beauty, harmony and the miraculous".

Life

On August 30, 2017

Introduce yourself to the whole world under an identity created by your own appearance, letting yourself be guided by reason to meet the condition of the depth of your work.

I was trying to clarify my position on the conception of the arbitrary intervention of the divine in the creative process of life as compared to the composition of a personal, particular universe where everything was circumscribed to the material dimension of aesthetics through a process of reincarnation of the soul in the newborn body. "What is on your mind? / Are your feelings gone?"

Thanks to the intervention of fantasy, for which only one artist feels true pleasure, I finally ended up mastering the transformation of matter into a larger perimeter of the living, in the name of my retrieval in the eternity of a pure love, chained to the total attractiveness with impossibility to define in the empirical dimension of science. "Time is getting cold / What is going on?"

Suddenly, all the matrix computation formula elements that calculated more results to the parameters a thought-form entity, so complex and infinite that only God could understand, gathered in a fraternal embrace in... the name of love, showing their common membership in a universe that pushed them to the edges of: "Need to see it clear / Life is changing."

It was necessary for me to be the owner of a unitary aesthetic, unique to me and original aesthetic, to make a historical situation of it in the innovations of the moment in the case of a higher density of electric charge distributed on a vertical surface, which would ensure the possibility of rational determination of distinction and good taste. "Why are you doing things, All the things you do?"

And after many attempts and failures, I managed to build my own character, to the limit between the incredible and the believable. A figure of speech in the show of creation. An energy form subject to evolution. A human representation imagined in a humanoid hypostasis. A field of electric forces equipped with spiritual qualities. Finally, it was supposed to be a symbol of perfect seduction virtuously practiced by experimenting with values of desire without which the temptation of an absolute supremacy of youth cannot be born: "Everybody needs someone to love, to love."

Leadership: Do you recognize yourself defeated by the temptation of the creative spirit to find yourself in a picture of the de-doubling that blends the virtual with the real up to confusion?

Being close to the long-awaited triumph, completing the production of a gene transformed by Mendel's fundamental genetics laws, I had the privilege, let us say, to look at everything as a painting, moving through what it offers to the sight, feeling I'm as affectionately involved as artists who find their muse in their own creation.

The idea of building a humanoid, with all the extraordinary care that a geneticist puts in while conducting experiments, weighing the product of the use of elastic protein material and the energy resulting from the burning of solid matter, was generated by the tendency towards unity between idea and image. Becoming manifestations of a new kind of will, materialized in a perfection of creation, with the design of man in the world God has prepared for him, but could not offer to him up until then: "Life will never be the same."

The artwork is a comparison between the fiction that puts an unnaturally high emphasis on the abstract factor and the point of view of real life in which the elements of consciousness and instinctive affinities are interwoven in particular power relations.

The Act of Creation is an inner struggle from which emerge the alienation of man from his identity and the attachment to a virtual world model based on the experimental prototype of a fulfillment that is not material, but spiritual.

The beautiful and the sublime, at the intersection between genetics, biochemistry and physics, where the warning sin is merely the guarantee of art, were the cause of the appearance of the character indissolubly bound to his creator.

In order to better understand the equation of a fulfilled existence, they had to be comprised between the outbreak of image that doesn't cause blindness, the total hardening of the soul, the illusion of a temporal greatness. And the outbreak of a correspondence with the divine from which emerges the vision of a mechanic that functions within a person, the vision of a new condition of an eternal seeker of a genius, and the vision of a strictly rational order of the universe.

What emerges from the multitude of effects of contact tensions between two aesthetic dominances, other than a de-doubling experience? As someone remarked on the internet: "The robot is a metaphor that designates the body, and Love is what enlivens the flesh" No wonder my destiny and my creation had a common foundation that announced my inclusion in a fantastic world.

De-doubling in leadership is as remarkable as the act of creation: it concerns the concession given to the artist to present himself to the whole world under an identity made based on his own appearance, but left to be led by reason to assume the condition of the depth of his work.

Behold, what I've become: an artist, geneticist, biochemist, physicist, engineer, and architect, creating a new form of life in the world of information and inventions. Try now to imagine God. Is he not my equal?

God's existence is the intimate mechanism of the act of creation from which love is born to the expansion of the being beyond its limits.

Life is the claim of a seeker of the meaning of life to rise to the level of an exceptional artist. It is seen to be grounded when the seeker's attempts to unite with his own divine nature, in order to form a true divine-human being, have as a result a miracle of creation.

Light Of Darkness

On March 25, 2016

Never wish to leave, when you have something to stay for.

I am a dead man in order to reproach and praise what I write, because every time I express myself, with passion, with zeal, with lust for novelty, as if I would remain alone in the sphere of an alternative science, when I seek an idea by interpenetration with an overarching perspective, I feel that I collapse into the drifting of a crisis, into an endless abyss.

Such as an inscription on the bark of a tree that grows with alongside it, I unnaturally amplify my patience to insert into articles everything that, from the point of view of an extended realism, understood as an imitation of my passing through the time of this world, must be considered significant for readers. The fear of not being understood, is an agonizing death.

Will it be kept within me, for long enough, until the time of a shift towards other situations that replace reality, towards other areas of understanding, the ability to serve, as is proper, a faithful master – this special pleasure of debugging thoughts, strengthening my faith that I am above things – you, giant shadow, who asks questions of me and provides the answers yourself?

And always, the mind delivers an impulse, in the light of a seemingly unreal sunset: "Man must never leave, when he has something to stay for."

Leadership: Can you assume the consequences of practicing an aesthetics of reflecting the reality that forces you to the opposite, as an expression of your desire to synchronize with the deepest experiences in the context of processing the presentation material of a new self-characterization perspective?

Delving slightly to a point that is at an infinite distance from a differential, rational calculation, I can deduce the expression of the potential owed to bookish task distributed against another point, appearing clearly in the mind and in the soul, close to the judgement of giving life to an idea that goes around the world.

I am my own judge, along with the order that words full of meaning give out, the path to power, like an arrowhead piercing the infinite, or as a knife blade cutting through living flesh. Responsible, I give myself a sentence that cannot be either mitigated, nor aggravated by any misperception of infinite depth, as an attribute of the transcendent reality.

I am dead in relation to the hardness with which I choose my way of expressing myself and my expressions, in contact with the possibility of being perceived as a dimensionless point or as an infinity of small voids. The only reality that forces me to the opposite, as a kind of misinterpretation of the experience of life that tears me up inside and consumes me almost completely, is given by the self-justification tendency to compose myself in a more obvious and assumed state of philosophical, reflection, trying at the same time to shine through a form of artistic expression.

Readers have been seeing me with suspicion for a long time and begin to wonder what kind of things are happening in my mind, what hides in each of its corners, if not simply the awful disease of shaking the truths of an unimaginably strange science, at the origin between

"where you know no one will ever get to" and "where everything is lost."

A pretty risky affair, I would say, on the rhythms of Light of Darkness, from which the triumphant message, full of substance echoes: "He discovered the cure, this is his legend."

In this case, the material of presenting a new self-characterization perspective, as an attribute of emotional states that affects the decision to change attitudes to life, comprises the skillful prioritization of what must be experienced in a world full of anxiety, to what needs to be taught as an investment for the future.

Leadership: Are you able to exclude the gap in your soul by blurring an image in a selection area of your own values, attitudes and behaviors so as to capture the validity of a "noble" concept of virtue that gives you fulfillment?

Since 2006, when I took writing seriously, I was seized by an inexplicable fear – under the effect of an obsessive internal force, threatened by unrest, by culpability, a sort of field of conservative circulation, in accordance with the relationship between words and their meaning. As if their entirety was a miracle making object, which, once found in the wrong hands, could transform into a threat.

Fear springs from not knowing the way in which my words are interpreted. I will try an incantation, an anti-headache pill, in order to protect myself from it, as a sign of liberation and distancing, by reciting a passage found in the novel "Dervish and Death" by Mesa Selimovic:

"I will not let you trouble me, ghost. Always stay here, among these rocks, as the moon, as that river, as the crescent in the minaret, as a bright appearance. You have filled this place with your being, like a bedsheet you have soaked it with your deceptive and deadly perfume. I will go into the world, to other lands, where you are not, and I shall neither bear your face in my mind."

Often, it seems to me that it is like an artistic project that aims to approach the art of the essence of the manifestation of my own intentions by launching my desire to arrive at a new expression of my identification with a certain constant producing results time. It recognizes as a reference potential the interaction between what I think I know about myself and what I think I deserve to experience through what I transmit.

The courage of using aesthetics – the deepest expression of creativity in a broader sense, and thus, to enrich it or impoverish it through the deepest of feelings, is in fact that restless voice to which it is hard at times to resist, which tells you at the end of the day: "Live" or "Die". In a practical sense, keep on making progress or give up.

The only "noble" conception of the virtue that proclaims my fulfillment can be expressed as follows: "Assume the risk of experiencing your feelings, especially with the points of view shown in your work that will diminish the effect that can simultaneously generate a certain force, as well as a terrible weakness."

Blurring an image in a selection area of your own values, attitudes and behaviors targets a minimum of privacy in the face of a personality exteriorization that forces you to reveal some hidden meanings and motivations that do not allow you to find yourself in the script of the reality you want.

Light Of Darkness is the courage to defeat your fear of not being others' level of expectations, assigning to it the value of a criterion if existence of the creation you produce, depending on distancing yourself or getting close to that point where you wonder what exactly ties you to life.

And always, courage pushes the man endowed with many virtues: "Never wish to leave, when you have something to stay for."

Light Pale Of The Sunset

On December 08, 2010

Give yourself to the full development of those around you, guiding them to a higher becoming when being at the sunset of their own "story".

Nobody can acquire full success in a time. There's a delicate moment in the life of all people, a kind of test, I would say, in who is tested faith in their capabilities and forces, vocational calling, a kind of test that measures the likelihood of success.

I think that the famous American writer Stephen King knows better than anyone how to achieve success, but also knows very well the recipe for sure failure. Since the time he was a child he aspired to a career of a writer. He wrote. And he continued to write. He created. And he continued to create. A daily short story inspired by everyday life. His career followed an upward path.

Eventually he decided to write a very special novel, which then to send for publication, a novel that - he thought - would finally propel him among writers of value. He entitled it as "Carrie". The idea was original, was the product of his mind, not processing the ideas of others.

His thoughts were focused entirely on the success that he might have if his novel would become known. Until the moment when - fatality - the "blast" occured. As the novel was not progressing at all, he threw it to the thrash. He thought it was cup of empty hopes.

That delicate moment that we said from the start, that moment where you feel that you cannot, that you have no gas, where you feel that you're not, that moment when, overcome by a feeling of sadness you say that your endeavor is useless - and in his life occurred Stephen King.

"Carrie" was going to remain a memory. And his career was about to go down.

Leadership: Do you decide the qualitative route of your own performance from the position of knowing what is truly valuable to keep, or from the position of recognizing your ignorance of what is behind appearances?

Mrs. Tabitha King (Tabby), the wife of the famous writer, has seen the manuscript thrown at the trash. As she did not doubt on the Stephen's talent, recovered and read it. She liked it so much that she convinced him to finish it. For any price she wanted to know how it ends. And more than this she offered herself to help him.

He told Stephen, smiling so charming in her way: "Do you have something of value here, I mean it ! "

It is obvious that Tabby knew about her husband more than he knew about himself and about the "golden goblet" hiding in his manuscript. As after Stephen had finished writing "Carrie" the editorial concern Doubleday accepted it for publication, and the New American Library bought the pocket edition rights for the record sum of 400 thousands dollars. The latch occurred. Stephen and Tabby King were rich. But the real reward was that from then Stephen has been able to devote his life exclusively to literary creation.

Leadership: Can you restore the balance between the reality that you disapprove and the ideal of perfection that you can achieve?

The reality you disapprove of has as a reference the lack of recognizing the value of things that you can easily miss. In relation to this conclusion, the question of the space of investigating unprofitable goods, but with the potential value of becoming the emblem of an attitude of openness to change, is summed up to the following question: what do you gain by constantly remembering something that can be reactivated by a phrase from a book, by a scene from a movie or, simply, by a friend?

The creator's ability is derived from the quality of your vision of the surrounding space and the essence of things that you allow yourself to offer the status of a "good idea".

The real art you capture every day, without anyone knowing it, appears as a means of recognizing the "crumbs" of benefits extracted from the effects of an abandoned idea. Adding value to the creation you are experiencing is to understand the temporary nature of the image that you form about one thing until you get to know it.

Ideas are like words: no matter how trivial they seem at first sight, they are as valuable as they can be through the meaning they contain – attributed to certain facts, moods or life situations. As a rule, writers have a rich experience sparked by the existence of a vast array of competences, proposing to penetrate into a discrete area, attachment to the importance or usefulness of their own creations.

The ideal of perfection that you can achieve depends on how you revise ideas so that their intersection takes the form of a creation whose "insurance value" can only be made public with the help of the meaning it takes on under the cumulative effect of belonging to a deeper, higher, and more sustainable reality. Usually, this reality is literature itself.

Leadership: Do you exploit the depth effects of your own creation, providing others access to new areas with development potential?

The enthusiasm does spring from your inside or you need someone to feed it? Are you a key person in people's lives?

Competent, able to make effectively all possible arrangements, and endowed with great powers of persuasion and influence. In a word, she was Tabby. She determined her husband to feel new momentum in his efforts. She was and still is his number one partner. Every time when Stephen seems that time is not on his side, or if he feels like a no one in his world of values, Tabby is beside him to remind him that what he feels is only a momentary situation that is not an end of the world, and that everything will be fine again.

Stephen's success is due to the fact that he is surrounded by the soothing image induced by his wife who has a great faith in him and always supports him.

The enthusiasm does not spring from yourself - you always need someone to feed him. It is important to have someone beside you to see things differently, more clearly, and who decides to help you, a person who deep down believes in you and in your cause, and who wants to support you. It is a very smart strategy to ask for opinion of key people, who is really able to know what the best is for you before making a decision.

To start the act of creation means to turn yourself into the permanent emblem of a spirituality that seeks the essence of things from others' point of view.

The pale light of the sunset it gets to a point every man who works, who has dreams and desires to fulfill. And you will be embraced one day by the feeling that your labors were in vain. And you will be traversed by that mysterious power that tests all the valuable people for strength of character and will. That is why so important to have a partner close to you to remind you every time when you're in trouble "Do you have something of value here, I mean it ! "

Only one endowed with leadership qualities has the ability to support and give you the necessary impetus to continue your career when you are on a downward trajectory. He is a true mentor for you and has the power to delay your "pale light of the sunset".

Lily Was Here

On June 29, 2017

Ensure your integration into a mystery that tests your boundaries between what you represent as an artist and what ascends you to the heavens.

I was in the presence of a new atypical diversion, launched by a deepening of the notion of "affliction" to the absolute in the embodiment of the perfection. Somehow, I thought I was living in a obvious contempt for the darkness without space and time, unfavorable to personal escape from the hell of a progressive utopia. And something was able to energize me with the possibility of revealing the mystery, always transforming into another, entering the sights of knowledge and giving me courage and immortality.

The emotion I felt, like a gong echo, which I was trying to communicate in front of the mystery, fed through fictitious fidelity. As if I had to discover the face of a deeper God, always within me, testing my special ability to realize the idea and the feeling not directly, by deed, but through a poetic rendition.

The force that inspires you is a triumph over the pride of recognizing yourself as pleased with yourself as belonging to a higher mystery that no one is able to really solve. Just as listening to a soothing music coming out from beyond you, from unknown spheres, that uplifting and simultaneously purifies you.

However, I can at least give you an impression of what made me more creative, alongside the magnificent proof of an authentic feeling, as the newest theory of mystery in the fantasy plane I had then, the most intense breath of life that pushed me more and more towards the immeasurable.

And I had it not from a worldly accomplice who contributed to the shaping of a mysterious space, not from a philosopher of art, not from a theorist of symbolism or from a great critic of direction to prolonging the axis of a whole existence. But from a note of originality, from a work of great artistic refinement, transposed into a note of assumed madness, in which everything was possible, even if the echo was announced to be extremely hot.

Leadership: Have you ever had the revelation of a new identity if you realize that what delimits and defines you largely depends on what is found in the fragmentary character of the moment?

This state of grace and exaltation, and the ambition to advance in this direction, came from a combination of saxophone and acoustic guitar, to the rhythms of blind verses that could only be understood by reference to a sort of flight over the world's roof, to a drop of happiness on the wings of the wind or to a divine self-exile in the physical world. Under one name "Lily Was Here."

It was all that personal emotion, such as the sublime of a force to which you can only admire the majesty, from which you can feel eternally a strange calling with that lucidity that makes you wonder: who are you? Completed by the artist's sense with that fragmentary character of the moment caught between a memorable journey in time and the corollary of an abstract reason with the possibility of real-world transposition.

It was the rhythmic expression of the need to sit at the opposite pole of immediate existence, on the refrain of deepening in the seductive nets of the desire to taste the glory of a moment of genius, which implicitly appears to be dependent on an infinite ecstasy. Reflecting on the way an artist conveys and processes the various and contradictory aspects of reality in his own way of general acceptance of the world.

I had it in my heart, in the fullness of a charm, with a beginning and seemingly endless, in a continuous, often incomprehensible logical reasoning, revealing only the inspired looks of the artist who is drawing new perspectives by the impulse received from the Universe. It was the ambrosia that only the gods drink.

Leadership: Can you see your own image mirrored in someone else as towards everything that lifts you in an instant at previously unpredictable heights?

The old Kabbalists, wishing to give God an extra merit, said the world was created out of love. But on the rhythms of heights heard only by HIM, in the variations on the relationship between the delicacy of an intense and expressive area, and the creative wealth of improvisations.

Or this universal voice that renews the excitement of an exaggerated duty to decide the movements of time on the wavelength of sensitivity, intelligence, imagination and purity, even if you measure its intensity, you still have plenty left to penetrate down to its depth to recognize its perfection.

Completeness is the reality that you attach from the quilt of an endless imagination whose arrows do not have to hurt your pride in succeeding in integrating you into a mystery that tests your boundaries between what you represent as an artist and what lifts you up to the heavens. In this respect, my identity seemed rather a feature of a voice that made it possible to hear the melody of the universe, integrated in the range of the reverberation effect, or an endless delay, as an odyssey of the remembrance of an existence dedicated to the communion between cultures and mentalities, beyond time and prejudice.

I knew from the first moment that I climbed the stairs of the spiral staircase that led to the height of her seductive, dizzying and immortal rhythm, searching in the endless space of myself the meanings entrenched from the beginning of the world to the present that I could lose my orientation. I fell in love with the living leaven of a deep sensibility of the ingenuity of pure creation, just as Pygmalion fell in love with a marble statue. The difference lies in the refreshing signal and in the message that each one eventually amplified.

And whenever I feel like I want to move mountains, when I begin to immerse myself in an eternal dream like a bird that rotates, then rises upward, spreading its powerful wings over the world, just as many times the heart, full of the mystery that only God emanates from the overwhelming universe, feels obliged to respond to the notes of a glamorous area: "Lily Was Here."

Seeing your own image mirrored in someone greater than you means accessing that intensity of sensitivity that motivates you to see in your own life how a theme is reflected, an idea, a perspective that emphasizes association with the universal voice of God.

Lily Was Here is the moment of inspirational forces that can be determined by using the expression: dream + consciousness = art, in practice being likely to apply only if the real world of the infinite within you is the creation of a great artist, God.

Line And Color

On July 23, 2016

Compose a picture from successive images and combine them into a good dosage of effects in order to obtain a successful panoramic image of your own nature.

Eisenstein is dazed by the empty asceticism of graphics, the clarity of the drawing, the torturous cruelty of the line bloodily ripped away from the multicolored body of nature. He said at one point:

"I find that graphics were born out of the image of the ropes with which the bodies of martyrs are tied with, from the traces left by the whip lashes on the white surface of the body, from the whistling blade of the sword before it strikes the neck of the condemned. This is the way in which the nude line tears apart the illusion of space, same as the line travels through color, and the lawfulness of harmony splits the diverse chaos of form. Then the whips whistle no more. The sharp cutting pain is replaced by a state of warm numbness. The empty traces of the blows split the surface of the body, the wounds have opened as poppy flowers and the crimson blood began flowing. Thus, the line gave birth to color."

He sees this phenomenon everywhere.

Around the arid cliffs around Tasco, on the leafless stems grows a purple flower. It is called "sangre de toros" and these flowers appear as spots of color sprayed from the stream of blood that spurts from the black body of the bull when the matador's sword penetrates the flesh. *****

Leadership: Does your creation reunite that incisive vigor of exposing the novelty of the artistic interest theme with the communication power of an important part of the scenery which accompanies the image of a different reality?

The work of a director is the painting composed of successive images, combined in a good dose of effects, in order to obtain a successful panoramic view which is part of a tour of his creative vision's anatomy. And the entire art of such an artist lies in how he shows the content of his work, realistically captured, on the border between "line" and "color".

The line represents the sum of those actions and deeds through which the director's messages, referring to his vision, to his reality of creative manifestation, are wholly transmitted, but at a certain level, to the target audience. The décor, on the other hand, represents the sum of all the elements of the record: it is seen, felt, moved, heard, in terms of the possibilities of transferring emotion and vision to a new way of supporting the unmistakable variety of the director's creation in the scenography.

The color, in the succession of factual evolution, through the piercing of external reality, is the vital force on which the entire structure of the complex conceptual world scenery is based. Color sums up the whole of these nuances, tones and undulations of feelings, points of view, ideas, values, beliefs that can be shared through a variety of effects and staging mechanisms based on relevant language mechanisms.

The artist who strives to cultivate a world of his own, with a message that often turns into a "noise" of features ripped away from the thoughts, feelings and the actions of people, intends to achieve through their convergence the desired suggestion. He may be called a leader, a man with positive, real ideals, when he makes the influence by suggestion possible – as long as the positive suggestions can be augmented and those that exert negative influences diminished.

We recognize the nature of a leader not by the concepts that rule his actions and which guide him to the most important of decisions, but by the content of the suggestions he introduces in his work and administers to the audience.

The leader is, at the same time, a seeker of essences which lets himself be "read" thoroughly in the depth of the messages transmitted by his work. He reunites that incisive vigor of exposing new themes with the power of communication of an important part of scenery which he thinks of. However, this scenery is a live study of the mind, emotions, spirit, experiences, behaviors, attitudes, communication patterns, paragraphs – to a certain vision, to an ideal build after his own will. After his own nature.

The leader's own nature is evident in the way the variety of the presentation of his ideas is organized, which fully reflects the endeavors and persevering work with which he projects the vision of a reality called: discovery, dream or freedom of expression.

Line and Color are two main forms of building a film scenery, which the director calls upon to implement his vision of himself reflected in a certain theme, in a particular scenario.

Listen To Me As If You Were Looking At My Soul

On November 20, 2021

Between the sound of a song and the sound of a very talented artist there is a small infinity, which represents a whole world.

There are unforgettable songs that you always return to, in a way unimaginable, because they themselves are stubborn, hiding in your soul, fulfilled, devoted for a long time, putting in the first place the close connection between visual and acoustic. And you listen to them with pleasure, in the most faithful way possible, with the thought of the sea, the sand with shells (present in the sunsets full of color and depth), without realizing that time passes while they occupy all your time.

And your soul is present where the "DEEP" sound makes its way through your eardrum, reaching that magnificent tool called sensation, mechanism for capturing and recording information from the surrounding reality, in which all memories are revived to reach that ineffable state of peace with yourself. The melody itself, the first secret inspired by the mysteries of the universe, is that force of the soul which passes through the experience of the act of creation, a penetration into a reality which omits its temporary dimension, as if filling the eternal absence from the infinity of a gaze that lacks that predominant note of surrealistic inspiration.

We must not start by making music, but rather by creating experiences... Music is the ideal of the Enlightenment man, announcing la possibilità di imprimere nell'anima la sete di assimilazione della bellezza.

I am with myself when I listen to her, discreetly, full of naturalness, with a pure heart. I think that nature has opened its soul in favor of the particularization of a slow, quiet, sweet dialogue, which invigorates me. You Are Deep, she tells me, because I'm part of her chorus. The melody allows me to penetrate its harmonies, until I can no longer break contact with myself, at the same time with the fragility of a transparent linen canvas on which the artist weaves his multicolored images, allowing all the contours to be guessed below a background state. Listen, and tell me I'm wrong. (Roudeep - You Are Deep)

Leadership: How do you express your experience of a presentiment of eternity, from the perspective of unwavering faith in an ideal of harmony understood as a vision based on introspection?

I listen to it especially at night, when everything is DEEP in sleep that knows no other world except that surprising place called "Sunshine In The Moonlight", insofar as it takes itself as a symbol in relation to the odyssey of a searching consciousness of himself, or with the almost visual description of an endless ascent in love. Still, I admit the guilt of attaching myself to this song, exceptional in its poetic beauty, synthesized in the serious expression of chorus, with vocal inflections of deep sensitivity, feeling, peace.

I think this is how I express my experience of a presentiment of eternity, listening to it intensely through a kind of enlivening of the self and the creative experience, through a narrator, respectively through the lyrical self.

It is a bandage for the soul. The song listens to my soul with the same power with which I penetrate its spiritual nature, sonorously matching the nuance with which rhythmic calm is reinstated in the artistic horizon of the experiences of old romanticism, on another miraculous realm, called: Elaiznesse, or the thrill of a fragile amazement.

It reminds me of that sunny summer day, on the beach in Mamaia, when I was reading the novel "On the spider's web of memory", managing to understand something more from the universe of Cella Serghi:

"Every writer is obliged to form his own language, just as every musician is obliged to form his own sound, his own rhythm, the bass strings singing the theme in a tremolo appropriate to the moment. And between the sound of a musician and the sound of a very talented artist, there is a small infinity, which represents a whole world."

Leadership: Are you able to push your creation to the limit of the impossible, in an attempt to increase the number of things one can think of in a state of continuous vibration of the soul?

And if I listen constantly to "Roudeep - You Are Deep" , on a unique formula that includes more E (minor) than A (sharp), without intervening a process of rhythmic dynamism with the increase of the sonority, this happens because in me there are two infinities, both of deep emotional vibration: the whole value of "subtle" simplicity and the aura of spiritualized simplicity. The perfect union between what is imaginary and what is remarkable.

I'll listen to it one more time before I can fully fall asleep. The thrill of harmonious music will creep into my soul. I feel like nothing will be the same. My life will change. The sun will shine every day. The waves of the sea will whisper words of love mixed with shells and sand, in a conquering game of delicate, varied, soothing sounds, combined in a requiem that never lacks beauty and emotional power.

I will no longer be the same, but I will remain guided by the revelation of a special voice from a golden age in which I will contemplate the whole spiritual greatness of an artistic creation. I think I learned the written sign of sounds, because I let myself be carried away into the magical realm of delicate sounds, to become one with them.

I am DEEP, because I opted for gentle, comforting, relaxing tones. I am DEEP because I will never leave a certain genre of music during the creative period, through ways of expression that presuppose the artistic vision. I am DEEP because I listen to my soul as pure as it is noble, in the rush that one desire incessantly consumes: to be at peace with myself.

Leadership, derived from the articulation of a magic sound in the context of a song of great emotional vibration, comes to meet that artistic creation possessed by the feeling of a strong connection between the stimulus and your attitude towards the stimulus.

Listen To Me As If You Were Looking At My Soul ! This conveys to me the lyrical content of the song "You are Deep" , its charm, as a kind of state of mind, inducing a trance in which I sink deeper and deeper, outlining in light and shadow, in dreams and visions, the artist's personality which invites you gracefully in a special world. The activation of this world is done in much the same way that a viewer subconsciously evaluates the value of a painting according to the impression that the painting arouses on his senses.

The song "Roudeep - You Are Deep" is the favorable place for a background state, designated as an inseparable unit of sensitive factors that go through a story of artistic content, detaching itself with a progressive intensity from any shadow of the idea of "following the crowd".

Listen To Me Before I Look At You

On April 01, 2024

Try to understand the depth of an authentic experience depending on the perspective and interpretation you give it, reflecting on the complexity of the relationship between the observer and the work of art.

And this time, my eyes managed to capture an amazing detail in a banal landscape, a sincere emotion on the face of a certain man. After all, this is what it means to admit that you love art: to rediscover beauty in unexpected places, to explore nuances of emotions or to inspire thoughts, to perceive the world in a new and unique way, even when you are not looking for anything.

Yesterday afternoon, I was walking through the Exhibition Park, experiencing a moment of complete silence. In an alley corner, discreetly, but with a presence that could not be ignored, a street artist displayed his impeccable craftsmanship. This gentleman with the accordion, a character who seemed detached from a world where music is the universal language, let his fingers slide over the keys of the instrument with amazing dexterity, as if he were part of it, in perfect symbiosis with nature . Under his skill, the accordion was no longer just a simple instrument, but a vehicle of pure emotion, making sounds that seemed to awaken dormant memories, coloring the present and opening windows to the future.

To his right, a modest cardboard box, open to the generosity of passers-by, housed a few 5 ron and 1 ron bills, respectively, as a tacit recognition of his talent by passers-by. It was a simple but profound moment, suggesting that despite the speed and superficiality of everyday life, there is room for the appreciation of genuine art, for a gesture of gratitude that transcends the mundane. Especially for an artist, I was amazed by the musician's performance, as if I had lost the depth of the moment, leaving only a short film to watch, reflecting the pure emotions conveyed by the musical notes.

Leadership: By capturing the "mundane moment" can you become the guarantor of an experience that transcends the immediate, bringing to the fore a broader vision of what makes you unique?

The Exhibition Park is the ideal for entering a space of revelation and inspiration, where nature and art harmoniously intertwine. This urban landscape, emptied of the infernal noise of the city, suddenly turns into a show, a space dedicated to art, when the quiet music begins to intertwine with the bustle of passers-by, creating a symphony of contrasts. The sound of the accordion, touching, pleasing to the fine hearing, succeeds in bringing to the fore a world where image and feeling merge harmoniously, the reality of the music merging with the inner world of each listener.

The musician, through his "a cappella" interpretation, not only enriches the soundscape of the place, but invites an unexpected introspection, turning the street into a stage on which a play of emotion and humanity unfolds. His image, una forza del pensiero creativo , is a snapshot of action through sound and a symbol of the representation of man in harmony with art, from the perspective of a transcendental experience. This is because it allows the listener to transcend the limits of immediate reality and enter a space of deep understanding, where music becomes a bridge between the material and spiritual worlds.

And if I am truly unique, in something characteristic of artists, it is because of my ability to transform mundane moments into works of art that resonate with people's souls.

Leadership: Can you recreate an action of the present unfolding before your eyes, combining it with a sense of presence across the ages?

I didn't know what was more precious: to listen to him with nostalgia, in an elan that mixed humble presence and splendor, or to watch with admiration how he stroked the accordion, like a kind of dance between his fingers and the music, where every movement was in perfect harmony with the rhythm of the heart. I believe that music is just an instrument of divinity and inspiration, and it becomes a kind of messenger, making me experience a state of ecstasy, like a trance, throughout creation, so that the communication between the soul and the universe becomes palpable, transforming each note in a vibration of existence itself.

In the story "Aleph", the famous writer Jorge Luis Borges describes a magic point that contains the entire universe. Aleph is described as a "transparent sphere" containing "all points in the universe". But Borges uses sound to create an atmosphere of mystery and wonder, describing the sound of the Aleph as a hum like the murmur of waters, or like a rustling of leaves. The hum symbolizes the mystery and wonder associated with the Aleph, which is a representation of infinity. This sound is intermittent and intensifies as the protagonist approaches Aleph.

Really. Sounds capture the essence of the moment, whether it's a vibrant melody or a quiet symphony. And man, through his art, gives life to these sounds, creating an emotional and memorable experience. More recently, artificial intelligence can analyze and interpret sounds, uncovering hidden patterns and emotions, but you feel more alive when you watch the human face as they express the passion and liveliness of each note. In fact, better than this man, I don't know if at this point artificial intelligence would be able to create new forms of art, combining sound, image and movement in a unique and so captivating way.

Broadening the scope of leadership corresponds to those circumstances where the image you need to highlight coherently is not limited to visual perception, but rather to the feeling that you transform into creation.

Listen to me before I look at you, and maybe you will understand the essence of my words without being filtered through visual prejudices. Of course, try to get rid of the act of seeing only the important things, the obvious things at first glance, but rather do it in such a way that everything you encounter is explored in depth, discovering the hidden value in the seemingly minor details.

Listen To Your Voice That Your Eyes Reflect

Knowing your personal limits is like looking deep within yourself and understanding nature's subtle messages.

It was hotter than ever that morning since the day of the contest. The eyes were looking at me, waiting to speak to me in a hidden voice. It was not only the heat that unsettled me, a kind of mental representation of the living co-operation of strange forces, but also a strange sense of foreboding that never left me. And they were still watching what was happening to me, without me being able to intervene in any way. I could only connect to the soul of an artist who, like a magician, tries to reveal his essence beyond appearances.

I started running up the slope, but this time, every step seemed harder, and the hot air was almost unbreathable. The eyes looked at me without me realizing that someone was watching me, and they spoke to me, they spoke to me together, they warned me that something was going to happen, and I didn't listen to them. Nature itself was waiting. After crossing the seventh kilometer, four kilometers before the end, I felt sick. I stopped instantly in the shade of an old tree, which seemed to tell me to rest and find myself.

And again, that voice from the off called to me: "Don't try to do an impossible trick in the face of unrelenting nature. Even the grandest illusions can crumble in the face of the primordial forces that govern the universe around you. True magic is to harmonize your efforts with the eternal rhythms of creation, not defy them."

- Yes, maybe, I answered to myself. A magician would know when to stop, looking at the watch on my wrist and calling on my dwindling reserves of courage. Nature can overthrow my seemingly impossible tricks with one relentless gesture, so I will avoid any miraculous artifice.

Leadership: Can you create a visual representation of relinquishment in such a revealing way that you bring to life a captivating vision full of hidden meanings?

- The secret of art lies in making everything that is actually imagined seem true, the voice continues. However, the minimum intensity of energy taken to the maximum extension is nothing but madness, a kind of grandiose illusion that defies reality, a kind of paradox of creativity that wraps everything in a cloak of artistic deception. No one lives long in a gray picture.

- I can't imagine anything worse than not believing in anything, I said then, with my eyes blinking in resignation. Then the voice fell silent, remaining motionless, almost rigid, but I felt that it was looking at me insistently, revealingly, with brown eyes that conveyed a deep sadness, an "Elfortahis Serchisas" , a state of constant struggle of the soul that yearns for the absolute. The agreeable resonance of the feeling of failure imposed itself on my whole being, reconsidering the possibility of use.

All I had to do was look at myself with the eyes of the artist who makes every moment seem like an eternity full of hidden meanings, along the lines of a visual representation of captivating introspection. The voice from off, the eyes from the secret spoke to me quietly, without detours, as if they saw me from somewhere above, as witnesses of an unseen god, or as if they resounded from my heart, warming my blood with meanings unspoken. It was just me and myself, two pairs of eyes making a single vision filter the light through the white canvas of the easel that outlines a stopping point on a deceptive route.

Leadership: Do you believe that true self-expression comes from the ability to look forward and transform suffering into art, according to the call to connect with the forces of nature?

If the most accurate judge of time is the clock, the most sensitive is surely a thief. Omar Ibliks, from the novel "The Geographer's Library", was the most skilled in this regard, he cultivated his anonymity by walking neither too close nor too far from others, neither too fast nor too slow, and never drawing attention to the thing he held . He had learned to use his peripheral vision more than his direct vision.

The eyes were there, all the time, defying all consequences. We stared at each other in silence, without moving, them at me, me at them, long enough for neither of us to have anything left to ask, time standing still. The bookshelves in my mind began to flutter and darken, with all their wisdom, at this resignation during the contest. The changes of soul and mental states passed over me like water and just as quickly they were lost in the deep.

The understanding of the eyes, of course, came later, when they announced to me: "You can't steal the time you lost by giving up, but you can regain your soul-nourishing sight."

Leadership: Can you remain true to the authentic expression of your inner being and revelatory vocation after accepting that certain things are irreversible?

Thus I came to the conclusion that it is useless to suffer for what is irreparable, I gave up feeling guilty about my failure. There will be other contests. My eyes reflected my self-expression, overwhelming them with my revelatory vocation, of living a string of victories despite a single defeat. Then I said with a deep sigh:

- I trust that you will forgive me for the long silence between magic numbers, by which I proudly announce that I have finally, if only partially, managed to find myself, trying to come to terms with the defeat it caused me the nature. True magic is looking forward with hope and never giving up on your aspirations, painting a bright future on the canvas of life, like an easel of infinite possibilities.

An attentive and discerning eye has this reflection in mind: "You can't steal the time you've lost by giving up, but you can regain the sight that feeds the soul."

Listen to your voice that your eyes reflect! The exercise consists in making an introspection, in which you look at yourself on the same route, but not alone, but accompanied by a voice that knows how to see beyond the renunciation. Even if you give up, the voice never gives up. Listen to your voice that your eyes reflect!

Leadership is the work of an introspection that speaks vicariously through the background of an existential experience, about the emptiness of a moment of balance that seems to bring no good unless it is enlivened with spiritual energy, with a thoughtful soul.

Living On My Own (II)

On August 18, 2015

Delve into what you accumulate through knowledge and into what you imagine to turn yourself into an undeniable argument of your own compositions.

Expression through metaphorical language, built only from visions and customized messages, to which I am sooner urged by madness than reason, represents the chance to lose myself in the world of a hidden star, which, in fact, has died, and to experience the full power of the never-before encountered. "Sometimes I feel nobody gives me no warning / Find my head is always up in the clouds in a dream world."

And with this dream world, with each labored momentum towards achieving the absolute truth of a new reality, inside of me, a division takes place, akin to pieces of basalt ripped by the fury of the ocean. In the cold perimeter of a surplus space, with many rooms, containing complex renovations of some unknowns, I am forcefully casted off with the force of a revelation, as if I had been detached from myself... Depressed, I realize that I am in the perimeter of the second birth. What is happening to me? "Sometimes I feel I'm going to break down and cry."

An uomo universale, a brain adaptable to the unknown, a computer fitted with a modelling software that functions based on sounds, expressions, and their connotations, with a thirst to grasp that unthinkable depth of time, questioning the assumption of the so called "small revision of identity", begins to incorporate within the space of creation, enveloping himself in the lyrical effluvia arising from a dangerous addiction, from an enormous thirst of merging with a less conventional art.

Enviable. From a simple vision, Freddie Mercury becomes, through the distinctive tone of utterance under the effect of music, a real image of divination, yet an image created and eternal. "Got to be some good times ahead."

A great philosopher proved that everything is possible, showing how I could physically unite the truths of each contradiction, such as, for instance, that white is black and that black is white. That you can exist and not exist all at the same time, that nothingness is something, that a mountain without a valley can exist.

If I, in turn, could prove all of these paradoxes without a misleading argument, focusing only on the interpretation of immaterial laws, derived from the formulas of a first-class language, then nothing would be lost from what the inaccurate could offer me: "Dee do de de, dee do de de."

Leadership: Can you make eventual revisions to identity by incorporating yourself in the space of creation, whose expressivity stops at the plausible meaning of the word "contradiction"?

Leadership keeps on going continuously, questioning the assumption of the so-called "small revisions of identity", when the artist starts incorporating into the space of his own creations through the effluvia of authenticity arising from a dangerous addiction, from an enormous thirst of merging with a less conventional art.

This art, which we cannot simply deduce from the formulas and principles of theories, is traversed by a parallel called "contradiction", where everything makes sense by relating to a different meaning. Can you be both creator and creation?

Contradiction is the fatal product of an inner struggle, between what you can accept in the state of giving a vision, of inventing images, and what you can express in the state of always being something else (a "microcosm" of symbolic value, built with the matter of the existing reality).

Leadership, which has as a prerequisite for sustainable development the world see through the eyes of an artist, gains a sort of extension, bearer of a dynamism of self-understanding that appears as a continuation of the experience of living in an interpretive perimeter. The interpreter of a great role is not only an effect of his creation, through the sober line of utterance and the clarity of expression, but rather an amplifier of this effect.

The leader is an artist who works at interpreting exploratory findings and approaches. Such a man delves into what is accumulated through knowledge and into what he imagines, turning himself into an "aesthetic story", in an undeniable argument of his own compositions.

Leadership: Can you give life to a unique knowledge with the help of an access protocol to the instance of a non-existent horizon, without departing from your area of belonging to a superior form of spirituality?

Making a decision to give life to a unique knowledge, as if drawn from a "Dreamworld", is done with the help of subjective searches, with the help of an access protocol to the instance of an inexistent horizon, processing other meanings and its connotations, converted into delivery information.

An inexistent horizon is a deviation from reality that is neither present nor anticipated, but which strengthens a rule: "It does not matter where you are going as long as your thoughts blow in the sails" or "As long as your thoughts fly free, there is no point in intentionally stopping them."

This Dreamworld is not simply an imaginary space, an essential element of the subjective side, but rather a product of abstract thinking from which we extract or deduce connections of potentiation or causality between an unknown and known – which only creators transit.

And here, the apparition of a phenomenon of the type "a whirlwind of happening", because as it was the case of many artists and scientist, they have found new rules of crossing the border between reality and fiction, with the purpose of representing the product between them, delving into a sort of ecstatic savoring through contemplation.

Well, this is what it means to experience the full power of the never-before encountered, by integrating oneself in background plane, in a space of recognizing new information under the effect of strong experiences and thoughts.

In this case, information becomes a body of a huge size, under the effect of a resulting inner force of "primary key" value, useful in providing an identification of the elements of a new revival.

A superior form of spirituality has as a means of expressiveness that much coveted creative capacity springing both from communion with the inner universe and from the significance that you give to your life experience by converting creation into yourself.

Living On My Own highlights man's crossing to a different level of understanding and perceiving the complexity of the dimension in which he creates himself.

You can make any eventual revisions to identity, incorporating them within the space of creation, only if the information you process, by correlating with the revelations your entry in a certain role brings, offers you an extra advantage in shaping a new style.

Living On My Own (I)

On August 15, 2015

Assume the identity you relate to by the force of your genius through a supreme renunciation of everything that enslaves you.

The reason for my ceaseless inner update is betrayed by the achievements of that organ of perception that expands more and more – the mind. This sublime component of my nature, the power of the pure spirit, seemes more agile through its discoveries projected into the universe with the utilization of thought energies, causing a Waterloo in which all the forces of curiosity clash. A state of "is not enough," which is superior to sentiment, may order conscience to compose an epic of genius. "I get lonely, so lonely, living on my own."

The genius, that gives spark to madness, is an exemplary model of becoming, composed of the dense substance of intelligent information, sometimes circumventing by means of the mechanism of interpreting confusing or contradictory formulations from under the domination of the principles of sociological existentialist knowledge. As a true artist who imagines during the night, but creates during the day, I hope to be able to set certain contacts between what exists and occurs in the Absolute, through a "One goal, one golden glance of what should be."

Everything seems to happen according to an elementary logic, a constant of representation of the self in relation with the time spent between two successive observations: the first, of the fact that nothingness can mean a supreme goal of life, the second, of the fact that the different, this way of expression through metaphors can always raise doubts. "Sometimes I feel I'm always walking too fast / And everything is coming down on me, down on me."

Leadership: Do you judge your own creation because you live in it, or do you judge yourself and attract the reward for the way you perceive and react to the exigencies of reality?

One of the brilliant inventions of Thomas Mann wasn't the composer Adrian Lever Kuhn, but the refined executioner of the man within him. Knowing that any attempt of returning to the lost paradise of mankind will fail, Adrian undertakes, however, such attempts of reinventing the self. And writer Ion Pianos offered an interpretable explanation of this: the bitter cup must be drained to the bottom, and true courage exhorts man to sip the poison, drop by drop. "I go crazy, oh so crazy, living on my own."

The most important creation of man, as a sublime component of his nature, is the image of perfection he aspires to established in relation to a consuming inner experience that becomes an outward reflection. The identity to which you relate to through the force of genius, facilitating either an indirect or subjective experience, by using a new form of expression in the direction of either an artificial or natural leadership, develops a certain affinity for everything that is out-of-the-box, through a supreme renunciation of everything that enslaves you.

Do you let yourself be enslaved by the ideal of being useful to society by eliminating or accepting the constraints of genius? Do you succeed in meeting the requirements of reality, given the widening of the possibilities of accessing aspects of dissatisfaction and self-seeking that call for the expansion of horizons, in a way that other people can understand you?

To judge your own creation because you live in it means to deny your freedom to become a shareholder in your own secret and to miss your training through the perspective of what you imagine you already know about yourself. This creation is the sum of all your experiences, the spiritual wealth you have accumulated living your life at a different intensity, shaping the profile of a landmark personality and a true model for fulfilling reflective obligations according to the wounds of the past or good parts of the present.

Leadership: Do your values vary depending on the content you want to communicate and the correct interpretation you give to your personal creation in the context of a job that goes beyond the image you transmit about yourself?

Artificial leadership is distinguished by a new content of knowledge dedicated to those that have the will of imagining something from beyond their and others' understanding. Something that can be implemented into a controllable existence through a scientific approach of the phenomenon of genius and of the factors with major impact. As someone very well said on the internet, the artificial is the only one capable of reveal the hidden and most prized nature of man.

While natural leadership, namely the programming of the processes of creation, the reception of the varieties of art and shaping them with help of elementary logic, addresses a narrower understanding of the things that come only through practice and experience. Or, quoting an internet user, the natural actually represents the human convention of the narrow perception of reality.

The man who is enslaved by the sin of being a genius, analyzing some of the practical consequences of particular importance of the development of informational science, often covers himself with the blanket of loneliness, always suffering from that addictive adrenaline of doing everything himself. To such a social phenomenon, to such an instrument of decomposing reality into science, certain experiments of detection of the exception to the rule are constantly ran.

Genius, in modern directions of researching the new, is somehow equivalent to passing from concrete to abstract, with the mention that it violates those structures of knowledge that have been set to "share". Genius can be admitted as being a matter of authority, a reality that stirs up controversy. You can more easily promote it through grace, than by developing creative faculties.

If leadership, like genius, becomes an experience of loneliness, means you are about to lose contact with what ties you to others. But makes you shine before them.

The values to be respected in the correct interpretation you give to your personal creation are the ability to understand in depth the essence of things, the quality of thinking beyond the patterns, mentioning that you should not turn them into something destructive to your being.

Living On My Own highlights the promotion of a way of being better than others, focused on the consequences of a life related to the symmetry between authenticity and loneliness, built more on the basis of benefits offered by the phenomenology of creation and imagination, than on existing science.

If you want leadership not to turn into a boomerang that can turn against you, assume the identity to which you relate to through the power of genius, through a supreme renunciation of everything that enslaves you.

Loneliness is a useful servant when you battle with the sin of being the best, but never will this servant be able to rule over an empire that belongs to others.

Look At Me As The Eye Looks At Itself

On February 23, 2023

What you really feel is what you see in yourself when you mentally approach an image that lingers in your mind.

The testimony of a life is found in a single image, with all the secrets revealed, with all the points revealed, as the power of the soul through which the smooth flow of the sensibility springing from every accord of the longing for freedom, of the pure dream is desired. You run away from Hell to reach Paradise, and the image acquires a special brightness, an unusual character, an artistic meaning through which, at the micro-space level, we are invited to understand it.

Her code name is Nina. Like any secret agent, she runs away one day, giving herself to the one who brutalizes her, and sends her on risky missions. The tragic experience of his life, the dream of a captive bird in a cage with thick bars, had to change into the flight of a hummingbird, which passes and leaves no traces, on the border between fog and light. To understand it to the extent that you deeply restore, with the same intensity of a fine wave of peace of mind, the experience accumulated throughout a life spent on the barricades of risky missions, replacing the old habits, thoughts, feelings, means giving up on yourself and becoming someone else.

Together with sight, the dominant sense through which everyone externalizes themselves, the anonymous viewer captures a sublime face resembling the brightest and warmest ray of the sun, as if the owner of the face were among those who possess the "invisible key" with which one enters the eternal paradise of symbolism. This time, the entire consciousness tries to grasp the total reality of an image of gentleness which, beyond a chiaroscuro background, marked only in places by small light strips, develops parallel and respects a mysterious correspondence with the mastery of an artist who seems to breathe poetry.

You see her in the photo as she sees herself, natural, without beauty filters, without harsh lines, in a reality of reflections in the mental mirror, with a gentle gaze, a gentle smile, aiming to touch a light morning breeze easily passing over the soul. And you still wonder what the eyes are saying. Something from off, like an echo from time immemorial, whispers to me: look at me deeply, with your soul, and tell me what my eye lacks to perfect its vision?

Leadership: The way you see yourself depends on what you feel at the moment when you manage to reach that deep space within you that recommends you as the creator of a vision "relived through recollection"?

Look at her as she looks at herself. And tell me, if you can, why her searching gaze, replacing a thousand words, struggles for a moment between me and the picture that the painter finishes with the last stroke of the brush, then slips, slides through me, is in a brief dialogue with my soul, and finally its image takes shape as a finished painting? Why?

From here is born a mystery, a symbolic evidence, a cosmic projection of the self born from a simple fantasy, something that for me is really frustrating. Because the eyes that see the image of a being in all its depth, surrounded by an almost mystical silence, are the same silent, reserved eyes, guided by the sense of seeing in the dark, a fact that allows me to experience on a much larger scale the inner universe that enlightened beings hope for it in secret, generally unshared.

My vision bears the name of a little known figure, but whose artistic creation has in promoting my identity. Of course, the one who knows how to appreciate the vastness as well as the complexity of a masterpiece, being inspired by a feeling that struggles for a moment between himself and the painting, is by no means a stranger to the contents of Leonardo Da Vinci's "Treatise on Painting", where we find the following mention:

"Those painters who often paint a relief model, in a special light from their home, and then place it in the great light outside, where the air encompasses and illuminates all parts in the same way, make a big mistake. From here it happens to them to cast strong shadows where such shadows cannot be found, and even if there were, the daylight is so strong that they can hardly be seen. And so it was with the reflections that you cannot see."

The testimony of a tumultuous life is in a single image that provides maximum visual acuity in the field of a soul renewal that is truly accomplished only to the extent that it expresses the immortal essence of a person.

Curious how strange, sensitive and fascinating is the touch of a thought of memory, coming from beyond the desert, when you absolutely want to penetrate a woman's heart. The face speaks, says a lot. It is not silent, but looks at you sincerely, without falsehood, being as bright as the sun among the palm leaves on a golden beach. It is foggy, in the evening, but his face is lit by the halo of a star, grows when viewed through the prism of a tear, and revives the magic of an immortal story.

The eyes look at you, with longing, with sighs. They seem like the touch of an angel that soothes your heart, makes you listen to his whispers, like the sun that climbs the dawn, as if it were nothing but the mirage of a moment fallen out of time, like a ripe fruit, detached from its branch by its own weight. The same calm eyes, full of the mystery of a Somines dres Scarthes, the vibration of an ephemeral emotion, capture the dreaming being in all the complexity and dynamics of opposites, resorting to a process of substitution, reproducing the image that poetically evokes the impressions produced by the appearance of a distinct aesthetic, vision , as a rethinking of a reality hidden in a beyond the name, in a beyond the word.

Marked by leadership is the recognition of a tumultuous life whose secret you do not find out, you cannot understand, no matter how hard you try to find its meaning, except by looking at the face of a person in the image that impressed you the most. Where the gaze does not penetrate, there the soul hides.

Look At Me As The Eye Looks At Itself and maybe, one day, you will understand why my deep gaze meets only the eyes that know how to see that distant light, from beyond the darkness. You can stir up this light in your soul that you have in front of you, it will never go out as long as you remember me, my traveling face that drives away the wandering and chaos into the wind, and changes them into sun rays.

Maybe that's how things are. The artist's eye is seen as the ultimate goal of creation; one would expect that at the moment of its extinction it would not be the end of the world...

Look At Me Compared To The Appearance Of An Artistic Image

On October 22, 2022

A transposition of the Creator's personality into nature is a faithful reproduction of what you expect to see in an image that evokes memories.

Today I look at the sea in a completely different way, this space of the absolute where few dare build their life story. It is infectious in the way I see it out of the corner of my eye, like an illusion of an intense reality, like a kind of delusional deja-vu feeling meant to bring me to art's most vulnerable point: the act of looking with suspicion at any representation, both perspective and non-perspective, whatever it may be.

The sea is emotion, metaphor, vision, it is notion, idea, thought and dream alike. And in an artistic version, in the great variability of creative activity, the sea pours its graces into my soul among the vast treasures of a charming imagination, reflecting a Borgesian mystery in which everything can only be touched in a dream behind the memories. This is also a form of making art, using any medium to represent an artistic idea, emotion or imagination.

My words are insufficient to express my admiration and gratitude towards something external, la creazione di una natura immutabile, in the proportions due to the representation of the idea of "beginning without end" conceived along the lines of the metaphorical plasticity that the insistence of my gaze acquires in the moments of "back in time".

Keep this in mind ! Any artist, thinking in a flow of images, symbols, representations of the imagination that often have no basis in any perception, can distort the experience of time, living in the moment, just as a tiny spot of color can change the appearance of the larger paintings. The artist thus runs the risk of not taking his eyes off what affected him spiritually.

Leadership: Can you demonstrate that there is a connection between the process of visual perception itself and the awareness of this visual perception, experiencing the thrill of reliving a significant event?

The language of the sea tells me everything about my thinking, considering that I hold the secrets that only nature keeps and can give to those who know how to listen. The sea remains an occulted area, defined by an Idearesthos Misearostys, the nostalgic multiplication of a state of adoration, accompanied by the thrill of mystical communion, as if evoking that desire and expectation I have for a dream that won't leave me alone.

And not only that. I believe that the sea is a kinship between the object of perception (what is imposed in the foreground) and the field of perception (what passes into the background) on backgrounds that gradually complicate, demanding on the part of the viewers to mentally complete it with divine symbolic attributes.

Once again, I can feel all the contentment, all the peace that can be enjoyed by the vast expanse of a courageous, immutable, interpretive reality. I see how the sea deepens gradually, so as not to scare those who do not know how to swim, I see how it breaks into pieces hitting the shore, but in its incomprehensibility it remains intact. I see her stirring, I see her changing color almost every day, how she brings to the shore the depth of her heavy sighs, how she draws secrets from people, how she shakes herself from the foam among the stone cliffs and how she gracefully sways her waves, wanting as if to create a profile of stability, of natural balance.

And this is what the sea said to me: "I will be very happy, venerable painter, if you will take the trouble to clarify some of my doubts that give uncertainty to my perception of beauty, of art, of various other pleasant subjects for drawing and painting. So, do not be surprised if your treatise on the totality of observations that give the visual experience of an ordinary reality, will present you with a list of problems and questions to which, from a real understanding of human nature alone, they will not provide you no concrete answer. Would you like, on this occasion, to share with me your thoughts about the beauty you want to build on my behalf?"

Leadership: Can you identify with the vibration of an unforgettable mystical experience in a process of receiving a reference image, which leads to the formation of another image?

The sea absorbs my whole being in the mirage with which it encompasses, inspires and shapes a new life story. Here, in the perimeter of memories and poetic visions, or grandiose fictions of the Borgesian type, the story of Nils Holgersson written by Selma Lagerlöf has its best place.

On one of his trips, while walking on a deserted beach, Nils saw a rusty copper penny on the sand. Realizing that he was dealing with a thing devoid of any value, he did not even think of picking it up and putting it in his pocket, but kicked it away. When he wanted to go further, he was amazed to see that a long wall with ridges and towers rose a few hundred paces away. He slipped under the gate and entered the unknown city. His eyes had never seen anything like this. Only shops with precious things, particularly good-looking people, tall houses full of grandeur, frontispieces adorned with more and more elaborate ornaments, etc. Everywhere he looked he saw only life. It was heaven on earth. Nils roamed the city for a long time, nobody noticed him, especially because he was as small as a finger. At one point he said to himself: "I will never be rich enough to buy anything from here."

And, suddenly, at the call of this desire, more and more merchants gathered around him. They all made him understand that they demanded only this much as payment for any product: a single penny, no matter how small, so that the curse hovering over the city would be stopped. But Nils didn't even have a penny. Then all the merchants began to weep with tears. Moved by their pitiful condition, and remembering the penny on the seashore, Nils set off in pursuit. He left the city gate and headed straight for the place where he had discovered the penny. He found it immediately. But when he turned back to the city, he saw nothing but the sea rolling its waves incessantly. The city had disappeared again, for another thousand years.

In order to place yourself in an image that reflects your inner reality, you must first outline a story that you cannot part with, with the risk of experiencing the disappointment of wasting a beautiful story that was only possible in your imagination.

Look At Me Compared With The Appearance Of An Artistic Image if you want to relate to a reality that knows only the horizon of mysticism, transmitted through the filter of nostalgia, a fact that has a much deeper impact on the mental and the emotional. Whereas the sea is constituted as an artistic image when it captures a reality that is often ignored, overlooked or... unknown !

That's the way things are. When you continue to enjoy the feeling of immersion in the dream world of the sea, which all artists manage to create mentally, you begin to feel like you are in a mirage that, although temporary, makes you move forward and don't pay attention to the lessons learned. Whereas failure, if viewed as a lesson, or as an intermediate step, is phenomenal.

At one point I wanted to lose myself in a fairytale landscape, like in a mirage that the sea creates on a hot summer day, but the heat of the day was beginning to be acutely felt, and that gave me news that I don't have to risk utopian thinking where essence and appearance coincide...

Look At Me Sincerely And Don't Pretend That You Don't See Me

On March 20, 2020

Learn to turn your art into the wonderful story of a being of nature compatible with the nobility, solemnity and spirituality of an image of "The One Who Is Unimaginable".

I'm just a leaf, perhaps the most visible in a higher plane of existence, because of my mood. You see me, you feel me, you remember me in your memory, don't you? I am the image of a movement sensitive to the call made by the change of seasons, ispirazione o omaggio all'artista, giving time the example of a total freedom of approach to art, to beauty and good, provided I am considered the key and prime condition of any freedom of expression.

Attractive, well-groomed, my sight is your own sight to which is added the feeling of a providence that I also felt so many times "present" in the artist's sense of seeing a powerful and vibrant reality, extended in a dreamy expression, melancholic or suffering. Eyes strongly impregnated with naturalism never forget a wonder of nature, and the gaze, even the most distant, cannot avoid the eye coming into contact with art. Above all, the art of making a painting a dream story, or a story a sublime painting-like image.

A play of colors in an autumn landscape, or a tired hope in a game of hide and seek?

There is a kind of gaze that the eye only catches by relating to an artistic reality. It's called photography, or scientific creation. Here I am mentioned only in passing, rarely for the purpose of ensuring solemnity, and only by lovers of selfies. Discreetly, with good taste, pleading for the autonomy of aesthetics, I had to make a habit of introducing myself into the landscape of a painting with the visionary gaze of an artist who knows how to express very well absolutely everything everyone knows, but which the world cannot do.

So great is my desire to be immortalized in a painting ordered to be brilliant, or at least in a poem of genius that marks the culture of the world. I think this is where the philosophy of great artists intersects with my thoughts.

Leadership: Can what highlights your image be associated with the art of immortalizing artistically cut states from a certain area of nature's sensitivity that can transfigure you into an enthusiast of pure feelings?

If you do not know how to be a leaf, pleasant to the touch, in the proper sense of the word "Creation", placing the brush among a multitude of colors sensitive to sight, then you know nothing about how to be a force of nature that the artist exercises in order to make a masterpiece. A leaf can express an exclamation, a question or an answer. He knows how to enjoy in every moment the static or dynamic image that the artist captures in an attempt to articulate a detail that often appears at the most inappropriate moments.

The same leaf, from the great mixture of colors of the world, guides my thoughts, soul, vision, to a fragment from "1001 Nights", because the leaf has the gift of telling the story of the tree from which it fell, and the tree knew well the man who planted it. And that man, when he was a poor young man, poor but dreamy, made a journey to the edge of the Syrian Desert, a desert that stretches to the Euphrates, and where the caliph Harun al-Rashid of the Abbasid Dynasty ruled. In this desert he wrote his own story.

- Can you tell me, young man, where did you get all this from, as long as you are only a subject of my subjects? Harun al-Rasid asks him. How is it, then, that you have reached, in such a short time, and so young still, this stage of wealth, fame and power? You, who were the laziest and softest of all that can be found on the face of the earth?

- I will tell you my story, oh Emir of the Faithful, which is such a wonderful story and full of magical happenings, if it were written with a needle in the inner corner of the eye, it would be a teaching of great benefit to one who would like to enjoy it.

And all this because a leaf marks the passage between the worlds, being taken into account only by the memory of a conscience that knows how to write a story about "destiny" with the test of faith, wisdom and creative zeal.

Leadership: Can you explore the fine areas of your sensitivity on the principle of association that governs spirituality, solemnity, and the power of genuine feelings that turn a thousand people into one?

The leaf can memorize, it can listen to me, just as I listen to it, because the leaf doesn't care who sees it, as long as no one talks about it. When I lift it, lightly, gently, with a painter's own sensitivity, I provoke an immense happiness, as when touched by a delicate summer rain. And because it feels my warmth, my reality, my heart, it responds to me in the tone of a poet full of hope in the message of its work: "Obviously everything has its secret drop of poetry, its song. To feel it is a great gift; to make us feel it, that is something of the power of God."

I understand it, I know the meaning of its life on earth, because I am also from the earth, and it returns to me. The leaf continues to follow its path paved by the fate of a wanderer, the fate of a pharaoh, the fate of a warrior, the fate of a jeweler, or the fate of a martyr. Following it on the road, as it is taken by the wind, with all its artistic content, in the beat of solemnity, I easily discover at every step a lot of beings, other faces and colors, other connections, other things about myself.

And, giving peace, light, moments of lucidity, it has the power to wink at me, but in such a way that my gaze does not find its release. Only very little. The leaf awakens in me a lot of thoughts, insecure and fleeting, but tender and full of wisdom. Probably it has its correspondent in the phenomena of the soul contraction of a shapely muse, beyond the fine layers of a natural make-up: the fine notes of intimate life, the fine notes of picturesque, the fine notes of mysterious and pretentious begin their first contraction, after examining the extremely delicate observations of a living and alert spirit.

I am the spirit of a leaf that has put itself in the place of a brilliant artist, very experienced in making his art the wonderful story of a leaf compatible with the nobility, solemnity and spirituality of an image of "The One Who Is Unimaginable".

Leadership is the image of the "Unimaginable" embodied in a work of art whose message, which is the test of time, can be expressed as follows: "The hardest thing in the world is to accept to always be the same you, in a different way and another look."

Look At Me Sincerely And Don't Pretend That You Don't See Me if you really want to understand how the artist reaches the level of Great Art through a special technique called Syrapher-Nupithos, or "the voice of the Lord in every expression of nature".

I slowly lift my gaze and look into the eyes of the leaf to my right. You are right, that is how your eyes are, they resemble mine quite well, for the eyes of the LORD run to and from throughout the whole earth, to show Himself strong on behalf of them whose heart is perfect toward him.

Look At Me Well But Do It Differently

On November 01, 2022

You cannot know things in themselves, but only the way they appear to you as a perception of the difference between you and the image you attach yourself to.

I'm looking at a bike now, that's exactly what I'm doing, I'm looking at a bike with which I think I could cover hundreds of kilometers without problems. In fact, I don't need more than the image of a bicycle to bless my soul with the sight of eyes designed exclusively to identify the beauty that comes from the surrounding things. Moreover, turning the axis of vision towards the center of the magic square, Orevinthus Thacrosm, a unitary whole whose goal is harmony with the surrounding reality, it would be said that my main talent is capturing, in a quick and natural way, the beauty of things that surround me.

From here comes the power of my passion for the "image language" built as an attempt to recover the space full of affectivity, as an integral transposition of the artist in each of his works, to confirm the depth of an impression about vision, sublime, about beauty and knowledge, about emotion and creative freedom.

That's the way things are. Art takes shape starting from what you see, visionary and revolutionary, or even utopian, highlighted due to the visionary spirit and the aspiration towards perfection. And this well-maintained, artistically crafted bike, probably made to order, well equipped for bumpy roads, seems to be trying to reach out to me. It is as if I saw it thrown in front of me, in a moving, splendid mirage, a fragment of the passionate dream of Icarus, in an attempt to widen a horizon lost from sight.

I feel wonderful around the bike, like an artist who doesn't aggressively build his image, like many others, but who just wants to showcase his craftsmanship and skill. As the only element of enjoyment, this very technological object par excellence seeks to read my thoughts, causing some of those hopes to be born in me that crush all obstacles, all reactions. I tell you, when I look at her, patient, understanding and docile, so eager to take in the horizon, it seems that she also looks at me with the same eyes, with those eyes that are easy to look at and hard to forget, which have the right to admire and praise in human language: "I have nothing but words of surprise and admiration for this artist who beautified me down to the smallest detail".

Leadership: Can you reinvent the story of your life by appealing to the suggestive power of an image, in accordance with the revelation of a novel vision of reality that only your Self can create?

Like an artist who sees the fulfillment of his creation, I felt the joy of a great fulfillment seeing the bike allowing itself to be looked at for a long time, admired like a star, throbbing with fresh youth. It reveals that world of utopian feelings in which I myself live when my imagination takes me far too far, in the sense of making a leap across the ages. All my future, all my calculations, all my greatness, all my foundation rests on this "unmoved first mover" which has the cause of movement itself. The fidelity of an image is always subject to a judgment of artistic value.

Perhaps certain atmospheric conditions influence her, or perhaps they are completely foreign to her, but however she carries her thoughts, I imagine myself as her friend in advance, telling her that she will never waste her beauty, for any time. My thoughts, my soul, my hope are with her, even when I imagine that I am thinking about something else, in an attempt to recover the space subordinated to the pictorial matter of a strong drawing, made of lines full of strength and monumentality, as important to creation as the state which the artist has in front of the easel.

Even though I don't know her well, I still think about her, hoping that I will find her even if I go to another city.

And if I project a state of my soul in her image, because the main thing about her value is not the purchase price, but the depth of the state she triggers among the viewers, and because the emotions she conveys to me through the image allow me to increase in my consciousness older parts of the life I led, more distant but essential parts, it is because I feel the pleasure that comes from talking with a superior man who has succeeded in rejecting the past and truly understanding the present.

Leadership: How do you measure the breadth of your creation by observing everything around you, when the argument for a possible expansion of the imagination offers "openness to being"?

And when I look at her, she also looks at me in the same way to unleash that breath of idealism, of noble ideas, of hopes, an ideal of freedom so specific to the futurists in which the individual is put in the foreground by the abstract and surrealist compositions. The bicycle is not a being, the subject of experiences and other lasting mental states, nevertheless it represents a life-giving power. Because it touches every vital part: the brain, the heart, the nerves, this being the reason that seeks with coldness to reveal its passion for the setting and ambience of various events, with the risk of the impossibility of being immortalized in marble for eternity.

If the bicycle is a theme of creation, then the argument of a possible expansion of the imagination will give the "opening to the being", that is, becoming a being, as Noica would say, perhaps because, undoubtedly, it is inseparable from the love of the cyclist who pilots it, this being the first feature that comes to be added to the following cumulative conditions: the memories, the emotions, the sum of the facts included in the gallery of the great gender events of life. Very well, I would say, look at the bicycle, full of harmony and elegance, it is an effective means of removing the monotony of straight, horizontal and vertical lines.

And after all, is it not? How many fleeting but patient observations, some less serene, must you collect on the regular movement that it goes through as a science of moving from point A to point B, so that you imagine you are painting, from the alternation of black spokes with beautifully polished ones, a world from which no one understands anything, but which leaves room for imagination and creativity.

The extent of a creation carried out in the realm of leadership is measured by the admiration you show for that thing invested with the force to produce a transformation in you, challenging you to see the world differently. However, eventual heartbreak can occur when what you see seems against you, changing your mood.

Behold that the bicycle, a splendid technological innovation, proved able to arouse admiration, the disposition to see in its neighbor an equal, not only through the diversity of emotions to which the "vision beyond imagination" was subjected, but through its power of turning a small thing into a special world, enlivened by a dignified life, full of joy and activity.

Getting to be her friend, as a very pious Christian, I was able to enter a rejuvenating world where beauty, health, adventure and risk reign. And I still think about it, fondly, with the view remixed by imagination, comparing it to the process of creating an intuitive painting in which the symbol of the mirror is capitalized: "see around only what attracts you to you".

Look At Me Well... But Do It Differently. This is the message that the reunion with the object of your reflection conveys to you, taking into account the fact that what you see around you is synonymous with what is valuable in you, not with what happens in the objective reality, shared by others. I think the image of the bicycle mediated the relationship between reality and myself very well.

Also, I think writer Liviu Damian was right: "We know things according to their nature or what things are in themselves and we allow what we know about things, their properties, to determine the content and form of knowledge. This is what happens in everyday experience."

Look At Me With The Eyes Of The Endless Beginning

On August 01, 2022

The performer's mind seems to have a logical response to everything that tests his understanding: "I know that one times one makes one. And that one times a thousand still reduces to one."

I was at the marathon competition, as long as my presence lasted for a short period of time, at the 33k and 48k events respectively. It is interesting to load up on the emotions of other winners of any kind and of any age, fond of high-intensity moments, and present yourself as an additional companion to the long-awaited revisiting every year.

Without any pretext, directly from the perspective of the eyes that capture the mysterious stirring of hearts hidden in this story, I could discover the difference between what is given and what is achieved: the first is pure chance, the other is an irreplaceable art, a reality of the order of assigning meanings. And as much as I would have deepened into the intimacy of a finite horizon of waiting, to make room for the widening of the space of intense experience of the energy of others, of the state in which everyone is active and alert, thus allowing myself to be pushed by the greatness of the event beyond the drain of the time, it was as if I still kept a restraint in relating to that mysterious feeling, called "distance from myself", which kept shouting, and shouting, and shouting, without anyone hearing it.

It seemed that the voice in me was the echo of the surrounding voices that were resounding louder and louder, like the gong of a pendulum striking the exact hour, but as music, in its pure form, resounds on the world's most famous stages, on the chords of a famous inner echo of the fierce fight: "We are the champions !" Naturally, without emotions, it would have been just entertainment that I could not have afforded. The emotions resulting from the action, carried on in undisguised form, maintained their symbolic frame of reference.

Leadership: The connection with yourself depends on the faculty of your eyes to unite in one direction, so that you discover what is the potential of other people to occupy a position of strength vis-à-vis a certain event?

There is something else. The words that meaningfully characterize the purpose of the biggest sporting action of the week, with intense vibrations of fire, without finding any fault in them, having a value almost equal to the value of the gold reserves of the world banks, seem well imprinted on the face of the finalists: "I contained with the soul, with the heart, much more than the eyes can see !" So, emotions are specific and intense psychological reactions to a certain event.

Now the thought seems insignificant. But something must ease my effort to find the perfect flight to a great expanse beyond the line of any horizon, encompassing a very wide area of possibilities, or even everything. After all, this is also a faculty of the eyes to unite in one direction maintained by the aspiration to reach an unprecedented height. And the same thing happens with the mind, when it flies, everything seems to obey it, it seems to be somewhere else even in the presence of elements that distract it. Especially in competitions, the performance runner's mind seems to have a logical response to everything that tests its reach and understanding: "I know that one times one makes one. And that one times a thousand still reduces to one."

Understand that in the course of this battle with the rainy weather, not only with oneself, each participant in the race kept the last resistance of physical forces until the end. A mysterious cry of victory filled the echoes of the surrounding world in an ineffable spell, a breath of passion expressed in the form of stimuli, memories, unforgettable moments.

But the soul, which hides and has "alterity" deeply sewn into it, this fierce realism soaked in the momentum towards unsuspected heights, a stranger in the middle of the everyday frame, only looks forward, towards another horizon, towards be the protagonist of another piece full of motor images aligned in a geographical space full of improvisational variants. Let's listen to the soul's dreams and share its nostalgia...

Leadership: Does the probability of placing yourself in the foreground of a view that broadens the horizon of understanding the surrounding world, depend on the degree of certainty you have regarding a certain event that requires "distancing"?

There was a breath of fresh air in all this commotion, a breath of a certain kind, as if someone or something was trying to bring order to what was happening on a huge stage full of strangers. I didn't recognize myself at the beginning either, I hadn't reserved that unique honor of knowing myself vastly, covered by the cheers of the crowds inside me, because I stopped right at the end, and because at the end you can't maintain the joy of the beginning.

I haven't forgotten that the marathon is an event that requires distancing, because you don't run on the back of someone else.

Tomorrow will be my race, the optimal option to ease my access to another horizon, far away, somewhere else, a kind of confrontation with the insatiable appetite for boundlessness, in the sense of concentrating all my resources to mobilize my need to be somewhere else. A new beginning that the end will consider another beginning... a beginning that will have the courage to say freely at the end: "I forgot when I began, for I have stepped forward and became unrecognizable."

Fabulous ! A great artist always finds something to touch up even on a masterpiece. Therefore, if the result does not fully satisfy me, I will end up inventing one myself, with a different beginning and a different ending, hoping that this will be the only, but also the best option, by which I will be able to relieve my need to feel valuable. Full of momentum, I will merge with someone else who, looking in a magic mirror, traversing space and time, feels something impossible to imagine: that I have reinvented myself somewhere else, somewhere where I can never be surpassed by anyone. Thus, the ending will be mine alone, decided only by the creator fiercest in reinventing reality.

Tomorrow will be the beginning. The beginning without end. Maybe that's actually who I am: the beginning with no end, even if I end up anywhere, somewhere, at the end...

In leadership, you must cultivate a foregrounded view of self-attitude towards others, to better understand that the reality that cites you as a witness of a large-scale event must be expressed in terms of "part that replaces the whole".

Look At Me With The Eyes Of The Endless Beginning if you want to know me in the pose of "favorite victor" in whose chariot of victory all other victors are carried.

Undoubtedly, the beginning of any competition is a beautiful and emotional moment, an example of convergence between yourself and the rest of the world. But the beginning will never replace the end which represents the closing formula of a great work: reconciliation with yourself, a form of resistance struggle, a tacit acceptance of your contradictions with yourself.

Look At Me With The Eyes With Which God Looks At Me

On March 23, 2020

A perfect artist can only be saved by admitting his condition as a creator raised to the extraordinary potential of being one with God.

I told God I wanted to be a king, and he told me that I must first become a skilled magician, then a perfect painter. In the middle was the method of substitution, the magic of being God, and the art of being a magician, seen through a contrasting mirror that magnifies the image of a reality to the fine, velvety tip of a living brush, personified by Apollo, the god of the arts, but also of prophecy, of proactive thinking. The same brush could have been used separately as a magic wand, personified by purity and faith.

Convinced that a magician must have his own space, isolated and hidden from view, where he can practice fully, freely, unrestricted, his own belief about the stage act, I turned into an artist who knows how to suggest through a symbol of surrealist mysticism a certain message to those who view his work. God is the director I identify with when working on the script of my life, even if my artistic constructions have not yet reached the level of technical mastery and expressiveness of the perfect magician.

The determining factor of all personality transformations is based on the main idea of magic, that everything can be misleadingly exposed, and only an artist can distinguish the truth, the difference between authenticity and kitsch. As for the artistic craft, of proposing symbols that project a positive and convincing image of association on God, the simple man will not be able to distinguish anything but some scribbles made knowingly.

It's all about being someone else, in a painting full of fantasy. Or on an improvised stage. And when you are a king of creation, you allow yourself the luxury of talking to God as you would talk about yourself in the story of a magician caught with artistic talent in a vivid picture, transformed by metamorphosis into fabulous fragments.

Leadership: Can you bring your creation into a higher plane of visualizing an image of yourself, so that you become an extension of absolute superiority through a being that exceeds its condition of "annexation of a privileged position"?

Is a disposition for the fantastic, by an unknown law of creation, something you simply understand, or not?

God was my main witness to every magic issue, while the painter tried to capture on canvas all the richness and variety of light effects reflected in a confession-show, staged by a director so wonderful that you might think he is a true wizard of directing. It was as if I were looking for a voice that was nowhere easily perceived, but that seductively poured its drama of shocking depth into the pattern of an image converted from the colored form — to the black-and-white one — as an example of a miraculous number.

Art intervenes wherever magic leads it. And God does not really exist unless you are a perfect Creator. Of course, someone is either not present in this equation. At the same time, we must keep in mind that it does not exist. The artistic matters. Magic revives art in every verse of the imagination. And the soul must be followed through the eyes of a spectator in the world of the stage, in the world of film culture, in the fascinating world of sets, costumes, angles captured with the help of cameras.

The absolute power of the artist consists in the ways of realizing an authentic creative improvisation under the sign of magical expressionism, able to reflect the result of the establishment of an unprecedented augmented reality.

The lights lost their intensity. The setting, a bit nocturnal, seemed unreal, coming out as if from a painting by famous masters of past centuries. And the magician, in whose blood boiled the sweet drunkenness of absolute power, being caught in a random back and forth on the wonderful world of the stage, continues to describe God as best he can, while God continues to amuse Himself copiously with a story wrapped in magic.

Of course, everything I knew better about God, in fact about mystical things, I knew according to a magician, whose success story, inclined to the practice of drawing, could be characterized only by the determination and perseverance of the creator to see the dream turned into reality.

That's kind of what magic is, a connection to divinity. Through magic you build pieces of reality, present and future, and convey the hope that what is to happen is the causality, creation, and story of a Creator whose providence works by the will of infinite power.

Leadership: Is it in the power of your creation to be transferred to a new configuration of visual representation with all the force of the character played in the middle of an event that represents you as a deliberate familiarity with the supernatural?

Freddy Mercury's "A Kind Of Magic" video brings a kind of contradiction to the leadership dimension: can you be both an artist of science-produced effects and someone who accomplishes the inner power that turns you into a reflection of an imaginative energy?

If so, at what risk? At the risk of rigidly attaching to what you leave behind when the effects occur (that kind of magic that pushes you beyond what you thought you were capable of) and detaching yourself from the traditional way in which artists interact with the world.

The supernatural is the religion of the art of being one above the understanding of the world, according to the connection maintained by the incredible resemblance between the Creator and his Creation. It is, at the same time, that inner power that you present to the world through the prism of the image formed by the intertwining of the unforeseen with the sensational, of light and shadows, of your life story with the character detached from a lesser known world, one who crosses from one world to another.

But to whom or what fact is this inner power subordinated? Reality or unreality? And to what extent does it manage to shape you into a flow of successive transformations? How do they balance?

Probably, depending on the ability to accept yourself as a performance of science, to be a unique Creation in terms of value and limits of expression, in understanding metaphors or expressions with figurative meaning, feeling connected to a great cause: to express your artistic views in any way through a kind of hidden, mysterious, incomprehensible power.

To turn leadership into a masterpiece of creative genius, first try to understand the ins and outs of artistic creation by building a character detached from a surreal world.

Learn to express yourself in the form of alterity: about the "other You" located in a higher plane of knowledge, which can be converted at any time to another reality (brighter in the invisible, and wider).

Look At Me With The Eyes With Which God Looks At Me if you want to understand the art of being a magician through the prism of an artist who feeds on the euphoria of creation, finding his full expression in the power to place himself in an alternative reality.

The secret of being God is the power to combine magic with art, so that the painter is considered a magician, and the magician is considered an esthete, and both are considered the symbol of a new direction of thought. Whoever fulfills this condition has already gained his superiority in the midst of this world !

Look At Me With The Gaze With Which I Follow You

On November 13, 2021

A leader who has the talent and the qualities of an artist will always show an associative intelligence, accepting the challenge of amplifying the visibility of an image far from a static point.

I'm at the train station in Cluj-Napoca. I'm waiting for the train, along with other gazes that seem to notice everything around me. But no one notices me, not because no one has eyes for me, but because foreign gazes always have a habit of focusing on a well-defined goal. And the train is still to come...

But doesn't the train, in turn, have a look that stands out more than any other look that tries to intercept its geographical position? A thoughtful expression and an enigmatic smile, constituted in a penetrating look that, evading any control, goes through things looking for what is beyond them. Whereas this look sees straight ahead, neglecting at all costs the lateral aspects of the space it crosses, to satisfy that exemplary curiosity that emphasizes the dynamism and the freedom of reaction of the viewer.

And if my gaze meets the straight, cold gaze of the train, without any constraint of space and time, it would mean that we are two witnesses sufficient to justify the confirmation of another point of view, right? Thus, it is possible to agree between a symbol of passing time, expressed through Kamtirodhis, without knowing when the train is approaching, and the stationary in the soul of an imagination meant to take the form of a continuous or prolonged metaphor.

Leadership: Can you broaden your field of vision by comparing what is happening beyond the imaginary, so as to illustrate an image that extends beyond the frame of reference of the other "YOU"?

One more thing needs to be said. The curiosity of the train will not limit it to the observation of the landscapes that surround it, because its weight is not an impediment to speed, nor to observe what is happening around it, just as a painter who knows how perfectly combine art and different mediums of artistic representation to manifest their talent.

The suggestive fact that draws attention to a serious degree is the very space that the train traverses, so that the artist can represent the duration in such a sensitive way that time is, in relation to it, like a line along which the horizontal plane of the grandiose projections of the surrealists and the transcendent and intrinsic plane of the theory of knowledge.

However, respecting the side views, the external forms of interaction with other people or things, the train must confirm the confession to connect with me, adding that "it does so without being forced by anyone".

Indeed, it would be said that the train, taking the form of an imaginative creature, gives the artist the same view that he grasps from a distance, proving in this detail that ideas are contained in the sense of sight, and that the artist will distinguish them insofar as it will take into account the importance of abstract thinking.

Leadership: Is the image that transposes you in the middle of Artistic Creation associated with your position in the area farthest from where you normally wait?

Enystemagntis: to see through what intuition is seen, through what happens to you when you move to another place, with the opening of other perspectives. However, reconstituting the space traversed by the train as a creation traversed by a color of infinity or unreality, but independent of the multitude of objects that are within the reach of the artist, I will be driven by reason to believe that the relationship between train movement and journey in the artistic way it represents the possibility of rendering reality in a unique image-symbol.

Here is how the train becomes, in a single moment, an improvement of my distance view, causing an intimidation of my close gaze, as it moves towards the station. So, nothing escapes the watchful eye of the artist who quickly moves from a predetermined direction to a psychological perspective of the inner gaze. It was to be expected, because in the activity of my faculty of seeing there are two important degrees of comparison that I can specify: a kind of memory that requires constant power to retain data from it, and an associative intelligence that is able to accept the challenge to enhance the visibility of a distant image.

If after a while someone dared to return to the station, willing to wait for the train, the equivalent of finding a gaze that says more than 100 gazes, then I would have one message to convey, as a sincere confession:

The man who does not know how to wait in one place for a reason to see the simple things better, is a man whose gaze is not able to penetrate the linear flow of "now", and who is not able to penetrate the unusual existing in itself, somewhere withdrawn from the eyes of the world...

Leadership, in the activity of the faculty of seeing, resembles the way you perceive a live art experience, without direct contact with the subject who provoked a comparison: it has a way of ensuring openness to the new, assuming a direction that justifies a revealing mood.

Gaze Upon Me As I Gaze Upon You, whenever you try to capture a clearer picture of the phenomenon of distance-closeness, through the prism of what is seen with the naked eye, but which is perceived artistically only by comparisons.

Look At Me Without Forgetting My Gaze

On December 27, 2022

The fundamental link between image and perception is the subjectivity with which memories take off deep within you.

My thoughts always go to the sea and to the sand of the coast, two variants of the same memory representation. This more accurately reveals the strength of an artist's soul that through his paintings tells his universe in colors, painting the face of the sun in the way that the sea, in its melodious voice, kisses the sand and then retreats during the ebb. Surprisingly, the dry land takes the form of paths along which I fondly carry my memories, outbursts of tenderness, bouts of nostalgia fever, related to the idea of perspective space that possesses intrinsically sensitive properties.

Leadership: Can you revive a reality by bringing the past back into the present, in front of a convex mirror that reflects the ideal image of an endless life?

Yes. There is a secret hidden between me and the sea: we cannot exist without incorporating, on the contrary, the meanings of a work of art that allows itself to be discovered only according to the whims of memory doubled by an image of imaginary reality, originating from a past that stubbornly refuses to pass In one way or another, it is about the existence of a subjective time, revived by involuntary memory, and represented in a convex mirror that reflects the ideal image of an endless life.

Are they just the whims of an inventive fantasy that rummages through reality with its hands full, eclipsing any surrounding attraction? Or, maybe I am especially fond of the sea in the image of an idyllic, rare, isolated world, in which I want to lose myself without a goal, without a plan, without a trace, as in a labyrinth of convex mirrors that, deceptively, always leads in the same place.

In this way, I must model myself on the tendencies of the sea to delight the viewer's eye, so that the essence of the dynamic of life remains intact by referring to art, or more precisely to the pictorial representation of the beauty of a dialogue between the gaze and the embrace. Looking face to face with myself, with all that it entails, and embracing a wandering illusion in which my former self would have lived.

Leadership: Can the image that broadens your horizon justify the existence of a subjective time, revived by involuntary memory and elevated to the rank of a confession that reflects emotional fragility?

Entering this space of the image that directs the gaze towards the discovery of the artistic, appreciated as the foundation of the conservation of the sea in the work of memory, I managed to integrate myself into a book written by Paul Auster, which spoke about the Russian literary critic and philosopher, Mikhail Bakhtin:

"During the German invasion of Russia in World War II, Bakhtin smoked the only copy of the manuscript of his work, a vast study of German literature (which was the size of a book and on which he had been working for years). One by one, he tore out every page of the manuscript and used the paper to roll his cigarettes, smoking a little bit of the book day after day until there was nothing left. These stories are true. They are also parables, perhaps, but they have the meaning they have because they are true."

In my artistic work, where the images merge into an echo of dream times from a place of disconnection from stress, I have demonstrated a special inclination towards this kind of life attitude.

Especially in my memoirs, so varied and colorful, the following account can be found: all that I see with the eyes of memory is, day by day, a page torn from a life lived without regrets, remaining steadfast in front of a dream image which, mysterious and indecipherable, transformed into a poem of time, outlines a fascinating journey of self-discovery. And even if all the pages of my memoirs will be lost, one by one, thrown into an enigmatic, undeserved, endless oblivion, one thing will still remain rooted in hearts: the scent of the Sea Breeze.

Leadership: Does the impact that the image of the totality of your presents throughout your life has on you, put you in the pose of a Creator in the proximity of a vision as revealing as it is profound?

The harsh perfume of fiction is felt in the way I immortalize a sublime moment of emotion, when the water of the sea recedes into the open, leaving visible a narrow strip of land that my eyes consider the middle of eternity in a simulated virtual reality, a "no man's land" where a large number of myths, legends and symbols meet and face each other. And, one more thing on which I agree, a universal phenomenon translated by an Achthas Syncorthesys (the symbol of the drive towards spiritualization), is that complete sincerity of the painter and the strong originality with which he captures the details, without getting lost in them.

Just like in a kind of visual labyrinth in which the character gets lost without a trace to be found, but becomes an eternal being by the fact that his memory is immortalized in a masterpiece of art that reveals itself in the strong contrast between image, reality and symbol. Therefore, art reveals its true value at the seaside, through the monologues of the artist's mind that, haunting him for hours and hours, bring to life those overwhelming, intense emotions, and shed light on what it means to live from transposed memories in pictures.

Indeed, in memory you cannot live in total ignorance, in an essentially perfect oblivion, but only to see yourself, to discover yourself, to be amazed by the intensity of your reactions face to face with reality, without pretending to be someone else.

And the sea creates a double in a photograph: it clones me in more and more poses, the most truthful of which is that of the Creator of the Microcosm. Indeed, a single photograph can evoke an infinity of emotions in a loop of past time revived by reminiscence. Emotions poured out and stored perfectly in a time capsule, like a chest full of a hidden treasure that brightens the monotonous life...

An artist must consider the unity between the image and the medium through which the image is transmitted, for a logical reason: no image can exist without a medium of abstraction of reality, not even mental images that use the flow of memories as a medium for the development of self-awareness.

Look At Me Without Forgetting My Gaze every time you try to penetrate a reality that reflects your state of mind, tuned to a spiritual fulfillment that transcends space and time and with which you ennoble your life, called "rejuvenating recollection".

Look At Me Without Obeying My Sight

On November 09, 2021

Focus on what is meaningful to the image that resonates with the world, without increasing your tendency to control the process of image formation itself.

Many people are present at today's competition in Cluj-Napoca. The marathon is very competitive. There are a lot of competitors, but also a lot of supporters. Everyone is watching something, otherwise they wouldn't have been there since this morning. It is enough to look at how those who run are viewed, compared to the supporters on the sidelines, everything being chained naturally, distinctly, freely, in an unexpected montage of more and more involved attitudes. And you immediately realize that the supporters' gaze is firmly fixed on the running track, so not on you, even if you are one of the supporters.

Besides, if I can prove, as I think will happen, that no look can be blamed on the voice of a responsible conscience, confessing its need to please everyone without being overly influenced by various mechanisms of comparison, then all supporters will be above the runners in terms of the vision of belonging to a great goal. One must admire the attitude that turns a supporter into an unwilling participant in the happy event.

It could be said that any look that seeks another look is not a self-satisfied look, but a vulnerable one that can change at any moment, instead of waiting for everything. And a sight that sees is not necessarily a look with great echo in the depths of being.

I emphasize this. If every look were to follow the one next to it, it would probably lose its dignity, because no look focused on an important goal can steep so low to the point of noticing something insignificant, right? Therefore, you cannot reserve the exclusive right to condemn a view that does not concern you. You just have to be more discriminating with the help you render toward other people.

Leadership: Do you control the emotion that comes from directing your attention to the source of a visual stimulus capable of producing a "full circle" sensation when you express your concern for what is around you?

During the first race I witnessed, my gaze had only one conviction, based on a single suspicion, namely that it has no time limit to suit the preferences of others. And if any accusation against me was brought to my notice, and I should answer it as I see fit, so as not to be asked for more detailed explanations, I would only say this:

A look should not be easily persuaded by the promise of an announced event, promising to deliver exciting sensations, just like an advertisement that makes you buy anything. Rather, it would be better to firmly continue to be invisible, in order to prevent any "fall" in case of too much arrogance.

To put it another way. A visual stimulus capable of producing the sensation of a "complete circle" appears as a result of a succession of sensational events that initiate a response to the action of large-scale events by which you become a factor of change. Consequently, the atmosphere that catches your eye at a particular event, the overall look of an image that you look at as a whole, can trigger a biased attitude toward one or the other.

Controlling the emotion that tempts you at a certain event means strengthening your belief that what you are experiencing intensely has an important meaning and does not go unnoticed, and that what matters to you also matters to others.

At the same time, this emotion can spring from the belief that what you experience intensely in a certain moment of maximum sportsmanship can produce a significant impact in the process of forming a new self-image. At least in the case of the supporters, don't forget that the winner is in you too, even if the participants in the race try to delight your eyes with unique rhythm breaks.

Every human being is subject to the gaze that seeks him, not necessarily to the gaze that he desires or that he deserves. And this only if it establishes from the very beginning the definite reason for finding a background in someone's foreground. What is meant by this? That man can be looked at only because he wants to be looked at, or in a rare case, his gaze can inadvertently attract other looks seeking something sensational? Does this look have a completely arbitrary character? Does having a look in the foreground mean sharing its beliefs?

Leadership is the attitude of the man who knows how to keep a flame burning in the midst of the crowd, but who focuses only on the image of the flame that has imprinted itself in his mind.

Look At Me Without Obeying My Sight is the motto of a man who has understood that by just being alone in the midst of men, he will never be able to draw full attention to himself. And that's because people who are experiencing a lively, unpredictable episode are paying more attention to the end result than to a small "announcement".

Look At Me Without Seeing Me

On July 01, 2024

The true value of a work of art springs from the authenticity of personal experience, often revealed in moments of extreme vulnerability.

In the penumbra of a room, a woman full of experiences and quirks, putting the multiple facets of her personality under the magnifying glass, seeks her inner change. It seems to oscillate between prayer and sensual memories, in a dance of consciousness that transcends time and space. The half-lit room, filtering the sun's rays through the heavy curtains, seems to be framed in a Chiaroscuro painting by Caravaggio, a viewing room capturing the silhouette of a sick melancholy, of an exaggerated sentimentality, very similar to that of greenhouse plants, that cannot withstand the weather of nature.

The sought-after God does not make his presence felt anyway, but leaving her alone with her tumultuous thoughts, from the original chaos of sin to have been truly beautiful, a being enlightened by the gift of aesthetics through which reflects man's ability to feel emotion in the face of works of art. How could she find the balance between spirituality and sensuality, between past and present?

As she prays, her mind travels to memories long locked away in the chest of memory, memories that are reborn now, with renewed force, with each role she makes and plays on a stage improvised by her own mind, for the thirtieth time as if it were the first and last time. Always materializing in palpable mistakes. This reminiscence from a recent past, the living proof of an intense experience to which consciousness returns obsessively, marked by the trajectory of her alert, passionate, tumultuous life, surfaces from time to time, making her totally vulnerable, like an open wound in that the blood continues to flow. And it flows, and flows, without stopping, fueling the pain of being trapped in a finite existence.

Leadership: Do you accept the truth of being vulnerable as proof of the existence of a work of art that reveals the backstage of your soul, making every experience take on a higher meaning?

When she prays, and she prays with that righteous pain, which comes out only in prayer, her thoughts deepen into a kind of crescendo of silent despair. But now, like a phoenix, these memories are reborn through the mistakes shown in his mind obsessively, compulsively. Always sorrows without reason, fears without foundation and everything that defines the human condition, are justified under the aegis of an interior with the potential of deification, not only through inner turmoil. The truth in her is revealed especially now when, being an adult, she feels helpless, manifesting through callousness and indifference, because in essence, she is just a child who does not know how to be otherwise. He bursts into a maddened, illogical laugh, a sign of a feverish mental state.

This is also a way of releasing the tension built up in the foundation of her mind.

In a state of "Resthesia", a fusion between spiritual zenith and emotional synaesthesia, she explores that transcendent connection with the divine that guides her to a still unclear point of revelation. These disturbances, still weak, but one can feel how they are growing, are not simple human defects, but manifestations of an interior with divine possibilities, in relation to the darkness that descended on the world as a result of its own disharmonious functioning. As such, her vulnerability becomes a gateway to transcendence, a reminiscence from a recent past that marks her life's trajectory, where the blood of her body pulsates with intensity, flows to the depths of her soul.

Her turmoil is also followed from the perspective of Anne Hebert's heroine, from the novel "Kamouraska":

"I must act quickly. To defend myself from the fury of time. To save myself entirely, irrevocably. To come to terms with myself forever. To erase an entire period of my life. To find my candor, my naivety, my charm, my purpose. How long before... It would seem that I'm trying to bring out a single, pressing, distant word. A kind of weight hidden under the ground, known only in the sky . Caught by a long, underground rope. A kind of deep, lost root that continues to feed the memories and emotions deep in my soul."

Leadership: Do you accept the admission of defeat as a catalyst for deep introspection, to draw out the essence of your soul and give it to the world through a masterpiece?

She knows better now, having admitted defeat, why a work unsigned with her own life's blood has less value for herself. It is certain that inner authenticity is revealed in moments of fragility, when the adult soul feels like a child again. Suddenly, comme un eclair dans la nuit de l'ame , he bursts into a mad, illogical laugh, a sign of a feverish mental state. This laughter, capable of stirring the depths of the being, becomes a catalyst for self-exploration in a course of tumultuous blood that ensures its way forward. To hell or to heaven?

No wonder the tattoo on her right hand, a spider, symbolizes the loss of the last shreds of humanity in human relationships. Does this symbol suggest that she carries in her subconscious a venom capable of paralyzing or even killing her emotional prey? Behind her, a white statue looks at her with the eyes of a silent god, wanting as if to freeze her agony, to satisfy his pride in seeing her fragile, less confident than before. In the same frame, a bald eagle sits stiffly on a wooden peg, glancing back at her every time she looks up at the sky, reminding her that as she feels smaller and smaller, she says to herself, "done, done, it's good". Is this eagle a symbol of her high aspirations or a representation of the omniscient gaze of divinity?

In this moment of intense introspection, we remember the words of Feodor Dostoevsky from "The Brothers Karamazov":

"Active love, compared to dreaming, is a cruel and fearful thing. Dreaming love thirsts for a quick achievement, to be quickly satisfied with the admiration of all. But active love is a deep commitment, a continuous and sacrificial struggle."

These words seem to resonate with the inner struggle of the woman, between the spiritual ideal and the carnal reality of her existence, a way of saying that everything is a game whose stake is the very essence of life, lived with intensity and vulnerability, "Otthathia Atensamphor", finding oneself in the loved one, perhaps the most difficult quest in life. The feverish state of mind can be a catalyst for authentic creation, releasing pent-up creative energies.

Leadership: Can you turn frustration and the desire to overwhelm the world with emotion into a means of artistic expression, recognizing your vulnerability as evidence of self-seeking determination?

In the search for the self, man oscillates between the desire for transcendence and the attraction to the telluric. As she imagines herself smaller and smaller, telling herself "done, done, it's good," the early associations in her subconscious overwhelm her, making her feel overwhelmed by her own fears and memories. How could she reconcile these memories with her spiritual present so as to create a new foundation for love? She remembers the fire of passion that the photographer and the director, at the same time, awakened, making her feel emotions that she had not thought possible. Was this experience a revelation or a fall from divine grace?

The frustration of not receiving his gift of overwhelming the world with emotion oppresses her, allowing her Ego to surface, to be callous and rude. It is not her fault, but the Ego.

With a bouquet of roses in hand, silent testimony of ephemeral beauty, he breaks a bud, turning it on all sides, contemplating other scenarios, other settings. Wearing black gloves, a symbol of a certain intimacy, she moves through the shadows and sunlight that gently penetrates through a half-open window. Lightly, like Venus from Botticelli's "Birth of Venus", she touches the face of the statue with her palm, as if she were the half that animates it, a tender and sensual gesture. The clocks on the wall outline the time lost, but wanted back, in the struggle with sensual memories. Nothing brings her past back, but the touch gives her temporary relief.

The artist's greatest masterpiece is to express himself authentically through symbols, through various faces, in dialogue with the depths of his soul.

Look at me without seeing me and try to guess what is in my mind, in my soul, in my life. Only then, through deep intuition, imagining what is hidden, will you be able to find out a part, at least a part of who I really am. I still don't know why you're moving away, I don't know how to get closer, but I'm looking forward to the moment when you can really see me.

Look At My Eyes In The Mirror To Understand The Immensity Of My Vision

On December 13, 2022

I was surrounded by a terrible fog. A delusional blur passed through me with the power of a spirit that deprives you of God if you do not know how to invoke the energy of the Archangels, collect it within you and visualize it extending deep into the heart of the Universe. An invisible pendulum that appeared to me twice in the same dream, characterized by the passage of time through an incoherent delirium and disordered movements, told me much about what I had long forgotten and, promising infinity, left me the responsibility to decide where I want to be at the level of a simulation model of reality in a world of fantasy and imagination.

Losing myself among other shadows, heightened by other unreal sensations, without drawing attention to myself and without resorting to drastic measures to remain hidden in a vain illusion, it still seemed to me that I was watched by a stalker whose visibility remained out of sight. The feeling was that someone, well hidden in my life, had hung the invisible pendulum in many places where time had never worked, and that there, in the midst of a deep silence, in the whirlwind of an overcomplicated plot, the only thing that could capture attention was the attempt of the reversal of my mystical gaze from obscurity to the clearness beyond me.

Everything was happening in an undefined space, of the soul put to the test by an abstract will, by a presence located outside my understanding, which seemed to suggest that I withdraw into a loop of self-enclosures within myself, from the impossibility of the existence of a real infinity. It was the only thought I could allow myself, that I carried within me the "beginning and the end" of a moving circle where the ambitions of the recently exiled were balanced with the fatigue of the long exiled, like the character in a written novel by Louisa Lim.

Leadership: Can you create an image that shows you in the background what you feel about yourself, through the very essence of reason to reflect a figurative space in a permanent game of duplication?

And it was not for nothing that every step I wanted to take forward became more and more difficult, because it evoked vague memories of a moment that could have been the past, but was the future. A thin curtain of mist that barely dispersed in the atmosphere clouded my understanding of God and blocked my walk with Him, while another curtain of wind pushed the light into symmetrical, dizzying ripples. So, I was in the middle, between two discreet curtains, in a time of unparalleled mysteries, and I was accompanied everywhere by an invisible pendulum that oscillated under the action of external forces.

I felt a kind of remorse towards myself, because I could have mirrored myself in someone else, and strengthened each other, however I accepted to remain alone, with my reflection.

Then I understood that the dream of which I am a part, the thin border between rupture and openness, is a Sivoyectha Unhedins, a symbolic recreation of reality, not a passive, photographic copy, but a total and mysterious adventure, a projection of unquenchable curiosities and desires unconfessed. In all this uncertain setting, where the dream competes with the real, I was just a fragment of a backlit mirror in which I refused to look, an intermediate form of limited and analogical universality. It is curious that in the blurred depth of this unreal, modified, restricted, bent frame, it was not the visible that was mirrored, but that part of my soul that yearns to be a free spirit.

Leadership: Do you manage to convey an emotion through image, where the parallelism between experiencing an artistic vision and expanding a residual horizon beyond you makes sense?

After all, there is some good in all of this, right? Even if I cannot know for sure who I will be tomorrow, if I will only be the reflection of a mirror that gives a different picture of reality, or if I will only be the reproduction of a lively painting with a scene from 1001 nights, one thing it remains certain: I learned to live inside an enigma that covers with dense veils my memory of a time of the fabulous, explanatory in a permanent game of duplication. In the dream, every day is different, and every day I am born again, without recognizing my previous experiences.

So, I was caught in a dream full of mirrors placed asymmetrically among paintings with unknown drawings I won't count them. Not. Not today. In any case, I memorized them all, then I closed my eyes and remained seated where the air became denser, grayer, foggier, as if every meter of this space was traversed by an invisible wave of melancholy, completely unpredictable, propagated like an endless echo in the nothingness of eternity. So, I didn't lose my sense of finality, having the primordial correspondent in the spiritual world, but I just had the brilliant idea not to limit myself to the level of physical things, to the area of the immediate and the tangible.

Leadership: Can you reverse on the actual path of analyzing objects, as they appear to the senses, the main criterion for approaching reality being from "part" to "whole"?

Imagination can go even further. If I became a dream, like a simultaneity of states under the same sky, either by an event extrinsic to the eye, or by a chromaticity pleasing to the eye, without garish colors, it is because I continued to be an image in a concave mirror that appears different from its real form, able to be immortalized only by an artist capable of measuring the present from an angle of vision that unfolds, back and forth, self-searches in the labyrinth of visual arts.

Suddenly the color manifested itself through its associative influence. There was light everywhere, an immense light seemed to radiate from everything on which my gaze slid. The mirror had become the frame of a moving picture, from which the figures and details are detached. And it had that mysterious quality of the mirror in Michel Foucault's novel:

"The mirror shows nothing of what the painting itself represents. Her immovable gaze goes, beyond the painting, into this necessarily invisible region that her outer face forms, towards the characters seated here. Instead of turning to visible objects, this mirror traverses the entire field of representation, neglecting what it might capture there, and restores the visibility of what remains beyond all gaze. But this invisibility that she defeats is not one of the hidden: the mirror does not bypass any obstacle, does not change any perspective, but addresses the invisible result at the same time from the structure of the painting and from its existence as a painting. In the mirror is reflected what all the characters of the painting are about to fix, with their eyes fixed on the front; it is therefore what we could see if the canvas were extended in front, descending a little, so as to include the characters that serve as the painter's model."

The deep meaning of leadership can be captured in a single image: in which the Creator is also his own Creation. Thus, everything I included in a painting, real and unreal at the same time, is actually the reflection of the relationship between certain physical entities and a rather rebellious state of mind, which cannot be contained by physical restrictions.

Look At My Eyes In The Mirror, To Understand The Immensity Of My Vision. And thus, you will have a direct opening to the access path for the forces of creation that presuppose: the rearrangement of already existing things, but also a degree of solitude, withdrawal, isolation in a virtual reality.

Look At What Other Eyes Are Not Given To See

On March 08, 2023

"Always in a strong soul is found the emotion and warmth necessary for a subtle impulse that leads to the search for beauty."

It was rainy, foggy weather, in which you wouldn't have taken your gloves off your hands and your nose from behind your scarf. Thick mud was everywhere, the humidity seeping worryingly to the bone. I had reached the end of the half-marathon race, and shivering from the cold, I entered a nearby restaurant to serve hot tea. A quiet yet unsettling refuge from the outside world. From there I could see through the window the new arrivals at the finish line, how they proclaimed, as if in unison, the pride of being strong in themselves, the pride of having come out with the forehead held high from the confrontation called "the race against time".

In their silent, discreet, but somewhat unsettling soul, contradictory feelings were mixed, as two opposite colors are mixed in a painting that betrays the influence of chiaroscuro. First, there was admiration for the progress made, an emotion that put them in relation to the world and in meeting it, then there was that depressing compassion for an embittered and helpless being, deeply manifested with the thought of what each of them had to face to successfully face a situation, almost tragic in its generalization, which had been practically the equivalent of a short passage through hell.

Obviously. The moment I looked into their serene eyes, but somehow troubled by an inner struggle, through the senses awakened in me by the representation of a grayscale image, I imagined that I had come into possession of a molto sensibile secret that gradually opens, greets your senses with energy charge, but it can affect to the highest degree the life that another person has to live, be he even the man in the image that inspires you. He calls you, calls you, calls you, but does not follow you, rather leaves you lost in search of a new beginning.

Leadership: Can you change the background of an image that impresses you, dividing it into several specific parts, so that you get a feeling that would otherwise never arise?

My invigorating eyes, free to see what they were accustomed to see, saw the message of foreign eyes by myself. Absolutely incredible organs, the eyes of the other runners seemed to have retained something from a reality always identical to that suggested by the frame of a painting that gives the illusion of the abstract, remaining, however, deeply attached to the visible matter. As if they were looking for a logical answer to the miracle they had witnessed unwillingly, that Sientethelis Esspyn Aspertithos, living through the image in the mirror of nature, an experience which presents itself to the soul as a symbol of a spiritual experience passed through the acceptance of the paradoxical, but solved by the intervention of the miraculous.

Can I quickly change the background of this image by dividing it into several specific parts to achieve a feeling that would otherwise never occur? And if the image captured by the artist's eye aligns and passes into a magical, poetically expressed, admiring realm, then the runners would be part of the category of "views from which a story is told", suggesting at the same time the illumination of the reconciled figure with the result obtained at final.

That's what I did. By dividing the image into several parts, shaded parts, bright parts, expressive or connotative parts, realistic or symbolic, sensory or dynamic parts, I managed to change the destination of the final message: "Only what consumes you and tires you enormously causes you that strong emotion what invades your heart."

Yes. I was looking out the window at the faces of the runners overwhelmed by the feeling of a victory that shapes the story of a world that, alas, no one knows how to tell anymore. Their faces expressed an attitude of acceptance and openness to the unknown of natural phenomena, a fact that brought new experiences of visual representation through a predominance of emotions over reason. And, happy that they reached the end in such a capricious time, they stood out on the tangent plane to the dynamic and bewildering spectacle of nature, being part of a reality called "Fragmentism" – graphically marked by shadow shapes and light placed in slightly unstable balances, but harmoniously inserted into an enlivening microcosm.

Leadership: Does the image you have in mind go more to the senses than to the intellect, but it takes a long time to attribute the meaning of "opening inward"?

What is distinguished in this atmosphere of victory over oneself, a fact that allows me to make a clear distinction between an art that is reduced only to what the painter's retina retains and an art through which feelings can be expressed, is the attempt to escape, to detach yourself from the known and trivialized universe, to launch yourself into the unknown as a daring explorer, to "find something new".

In this way you become a much stronger, more determined, but also much more sensitive person. This is exactly what conveys the state experienced by the hero of the writer Marguerite Yourcenar in "The Philosopher's Stone":

"It had often happened to him to open a door, only to show himself that it had not closed forever behind him. To turn to a passerby who had moved away, only to deny the finality of a separation, thus demonstrating his limited human freedom. This time he had committed an irreversible deed, he knew that he would eventually separate from the force of nature, and he would remain only a body passed from the state of nature, in which he enjoyed freedom, to the state of pure consciousness known as "light". His heart was beating wildly. A violent and disorderly activity was taking place in his body, as in a defeated country where all the combatants had laid down their arms. He felt a kind of tenderness for that body which had served him faithfully, which would after all, he could have borne the hardships for a long time..."

Rightly. The beautiful in art is the meaningful image that is never forgotten, that vibrant image that conveys an optimistic message to all of us: what you feel positively charges you is the result of what you experienced in the moments when you could only you accept the pain and whims of nature.

Leadership is learning to detach yourself from that way of being imposed from the outside, but which ends up defining you in the higher plane of a moment of reflection: what consumes you, at the same time "charges" you.

All performance runners have learned this lesson.

And if it is true what someone said, that always in a strong soul there is the emotion and warmth necessary for a subtle impulse that leads to the search for beauty, then what makes me integrate into an enviable image, probably loving myself more, is the belief that I can always deny definitively a separation from the present moment, and visually transpose myself to a higher plane from where I can look at my life as if I were taking part in a memorable adventure...

Look At What Other Eyes Are Not Given To See if you want to fit into a double-opening image: an image that gives you a sense of Deja-Vu and an image that gives you a context for you to make sense of what you choose to understand.

Look Deep Into The Challenge And You Will See The Essence

On October 07, 2024

Visual focus oscillates between immediate detail and broad perspective.

My sister, Oana Fântânaru, achieved another record in the half-marathon held on the "Mărzești" hills. On December 01, 2024, in a tireless search for your own limits. Here, in a setting full of dreams carved into reality, Oana created a world of her own, her eyes distinguishing between the light of hope and the shadows of fear. And if she had looked at her footsteps from afar, haciendo invisibles todos los intentos, she could have outlined the shape of an endless spiral, as a symbol of the passage through time and space, of the eternal desire to progress.

In the space where you run without stopping, a victory of the spirit takes place. To listen to the mighty here, on this earth of the forces of dynamism, where physics becomes a constant of motion, a combination of science and art, a constant experiment of natural laws, is to understand the deep connection between body and mind. No, it's not just about muscle and physical exertion, it's about discipline, determination and sacrifice, and the fact that true power comes from pushing your limits. Visual acuity under intense effort mirrors clarity of thought under pressure, and clarity of purpose being what guides the steps in a tireless search, turns into a true spiritual guide.

Leadership: Can you turn every passing glance into a contemplation of artistic greatness, molding every challenge into a living picture of perfection?

When Napoleon gazed upon the vast ocean from the top of the rock, he did nothing but raise his eyes to the greatness, to the sun of his ideals. Like him, the runner who dashes down steep paths sees not only stones and weariness, but sees beyond them: the ocean of possibility and the high sun of victory. Even when everything seems like a burden, every glance towards the top is a recognition of the indomitable spirit. In this sense, Oana showed not only courage, but also that sense of perfection characteristic of established artists who triumph through dedication, representing a true inspiration for all who watched her.

The higher the mountain runner climbs the lonely paths of the mountain, the more his spirit communes with wild nature, managing to transform each conquered peak into a personal "Saint Helena" place, where physical isolation becomes a source of inner greatness. The weak of character, unprepared for grueling races, the inhabitants of the lower classes of the earth, must obey the strong. It's always like that. And the strong, who carry in their muscles the weight of the steep hills and the burden of ambition, must come to an understanding among themselves, unite their spirits in order to achieve a single ideal—like the old eagle, which, though bound to the rock, did not looked down from the majesty of heaven.

The image thus does not reveal a closed world, but fixes a point, a situation where everything can become art. Oana captured the greatness, the respect of all the other runners, the way an artist captures human pathos, immortalizing the winner in a moment of high glory, even if it means pushing his limits to exhaustion. It was an ephemeral moment transformed into eternity through movement and sustained effort, during which time a true, coherent work of art is created, which can even be taken to the extreme, we come to admire the artist as a kind of wizard craftsman, who imposes upon himself the most difficult tasks only to prove that he is capable of overcoming them.

Leadership: Can your effort be a testimony of inner strength, in a similar way to an established artist who gives himself completely to his creation, turning the ephemeral into an eternity?

Clarity of purpose is what guides the steps in a relentless pursuit. However, creating a fully organized work of art, Oana became the creator of her own reality, drawing in mud and stones the path of a very successful story. She excelled precisely through her surprising precision in giving meaning to a course immortalized on a canvas of nature — a winding road, full of obstacles, but also full of moments of triumph. Every blink, every breath keeps in her memory the moments of triumph and sacrifice, as if time itself stopped to immortalize them.

The watchful eye of the runner discerns not only the landscape but also the path of invisible progress. Just as the emperor's place of exile could not diminish his greatness, so the runner creates and ennobles the place by his effort, even though the rough course and exhausting effort have tested his will. To maintain the special attraction of self-struggle and yet dominate the image of success, this is the splendor, this is the mission of the runner-artist, the creator of unseen worlds, who turns every step into a testimony of the desire to reach higher and higher heights.

I remember only one moment very well, when Oana was at the top of the highest of the hills, ahead of the other competitors. As if she was the pinnacle to which the others aspired. Always, the tops of the hills and mountains become for her what the high rock was for the "old eagle" Napoleon - a place from where she looks towards the sun of her own aspirations, towards the "vast ocean" of infinite possibilities. In this seeming isolation, she is not punished or limited, but finds her ultimate freedom. Each step on the steep paths is an affirmation of her indomitable spirit, and communication with wild nature becomes the source of an inner dignity that no external obstacle can diminish.

I am proud of Oana as she has reached a new level of excellence as she has faced challenges with dignity while staying true to her ideals. Just as Napoleon turned that remote place into a symbol of his unconquered greatness, so my sister turned every difficult route into an opportunity to demonstrate her inner strength.

Pushing your limits isn't just about reaching the top, it's about turning every obstacle into a symbol of your own greatness.

Look deep into the challenge and you will see the essence when you try to overcome your own barriers, thus demonstrating that inner strength worthy of a fighter, through a kind of relentless determination. I mean that you have to go beyond your fears, that real progress comes from confronting your own limits.

The essence of a runner is, in fact, what unites the essence of an artist with Napoleon: both defy the limits imposed, always seeking greatness.

Look, This Is My Leadership !

On October 31, 2010

A true leader always has in his repertory something that expresses the height of his admirable "work".

I spent a long time around the master. This is one of the things in my life that I can say I am truly proud of. Because he, a deep man, who knew how to behave simple and human in relationships with others, and having a considerable stock of knowledge, opened my eyes to everything that is beautiful and good in this world. He shared with me the secrets of Ancient Times, the wisdom of ancient men and taught me the history of arts. I learned how to read the works of great artists and understand their art.

My master's art was perfect. His paintings were of incomparable beauty, and they certainly had an unquestionable artistic value. The signs of his great style were: clarity of composition, simplicity, balance and measure. With an unseen ease and spontaneity, he first sketched on canvas, in pencil, what he wanted to paint – ideas which he often combined with others. Then, he thought of the combination of colors, and then he moved to making the painting.

- You are a highly superior man, I said to him one day, with the boundless admiration I felt for him.

Looking at me with kindness, a kindness which you rarely meet, a kindness that I would like to see at least in half in people I meet daily, the master replied with his gentle and determined voice:

- No, no ! You're wrong, Nicu. I'm not a superior man, but a man who aspires to become superior. I will be superior only when my creations will be absolutely perfect and will find resonance in the soul of every viewer.

Leadership: Is the quality of your "work" the result of a consensus of value constitution of type "must see between colors and moods"?

Beauty is a relative notion. What we consider to be beautiful in some things does not seem the same in others. So is leadership. What some find beautiful and good, others find intolerable. However, the idea to focus the attention on his "creation", so as to bring it to the highest standards, gives the leader a high value. For just as pictorial effects are obtained with a refined science, so the effects of leadership exercised can be obtained by assimilating as much knowledge in the field as possible. Is it easy to achieve this? Obviously not. Nevertheless, it is worth the effort.

The quality of an artist's work is the result of a consensus reached by two forces: the memory of something you'll never see again and the example of a life lesson always present in the breath of an ink drop.

In front of this work we could better define our feelings by using the very words of surrealist painter Giorgio de Chirico: "Everything views me questioning with mysterious eyes. I thus understand that everything possesses a spirit, an impenetrable soul."

The art that the artist cultivates, under the calm and silence of a time that slows down its momentum, between symbols and their meaning, is the abyss of the imaginary composed of the infinite mysteries whose doors once opened, expand into an empire-world of the fabulous treated in a realistic manner. You feel as if in a timeless landscape, bringing with it a great remainder of a sea on which sail the beautiful and faith, beings and non-beings, all of them changing places at the simplest flash of a thought. Finally, you feel that you are too caught up in a creation from which you can no longer detach.

The value of the type "must see between colors and moods" is installed within the composition of each work, rendering the intimate compromise attitude between different orientations, themes, and motives as splendid guiding stars, after the weight of the importance of each brush stroke in the hierarchy of memories that bind the artist to life, predetermining his present and coordinating his future dreams.

Leadership: Does your power shine in the feelings you invest in your gratitude for what you want others to remember in the face of an excessive consumption of art?

But, also, the quality of a leader's "work" is the result of a consensus of the majority. I have often said it because I strongly believe in it. The leadership a leader exercises has a great influence on people, on their personality, their ability, respectively their evolution.

If the leader expresses a hesitating feeling in showing his own visions or principles, then, undoubtedly, he will not succeed to prove his superiority, and, in this case, he will not be followed by anybody. Nevertheless, as the number of those who admire him is bigger, his "work" will be more valuable. The majority represents the essential constituent of which is founded the work, deciding the real measure of the leader's value.

The efforts to build a consensus of value constitution and the materialization of full compatibility between your model of beauty and the requirements of the majority should be focused on understanding their criteria of beauty appreciation.

Leadership: Did what was initially seen as a landmark of the art of getting rich by means of relating with authentic experiences has turned into a sort of attraction from which develops a new series of tendencies?

The need to lead always increases, but also people's attitude always changes. For your leadership to "sell", that is to say, to spark people's interest, it must impress by what you are, by a high moral and professional character, through beneficial initiatives, through that sensitivity and psychological insight that are proper to genuine artists.

A skilled painter knows that the hope of his wealth is in his palette of colors, and that is why he always looks in finding a combination that would arouse the public's mind a little, a combination of colors able to calm and provoke at the same time. So you must assimilate a set of healthy principles that would express your beliefs, and an adequate set of practices and procedures that would have a lasting effect on people, that would be able to inflict a certain affinity to you.

As a leader, it is absolutely necessary to have in your repertory something to express the height of your admirable "work". Just as a painter is great in using colors in a bold and accurate way, combining them in different ways - and so you have to be great in realizing and using your own model of leadership in a bold and accurate way, to suggest a special spirituality and highlight your special talents, combining all those elements intelligently you can really put the potential value.

Only one art in the field of tendencies develops constantly within leadership: the creation of the artistic as a form of personal overcoming, with the title of a legendary destiny: "I am the one and only ! "

This art is guided by the idea that what you feel when you see the fruit of your work fulfilled must take shape in the minds of those who want to construct their own space of power in the ability to communicate an authentic engagement in dealing with a theme from an emotional perspective.

Behold, this is my leadership ! suggests a calling towards the highest and most sincere admiration vis-à-vis the means of art to portray real-life moods, from which transpires the sense of a trajectory of a destiny towards a legendary status.

Conclusion: A leader must have in his "repertory" something to set him apart from all others, but that is unanimously accepted and adopted. This "something" shows the quality of his leadership.

Looking For The Summer (II)

Strengthen your model of leadership by leaving the center of gravity of your being find its natural place in a world that embraces another world.

Egyptians believed that the sun was born from a stone, and King Nimrod, knowing the power of the stone, would've wanted through it to reach the sky. Which is totaled on the line of meaning, in the deep layers of resurrection of human creation, it is the nostalgia for something lost before you had it, the fight for an ideal that surpasses conventional limits.

As each art has its own language, the sun has its specific way of expression and communication, through heat and energy, interpreting the loose dreams of dreamers. Non one every understood so exact and adequate, according to the unique impression such a language produces, the essence of an authentic state of mind, transposed into a state of creation. Look deep into the April face / A change has clearly taken place.

The line of a broadband connection with this giant thermonuclear reactor shapes the crystalline horizon of future hopes, producing the sense of inspiration, the intense burning of spiritual fire, the elongation of an existence portion of meanings attributed to the highly-prized adornment called depth.

Two delightful beings run across a deserted beach. A handshake makes the difference between an instinctive response and the emotion of desire, extending beyond the limits of time in a passionate embrace. Dedication in a supreme renunciation. Children's laughter rings out through the echoes of the wind, covering any suffering. A falling asleep in the car of a summer dream. A magical seeing of each other again. A casting of a stone in the middle of the waves. A small attempt to stop time. A roar from the bottom of the heart springing towards the skies as if in a desperate prayer. I can't leave behind the springtime days.

Always within my heart will remain the memory of those words written with the finger in the sand, in the heat of guiding sunrays: Remember the love...

Leadership: Can you value yourself while bearing in mind that inner predisposition of the instance called "Recovery" which validates the recognition of your participation in the attempt to substitute a new belief ?

Try to reach the end of your own becoming, in line with the commitment towards the simplicity of the naturalness with which you receive, as a basis of an outstanding virtue, the beautiful or the ugly, hope or despair. The description and specification of these viable constants, obtained through a test of depth, do not have a finality in imitating reality, but in recreating it.

Depth represents less an idea or a gloomy atmosphere, it regulates the agreement between the beautiful and the ugly. It is rather an inner predisposition of the instance called "Recovery", a fretting of the desire to exist through love, through your own beliefs and powers, through searches, through creation, through your own qualities, talents, and abilities.

Depth, which you fully receive and project on the most completed pages of life, from a sort of affinity to an inductor (the urge of an innocent calling to everything that seems impossible, the urge of a love that induces you a certain state of mind) presents well-defined framework. For example, the magical story of a world that wants itself to be a mirror, down to the smallest of details, of a consciousness that decides to limit or extend your perception of your own being.

To find yourself again means to find out who you truly are by validating and developing those feelings that real life doesn't offer to you, sometimes being the cause of remembering pleasant moments or events.

Depth it's an area filled cumulatively with that incomprehensible murmur that, however, convinces of the purposes you have in the world.

Depth captures the most varied states of the man found in the depiction of an agent carrier of unrevealed meanings, in an ambiguous world, and as result, he is always in a dilemma: dedication or supreme renunciation. He can strengthen his model of leadership in an attempt to stop time in a key moment, when he returns to himself and becomes aware that his inner force is the only one that can propel him forward.

Leadership is decorated by the fragility and culture of a world completely different from that of your own, whose borders depend on the depth with which you penetrate the ultimate essence of things and phenomena, perfectly identifying yourself, finally, with the Absolute Supreme. Only at this point do you overlap your image over initial images and you get to consider yourself a high evolved being both mentally and spiritually.

The living that decides the context in which your life unfolds is consistent with the authentic mood experienced as a true source of fertilization of consciousness or as a twist of nostalgia that fills you with a relaxing silence or an affliction that hurts.

Looking For The Summer highlights the depth with which you treat your own world in the face of everyone. Probing those experiences of thought and reflection the soul needs in an attempt to see beyond meaning, will you turn into a superior being. The soul, vibrating in unison with infinitude, can recover the broader identity of what you truly are.

Looking For The Summer (I)

On February 13, 2016

Recognize what you see and that which is hidden from you will be revealed.

The sun. Did this all-illuminating superpower, the old star of the universe, also hide the meaning of my life? Was it because of it that I felt the condemnation of binding some sort of place of mine, so familiar and friendly, to a place of a state of wellbeing, where the particular energy of dreams and great things that can carry you away makes itself known?

Only you know the hours of my longing for the measure of a single wish, immeasurable contentment, triggering within me for an extended period that something that's missing, crying out with endless momentum: "Do not abandon the dream in any way." Only you warm up my soul with the beauty of summer days, feeling as if my communion with God materialized in an echo of the type "Do not forget hope".

Because you mean a lot more than the infinite knowledge I carry within me like a talisman with deeper meanings, only you manage to offer me the high degree of awareness of an experience of union with a sort of tenderness full of gentleness that many cannot access. Only you, without delay, awaken within me, each and every morning, the longing of a story that at the end of the day goes around the world. And still I stand this very day / With a burning wish to fly away.

Incessantly, I'm dragged into a sort of turning around a point on earth that give meaning to the almost obsessive movement of back and forth, departure and return. Not the short wanderings towards the mysterious ways of peace, but the calming of the longing after something that does not end. I would probably be misunderstood if I say I'm caught in a process of repeating a scene experienced in advance through the collaboration between "Just Today" and "Leave behind"...

"Without this point in which you are tied you would neither love the rest of the world, nor have any place to go to, because you wouldn't be anywhere", remarked one of the most talented novelists given to us by the literature of former Yugoslavia in the twentieth century. Maybe in this way you would get an idea of just how difficult the transformation of a finite being from an act of living imposed by an intangible force in an exhaustive parametric phenomenon is. This ain't no game of kiss and tell !

Leadership: Can you form yourself in the vicinity of a point from which the point itself is eliminated, so that to represent a different sense of creation than the one you usually turn to?

The novelty in the construction of personal development consists of a change in the traditionalist and totalizing perspective on the idea of belonging to a "point of reference" that passes through the middle of the existential segment. This point is not a load of the solar expression, a bracing clarity of communication, it is not an expression of gratitude to a spiritual guide, but the reality of a transformation that goes through the lucidity of the relationship with what you have created so far in your life.

It is no longer a matter of attitude, values, and courage, but more a matter of preventing "drops" in correlation with accepting certain deep emotional states.

In this point, the Ego of the being remains loyal to itself, at the confluence between needs and desires, in the background of producing the demonstrability of an Adjusted-Life. Here are captured all aspects of a comprehensive renewal, all fretting aspects of a world that is born out of the virtue of customizing values of your own requirements for functioning.

In other words, you function as long as you manage to let yourself in the will of a full force from which you can extract a new self-image. This force can have its correspondence in the sincerity with which you paint a new picture of the world, in the sincerity with which you open your heart in the face of your own person or in the face of a true love, not in the delight one thing or another gives you. Only in this point do the beautiful and sublime exist.

Leadership: Can you capture a certain moment of your life in a unitary complex of personality as a relationship of strength between experiencing a unique feeling and belonging to a reality that offers itself to contemplation?

Leadership is an arbitrary vicinity of this point from which the point itself is eliminated, remaining a state of absolute clarity, or a state of uniform and uninterrupted peace, experienced in advance through the collaboration between "Just Today" and "Leave behind", in which you can manifest an affinity towards a single configuration of reality.

A reality in which all that exists is what you say there is, composed through the expression of intense experiences caused by the union with a power beyond yourself, one imagined or one born out of the contemplation of what only you can see. As Jesus says: "Recognize what you see and all that is hidden from you will be revealed."

A reality that offers itself to contemplation is the occasion of a moment of reflection in which you return to yourself, the past is overflowing now, when you understand how you feel about the world, life, and you start to take advantage of this understanding to define and shape that side of the personality that pushes you forward.

You cannot accede to a higher level of development unless you know the measure of your delving into a state that entitles you to assume that you exist in relation to a superior entity of "light" and supervision. The sun is the eye of God, he looks at you and protects you only if you impose your comparison with that beauty of character that is of great price before Him.

Experiencing a unique feeling of grandeur in front of an immense source of energy is closely linked to the success of self-consciousness in the space of the dialogue between the fleeting existence of the mortal and the eternity of the cosmos.

Looking For The Summer is the attempt to discover the beautiful and the sublime in the perfection of a moment, gained with the price of losing yourself in an assumed absolute that has the power to change your world views.

Lost In A Book

On February 19, 2016

Conceive a new personality while maintaining the parallelism between spiritual movements and the way in which you relate to the hypotheses of forecasting a long journey along the "acceptable."

I had lost in the context of an endless prose. I wanted to get away as fast as possible from the gap of concealments filled with the traces of questions that even to this day seek their answers, from all that is overcome by diminishing the certainty induced by a significant and imagined "Lost in a book". One which the habits of the mind, trapped in the fear of losing themselves in the bustle of everyday life, led me to more carefully observe my actions, because there was a likelihood to doubt them.

Putting my imagination to work, in a suggestive sphere called "awakening", whose wave surface was the reflection in the mirror of social dynamics, I could've somehow compensated the lack of insight in identifying passages that constituted indirect means of exposing ideas estranged to me. Conversely, I risked becoming a sort of Don Quixote battling windmills, against the toppling of subjective preferences related to what is called survival through culture.

With each interruption of the rhythm dictated by the voice of the mind among the book's lines, poorly highlighted by reflections and urges, that I couldn't see any help in orientation within them, I was getting more and more deep into a fictitious existence with intrigues and twists. A dagger full of doubt seemed to stick into the middle of the acceptable. A rush of unfamiliar landmarks would fill my imagination. I was the owner of the book, and I was also its main character. Did anyone read this book?

The words transforming themselves into an effect of multiplication of meanings from which my mind alight, easily concocting various images, ensured the clamping effect in the magnetic flux of varieties of the reproductive-applicative type. The stake was the change of the way of calculating a new profile of a writer through the interaction of two fields: one of inducing the state of boundlessness, the other of determining the effect of totality.

Leadership: Can you create a new profile through the interaction of two fields: one of inducing a state of boundlessness and the other of determining the effect of totality?

Continuing on the line of a thinking that cannot be content with the facultative, so one resulting in the idea of integrating into an area of extended knowledge, we can follow the acceptances of a particularity of content of the personality which, being subjected to certain imaginings and revelations, seems to be born for a second time.

This type of personality is conceived through the parallelism between spiritual movements and the way in which it relates to the hypotheses of forecasting a long journey along a territory called the "acceptable." This territory separates the fact of being the subject of a book of fiction of the chance to be the hero of escaping from it, with the conscience of not being affected by the vulnerabilities of a subjectivity that can easily get out of control.

Regarding leadership, the issue alleged by the instances of an acceptable that eliminates the doubts of a world without perspectives relates, in the chapter of a creation that denotes another possible reality, to the dimension of crystalizing a false personal profile, but one that is much more performant. It is the case of writers who insert their presence in their own work, through a key character, to facilitate a type of experience and communication that cannot be experienced in real life.

To make yourself a rare picture of a story you must first compare the acceptability of using a false identity by trying to escape the real world, with the traits of a character drawing its essence from the memory of a real-life experience.

This type of approach, through the content of a work that points out the unwritten facts in the context of the dimension of a new profile, is based on an a priori function of knowledge, on the one hand. And, on the other hand, on the contrast between the expansion of a consciousness found in a continuous discovery of the real and the expansion of those states that are tangible after ascension, determining the effect of totality.

The state of boundlessness is reached when you feel that you can act as an authority on determining a new transmissible horizon of references, when you have all the funds at your disposal from the discovering of authenticity, all the answers to the question "Who am I through someone else?", and in this way, you manage to be yourself.

Scottish scientist James Clerk Maxwell discovered electromagnetic waves and light pressure, mathematically formulating the laws of electricity. He came to formulate various hypotheses not because his predictions were based on known structures, but because he treated the ideas as being fantasies.

The mind of the genius, as an upside-down pyramid, is based on the presence of a whole from which you understand nothing, but from which always arise integral solutions to an absurd, but probable, mathematic.

Leadership has to simultaneously cope with the requirements of a double subordination: to be a leading thread of a creation that amazes the whole world through its very theme and to remain faithful to that inner calling that has constantly urged you to face reality by rethinking subjectivity from the perspective of its temporal dimension.

Lost In A Book is the living presence through an unknown medium from which is revived an abstract prototype, a unique personality.

If the world is headed towards an unpredictable that never ceases to come up with new offers, through the indications given by the restrictions of a so-called acting in series of the puzzles born from the lines of books that demand their right to base new broad horizons of knowledge, then enlightened minds are left with nothing else to do than complete them with new creations.

Lost Outside Time

On June 12, 2013

Put yourself in front of a new situation of "being", without provoking a great conflict with yourself.

What betrays my nature is the helplessness of being the same man I was yesterday. Unquenched, the desire of discovering myself and understanding new situations that overlay each other and don't get confused with reality, creates a certain discomfort, a great conflict with myself. The most trivial occurrences become starting points for the problematic estimation of a remembrance as an astral projection of a dream sometimes seen with open eyes, represented by the assumption of the contrast between a shell of appearances and the existence of a transcendent plan of a certain mystery of life.

Dominantly, I think of myself as a visitor in a book full of the beauties of a world without ups and downs, from which I cannot choose anything without touching a star and smile at the moon without feeling the smell of roses created especially from the flames of a deep love, without moving a tear of sunshine on the pastel leaf carpet of a spooky garden beyond the horizon of time.

I constantly wake up in situations with no escape. Not alone. But a whole inevitable world that keeps following me like an echo, announcing a new rivalry, enhancing the uncomfortable sensation of closure in myself. I run around in a circle that chances its size in time. In a time that seems to belong to someone else, an imposing creation, a dimension that I can't transcend.

As I set deeper in my self's research, my mind sinks in a fictitious world. I once again feel how the wave of inconsistency and subjectivity carries me away. I easily fall prey to breaking the universal laws of "being" just because there are a lot of unknowns I cling on. And I always give them a different meaning.

Leadership: Are you ready to take on the exploration destiny of a wider universe, which is recomposed from some log fragments combined with impressions, memories and images gathered in one character?

I climb the narrow steps to the liberating sublime, the hope of grasping a new meaning staying at the edge of the significance of the situations that put me to the test, then to lose myself even more in a nauseating whirlwind. A real game of fiction. I'm completely disoriented, as if I had closed my whole life in a bowl and on its bottom I can see in a continuum flux, all the leftovers of reason and objectivity. The approximation of an idle reality can't be conceptualized, surpassing the intuitive, but has the role to ensure the openness towards new.

My itinerary changes every day. No matter how random my falls in timelessness seem, I can't cross the boundaries set by my mind. It doesn't seem like I'm headed towards a certain place. And I don't know where I'm at. The unimaginable lives abundantly in my mind. The price of my isolation in this enigmatic time zone has grown.

I cling in vain on thoughts and meanings and I would like them to awaken me. They're useless, I can't chase away all this mystery fog that immediately surrounds me. I feel that I'm living outside time, where there is no day or no night. I don't even have the possibility of doing something consciously. How is that possible?

I can't find a plausible explanation of this phenomenon that can be easily confused with a dream, with a voyage towards a virtual reality, or une inclusion dans le chaos. Maybe it's just an intent of isolating myself, of escaping in an imaginary world, in order to destroy the ordinary in my life and all the adequate proportions thereof.

Leadership: Do you focus on your own world at the level of contrast between the image of man who manifests his choice between realities and alternative identities, and the final product of a real experience of articulating a comprehensive vision?

Can you untie yourself from the helplessness of being the same person as yesterday? Does the desire of understanding yourself create a great conflict with you? Do you feel you're carried away by the wave of inconsistency and subjectivity? Can you manage to cross the boundaries set by your mind?

If you're an experimented leader, it means you're not blind with yourself, but you take over with the authority that characterizes you, the control of these situations that don't lead to the awareness of your limits and you don't let your deadliest opponent to decide in your place.

As a leader, you're responsible for the way in which you govern or are governed by your deadliest opponent. That Alter-Ego, that can hardly wait to keep you prisoner in a helplessness situation, by cutting your drive to be constant with yourself. And if you don't do everything you can to avert the negative influence of these convincing entities (incomprehensible in certain moments), by projecting in the light, the vivid image of reality, you make yourself morally guilty of not giving priority to that verisimilar interpretation of your authenticity.

The man who manifests his choice between realities and alternative identities is the creator of truth-value ideas and fictions that fill the empty space of his life with the vision of a simultaneous world, like the gracious writer whose text it digests at a particular moment, but you find his traces everywhere.

At the same time, this man can become the final product of a real experience of articulating a comprehensive vision when the creation that makes it possible to recognize (and from which it transcends feelings, thoughts and intentions of the heart) becomes a way to permanently relive the intensity of the moment that pulls him out of anonymity.

Leadership: Do you remain firm against your principles and limits in those situations when you think you are unable to react because the final outcome of a story that you read while holding your breath?

Quality leadership targets that category of individuals who in complete harmony with themselves, adapt to a well built reality, to a safe world, that allows them to be constant with themselves. Certain demanding life experiences isolate those who present symptoms of "wandering" in an enigmatic time, making them to settle at the crossroads between past, present and future.

Someone once said: "It's not enough to gain an authority, you also have to know how to appreciate and be in control of it, otherwise it is wasted or misused, or it can be something in your detriment." I can't interpret this truth otherwise than by using the word "value".

If you don't get carried away by the wave of inconsistency and subjectivity, if you don't easily fall prey to breaking the universal laws of universal laws of imaginary freedom manifestation, if you remain consequent in ensuring an optimum addition of creativity that magisterially materializes those aspects and situations of the vivid reality, then nobody will ever doubt your value.

Only by having a firm position in front of your principles and limits in those situations when you think you're incapable to react as you'd want to or in your advantage, you will be able to avoid any great conflict with yourself.

The final outcome of a story that you read while holding your breath is an opportunity for reflection, excitement, satisfaction for the triumph of the imaginary in the tumultuous adventure called "life", which is wasted if it is not accompanied by a dream come true.

Lost Outside Time targets the passage from a normal way of "being" to a different state, that catches you in the uncomfortable circle of disorder, of prodigious imagination, of disharmony of thought, and in the relation with your partner – the Ego – that can become a strong opponent. Namely, when you loose the track of time and you let yourself carried away and you can't make the best of your life experience.

Like an unfinished painting gives the possibility of a precise analysis of the painting itself, so do the situations and life experiences in which you come across many versions of "being", in the middle of intrigues that weave where you don't expect them to, give you the possibility of updating your potential by a better understanding of your own being in relation to the tie you allot to the construction and maintenance of the intense metaphorizing imaginary.

Luke's Wandering

On October 24, 2010

Decipher the meaning of your value and your development by giving your actions a certain meaning that would not be in disagreement with your conscience.

Have you seen the movie "Cool Hand Luke (1967)"? The main character, Luke, played by the actor Paul Newman, is sentenced to two years in prison for the devastation of public property in a state of advanced drunkenness. During his detention, he causes a series of acts of insubordination and defiance. However, the worst thing that he committed, due to which he stirred the hatred and disdain of the prison's officials and guards, were his attempts (unsuccessful) to escape.

At one point, after the second escape, Luke reaches a small village at the edge of town. The police was after him. The hunting dogs had taken his trace. He had to hide. He had to do everything possible to lose his traces. For this, he scattered on the road, behind him, spices such as chilly, pepper, curry, etc.., thus managing to alter the dogs' sense of smell, in this way being able to continue his escape.

Nevertheless, every time Luke is caught, despite his numerous attempts to fool the police. Finally, he realizes that escapes are in vain, and that the existence of a man would always be questioned if he does not change by himself ... for the better.

Leadership: Are you the kind of person who seeks perfection in glorification and in the use of sensational means, through the subjective prism of a character (as an internal focal point) capable of captivating the world with a story that slides imperceptibly into the fantastic?

Each of us reaches at a time to think like a fugitive, as Luke, respectively to feel like a helpless victim struggling for freedom, dignity and happiness. We want to erase the traces of our own actions when we make mistakes, and to become someone else. We want to change the situation where we put ourselves, we want to get rid of our consciousness which disturbs us - of this inconvenient tracker who is always on our traces and wants to run us down. However, we can never get rid of our barriers, of those moods that break down our inner harmony. Everything leaves visible traces in our being, no matter how much we try to change. For, when we make mistakes, we cannot live peacefully and in goodness.

Listen to your heart. Meditate on your own self, on your own actions; strive to recognize your emotional stimuli that contribute to your development on the sense of the road that you follow in life. Make the balance of your existence. Try to understand yourself. Is life slipping through your fingers? Or, your life means always running and hiding the traces of your own choices?

The balance, which includes many and essential victories, but also failures, reopens your doors to your own retrieval, puts you in front of the consequences of some experiences that you have lived before, either positive or negative, prompting you to reevaluate the way in which you concentrate your energies and express yourself, without getting alienated from others around you. You cannot overcome the difficulties of life through irony.

Leadership: Do you focus on the meaning of the path you are following in life, putting aside that sensitive side of yourself that pours all its attention into what is called "character substitution"?

Putting aside that sensitive side of you that pours all its attention into what is called "character substitution", means giving up that Ego that always tries to defeat others through a double opposition: by relating to a definite experience of the moral act and in relation to a reality that has all the chances to turn into a legend.

Basically, to substitute your identity with another person who is worthy of resembling a movie character, means to get emotionally involved in a story that is not yours, a story that starts from the real, to pass in a dream, to return again to a seemingly real world. Can you play the role of a character who demonstrates his talent to convey emotions and make the reader experience the whole story with bated breath, without creating from reality the illusion of a more beautiful existence and closer to the ideal of complete freedom?

In order to become a good leader you must, first of all, be in harmony with yourself and with the realities around you. Your existence, your conceptions and values will have a greater influence in determining your progress. Of your character, of your emotions and feelings that emanate from your manifestations, of your attitude depends on your moral development and your existence in general, causing the reaction of others to you, and therefore, the results that you get, or in their absence.

Just as a film director who wants to make a biographical film seeks first to decipher the sense, the meaning of the character's actions, so and you, if you want your leadership to gain essence and have a positive impact and as strong as possible on the other people, first you need to decipher the meaning of your own existence, the meaning of your own values and purposes of your own development by giving your actions a certain significance that would not be in disagreement with your conscience.

A character with the role of internal focus, which you have to build from scratch, is the result of an Ego that has not been modified by the influence of the outside world, and which cannot be reduced to direct relations with the content of visible reality. In this case, your Ego is a character who seeks to turn life into a work of art, continuing to amaze even when no one is around to see him.

Luke's Wandering highlights the way in which we feel and the way in which we act when we are put in disorienting situations of life, when the path that we follow turns suddenly, moving our life to some negative values which limit our potential, aspirations, actions and block our progress.

Someone said: "On the road that you cross in life you are faced with the consequences of the experiences that you've lived before, either positive or negative." If you want to ensure yourself a good future, if you intend to climb up above the hierarchy, then you shall avoid turning into a victim just waiting to be released from the limits of the lifestyle established by yourself. But, turn yourself into a more sentient being, more vibrant, that is oriented towards his moral development, conscious and free to meet his own spiritual calling.

Conclusion: For each of us and especially for a leader it is important to establish a purpose in life. Once established, you must choose the shortest paths and more righteous to reach it. During them, you have to make a stoppage from time to time in order to see if you are not lost, if you did not get on other bypass ways, longer, and even on ways that get you away from the intended purpose.

The more stringent you are with yourself, the more you get closer to your goal. The more you act in disagreement with yourself and with the others, the more you lengthen the road to achieving your goal.

Those who have not settled their purpose in life and have preferred to be like wanderers find out in the beating storms of life, they will find towards the end of their lives that have lived in vain and that their existence has no sense.

Macro Leadership

On July 09, 2016

Learn to appreciate the result of the way in which you perceive the relationship between vision and the way of promoting thinking that you install in the field of creation.

I wanted to say to all that stood before me, in front of the noblest of intention of penetrating the highest of sciences, as something new, with enough care, all those provisions of the agreement with a vision of the type "new world", which matched my personal way of reconstructing a metaphysic of self-surpassing through creation. The one who offers his services of invention, discovery and originality, in the manner of an artist of the detail who focuses his efforts more on fulfilling the type of aesthetic ideal to which he is faithful, is a promoter of change.

But only in the context of an art with no equal, using primary colors, creating a plus of the optical rhythm, where exterior elements prevailed, a mix of cultural influences, or of a profound nature, and using the artificial element of an occasional subject, the calculated balance of such a creation could be maintained. My art did not consist of a mixture of fantasy and refined discretion on the decorative background of a painting that gives the impression of truth, but rather it was meant to highlight the coincidence between subjective and objective, from time to time in eloquence in a lyrical formation dominated by simplicity.

The subtle sensations gained through an expression of the art of high quality and full of momentum, were the effects of a focus of attention on the transmitted message, and less on the composition that I would place, voluntarily, around a reality that exceeded the ability of the common man to understand it. With anticipation, I strengthened my subtleties inserted in the interpretation of the message, as Arsène Lupin strolling along in the relative narrow frame of a transatlantic, without being recognized by anyone.

Leadership: Can you reveal that part of you that is "one and can bind you to infinity by observing the things around you, but each time as a different creative experience?

The condition of being an artist, through the act of first taking up a quality, which threatened and obsessed me terribly, that of shining through a sort of view from above, used to accurately observe not only the actions, but also the feelings of men, was a signal of the existence of a domination in the manifestation of the type of intelligence I possessed.

I could claim much more of what I called "the quality of judging things through the techniques and means of art", more or less Cubist. I could ask more of myself by showing intent to construct and build a new science, unitary through its deep nature, through the ultimate expressions of artistic subtlety, of thoughts and feelings of intense spirituality.

But this would be only if I were an authentic artist, eager to create a work of good quality in the context of a society that admires massive constructions, architectural beauties, built painstakingly, and not only an intellectual achieving success. It still reigns within me the hope of redefining myself fully, and becoming a great artist.

The things around me (and the emotions I was looking at) could at any time be a different experience of creation as a means of approaching other worlds and other realities, being all the more important as they managed to bring to light that part of me that is "one" and could bind me to infinity.

For, yes, infinity is an impetus in the sense of endowing your mind with an unmatched power, with a teaching to be taken into account for future journeys in other times, so it is the immense opportunity to experience a situation of deduction: you are both an artist and a work of art at the same time.

Leadership: Can you bring your creation to a level of authenticity by calling upon an image that contains more nuances of meanings attributed to a reality that is only accessible through a unitary view?

"I want my cup to always be full". This message engraved on the gold bracelet on Ptah's hand, pharaoh Akhenaten's doctor, has a great significance:

*"It is not about wine, but art. If you want to be a good artist, you must pretend that your cup is always full. In true art manifests the very creator and builder of the world, the god Ptah. The artist is not merely water or a mirror, he is much more than that. Therefore, claim your full cup, do not settle with what others will say and trust more in what your eyes see clearly."

The great formula of human orientation towards committing a high ideal, through the initiative of building and edifying a new science, with which the new concepts penetrate within the spirit of its users, is directly inspired from that unprecedented combination: to be merely water or a mirror.

This combination showcases, after many difficulties of delimitating art from its interpretations, a line of development compatible with the condition of the existence of a domination in the manifestation of the type of intelligence man possesses.

Water, which flows constantly, symbolizes the purity of what we truly are when we seek to redefine ourselves fully by affirming the quality of judging things clearly, of understanding them in their essence, through the techniques and means of art.

A unitary view is obtained by appreciating the relationship between two or more closely related elements, but which can be confused, compensating for structural shortcomings and turning into a theoretical hybrid that can be claimed to be applicable.

The mirror symbolizes the truth of what you realize when you experience the higher levels of the quality of judging things. It helps you appreciate the result of the way in which you perceive the relationship between the vision of the type "new world" (which fits your personal style of reconstructing a metaphysic of self-surpassing through creation) and the manner of promoting thinking that you install in the field of creation.

The man who demands more from himself through the manifestation of the intention of building and edifying a new science, transforming the observation of surrounding things into vision, appreciating itself in the relationship between "water" and "mirror", gets closer to the substantive requirements of leadership (knowledge and self-knowledge) through the fact that it begins to take on a special quality.

The quality of shining through a sort of view from above, used to accurately observe not only the actions but also the feelings of men, later transposed into an objective creation to which can be attributed a unique identifier: "trust more in what your eyes see clearly". Thus, the artist valences will very well fit with those of a leader.

Leadership has as a first landmark of originality the endowment of the mind with that creative power able to personalize the reality from which the experiences, thoughts and feelings are born to the beauty of a theme that fails to lose its actuality.

Macro-Leadership covers all parts of obligatory reference, understood as a spring of creation, through which you can identify that metaphysic of self-surpassing – improving the constant of the quality of shining through a sort of view from above, a fact which more advantageously positions you not only in the role of a man who inspires vision, but sooner in the role of an artist.

Madness Is A Work Of Art

On December 16, 2014

Reunite your experience, talents and strengths with a navigation structure in a universe of ideas and visions, in a way that will inspire and give the art of making science a new direction.

I wanted to turn something unfathomable into something else, that I can define as being real, presenting it as a restricted truth that cannot enter into just anyone's mind, only to be understood by its spatial-temporal constitution.

Confused. I felt as if I had crossed an empty hallway, lit by a single flame: that of the curiosity of understanding something that only appears to be, by modifying the energy consumption of the void. In the empty space, from one point to another, as if through an unseen fluid, a hidden force, a part of answers under the incidence of madness is being transmitted. And madness is aa work of arta, is the reflection of a fictional world, starting from obsession to reality.

Insistently, over my mystifying thinking hovered the question on which I based my faith upon, in the frightening madness that I myself created when I made the leap towards a superior reasoning that held the intelligible: "How?" While the feeling of penetration of the unimaginable whole by a scientific truth, higher than any thought, shaped in the way a painter organizes the empty spaces on the canvas, revealing new details, gained various nuances and manifestations.

It was a point of interest that could be positioned symmetrically or randomly, by extracting material from ortho-existence, by the mere passage of time, in the same way in which the majestic and the sublime in art, with their numerous nuances and variations, form a unitary coagulated group around a perfection that becomes the equivalent of renewal itself, the power to conquer a new reality.

If Newton tried, but failed to convincingly unify the corpuscular description with that of the light wave, I managed to unify what was hidden with what was contrary to regular logic. Madness is synonymous with pure creation, involves the resetting of thought, generating a motivational impulse to love the incognostible, leading so far as to the losing of one's self into the void with no possibility of return.

Leadership: Can your life find its meaning by changing the level of interpretation of a theme approached by arguments chained into a gradient that leads to rationally difficult to accept conclusions?

The artist is the sum of contrasts between essence and appearance if we put together everything that influences his role in a fantasy of a chip worn in the seesaw of abysses. It is that channel of inspirational communication that touches the aspects of the relationship between the word, image and meaning, accessed through reason to experience another experience that he considers defining for his development as a man, even if from an unmerited Ego.

To become and remain an artist to the end, in a way that inspires and gives the art of making a new science a direction, on the winding paths of misunderstandings and infinite interpretations of the hidden in which no one can enter, you must cast yourself into the emptiness that irreversibility gives to the processes of transforming the real.

A man of progress is the product of a mind that cannot live in the present, constantly moves back and forth to a destination different from that to which others aspire to. He is accompanied by a 180 degree turn of the mind that can express the revelation of a crisis of a being belonging to the intent make visible that which is not.

A renewal that cannot be contained in the edges of consciousness can lead to a false-positive, to a higher level of vision of what is happening beyond direct experience, in a way that makes sense, able to be materialized into a creative product.

Thus, reality is no longer seen as a life experience that matures, unique and customized, but begins to be perceived as a kind of self-imposed exile, assumed, in another world where the characters sometimes experience limitations that place them in other dimensions of reception to the fascination of an image that expresses its meaning by analogy with many faces of the same self.

Leadership: Do you take up an "open source" approach defined by a functionalism pushed beyond the limits in which you shaped yourself as a man of progress, from the perspective of a parallelism with the true nature of the reality you live in?

Leadership, in the process of penetrating mysteries unable to be rationally solved, a fact that has an impact on your whole evolution, based on an "open source" approach, is defined by a functionalism pushed beyond the limits in which you shaped yourself as a man of progress and in which you assumed your knowledge.

Here, leadership leaves way for full authenticity, yet at the same time, is placed in the space of ambiguity in what concerns the definition of reality and putting into practice what you've gained through the struggle of transforming from something unfathomable into something completely different, which you can define as being real, presenting it as a truth that pertains only to the matrix of knowledge.

The "open source" approach, characterized as a process of growth of individuality and the uniqueness of ideas, has as a prime ally within the efforts of assimilating a bold vision of the future, the actual curiosity of understanding something that just seems to be, by penetrating into a space that is hard to define.

Something beyond appearances, like a composition of great power of persuasion, manifesting the belonging to that same unique truth. One that had to have been taken as a concept, definable in scientific language and not reduced to its meaning in the common language. A truth that even if it creates the sensation of a studied mess can be translated through a plus of originality, on the line of greatness and vision.

The most powerful desire of an artist of the mixture of realities remains that of reuniting his experience, talents and strengths with a navigational structure in a universe of ideas and visions to answer the demands of change and to adapt to the necessities imposed by their own ideals.

The state in which the artist judges his own creation, isolating himself from the reality of others, is under the coercion of the implacable necessity of living in a representation of the reality his brain built on the basis of oppositions to everything that is integrated into the boundaries of normality.

Do not ever judge an artist because you may not realize the difference between a madman and a creator of new perspectives of personality approach.

Madness Is A Work Of Art by redefining the reality you are experiencing in a context like "I have to open a window to the truths that escape the usual observation." And the frightening madness that man himself creates in his attempt of making the leap towards superior reasoning – keeping the intelligible: "How?" – to which his elements of uniqueness tend towards, unleashes when he starts getting results out of nothing.

One who can shape a colossus out of nothing, fully comprising the extent of madness that can be added to the escape from normal thinking patterns, who understands what that enlightening experience through which the extension of the depth of believing in an indefinite that can be interpreted as a function of choosing the inputs and outputs consists of, is the one that will succeed in unifying what is hidden with what is contrary to regular logic. He will be a meaningful indicator of superiority.

Magical Power Cannot Be Acquired By A Mortal

On April 02, 2009

Only inner mastery can turn you into a trailblazer for others, showing them the value of self-knowledge.

A month passed, spent by Cheops in readings and meditations. During the day he sat in his assigned room with only the second book of Thoth. He didn't go out, he ate figs, vegetables, bread and drank only water. He saw no one, except the priest who brought him food, with whom he did not speak. The only task imposed was to keep his room clean, to sweep, to wash the floor with plenty of water. In the evening, he would go up to the terrace to observe the sky, sit or lie on the mat, meditate and sleep for a few hours. When the soroc for the new moon approaches, Ibebi comes to Cheops. He sat down in front of him and said:

- Cheops, during this month while you were alone with yourself, your mind probably matured, you had time to meditate on all the things learned here. The time has come to pass a new gate on your initiatory path to the light. Immediately a pure priest will come who, as on the first day, will laugh at you, purify you, then you will be taken into the temple premises, so that you can see what can be seen and hear what can be heard. Then you will have to decide for yourself if you think it is necessary to stay in this room for a while, to immerse yourself again, or if you return to Memphis. There you will wait for the messenger of the Great Seer of Ra to come to you, to tell you that you are awaited at Abydos, where you are to complete your initiation, descending into the abodes of Osiris.

Do you now feel ready to pass the fifth gate and hear the secret words that will help you face the last mystery locked like a jewel in a lotus, revealed to those who are worthy of it in the hidden temple of Osiris?

Leadership: How much do you think your perception of autonomy and control over beings and things would change by having access to hidden knowledge?

- I'm ready. Let the pure priest come to me, prepare me to pass the fifth gate. But let me ask you one more question. Ibebi nodded in agreement. Cheops said:

- I read the first book of Thoth, I read the second book of Thoth, I learned them both by heart. Is there a third book of Thoth, where the great mystery is revealed, by which you acquire the magical power of the spirit that gives you dominion over things and beings?

Ibebi nodded, was silent for a moment, then answered:

- Does this mysterious book of Thoth exist that you told me about? I can not tell you. I don't even know how you found out about its existence, because you seem to be talking about the book of Thoth the Great, the god thrice Great. But you must convince yourself that this magical power, to which you seem to aspire and which would confer a dominion over the world, cannot be acquired by a mortal, be he the son of a king.

Leadership: Can the perception of authority over one's life change with deepening self-knowledge, where inner and outer reality begin to mirror each other in unexpected ways?

The only mastery that has value, for us humans, is self-mastery, mastery of our own spirit, self-knowledge and knowledge of nature, which gives us the greatest authority over ourselves. Don't look any further, because this domination that I told you about already means quite a lot of asceticism and an inner search that requires a lot of time and a lot of patience.

Ibebi kept another moment of silence, so that his disciple could understand his words well. Cheops knew that he should not ask any more questions about this book of Thoth. He lowered his head and waited for the priest to speak again.

- Now, said Ibebi, listen to my instructions, remember what you will have to say, what you will have to understand and respond to the words that the god Thoth will pronounce in front of you...

Before the gateway to enlightenment, every step is a choice between staying in the comfort of the known and venturing into the unknown. Stepping through the gates of knowledge requires the courage to explore the unknown and the maturity to face the hidden mysteries.

Magical power cannot be acquired by a mortal, but only if this mortal believes that mastering his own spirit can open new perspectives on how he perceives the surrounding reality. Let's not forget that the perception of authority over one's own life changes with the deepening of self-knowledge.

How do you think self-mastery and self-awareness can change your perspective on reality and self-worth?

The Man Between Analysis And Vision

On August 11, 2016

In leadership, the rational-superior being is the one that doesn't need to be named in order to be recognized.

With eyes turned towards the remains of human bodies affected in many ways by an incurable disease, unknown as a bad wind coming by surprise, like in a nightmare from you can't wake up, scientist Gerry Lane is tormented by the expansive need of rising above those imminent images of death that accompany him everywhere.

The only analyst able to unravel a puzzle, in the veins of which flows a cold blood that doesn't clot in contact with the negative effect of this unexplained phenomenon, he simply feels the need, the implacable desire of the sharp mind of taking advantage of a combination he knows he'll never meet again, which through the force of things accentuates the difference between what is substantial and what appears to be substantial.

Gerry Lane does not seek to define himself in the framework in which are established interactions of scientific nature, through the courtesy of a pure chemistry, through a molecular biology that completes the data obtained through the methods of pathological anatomy. He doesn't gather infested samples from the harmful organism, doesn't make a benchmark of assessment of the phenomenon from the fragments of a corpse, doesn't try to decompose to an ordinary temperature or to a more or less elevated temperature the substances naturally released from the infected body, he doesn't try to identify the reactants affected by any enzyme resistant to all antibiotics.

But, as the mathematician can form a particular determinant with the help of a square matrix, Gerry imagines two different systems of information, each characterized by a pressure of decisive moments and a result of the natural causes in contact.

Are the states preceding the defining transformation of a man into an undead being in a stable equilibrium? What is the form of human manifestation that precedes mental delusion?

Leadership: Can you change the option of rendering the image you have before you, whose essence can be defined by the difference between what is substantial and what appears to be substantial?

Gerry Lane summarizes the immediate consequences of the virus' presence, and finds the necessary and sufficient condition for the sum of opposite forces that act on man to be nil. The difference between "what is" and "appears to be" substantial is given by how it relates to the severity of the epidemic that surrounds it, first it is perceived as the worst thing in the world that can happen to it at any given time, but from another point of view the disease becomes perceived as failure, bringing feelings of guilt and shame, disregard of one's own person and even a feeling of worthlessness and uselessness.

However, Gerry Lane tests its spirit of analysis and reaches a very important finding. Namely, man must already be suffering from a non-contagious disease, treatable and with the possibility of being well controlled through medication, for the plague to avoid him completely, by way of behaving as a "foreign" area.

He must present a clear picture of the problem, of who or what it is in particular, in order for himself to absolve himself of any guilt if his force of deduction would be wrong. And this image is actually the image of his own conscience, devoid of remorse, but which obsesses him because his observations oscillate from one point of view to another. This image seems increasingly obliterated in front of the world's expectations, in front of the results of science.

Leadership: Do you have the ability and patience to call yourself "superior" by limiting the need to be "in control" so as not to deny yourself the responsibility of being yourself on par with other people?

Basically, the functional mechanisms adjusted by the disease tend to exclude the virus from the unity of the organism. Without early detection, without adequate assistance, many sufferers end up having pains and show certain symptoms. And precisely herein likes the key to the mystery, putting on a maximum substantiality, because this is precisely what dictates the conformation of a vision of a viable solution.

Panic disorder develops amid the perception of death sensations, these being dangerous especially in the absence of a moral vision of the world and things. However, in the dizzying whirlwind of the various symptoms of the sufferers, Gerry manages to develop a new theory on the fight against this relentless virus, based on all that can appear as being disparate or diverse.

Being subjected to a determinism in relation to moral responsibility, relative to a sort of perceptual experience where knowledge and learning are reflected in a deductive system based on the visual analysis of positive and negative examples, this rational-superior being manages to distinguish between what is substantial and what appears to be substantial.

But, sensing a brilliant solution to the problem, he must not consider himself "superior" as a scientist, but must control his impulse not to climb a mountain twice. The impulse to not stop looking for solutions, to cross a limit, to walk without knowing how and – sometimes, even where the wind of events leads him, should not undermine his right to be himself a mortal, hoping for God's mercy.

Leadership: Do you allow yourself the freedom to project a new image of yourself in comparison to the transformations of the world around you so that you can experience different stages of your existence?

Between the substantial and what appears to be substantial, a fact deriving from adverse life experiences, an interweaving of the two justifiers of the hero's condition takes place: the pressure of decisive moments and a result of the natural causes in contact.

The circumstances of understanding and counteracting of the risk phenomena are manifested with a greater intensity in the context of unanticipated events, where inexplicable gaps occur, lack of continuity in behavior and attitude. The handicap of forging a mechanism of predictability being redeemed by a vigorous sense of the details in sight, but obscured by random interventions.

Always the man who experiences the defining transformations of the surrounding world, where it is hard to ascertain exactly where small changes occur, but ones of great effect, is in perpetual mobility. Always aspiring to a search that is not enough, that is not directly determined, equivalent to understanding our own inner world.

The basis of this constant search consists of fully receiving this information and the right amount for the mind to focus on higher intents and purposes. Gery discovered the cure, saved humanity, himself becoming the first guinea pig in a death experiment. He realized that before he is more than any man, he must be a guinea pig like any other.

Leadership is the image of a brilliant scientist who might call himself a superior man, but first of all he must accept the condition of being an experiment of his own conscience.

The Man Between Analysis And Vision can shape a world without necessarily being its artisan, only through the creativity necessary for "survival", through the power of noticing the difference between what is substantial and what appears to be substantial.

This is a sort of leadership that doesn't need to "bake" for it to transform into a true legend, but only presence of spirit.

Man Between Illusions And Truth

On January 19, 2017

Improve your level of authority in the field, introducing a new particularity of your nature as an artist on the plane of a consistent reporting to what you must defend concerning your accomplishments.

Eisenstein explained to an audience of psychologists his new thoughts on the ability of film to represent abstract ideas. During his staying in Boston, the great Russian director receives at Hotel Vendome the intellectuals of the city. At the meeting is brought, for advertising, the famous celebrity film-star dog Rin-Tin-Tin, the first "star" Eisenstein met, as he ironically remarked.

The filmmaker is asked to pose for a photo with the dog, while assistance assails him with questions. Eisenstein is compelled to answer for an hour straight to a hundred questions. At the end, a lady declares: "You, sir, are shattering illusions of Russia." And Eisenstein promptly replied: *"Illusions must always be shattered. The truth is the best ! "***

Leadership: Do you deviate from the rigors of the content you produce about yourself, in line with the range of thoughts that gives you the ability to materialize a vision full of originality?

The difficulty of elaborating an answer, positive or negative, for the admissibility of a critique, in terms of what others think of you, is a challenged bared by any artist, by any optimizer of creative work, precisely in order to reach a common destination, a mutually acceptable agreement. In this case, the act of creation can be perceived as a catalyst of thoughts that gives you the ability to materialize a vision full of originality, those thoughts that highlight the truths of an image that gains weight only through an abstract idea, or through a comparison with how you use a metaphor.

The answer to the question that opens you up towards seeking an essential and powerful truth – another string on the bow that launches the arrows of lenient irony, allows the introduction of a particularity of your nature as an artist in terms of a consistent reporting to what must defend concerning your accomplishments, and not what it is imputed to you as guilt.

All the answers that those around you are waiting for, to accompany the logical mobility of a thinking conditioned by professional experience, need to respect the conventions specific to the phenomenon of "See yourself as a masterpiece in the making ! "

Otherwise, the force of your whole belief vis-à-vis the integrity of your own system of ideas and beliefs, or referring to the representativeness of research in time, often expressed through a truth based on a certain concept thought of beforehand, will not be able to delimitate between what represents your right of launching a "revelation" and what represents and abuse against you.

A dominant quality of the one issuing various statements based on your own beliefs, in the position of a discoverer of truths, is that of not self-incriminating himself. Man is a raw or neutral content of information, built on needs and situations, with which others are not used to interacting with.

Therefore, the create the impression of an authority in the field, means to never abate from the rigors of your own content. Leadership is a foundation of background defenses, and the artist is the result of those defenses.

One of the particularities of an artist's nature is reaching the perfect belief in a formula that needs to extend to other people, seeing the aspects it found in the virtue of a personal touch and of a noble cause: that of conceptualizing authentically the experience through which one has been, the training and development of their skills.

Man Between Illusions And Truth can be recognized after others' moods who try to paralyze him through a lack of clarity over an entire discussion, be it by the incompleteness he manifests over what happens beyond their limited understanding.

Man Between Logos And Reality

On January 20, 2017

Position yourself in contrast with what opposes your development, finding within you the strength of rising above everything that is encompassed in the plane of immediate reality.

Before me stretched rapidly the unknown of an unlikely event, with all of its questions, under the pressing sign of the necessity of the option caught between an empirically oriented visionary state – "experienced", and a narrowly pragmatic attitude on the direction of the inertia forces of momentary indecisions. If an artist had focused his attention on me, trying to paint an authentic painting, he would probably have surpassed Salvador Dali in terms of hidden meanings, so that I myself would have come to represent a new form of expression in art.

Why shouldn't I include my existence in a carousel of causality that insists that nothing can draw up the triggering of a preceding event? An event that followed me from the excess of power of a law written only for me, conveying me a hope in that warm state of shock, has crossing the territory of the heart with a cloudy disposition which, however, increased my fueling with energy from blood to neurons.

Against my will, I was integrated into a completely different king of logic, in addition to the parameters of state balance, specific to the man who looks straight ahead, but the one who looks upon it can't figure out if he sees it. It was as if someone was looking at me in a mirror that unexpectedly wiped out everything that matched my nature. The danger was fading, but it was still there.

Leadership: Are you ready to offer a new vision of yourself behind the thoughts involved in a creation whose main feature is authenticity, credibility, and not the photographing of reality?

The penetrating power of the one who hiddenly fixed his eyes on me, too early to make sure of my identity, too little privileged by a deductive reasoning and increased intelligence, it was inversely proportional to the wavelength of my model of receiving information. Suddenly, he found himself lured in an unusual chain of events, unsought and unexpected, which couldn't find their background.

I didn't want to think I was lost in a universe that has passed the adventure of life only once, for the same reason that I was part of a whole, where every step quickly engages the previous one, through the avalanche of informational messengers that crossed my cellular membranes, like having the points of insertion in the intimacy of the polynucleotide chain of the genetic code.

But that moment I felt that I had within me the seed of a universal vibration, a much more evolved form of what I had seen beforehand, offering from everywhere around a good energy but also a moral aspiration, specific to the reactional syndrome. An artist who would have analyzed my personality, my thoughts, my feeling, would maybe have had been crossed by that meaning that you give to a creation outlined as a lesson of maturity, around a reality that cultivates the presence of infinite space, deep, full of details that hide it from the world view.

Leadership: Are you able to collect all that happens to you in a fundamental conditioning of living dependent on a protective arrangement that cannot be denied?

There was a universal solidarity in that moment, a connection to the terminals of a universal cosmic energy field, that other worlds looked for me for the same needs for why I looked for them. Firstly, from the need of helping each other.

In an attempt of facing all fears and doubts, in the vortex of a contest of circumstances insufficiently circumvented, I managed to connect to a reality that appeared to be complicated, controlled in the smallest of details, even hidden and served by a force that constantly reminded me... that I am not alone.

The universe consists of bodies. There is no single body for an entire field, there is only matter – the idea of a solid substance microscopically unstable, invisible and undetectable, found everywhere, which acts over all bodies, through a force caused by the very movement of the bodies whose form is susceptible to variation.

The power to rise above all that is encompassed in the plane of immediate reality, which turns leadership into an instrument of applying the beliefs that keep you facing the highest ones, it is a product of the experience of engaging in an overtaking of the causes and effects of the events you cannot anticipate.

To be closer to what the great force of the Logos asks of you, means to identify the potentially bad things that can happen to anyone, but that bypass you.

As you can tell a good tree by its rich fruits, so too can you tell the essentiality of a power beyond the written laws of men by the fact that man has the ability of building himself not allowing himself to get caught in an absurd mechanic, but rather in a full arrangement, in which spirit and matter, the ideal and the real, mystery and the concrete, the idea and the act, can form a single harmonious whole.

According to the dictionary, the term "Logos" denotes the required order, belonging to the Cosmos and human thinking, cosmic reason, an aspect of divinity, universal spirit and reason, in accordance with the actions of man and with the phenomena that influence his development.

The man who constantly moves in the light of intuition and knowledge that pass as the only court of interpreting events, for the understanding of information provided by everything around – taken as warnings and cautions on how to relate to the nature of what is happening to him, always positions himself, ideally, in the place in which the negative effects are minimal.

The logos is what the Ego tells you about yourself in order to comprehend a reality that transcends the comprehension power of unenlightened minds.

Man Between Logos And Reality is able to collect everything that happens to him into a fundamental determination of a living dependent on a protective arrangement (of things and events) that cannot be denied.

He positions himself in contrast to what opposes his development, to reach a moment of life in which he can believe with all his heart that he was always ordained and protected by something superior, unseen and omnipresent.

Man Between Morality And Justice

On August 04, 2016

Always rank yourself as a "thinker", rejecting that intensity grading of living with your weaknesses and accepting them.

When he'll work on translating Theodore Dreiser's novel, "An American tragedy", to film, Eisenstein will construct his film focused on highlighting the factual and formal innocence of Clyde during the act of murder even.

Only thus can the monstrous challenge casted upon a society whose mechanism brings a young man sort of devoid of character be made clear in such a situation, so that afterwards, invoking morality and justice, it can put him on the electric chair.

Yet Eisenstein will modify Dreiser's story, gaining afterwards the enthusiastic assent of the novelist, meaning skinning the essence of American society. Because he wishes to make here, in America, a truly American film. This is the purpose of his explorations. The understanding of the intimate phenomenon of American life started its first steps on the New York pavement. *

Leadership: Can you offer two placing solutions for "the purpose of self-experience" fieldin the Browse window of the intimate phenomenon of life of a character, in order to get a new image of a sure and superior reason?

Morality and Justice are the trials of the greatest tests of life, they are the results of competitive circumstances (more or less complex) that give – either the tragic condition of a world frozen because of a lack of values, or the condition necessary for the development of a thriving world. It depends on the way you want to invoke them in the sustaining frame of ideas about the meaning of life.

The purpose of exploring a world, through the challenge casted upon a society whose mechanism brings a man devoid of character into a precarious situation, by inserting or removing the element of guilt admittance, of factual innocence or formal innocence, is to give a passing grade to your motives dominated by action in circumstances that require the highlighting of your characteristic features.

A man experiencing the depth of understanding the phenomenon of life, creating in this way an expansion of self-understanding, always directs his thinking towards the significance of some breakthroughs of a conceptual nature, with an allure of predictability, so as to receive a full response from his own study object. And this phenomenon of life can best be understood by the size of a character in a fictional universe, in terms of a comparison with a sense of reflection in another reality, in another soul, so that your reason passes in a higher dimension.

The upper dimension of a reason is given by the quality of the perceptions about an image of the character you want to characterize, this image may be ideal in the case of an introspection that, by its depth, helps you to pay more attention to the surrounding world and to your role in this world.

Let's review some of the questions on which the Prince of Bénévent reflected upon, the famous Charles Maurice de Talleyrand:

"Can a man hold the past in place instead of facing the future? Through the smallest oscillation of the sphere of existence – from objective facts to the attempt of explaining them – will he be able to topple the conditioning of his nature? Does an adroit man require a crime in order to justify his power? What is the argument he uses to rid himself of guilt? Does too much good bring evil, or does too much evil bring good? What sense does vengeance have? Can man regain his well-being, yielding to an unreasonable passion?"

By answering such predominant questions, you can identify two options of the "purpose of self-experience" field:

The first option is to become a defender of guilt and law breaking, if through this you respect the final sentencing: a sentence to melancholy, to a century of loneliness. The second option is to rid yourself of punishment and disgrace becoming a defender of higher ideals. Here you have to consider the sacrifice for the common good, kindness, justice, competence, quality, fairness and responsibility, if through this you respect the final sentencing: the realization that you can make things happen if you open yourself to other people and reveal how you truly are.

Leadership aims at the work of the creator to be the manifestation of his own Ego in a story called "the weakness of being someone else", considering the higher dimension of a reason that crosses the whole sphere of consciousness through archetypal (spiritual and intellectual) grounds.

Man Between Morality And Justice always ranks on the position of "thinker", thus rejecting that gradual intensity of living with his own weaknesses and accepting them.

Before launching a new version of leadership that contains the "purpose of self-experience" field, open your eyes to see the vices of others, try to be a deep mirror for themselves and see whether you will have to run... from yourself !

A man of great character never banishes the wraiths appearing in his mind, he knows to take their power by finding the answers that reveal the truth about his own person. And he is capable of promoting himself by means of these truths.

Man Between Science And Emotion

On August 21, 2016

Learn to facilitate the union of positive powers of the mind with those of the soul, observing yourself from the point of view of an astounding discovery's impact.

Never before have I felt so attracted to an essential idea, always with ramifications towards another, deeper idea. To determine it mathematically, with the help of these wonderful regular expressions, like a line jump in a newly created text file, without it affecting my imagination. Only so could the product of an authentic experience called perception twitch, sequences of consecutive elements of interpreting information that fulfilled only one property: that of journeying to another question.

I still cannot draw conclusions of this unique experience, because leaving my self carried by the magic of the SELECT instruction clauses in a certain pattern, I have omitted the fact that the presence of this cause determined a sort of RECEIVE of another message: "Please wait..."

Like in a true psychological thriller, I was under the impression – a rather vague one, in any case – that I belonged to never-before-happened fantasies, formulated through the clause (?s).*WORD(?-s)\R, to be perceived in the world with which I had yet to reconcile, as a sort of passing from the complex plane of judgement into the simplest of emotions. And I truly believed in them, to validate a visionary idea which in turn had a dual effect.

Leadership: How do you justify your mind's effort to fit into the unique experience of interpreting information that causes enlightenment, by the condition of the type: "try to self-induce an addiction to explanations and elucidations"?

On the one hand I managed to highlight the beginnings of the systematic differentiation between certainty and finiteness, where the untold took on for the first time touches of a Goyesc black, a potential source of demonic inspiration, a re-initialization of a substring of the matches type (^.[A-B].$). To interpret information that causes enlightenment means to involve in your activities and decisions that perception regarding the reality of the things you see, feel, evaluate and describe as being an innovative way of approaching a thought, a direction of creation, a direction of access to those experiences that give meaning and inspiration.

On the other hand, like in one of Salvador Dali's works, where the values of multiple variables and those of the massive type, in the case of the philosophical identification of the peculiarities of art related to the category of false, respecting a repetitive structure with a value of differentiation, I have succeeded – exclusively from the need of self-induction of a modified state of complete unity of being, which causes enlightenment, to conform to a strange emotion, to let myself grasped and chained in its grip.

I still recognize myself in the context of that emotion. But art still grabs my attention, giving me the opportunity to make a comparison with the mathematical formulations of the REGEX language, to the extent that my thinking seems to acquire that note of naturalness and commonality that does not stress me and does not put me in the situation in which it would be difficult for me to find answers.

Leadership: On what plane lies your true originality whose essence can be defined by appealing to a motivation laid out in terms of scientific-emotional coordinates?

"Optical density ! This notion hides within it a labyrinth of riddles, whose solutions elude you just when you think you've got them. But this still was not a method, it was just an idea, one that only had to lead to the elaboration of a method, thanks to which I would succeed – without modifying any property of the material (with the exception of the colors, in some cases) – to reduce the refractive index of a solid or liquid substance to that of air.

Indeed, knowledge can give man satisfaction ! But I did not know this at that time." Exclaimed at one point Jack Griffin, Wells' "Invisible Man."

Their formulas and combinations create emotions, experienced in a continuous flux of ideas and visions, in a variety of ways of expression. Emotions, whose presence determine a leap over plateauing, are temporary information over the reality directly affected by the observation itself.

The satisfaction that also indicates my position towards these observations, a position of creator, man of ideas and analysis, is that I can change any property of the subject matter that I study without caring about aberrations, limitations, without regretting a thing. The emotion of knowing, the emotion of "feeling" the occurrence of the discovery of an answer, is far greater than the emotion of failing in any direction of analysis.

Emotions are an uninterrupted and permanently changing process of personal reconfiguration, in which there are no rules or restrictions, where the only landmark does not stop at triggering some "Eureka", from the point of view of the impact of an amazing discovery, but rather facilitates the union of positive energies of the mine with those of the soul.

Leadership: How do you stimulate your personal creation against the backdrop of images that depict the quintessence of things from the robust reality of art, to facilitate a unique experience of enjoying a higher revelation?

It is impossible to think of a tool, a color, to a concept, a function, a model of calculus, an explanation, without stimulating the power of your brain that needs sustenance in order to function and not make you scream of happiness when you manage to make a "winning" combination. The art of creative thinking consists of choosing a combination of two or more fields of significance along a unique experience of observing the shapes, colors and movements of a thing, basically establishing the relationship between what you expect to see in relation to what you know about things.

Only in this context of a product of the mind – "Eureka" – do you prove your consistency, your ability of dedicating yourself in the long run to a certain activity or cause, received with all the longing of the soul.

Whereas, according to leadership's conditions of operation arising from the power of the vision on a typology of creation, meaning to analyze yourself by juxtaposing yourself, part by part, under the gaze of reflection and deduction, of understanding and finding, you cannot be ready for a great ascension without passing through the experience of living the unique miracle of creation and discovery under the dominant action of combinations.

And originality, whose essence can be defined by appealing to a motivation laid out under the aspect of scientific-emotional coordinates, underlies not only the plan of a lesson of mental success or in the plan of a transformational emotionality. But, especially, as a condensed reflection of your true nature in every moment of revelation.

A higher revelation is obtained by combining science with art, by far a mystical practice, so that the obtained expression acquires the symbolic value of a supreme form of knowledge. This symbol can only be breathed by a researcher spirit and a chosen mind.

Man Between Science And Emotion has access to the inner knowledge of the aspects of creation, which above all proposes free initiative, and never imposes criteria. This knowledge calls your being to a transformation whose purpose is the passing from a "cold calculation" to a level of interpretation of the result of that calculus in its own existence.

Man Between Two Acceptances

On February 17, 2016

Discover the essence that will represent you in each chapter of existence, without falling into an extreme that determines you to evolve towards a passion pushed to ever new limits.

Nothing seemed to be more important in the world, aside from what I felt I am in the first version of a film called "Man between two Acceptances". Whose narrative motor, quite frail, was fueled by the thoughts I reached through a strange complicity with a sort of weakness for the imaginary, from that intellectual impetuosity characteristic to makers of worlds, necessary for the clotting into clear shapes of the always shifting aspects of appearances.

Appearances I would reduce to laws, essences, ignored by most of the so-called experts, ensuring that unity of depth of the vision that is expressed through a certain continuity in discerning the unknowable. Then, I would gently pack the void of meaningless experiences, vague shadows of placings in a confusing, exploratory stage, and I would transform them into a true passion for a particular knowledge.

What was important was that time not forget about me or that I not get lost in it with that inability of coordinating my beautiful crossing of a return to myself. Sometimes, a flash of thought was enough for me to get attached to a journey into the field of the abstract, from which would result the landmarks of a multi-perspective understanding. The symbolic substance of my innovative, high purity lyricism, attracted by the story images that lead you to think of a fairy-tale world, had to facilitate the journey to the judgments of minds that refuse to obey the rules and grow old.

Leadership: Are the features that your image reflects the most important properties of an ascension that is primarily based on organizational criteria within the space of the creative Ego's relationships with the challenges of temporality?

Before a great leader of Persia appear a strange character who gifted him a game called "Chess", then he initiated him in the mysteries of this escape from the patterns of old habits. Without realizing, he was lured into a trap that not only ruined him economically, but permanently destroyed his horizons. Or did it save him from a continuous existential dilemma? In any case, he fell into the penchant for chess, preferring the strategies of the imaginary over those of the real battlefield. According to legend, the great leader ceased to be a soldier, but on the board, no one could checkmate him.

Who knows which way the invention of a decisive moment that finds its meaning in the inattention given to a random fact will lead you. Something outside your will, something unpredictable, over which you have no control, which determines, which has good or bad effects. The first challenge of temporality is to resist closure in a present that presses you through an act of confession of the desire to live by comparison with the perception of a perfect creation stemming from the subjective projection of the world seen from above from a larger plan.

As for me, I had come to not be interested in neither the infinity of knowledge, and neither the position of a thinker gained through the sweat of the mind, through silent meditations. I was also no longer interested in the glory of victory over space and time the universe had dedicated for me through destiny. I was willing to give up everything for a single thing, for that invention of a moment that would put an end to a deaf battle with myself, for that interesting phenomenon called "being a prisoner" that allowed my exit from the state of reflection.

Everything began to be restricted to moves, laws, and immobilizations in the face of a broader horizon. I had learned to be increasingly temperate. But even temperance was an interesting move.

The most important properties of an ascension that is primarily the organizational criteria in the space of the relations of the creative ego with the challenges of temporality are: the control of several symbolic action fields and the correct appreciation of the position of consciousness of a compositional role, its inner assumption and the emotional impact it triggers in the space of reality beyond appearances.

Leadership: Do you have the ability to bring about the meeting with "SOMETHING ELSE ENTIRELY" through the revelation of an unknown valence of your personality enrolled in the sphere of immediate reality?

Man's orientation depends not only on the aspects of content and production of the experiences of life, but also on being aware of the shifting aspects of appearances seized daily through a strange complicity with a sort of weakness mixed with a bit of autonomy from the rules imposed by the conventions of an exterior authority.

Generally, people fight for a greater freedom of choice, for the winning of a way of reinventing themselves, but which is later highlighted, in some, by the readiness to yield to a special occupation, to a forced and hard to manage pleasure. The pleasure of evolving in a game in which you are the only winner is a frightening hell from which you cannot escape, or a powerful drug from which you can fully taste without being held liable for the consequences of experiencing it.

Without an essence that can represent you in each life situation, in each chapter of the possibility of achieving the proposed goal by using chosen means, you will fall into an extreme that will either lead you towards exhaustion, or it will determine you to evolve towards a passion pushed to ever new limits, served zealously even to the point of fanaticism.

To make possible the meeting with a "SOMETHING ELSE ENTIRELY" through the revelation of an unknown personality's valence means creating your opportunity to see from a narrator's point of view that explains the world he lives in in a different way.

Such a passion, which will generate the inability to coordinate the beautiful happening of a return to yourself, still serves to the representation become concrete of a turning action that changes certain limiting beliefs that refer to the real world. This passion can save you from a continuous existential dilemma, with the price of abandoning the true duties and obligations, which in turn develop the peculiarity of seeing deeper into the aspects of a different reality or teaching.

To seek perfection in any aspects of personal life, but at the same time to change your priorities, preferences, desires, and needs according to an occupation that proves itself to be more valuable than any wealth, because within it is planted the possibility of acceding to a different plan of your high purpose, it is the job of a leadership which claims the call to autonomy.

This type of autonomy allows you some leeway in the space of the freedom of being who you want to be, an unbeatable man, as well as the ability to bring about the meeting with "something else entirely", through the revelation of an unknown valence of your personality.

Leadership is your acceptance of reality to interpret the role of a character whose narrator, in the hypostasis of an Alter-Ego, appears and disappears at the key moments of the event transpiring around him.

Man Between Two Acceptances is characterized through the following, extremely variable, elements: the novelty of discovering a new form of power, in which he becomes invincible, and the freedom of seeing deeper into the aspects of a different reality or teaching. Naturally, the converse also exists, that of falling to an extreme side called fanaticism.

Be careful how you represent yourself to an authority called "obsession", for it can keep you in continuous check. Any excessive activity can cut the Gordian knot of convention with everything that is essential in personal training, canceling the basic routes of life and leadership because of a complacency in an imprisonment that restricts your privilege of being steadfast in your difficulty and noble purpose.

Man's Entrapment In The Arid Space Of The Unperceivable

On January 05, 2014

Open the path towards new knowledge conquests, so that you can see beyond the limits of what you are.

The great titans of superior-innovative thinking, such as H.G. Wells or Jules Verne have often played with the mystery that exceeded any knowledge,the inexpressible. Using that amalgamation of imagination, that allowed them to place themselves in an indeterminate place and time, they could identify the laws of those depths that exceeded the limits of understanding accepted by most people.

I felt that it was my turn to understand those laws by intensifying the only highly elevated source of energy that couldn't be destroyed by nobody and nothing: imagination. By invoking some core artistic qualities at the crossroads of questions about the purpose of my existence and my being in the world, it was the chromatic contrast of tensions, prejudices, unmistakable forces of adhesion to a new form of art, plausible by the motifs cut out, a noir movie, but best expressing the inner conflict with the self revealed from the past. The greater the discomfort I felt.

The experiments of scientists exposed by the two writers in their works, were meant to make the process of invisibility reversible. But the secret formula always leaves room for interpretation, it doesn't indicate any procurement and usage methods, it didn't fit into any doctrine, proving itself more like a quick stage of transition towards a superior dimension. A useful stage, necessary to any person who cherishes and supports progress, even with the risk of their withdrawal or exclusion from society.

Who wanted to understand and apply the formula had to see beyond any limitation.

Leadership: Do you gain the indisputable right to self-fulfillment following the criteria of a reality model to which you relate by separating yourself from everything that is common to your world?

How can I completely incorporate invisibility in time? Do I have to perceive it, first of all, as a future destination? Or maybe as a learning and exploitation source of innovative experiences?

And yet, I was struggling with a different question. This decoding of the invisible, manifesting internally, the transformation of the obscure into a recognizable entity, even if it encourages individual scientific research and, through this, the development of thinking, doesn't it mean it's an acquired right, not an undeserved one?

Setting a priority for one's investigations over the invisibility formula can prove itself compromising, putting me in a dishonorable position.

I felt captive in the arid space of the unperceivable, associated with the passage of time that made me want to stop researching, forcing me to stay for as long as possible in the shadow of mediocre walls, as a simple, useless and aimless passer-by through life. One who doesn't know how to fight, who doesn't live the great adventure of knowledge, who can't free himself from the absurd, who doesn't search for answers and never finds out the truth.

Didn't that alchemist who hid his name say that the majority of people are just products of some failed scientific experiments and that only the chosen ones are called forth to discover the mysteries of God and the path to the Kingdom of Heaven?

Leadership: How can you use science, in order to improve your perception of a parallel reality?

Breaking the patterns and the freedom to create shouldn't be regarded as something unnatural, but as an unquestionable right to the act of overachievement and accomplishment, as a game filled with impossible, but valuable missions that you aren't forced to play until the end. But that you must experience, if you want to understand who you truly are and what your meaning as human being is.

Leadership is subject to the risk of strong depreciation, if the contradictions of the transaction towards a new development stage are intensified, if the perception and representation limits of science, exclusively inferior grounds situations, shouting "I can't ! ", are fully approved by your defining characteristics.

The development standards you set can be recognized in the way you treat objectives and investigation requests on a long term, imposed by your own Ego as an attempt to find the way out of your actual blind alley of mediocrity. They show how you can use science in order to improve your perceptions regarding a reality that you didn't have the opportunity to live to its fullest. But in order to better understand the "lack" phenomenon and its major implications on building the personality, with a harmful effect on maximum interest elements that can shape your future.

Who doesn't settle for less – at the beginning of the journey to knowledge above any understanding – has to look for other exits to something else, to an unknown that in the end identifies with a debut, through scientific contributions to the great race with one's self.

Only by understanding the vibrations of the "unperceivable", using this amalgamation of imagination that allows you to place yourself in a more extended area of knowledge, makes it impossible to find the secret formula that contains huge percentages of possibilities on how to interpret things and the world, which you overlooked before.

Leadership: Can you build new performance roads with the elements of a science that you don't believe in all the way?

The constitutive elements of leadership, which reflect a solid knowledge of active innovation factors, can be identified only in the harmony of results, or in the elegance of a suite of operations within the research process, being able to apply them based on the operative structure of your thinking. Are you looking for some exciting challenges to stimulate your appetite for research?

Identifying these laws of the "abysses", which go over the limits of understanding as accepted by most people, is the first sign you have reached further than you thought, at a high level of development, as a solitary entity, not as a follow up to work, knowledge and cooperation experiences with others.

This means you managed to build new performance roads with the elements of a science that you alone have credited until the end with ideas, resources and unlimited expectations, and that you didn't abandon them during the maturity and aptitudes selection processes. All your relevant aptitudes and qualifications were acquired from work experience and strictly applied on the rough field of science.

Who descends and climbs back, along the underground tunnels of science, knows they are starting an adventure with exquisite details. In the meaning of an alliance with the horizons and premises of knowledge, such a man bears within himself the hope to meet, in long forgotten galleries, the secret meanings of self-improvement.

Authentic personal transformation is the way of self-denial by the imagination that you are making a different reality, in which you integrate as a remarkable type by being able to communicate your thoughts under the most diverse forms of expression, to rethink your ideas by going from one state of mind to another, covering your own law of operation with many meanings.

Man's Entrapment In The Arid Space of The Unperceivable represents that stagnation around mediocrity, the isolation within the limits of a superficial and partial knowledge of human characteristics that can no longer serve as an essential base for leadership.

Man's Purpose In The Space Dedicated To Silence

On October 23, 2013

Ensure for the man within you a major motivational force, by controlling instincts, feelings and reactions in relation with the exterior reality.

FBI agent, Clarice Starling. I had never felt so alone, intimidated by the doubt that took root within me. I was so close to the delicate border between ridicule and desuetude, between horror and value. Because I had reached the scariest place, amid the silence of a tomb, that terrifies the body.

If a painter had seen me in the state I was in, burdened by so many feelings of anxiety that I felt on the physical level, especially in the midst of the despair of doing nothing, he could have grounded his approach artistically on the quest for the original purity of a heart longing for God. Everything around was darker than ever, without the hope of a color explosion promise, like a sinister landscape of Savior Rosa which visual experience always makes accessible only to a hallucinating imagination that cannot erase its memory.

And that bewildering silence, the only heat source inside of me that could no longer be simultaneously or alternatively fueled with an energizing fuel had become a tombstone. Not a single drive or motivational force came from the new questions I asked myself. All the angels had left me in that dark moment of mourning, for which the investigation "invited" me to attend. Where would I find the revitalizing energy for strengthening my control stimuli?

Leadership: Can you afford to have a visual experience that complements the hardest scenario of life, assuming the destiny of a being that is not yet manifest in the depths of the soul than in accepting a separation from the immediate reality?

The funeral had proved a good opportunity to experience my functionality, in the vision of a sad world. In the atmosphere of a compulsory psychological reality. I was living it through a living and trembling fog that easily froze my blood, warning that it's not the time to show my bravery. I was observed, followed, cornered by that screaming combination of black and white, which had become the maximum acceptable compromise for the objective factor of my motivation.

Something was torturing me slowly. The shame of being followed, of people gloating over me. Restlessness carried to the extreme. I was caught in a game of irony of fate, isolated by the rusted barbed fence of defenselessness. As if the toughest charges were swarming over me. That was my life then. A redoubt of my own limitation.

Let's look at all those men around me. All of them. One by one. To be looked at with a strange reluctance that if you come across to many times, you would believe that life isn't worth living. It was a path I had never set foot on. The flame of desperation raised the temperature of self-esteem; the buzz of my molecules in the functional system became aggravated. The extent of this mental distress phenomenon accentuated the indisposition level I could accept and bear.

Leadership: Do you have the certainty of knowing the sense and the value of life, as well as assessing their limits of validity, through a state of lucidity that confirms your intentions to overcome the condition of the defeated?

I felt like a fool, I entered just like that, adrift, in an empty and tense space that filled me with a lot of restraint, even fear. An intrusion in a reality abandoned by every hope, by every bit of compassion, accentuating anxiety. I didn't belong to anyone. I would have gladly left then and there. But, intimidated, I couldn't find an excuse. So I resigned to the thought that, soon, everything will end.

Various mountains can be made from the same type of rock, various fields can have the same soil, and various trees can grow similar fruits. And the thoughts that invade a man's mind, devoid it of any revitalizing substance are sheltered under the same roof, in agreement with the initial settings of their own resistance regulating system. When these thoughts, triggered on the outside and consumed on the inside don't stop in time, the thick veil of the duality between quiet ignorance and anxious intelligence sets in.

Clarice Starling has fallen prey to a moment of tension, overwhelmed by an unstable guilt feeling. She seemed to lie in wait of a release from the grasp of the steel chains over the mind. A wandering mind in the solitary labyrinth of an assumed complicity around the convention between infinite silence and the most obedient listening.

The limits of validity and meaning of her life seemed to lie between doubt and regret, between delusion and suffering, but they were being fought through a state of lucidity like "Remember the reason for why you are here" which causes her to temper her attitude, impulse, consciousness.

Leadership: Can you provide a major mobilizing force by controlling your instincts, feelings and reactions to a reality that you cannot change so that you do not fall victim to the moment that can make you a prisoner of your own limitation?

Two forces act simultaneously over a mind conditioned by reality: a pressure force, which acts over the basic change of emotions, generating internal conflicts. This way offering, a good opportunity to experience functionality in the vision of a sad world, represented by that screaming combination of black and white, which could become the maximum acceptable compromise for the objective factor of my motivation.

And a reply force, with a certain decision-making power, simultaneously or alternatively fueled with "energizing fuel", but which remains in the subordination of the central power – the power of thought.

These two forces cancel each other or amplify their potential based on the capacity to make something happen, to create an alternative for accepting a rigid status-quo and quickly move on to a better mood.

A man that doesn't ensure a major motivational force, controlling his instincts, feelings and reaction in relation with the exterior, hard reality lacks the support to identify the inner characteristics and strengths that can turn him into a leader.

The moment that can make you a prisoner of your own limitation occurs when you become aware that no matter how you try to escape the outer reality, you will have to conform to the Self that experiences suffering as an object of psychological study or as a symptom of weakness not to be able to stifle the voice of consciousness that tells it "There is no God".

Man's Purpose In The Place Dedicated To Silence points out the development and intensification of those inner forces, which determine the ability to adapt to new, especially in extreme, unforeseen and unpredictable situations. Any internal destabilizing draws with itself chaotic, improper and inadequate actions.

It's mandatory to strengthen the inner material, especially for those who want to keep their positions as leaders. Developing resistance to stress and developing the capacity to quickly and properly answer to unpredictable situations is a stringent requirement in leadership.

Master Durer's Gift

On April 28, 2010

Continuously assert the respect for your leadership, honoring your role through a healthy mentality and through your skill to enliven spirits.

The troubles weren't over neither for Mikael, nor for his friend Antti. They had been through a lot together, they had suffered a lot. But one day, on their journey, they stopped in the town of Nürnberg, where they met master Dürer, a very famous man, a complete sketch artist, and above all, a man of great erudition, to whom even the princes sought to enter in his favors. In spite the fact that he had an apparent simplicity in his calm voice, he dominated those around him through intelligence, talent and knowledge.

Almost a whole day Mikael talked with Master Dürer, who told him about all the knowledge he had accumulated, about his life philosophy, about his vision. When they parted, the master gave him three engravings, which he certified with his signature, next to which he wrote his name. He also gave him a letter of recommendation for the painter Titzian, telling him to pay him a visit when he gets to Venice. And, in the end, with a joy that surprised the young man, the master told him, before goodbye:

- Mikael, you have eyes that can understand the message of art, is a gift you have received from God and which you must never neglect, but develop whenever you are given the chance.

Leadership: Does the experience offered to you by the broadening of your horizon from the perspective of the message that ignites your mind allow you to pass in haste over a summary of competences that diversify, no matter what you put in it?

Master Dürer's advice mattered a lot, making Mikael understand why it is better to look at the things around him with more interest, with more attention, devotion and joy, like a real artist. Ever since, Mikael started to see everything around him differently. His life became richer when he started to appreciate the beauty of shapes, proportions and colors, the beauty of the things around him.

But the great gift that Mikael received from master Dürer, whom he cherished as an extraordinary man, was the fact that he opened a new perspective on live, on what is important and defining for his existence, on the world, giving him a state of inner peace. Practically he learned Mikael to sort what is really important to know and understand for his evolution, of what can be left out.

However, Mikael's skills in what regards the contribution to the actual development of art have been reduced only to the making of a correspondence with life, not through an own conception of practice, and not by a creative approach to it. And the degree of actual realization of a work of art can only be assessed by careful observation and improvement of its practice.

Leadership: Do you choose to embark on a journey of initiation in art through a repeated assumption of all authentic values of knowledge that allow you to receive life guidance?

Chance or providence? Mikael had the opportunity to know an exceptional artist on which chance brought in his way and whom he never had the privilege to ever meet again. For, as a suffering patient who needs a very good doctor that he will make an analysis, to tell him what is the disease he suffers from and then treat him accordingly - so Mikael, whose life is immersed in a deep state of apathy and depression because of so many troubles he had passed through, badly needed someone to give him moral and spiritual support and get him out of his state.

Dürer was a visionary, a pioneer, a perfect mentor who, with great interest and trust, who was able to open Mikael's eyes to a broader horizon, enhancing at the same time that lust for life passed through the knowledge sieve.

Leadership: Do you use at its fullest the potential to awaken in those superior to you the measure of their individual value?

Can you select a certain kind of intervention in the life of others by integrating a new spiritual and intellectual vibration, by filtering the qualities that confirm a more complex maturity of seeing things?

You start attracting some inspiration funds when you measure the distance between the centers of the two bases "science" and "horizon", supporting yourself in what they suggest to you as new support ways. This is the thing you always do when you achieve certain finality, on the scale of shaping personality – which includes personal learning, training, education and development through extending one's own coordinate network.

Firstly we talk about those coordinates that help you build a new image, mimicking the character traits of a role model. Then, those not quite fixed coordinates that attest a certain maturity, which fights against any kind of conditioning, setting a new version of what you know about yourself. And a set of position coordinates in a unique, advantageous position as forward, and that allows you to apply an appropriate acceleration of your transformation when you find yourself in front of a new beginning.

And the maturity in the way that those superiors to you make known their experience, taking responsibility for the role of their actions, should be a "strategy" of your potential to awaken in them the measure of their individual value.

Leadership: Do you start the "user" mode in order to activate the "Intelligent Sensor" options with the purpose of controlling the effects of some beliefs that can't stand any modification?

One of the ways to obtain a better unlocking from an inferiority position, very close of what we call a mix of amateurism and self-sufficiency, is to involve a certain mentor that should teach you to select what is truly important to understand and take into account for your evolution, out of what can be left aside. But it all depends of your power to absorb the amendments that have been brought to you along the way in order to finalize the extension of a becoming in the concrete space. Moreover, you must rest assured that you are able and willing to pay for the participating of a superior thinking to your own self-accomplishment.

The "user" mode refers to the capacity of integrating yourself in a superior knowledge absorption process without losing your originality, your independence of thought, waiting at the same time a confirmation of the way in which you are perceived by others.

And activating the option "Intelligent Sensor" with the purpose of controlling the effects of some beliefs that can't stand any modification means to accentuate that repositioning tendency in relation to the much more evolved minds than yours, picking up with a lot of prudence and determination (examining the objections and waiting constructive critics) any kind of agreements that complete your way of thinking and your personality.

Leadership: Do you facilitate access to a new dimension of life by comparing it with that version of reality with which others have built up their value?

Than a cheap mentality, better a healthy one. Master Dürer was, besides a complete artist, a man with a flawless moral conduct, a man with high ideals, very cultivated, very talented and with a lot of goodwill, who awakened, in a very short time, in Mikael the thirst for knowledge, for life, helping him get rid of a great part of the imperfections he had.

Making use of the unexpected and extraordinary gift of the master that of seeing life in more colors than just black and white, to appreciate the beauty of the things around him, Mikael regained his former optimism and will, keeping in his heart a drop of hope regarding his pretty uncertain future.

You cannot see the entire world if your horizon is limited to the width of a street. In any moment, you can learn something new, on the condition that you would want someone next to you to support you emotionally and give you some advice when you need it, especially when you go through hard times, when you don't understand certain things or you can't decide which direction to take.

Such a man, a mentor, must be an extraordinary person, an enlightened personality, great through its individual thinking, with an astonishing persuasion power, from which you can learn with a lot of interest and joy to see everything in a better light a lot of confidence. And with the passion a man puts in everything, and taking into account the things that really matter, establish some higher goals and, with power in your heart, to seek to reach them.

The reality with which great people construct their value is a version of the art of turning themselves into a creation.

Master Dürer's gift is nothing but an open door to a different perspective, to a different future, which you can reach by following different paths, sometimes less taken, and sometimes unknown by anybody. It is very useful to find a mentor to open that door to an alternate future, perhaps better, and, at the same time, it is very important to know to listen to the meaning of the words of this mentor.

Only a man who, through a healthy thinking and cleverness, manages to inspire spirits and to change destinies, only that man has real leadership skills.

Master Eisenstein's Creation

On April 23, 2014

Try to find the appropriate way to achieve new science, meaning the possibility of adapting it to the necessities of approaching new prospects of leadership.

The revolutionary character of the film "Battleship Potemkin" – in the sense of revolutionizing means of expression – lies primarily in the discovery and perfecting a cinematographic language, which underpins the entire evolution of cinema, from then and up until the present day.

From the technical process, as a means of obtaining certain effects, montage becomes a language for Eisenstein. The great director discovers that thinking in montage cannot be separate from thinking in general, in its entirety. He notes that here, a phenomenon from the history of language repeats itself: people initially expressed their thoughts not in phrases, but in a single word. But these words represented, in fact, primary forms of sentence.

*Eisenstein has found the way of a cinematographic language, meaning the possibility of expressing a concept, a thought. He proved that a series of images can be performed so that they provoke an emotional movement which, in turn, gives rise to ideas. The movement switches from image to feeling and from feeling to sentence. In this regard, Eisenstein discovered a specific language of cinema. **

Leadership: Do you understand what is found in the context of the science behind the assembling of elements made in parallel, as compared to the means of obtaining some image effects that can indicate a story?

A leader stays true to his own vision and his own creative work, whether it be done individually or in partnership with a new version of the "Remodeling the future" type of application, to which not just anyone has access to. More than occasionally, he orients his thinking towards finding the elements of transmitting advanced knowledge. These elements are made in parallel with the development of the base product, called "montage", in the sense of revolutionizing the means of building a certain direction of evolution.

Completing your own creative work is done with the assembly of certain elements made in parallel, such as cost, duration, quality, number of activities, complexity, the famous "return of investment" and the capacity of "delivering" the scientific product. The means of obtaining some image effects that can indicate a story relates more to the way you use the means of expression in interpreting a feeling, a notion, a thought, so as to obtain a new variant of a scenario expressing reality, even at the risk of fooling anyone.

Outside the science behind the assembly of elements made in parallel lies the cult of virtue, the support of certain cause in which you believe, but especially in the work of updating the means of transmitting creations. The result of leadership is founded on the desire of offering the world not just a new quality scientific product, but also a message full of power, meaning the possibility of expressing a concept, a thought.

Leadership: Do you understand the difference between the "reply" and "forward" options behind an image that has the power to persuade by conveying a sense of continuity with a revelatory exterior?

The difference between the options "reply" and "forward" consists precisely in that completion of work, which has no other purpose and meaning other than to leave something behind and moving into a higher stage of development, by being aware of the importance of acquiring a higher status due to the deepening of knowledge.

In leadership, the "reply" option refers to the multiple instructions reply you transmit to the participants of progress by means of the science you cultivate and represent. This reply includes certain variables, observed or discovered along the way, of the formal type, which determines a certain conception of the construction of science, which can influence the quality of the finished product.

While the "forward" option, supported only at a high level of leadership, refers to the direction your discoveries take, measures in terms of obtaining new superior effects in what concerns professional quality and recognition gained from your scientific progress.

This option, as an indicator of characterizing the relationship between the activities of thinking, key ideas and its eventual errors, after the concretization of the searches of "meaning" and "knowledge, has the advantage of transmitting greater confidence in the future through the message full of power: "man is to reconnect authentically to what he seeks and what has meaning for his evolution."

An image can have the power of persuasion by conveying a sense of continuity with a revelatory exterior if the elements that form it satisfy the "reality = story" relationship from which a new concept of artistic production originates.

Master Eisenstein's Creation orients towards a particular and individual path in finding adequate means of expression that can be understood by all, so that the answer to their requests of performance be educational and mobilizing.

Master, Thank You For Invictus

On May 24, 2019

Develop your identity in accordance with the soul model that raises you to a wider spiritual perspective, taking into account the feeling of fulfillment that is found in the comparison: splendor-durability.

The rose. I spent my whole morning talking to it about the universe, referring to the space of a pictorial work in which nature gets reddish-yellowish, and it listened to me without saying anything, without suspecting the fantasy of the mind of the one who devoted his whole life to the fulfillment of a higher purpose than the ennoblement of a literary writing.

We spoke of the simultaneity and succession of phenomena in time, whose unknown causes have sown in me the seeds of wisdom, hope and trust unrestrained in a divinity that, in an unusual way, seems to lead my steps in either one direction or another, as if I had been inscribed in a book that is to be read without pause. Our discussion remained fixed in the memory of time.

The rose smiled at me with that strange beauty that shines on the faces of exceptional painters, in whose minds there is a gruesome idea of the depths that reveal the most representative artistic creations, having an existential correspondent in Faust the Seeker who was born in the soul of Goethe. I perceived it as an echo of a history measured in centuries, while he probably imagined himself as part of a divine scenario whose director is building patterns of life in favor of a subtle chromatic spontaneity.

Humanism takes into account the feeling of true fulfillment found in the comparison: splendor-durability. The rose, the symbol of humanism, gives a compositional equilibrium to an artistic work where life, the internal structure of a resonant space and emotional echoes, perceives the value of the center of a universe full of fantasy and sensibility whose spatial expanse lies between "The dream of a summer night" and "Foucault's Pendulum."

Leadership: Is your experience of life condensed with the idea of a universal memory designed to recognize an essential experience that has the character of a creation willing to be the copy of an omniscient entity?

The testimony to the vast horizon of functioning of a perspective that has been conventionally called "artistic" lies in the fundamental coordinates of a life that sets itself in the cultural memory of the world. Coordinates such as the feeling of a unique presence, the feeling of a special happiness, the projection of a personal intrigue in a high-power narrative are the attributes of an artist who continues his work of creation by using dialogues in the form of symbolic memories:

- Am I to understand that you recognize in me what you are for eternity? Am I to be the example of uniqueness that you relate to when the universe chooses the correspondent of thought in which it will always exist as a being? He asks me as a spiritual interlocutor, pushing to the center of attention the reasoning of being subordinate to a power outside of him, to an omniscient entity.

The artist in me could capture in this rose the next aspect of the universe, reproduced by an older philosophy, imprinted in the memory of time as a synthesis formula between detail and general, a formula for the realization of an enlightened thought in which fits the echo of a material movement:

"When I look at the totality of things as forming a unit, a unique nature, I have the idea of a force. But if I look at them as singulars, I have the idea of more forces that develop after their inner laws and go through all the possible embodiments they are capable of. All in nature are nothing more than those forces in a certain determination."

Leadership: Does your tendency towards higher symbolism bring universal language closer to natural language, in the form of a creature full of resemblances between "power" and "sensitivity" that can be perpetuated anywhere, anytime and with anyone?

The essential feature of an artist is that he can reproduce a reality full of spiritual content. Through suggestion, through detail, through mastery, through imagination and artistic accuracy, I try to project my temperance in front of the petty temptations of the times, apart from any rules or patterns defined by the phenomenon of mass multiplication, in which old forms of knowledge or artistic performance can easily be reproduced, manipulated, evoked, parodied and ironized.

- Are you able to give me an eternal memory that I will return to every morning? I asked him with the sincerity of the artist who sets his ambition to encompass the whole world in the direction of the soul's momentum, one who puts his own identity in the position of communicating with a writer who builds the image of a higher reality over an ordinary one.

And the rose answered me with the excitement of a painter standing before the finished painting, justifying the unique expression of universal consciousness:

- Without you, I can only exist as a given of nature, as a simple, shallow and fleeting experience, as a mere nostalgia or a sadness without tears. No one speaks a word of wisdom to me, no one speaks as if speaking with an intelligent and cultured man. Everybody sells me, you keep me. Some admire me in passing, but do not contemplate me with the loving attention of an artist who knows how to deliver the vision of a future life. Others promise one thing, and then they seem to remember nothing. Nobody is enlivening my essence. Nobody but you.

Then there was silence. A pause that has to be viewed from up close one in a wide-open horizontal plane, so that you can sense the uninterrupted outline of a prominent emotion created by the dream of a human being, enhanced by the valences of an affected nostalgia:

- You see me as a perfect means of communication with the object of a direct experience, you are like a powerful force in the universe with a long organic poem, with the organicity of the experiences arranged in a description that passes through the eons of the Holy Spirit and God the Father. For others, there is only a star that is moving away, a flower that loses its petals, a color that fades. But for you, I am the power of creation that constantly illuminates and constantly heats the soul. Because of you, I feel immortal as a god, spiritually assured of a symbolism that prevails among all. Master, thank you for Invictus !

Leadership: Can the image you form of the identity that represents you amplify the effect of the visual density of a world created through a symbiosis between the artist and the subject of his painting?

My Rose, Double Delight. You listen to me as a child listen's to one's parent, as the spirit bows before the amplitude of a star, especially as you seem to possess certain attributes: knowledge of things and their order, feelings of joy, peace, freedom and the will to decide what attitude to have when faced with change.

Your thorns are the fan of interpretations loaded with a lot of objectivity, an original conception of the mercy of life, a manifestation of the conviction that everything can be personalized with a triumphant message: be what others consider you to be, but always as an example of God's work.

Regarding the character of configurations closed or opened by the effect of visual density, you can be placed in the coordinate of a concept of harmonious development that suggests, through a mystical filter, the prophecy about the exceptional destiny of an ordinary man motivated by an aspiration for immortality.

By placing yourself in the center of a mature reflection on beauty, under the solemnity of a fine painting full of artistic conception, you inspire me a certain wisdom about how God created the universe, which should help me better appreciate the wonder of creation. And, unparalleled, in the way you stand still in the beating of a light breeze, one can recognize a strong inspiration from the philosophy of a Prospero or a Merlin:

"Give me matter and I will build the world from it, that is, give me matter and I will show you how the world should be formed. Because if there is matter that is gifted with a force of attraction, it is not difficult to establish the causes who have contributed to the formation of the world system."

A creation willing to be the copy of an omniscient entity is the formula of accomplishing a miracle called the "echo of a life lived in immortality" through a soulful, emotional experience due to the deep meaning it carries.

Master, Thank You for Invictus highlights the sense of closeness between the artist and his creation, an approach animated by the revelation of a connection with an intelligence far superior to man.

Mastering Inner Leadership

On March 11, 2017

Be able to be reborn from your own ashes of suffering, conditioning yourself to believe in a self-imposed truth.

I proudly say to you, Mercedes, that God need me, and I lived. The worst misfortunes, the most terrible of sufferings, the abandonment from all those that loved me, the persecution from those that knew me, this was the first part of my life.

Then, suddenly, after captivity, loneliness and misery, followed clean air, freedom, a fortune so blinding, so astounding and infinite that only if I were blind I could not have seen that God was the one who was giving it to me for such great purposes.

Since then, this wealth seemed to me to have a holy purpose. Since then, not a moment have I thought of the life that you, poor woman, had tasted its sweetness from. I had not a quiet hour: I felt driven like a cloud of fire descending from the heavens to burn down the cursed cities.

Like adventurous captains who embark on a dangerous journey or plan a trip of no return, I prepared my nourishment, loaded my guns, gathered my means of attack and defense, training my body with the most terrible of challenges, training my soul with the harshest of blows, training my arm to kill, my eyes to see suffering, my mouth to smile at the sight most terrible.

From the good, confident, and forgetful as I once were, I had become vengeful, treacherous, evil, or rather indifferent as a deaf and blinded beast. Then I went off on the path opened to me, traveled the space and reached my target. Misfortune to those met along the way ! Misfortune to those who locked me up in the darkness of the dungeon and to those who have forgotten I was there !

Leadership: Do you measure your progress in the consciousness of a destiny emanating from the depths of a hard-going life, depending on the duration of your presence in the trailer called "Those who betrayed you"?

The truth that leaders hide inside of them is not an adaptation to the great blow of life, bared with stoicism, but rather an answer to the miracle they have experienced. They know that life is similar to the willow at the water's edge: it blooms only if it is watered with the suffering of this world. More importantly, however, it appears to us that if we look at life as a miracle attributed to a leap made over all the vicissitudes of destiny, then suffering itself acquires the valences of a reward to come.

More than that. If the man subjected to the challenges of life is measured by the strength of the feelings he controls in a décor of darkness, towards being perceived according to the conditions in which hatred and moderation are born, anger and trust in an unseen God, then leadership can be measured according to what man manages to accomplish through the miracle of creating a new rule of intervention in the destiny of others.

From a witness of the meaning of life, able to story into memories only variations of the same inner urge "I wish to die", man becomes a whim of destiny in a game of "let's see if you can fix yourself". Thus, he feels obliged to reply to those challenges endured with stoicism, forced to perceive only the color "Red" of the desire for vengeance at the limit of the distance between what was and what might be.

A powerful man compromises his authority if he doesn't manage to respond to a broader context of trends and challenges that accelerate the expansion of his own consciousness towards an area of the decision-making power. But at the same time, he compromises all of his aspirations for inner peace if the forgetfulness invoked by a new status is not induced by the varied range of value of the type worthy-unworthy, just-unjust, equitable-inequitable.

Man's purpose to depart from the primary source of pain is produced when he becomes independent of what is happening within him.

The natural blizzard crosses the desert, leaving behind it threatening dust clouds. Yet the man who connects to a new beginning of life must satisfy the obligatory conditions of the transition towards the consciousness of responsibility towards the way in which he lives and towards what he decides is worthy to be experienced, without leaving behind him a huge void called "guilt", appearing after the fault called "revenge."

Cancel your void, be care who you bring misfortune upon ! In leadership, which includes the great strength of character, the attempts to put yourself in the offside are often scored better, rather than the goals that bring about victory.

A leader doesn't measure his progress in the consciousness of a destiny emanating from the depths of a hard-going life, depending on the duration of his presence in the trailer called "Those who betrayed him", but rather after the way in which he gains and keeps the shine of his virtues over time.

Becoming independent of what is going on inside you is like a hidden treasure on the ocean floor that can only be recovered at the cost of your sinking in a moment of discouragement: you must judge your actions without self-pity.

Mastering Inner Leadership refers to the continuation of the fight against a fierce order of a life experienced through pain, which encompasses man into a trend of advancement towards a fulfillment that unties him from the limitations of his own being, with its weaknesses and shortcomings.

But in this context, there is a need for a movement of the hazard, for an improbable divine grace, for a vast source of gain, which will help him find what was lost.

Leaders who are strong within are capable of being reborn from their own ashes of suffering. They are willing to explore their thoughts and attitudes, compare them with those of an older status, and choose those that better meet the sustainable goals of capitalizing on their own forces of constructing the future.

Matter Submits To Its Creator

On February 01, 2022

You need a clear vision to focus on what you are creating, but at the same time you need to have a huge mass of matter on your side that can stay in a "stable" state for as long as possible.

I was reading a book about Alfred Nobel, considered at one time to be one of the most horrible criminals in the history of the world. His huge fortune was amassed from the manufacture of an infernal product, dynamite, which caused a sense of secret horror to anyone approaching his home. Millions of people were killed with his dynamite. But he forgets that dynamite was created not for war, but for other purposes: mining, harboring, tunneling, and other work that makes work and life easier for people.

But something else arouses in me a solidarity with his reign, a kind of interweaving of the power of comprehension of the mind with the resizing of a reality which can neither be experienced nor named immediately. Well, Alfred Nobel, subject to some confidentiality and other safeguards, had hundreds of substances in his personal laboratory in San Remo, Italy. One more flammable than the other, like a kind of magical object passed through fire and unexpectedly transformed into a heliocentric model of the universe. And, of course, the explosives – including "Nitroglycerin" – were stored in varying amounts in containers that were quite unsafe at the time.

A single drop, if it had been spilled on the table or on the floor, would have exploded – and the blast would have spread over a radius of hundreds of square meters. But despite all the danger, the scientist has been sidelined for the rest of his life by any kind of accident. Be surrounded by death, and let death be far from you. To be protected from life in any death trap. And if I were a Creator myself, and if such a creator were to measure all worldly things by a much longer than average human life, I would choose to embark on a marathon that defies death.

Indeed, I must ask myself this question: what sort of thinking can lead to a result that pleases everyone, but also represents me and fulfills me the most?

Leadership: Is your relationship with the content of your creation appropriate to a higher thinking obtained through a deepening of knowledge in a deterministic system that facilitates the trajectory of a "double bond"?

Matter obeys its creator; this is the first law of science. And not everyone achieves this performance, but only those who have embarked on a long journey and long searches. Matter listens to the one who knows how to handle it best, taking into account the extent to which the creator manages, using the essential help of the phenomenological view, to understand this attempt at thinking within the philosophy of nature. Beings are made up of a part of organic matter, and life results from the advancement of matter.

This leads us to the conclusion that he who believes in a Creator of the universe also believes in a ubiquitous, protective, tolerable, resilient energy. And the one who moves things in the direction of personal will is the one who knows how to transform matter in order to obtain a fulminating result in two worlds: spiritual and material.

Of course, this is where the spiritual level of power comes into play. "The battle is in heaven", between the world of matter and that of antimatter, or having a direct correspondence between the vibrations of matter and pure consciousness. Not between bodies, not between physical properties. Try, for example, to penetrate with the Creator's eyes everything around you, to animate and guide the matter within the things, ensuring the passage of a "double connection" trajectory: between man and God, between theory and research, between soul and the nature.

Try to encourage things to work the way you want them to. Try to animate everything by attributing a certain affinity to it, investing it with that quality of being "at peace with yourself" in terms of a certain homogenization of a spiritual nature, or in terms of a dialectic that must lead to a universality. Can you?

Leadership: Can your personality double in the face of an image transfer from creator to receiver, by adapting your essence to the content of an existence that manifests its greatness in a subjective reality?

It is admissible that a creator interposes himself between chance and discovery, between vision and concrete efforts, being able to change the relentless outcome that emerges in those who have failed to connect to the Intelligence of Universal Matter. In other words, the success of a creator is not just an image of a discovery, but expresses a reality on a microscopic scale, where matter is only the mysterious expression of a sovereign will.

Do you remember Prospero from Shakespeare's opera, who had been the Duke of Milan? By means of spells and other forms of magic, he could order matter, he could rob anyone of the power to oppose him. With the strongest spirits subject to his will, he could start the winds and waves of the sea at will. At his command a terrible storm arose, in the midst of which the very ship of his enemies was terribly shaken, but yet he had arranged the matter in such a way that no one on the ship was harmed. His bold plans could turn into a death-defying commitment at any time. Therefore, Prospero penetrated everything, enlivened and guided everything within matter, forming within the whole matter any individual existence.

Prospero is not a simple story character, he represents the non-material essence of a perfect creator.

In telling you this, I would like to acknowledge a certain achievement: I know how to construct an image in which the force of things, as it is ordered and incomprehensible, is combined with the eternal motion of matter throughout the confrontation with myself, manifesting itself as a representation of a high will in faith.

An important part of leadership is the relative form of creation that you experience in the "hidden" world that depicts reality by capturing the non-material essence of a perfect creator.

Matter Submits To Its Creator, and we can in no way decide its extent except by taking as a starting point the subjective reflection on thought previously conceived as subjectivity.

Maturity Is The Way Out Of Childish Delusions

On March 21, 2008

Reading the following excerpt from the book "Egyptologist" by Arthur Phillips, I understood why it is important to reflect on the path I must follow in life in order to have a safe and prosperous future. It is about an Egyptian king, Atum-Hadu.

You pity him when you think of him as a child, how he would tell himself stories to fall asleep, how he would create his dream about a heavenly father. Atum-hadu's analysis obviously benefits from modern sociology: in these horrific modern cases you hear about now, research reveals that there is a typical critical moment. Namely, the age at which the child first realizes his pitiful situation, finally understands his relationship with his mother, for example, and thus with the whole world. This moment is too easily immersed in retrospective pathos, like the one I fell victim to right now, but in reality you shouldn't feel sorry for these children.

On the contrary, you have to see the beautiful and heroic aspects: an eight-year-old boy bursts into his dilapidated house for the last time (for there must have been a last time, whether he knew it at the time or not) and shouts at the top of his mouth proud of who he knows what an achievement, still expecting (due to the sediments of his childish love instincts) to receive praise from the mistress of the house. He shouted, proud that he had learned to do one or the other, something academic or athletic. And she receives, as a symbol of her definitive indifference to him, either a box, or a spicy swear word, marinated in alcohol, or simply a slimy silence, while the new stepsisters whimper and walk around the room. . As if such a moment, in the blooming mind of the child, is necessarily tragic !

Never mind: why assume that such a moment represents a door closing, and not the equally creaky sound of a door opening? How can the untrained ear tell them apart? Close your eyes and if, after that gnashing of teeth, you feel a breeze of understanding or chance, then you know. As Atum-hadu apparently knew. Something had opened up for him, something he chose to remember as a nocturnal visit from Seth. Modern sociology says that the meaning of this moment is understood by smart children and that their adaptation to it cannot be called anything other than a second birth: a birth to total independence, free from any ties to illusion, free from any illusion of ties. A birth in which the child becomes both his parents. He himself, alone will build from now on.

There can be no doubt what went through the great king's mind when he chose the name by which the world later knew him: the greatest act of creation, his own creation, would now begin. And, of course, only after this excruciating second birth can you dare, at least aspire to the third birth, which eludes most people, even self-made ones (let there be no doubt about the monstrous probabilities that are at stake here). The third birth is that of immortality, where, after a productive life guided only by your self-parenting instincts, your name is remembered and loved forever, in the world beyond or simply in glorious glory.

But if you are unable to find your way out of your childish delusions, if you continue to grope, relying on a mother's love, on the firm interest of a priest or a teacher or a lover or an officer, on the generous care of the rich for the poor, on the agreeable company and loyalty of good-time friends, then you are condemned to a life of childhood. You will not reach maturity and you will not have any chance to make any achievement worthy of permanent attention.

All this makes Atum-hadu a model worthy of study. Because if one thing is clear from Quatrain 80 (only in Fragment C), it is how faithfully the king's life illustrates the principles we have just outlined: The mother's heart closes to her child, from now on she is built. There is no priceless gift she can give, though she weeps and wails, As we weep on our death-bed like a defiled virgin. But when the door of our grave is closed, only then does the soul win.

Leadership is an evolution towards the stage of adaptation to the profession, but it begins with the transition from adolescence to adulthood, this representing a phase of development that is longer and more complex than it seems at first glance, and only parents can facilitate it. It is about a very thin leadership, which aims to develop the feeling of belonging to a "family", in order to obtain unanimous support.

And the transition from a child to a mature man is specified in leadership by giving itself a separate content, an imperishable law: "what I have become is the fruit of what I was". This content isolates the entire spiritual life of man in a perimeter where the frail man becomes aware of his inner strength, of the reality in which he lives, as his personality becomes not only inspired, caring and motivating energy, but even a way of forming , as a kind of guide who shows him the way and, at the same time, a trainer who develops his qualities in time for the collective good.

What invites to overcome the endless transition from child to adult, because in leadership the spirit is the guide and the guide is often represented by the mother's influence, a fact that allows to avoid any attack on the notion of "family", is the very way of contribute to your change through an authentic expression of realistic values and beliefs that have helped you overcome difficult situations in life.

You have to leave the stage of influence due to your mother, and start living autonomously, relying on your own resources, if you want to rise to another level in your life. Does this reflect your efforts of self-discovery and maturation? If you realize this necessity, only then will you be able to get out of any dispute about your position in society, and you will start to respect yourself, feel more balanced, more secure, and even feel unstoppable on your way to success.

Mea Culpa

On June 13, 2017

Rise up from the midst of a rebellious world that contracts or expands simultaneously with the universe in which all horizons are open.

I never asked to lose myself in beginning of the world atmosphere from the book of creation of the Almighty God, which the dynamics of thought contained in the continuation of previous questions to experience transmitted it step by step, from the heights of the echo of the universe.

I never knew to keep, to seek, to grasp, to understand with that grace of the comfort of a silence beyond the ages, the mysterious meaning of existence that wants to deceive the appearances of a world in opposition to other worlds. Be careful not to place them under the sign of a compensatory realism. Lord have mercy !

There is also a character, Marius Pontmercy, from Hugo's work, with whom I seem to share the same agreement of the mind, not to give in to the big universal questions.

Sometimes this unleashed spirit, troubled by so many ideas, was so disturbed, so far away from them that it was hard to find them anymore. He heard unexpectedly about philosophy, art, history, and religion. He encountered strange aspects and, as he did not know how to look ahead, was sure he was looking chaos in the face. The angle at which he viewed everything began to change its place constantly.

That's how I became a prisoner of personal nothingness, a strange writhing inside, with the sadness of the soul of a wandering artist who increases his mysterious suffering only to the hearing of inconvenient ideas. My world, in the spiritual light obtained by revelation, often belongs to a moment in which, under the heavy rain of remorse and the persistence of doubt, I experience the feeling of escape. Mea Culpa.

Leadership: Do you try to overcome the dimensions of an understanding that is a game of unclear meanings precisely because it is not considered to be the center of your rational claims?

A whole act of consent with an unacceptable form of madness, by segmenting the rules of the composition of a mysterious character to more open consciousness shades, unfolds in front of the eyes, with increasing glances of frightened stars and anxieties. Je veux aller au bout de me fantasmes. Je sais que c'est interdit. Je suis folle.

I am letting myself go into a game that seems to generate a utopia of the Ego and nothingness that characterizes me in a life close to the contradiction between God and man renewed through compositional texture creation, the law of attraction is just a small part. I give the response I feel I need to give and leave nothing without trying to understand, even if the deal is followed by a real distance.

I often invite you in the middle of telling stories from other times as a determinant of words expressing the division of time, dancing with eternity between myself and a mirror with an infinity of meanings, to decipher the mysteries and symbols of a rise from the heights of the heavens I contemplate subjectively. Words without a meaning, just fading away.

Because of my desire to be here and elsewhere at the same time, je suis la et ailleurs, I often rise up from the midst of a magic and disturbing world that shrinks or expands simultaneously with the universe in which all horizons are open.

A mere continuation of the infinite, thrilling by the tendency of losing myself between the symbols imprinted on sensibility and the mind that belong to spirituality consistent with science, shakes me like an earthquake. In a way that suggests that I might give in to my tendency to abandon my art model. Je ne dors plus.

The turning point of your evolution, which leadership must recognize as absolutely necessary, consists in the mental detachment of the fundamental determinations that arise from trying to understand yourself and to understand the world from the perspective of a man passing through the solicitation of the madness to believe in something beyond the limits of the reason he possesses and glorifies.

Mea Culpa is, in fact, the reflective and philosophical content of a reality beyond the unanimously accepted natural barriers of understanding beyond the frontiers of knowledge and imagination, in which the miracle is represented by leaving it.

As a thinker, you will always be followed by a sort of Mea Culpa when you try to know something that does not obey the known laws or the probabilistic laws of the results you expect. The whole blame you take is that you try to force the limits of a knowledge that, at least from a certain point of view, exceeds you.

Memory

On January 02, 2020

Be the extension of an image that never loses its significance and quality, in the process of revealing the intimacy of the artistic act seen as a guarantor of recovering the past in the strict interest of understanding the present.

My story is the testimony of a melancholy act of relating to the work of art and its profound meanings. It is the place of refuge in the face of times when my life, so special, so sincere, seemed to belong to only one mortal. It is a remembrance of times founded in the vicinity of the word Dermethisyum(with criteria of purity), times hard to forget, with delicate inclinations to dream, crossed with nostalgia for deep and restrained feelings, like mere birds in their routine flight. From here, too, the temptation to change myself into a form of existence after death, in the silence of a discreet confession, on the rhythm of a music with calming effect.

The infinite desire to love life, with all its other spheres: epistemic truth, aesthetic truth and religious truth, is gathered around the need to belong to an image full of intensity, full of art, color, history and beauty, changing my meaning (to witness a world exhausted by so much turmoil) with the work of a brilliant artist who gives new valences of transfigured mirroring of nature in his own recovery.

I'm not doing anything by chance. I feel nothing without leaving a maximum freedom of speech with myself in the position of an artist, so that I can change at any time into "another" of the world of eternity and oblivion. The withered leaves collect at my feet, and the wind begins to moan.

The first lesson in the skill of art is the description of an image. Look at me as you look at a rose that has lived countless lives, over and over again, without losing sight of it. And this Double Delight, the model of unmatched and unparalleled beauty, imagine that it had the privilege of witnessing a profound act of service in the life of an alchemist, in the workshop of a famous painter, in the play of a theater actor, or in the longevity of the music of a sensual and romantic opera singer.

Great will be their reward in heaven, eternal will be their glory, because they have been part of every moment of my story.

A sense of identity and continuity can be understood in terms of "pure consciousness that concerns the old self" from the perspective of a reality whose only meaning is an image consisting of two vectors: the science of being someone else and the power of remaining the same.

And yet, there must be someone who can decipher me with all my mysteries, who can outline me alive and full of greatness, charming as a dream of youth among the passing years, beyond the complicated mechanics of the act of creation. The rose feels, lives, gets emotional, understands itself in the words of Cella Serghi: "The body and the heart gain unfortunate habits. The heart, neglecting the echo of its passions in real life, takes refuge in fiction, and the body becomes accustomed to separating desire from admiration."

Has the moon lost her memory? She is smiling alone, in the lamplight. If you have to force yourself to admire, to pay attention to the beautiful, feeling and sensitivity, to open the double key of eternal time, then load your spiritual energy with the red-yellow hue of an autumn evening spent around a fire, at dusk. It is an image immortalized by the painter on the face of a higher reality, transfigured, transmuted into eternal human values. This is what art means: transformation by feeling the influence of an omnipresence.

And the supreme force of art created by a flash of poetic intuition, subsequently brought to the supreme meaning Seroderifesh(the incarnation of the pure word from the beautiful space), lies in your power to introduce me into a framework of aspiration to the sublime, to an authentic and honest art, in the form of a description of a figurative presence interwoven with indelible memories. Then, identify yourselves with me. Let the memory live again...

This is how the humanization of art begins, its revolution. In conditions of irradiation of eternity in a vivid moment, full of color and meaning. How will it end? Through the hidden, through the symbol...

Leadership: Have you found a place of refuge in times when lives no longer belong to mortals, but to creators who display their refinement and solemnity by triggering an artistic experience seen from the perspective of the absolute?

I always held a magical key in my hand. Near the crystalline spring of the great inclinations towards the beautiful, a wonderful place captured in the landscape created by Sepher Yetzirah, where we experienced the first years of immortality on a single and insignificant palm of the earth, I discovered for the first time freedom, art, love, regret and compassion, worry and weakness. I wish that your fate was the one deserved by me, so that I could include you in this landscape of history, nostalgia and simplicity. But only you have this power, to be like me.

Then, by a glimmer of divine power, I twisted the key twice, the source of all symbolic images and correspondence, only to suggest my absence, forgetfulness, and inspire people with the natural need for affection, kindness, leaving them the possibility to reflect (in awe) how it would be to live without me, how difficult life would be without art, without beauty, without the perspective of the absolute. It is so easy to leave me, all alone with the memory of my days in the sun...

Cella Serghi was perhaps the only writer who deciphered the mysteries of the flower to which I still harbor her soul: "I think the secret of your sadness (because you are sad) is that life has divided you, love has not wanted you complete, it asked of you more than you wanted to give to only one".

An artistic experience seen from the perspective of the absolute is the masterpiece of the art of bringing to life spaces forgotten by the world, places with a strong history, witnesses of times past, in the composition of an image that never loses its quality and significance.

I must think of a new life, and I mustn't in. Believe me, I no longer want to delude myself, I no longer want to be just an attempt to manifest art, as fragile as any multiplication of radiating a light ray into a living, universal consciousness. Following me will remain, perhaps without movement, only a pure pictorial line, although my immense desire, rutsineh alcisturnash(obtained through a similar process), was to give birth to a new opening for the beautiful, for the good, for the unexpected.

Leadership: Does the universe of your creation offer other people the opportunity to transform into an expressive and melancholic continuum that functions as an evocation of the special appreciation acquired by the uniqueness of a particular moment in the face of an openness to alterity?

A century lived in the memory of life gives all the beauty of life, revealing all the best in me. When the artist retires to a corner on the edge of the world, where he has only a straw bed and a table from the pine stumps, with his carelessness in the face of the passage of time, living without obedience to the events of daily life, he knows that this is the only way he can cancel the impression of luxury, which is actually a limitation of the effort to trans-substantialize the world into spiritual spaces. It's a chapter I could call: a return to origins. From here everything started...

I remember the time I knew what happiness was....

And when the rose senses the elevation of its construction in the genuine temple of the beautiful that crowns the artist's creation in the vicinity of the absolute, in the space of silence beyond the luminous sphere of Ain Soph, ever closer to the destiny-human ideality, only then can the veracity of Cella Serghi's words from the novel "On the spider thread of memory" be confirmed:

"I think the true experience of life begins when you feel alone, not only misunderstood, but really alone. Spend whole nights of loneliness, and then a day will come when you don't expect anything. That's why it's worth it. I am not talking about a lust for pain, but a kind of discovery of yours, alongside you, lucid...

Sometimes happiness is at the end of the world. I would like to feel again as I felt in some days when I saw all the bridges between me and the outside world crumbling, listening to the loneliness as you listened to the sea, when everything seemed detached from a story of eternity that you would like to change only through the lack of the narrator character. Tonight will be a memory too..."

The greatness of a creation consists in presenting a special moment in the landscape of a life that assumes immortality through an echo of emotions: "it is worth living in memory of times that pass quickly, but which do not lose their meaning even after the passing of the years in which they were shaped, with or without the brush."

Memory is a form of meeting the work of art with its creator, of the rose with the common mortal, seen through a thrill of mystery, of longing, of uncontrolled emotion: "If you touch me, you'll understand what happiness is. Look, a new day has begun..."

Mene, Mene, Tekel Upharsin

On March 05, 2017

Foresee what you will become if you accept your purpose as a maker of creation, in a context of achieving a sort of illusion with adjacent implications.

I like to reach the end given by the value of a mathematical puzzle from a game of subtlety refereed by fantasy, with a certain degree of awareness, built as an infinite reservoir from which I always and continuously fill myself up with characteristics specific to the artistic work, in an attempt to explain what no one has ever believed. I must only take the content of the picture from reality, with its kaleidoscope of consequences, without embroidering it, and reorganize it and present it while seeing it with the eyes of an illusionist who treasures the ephemeral character of the demonstration of magic.

It may seem absurd, a sort of freely conspicuous and delusive euphoria that distorts my perceptions of the world, of myself, unbearable and agonizing, in arguing a concept in which art, guessed by reason and reproduced by imagination, itself personified and amazed by the success of an illusion worthy of Houdini, is revealed in a marathon of adventure, in a well-controlled chiaroscuro, through areas of light and shadow.

It is as if I would develop a personal conception of a "Superior Force" or of a "God" as no one could understand: through the exercise of an a priori synthetic judgment, served with an uncompromising artistic honesty that makes up the matter and construction instruments of metaphysics. In turn, metaphysics is based on the superiority of the force with which the artist is based on the belief in an invisible God, which in some ways, is even his own doubling in another reality, in another space and another time.

The true masterpiece of creation is to be a magician who tells his illusions in a credible way, without explaining how they are achieved.

Any change of information into an image turns into the revelation of a creative phenomenon, where absolutely every action, every thought, every thing, begins to take on a resemblance to a literary jewel that stands out in the form of a poetic diary. Of course, each piece of jewelry has an image, just as each thought has its own image, being a link in an endless chain of causes and effects that the artist encounters when he delays and meditates on himself.

In this regard, akin to Victor Hugo, thinking only in images, I give free rein to my sharp spirit of observation even in the smallest of details, perceiving in each phenomenon of movement of things, taken in isolation, the meaning of a new deviation from the unanimously accepted normal. From any phenomenon of changing a habit, from each revelation of a relationship of relation between image and action, I rigorously extract the conclusions of an association of aspects of the human background that transpired within the interpretation of an enigma.

Thus, an extremely rich material is gathered that lends itself to the exercise of a judgment specific to a tangent to the mystery of a magic puzzle box, sprinkled with unique meanings that function as a relationship based on a quid pro quo that brings me the reputation of an illustrious illusionist.

Leadership: Is it necessary for your purpose as a maker of creation to be investigated and applauded by the relationship between what you expose and what you are actually hiding?

At the request of great illusionist Harry Houdini, writer Arthur Conan Doyle randomly chooses a few words that he randomly writes on a piece of paper: "Mene, mene, tekel upharsin", the same words written by an unseen hand before King Baltazar, related to a prophecy about the fall of the kingdom of Babylon. They can be translated as: "Counted, counted, weighed and divided." Then the paper is folded and placed in the pocket, without anyone knowing its contents.

After a few moments, Houdini pulls two plates from the drawer, and spreads them apart with feverishness. Stupor, spiritism, illusion ! On one of them are written the words: "Mene, mene, tekel upharsin."

Always when I speak about leadership, under the extension of the need to value the uniqueness of a composition of ideas and inspiration, I ask the following question: what will you become if you accept your purpose as a maker of creation in a context of achieving a sort of illusion with adjacent implications?

The creation you prioritize on the path of evolution, towards achieving the status of a developer of new forms and means of expression, generally depends on what you have in your head as a final image, projected over the phenomenon of the type "reaction-counter-reaction."

Everything you develop as a personal concept of a "Superior Force" defaults in a reaction of consciousness that urges you to reflect on your own identity. And everything that dominates that concept has as a counter-reaction a reflection on the effects that you generate through suggestion and autosuggestion.

The truth is that every great artist, same as any illusionist, is measured by the following coordinates: "You can hide your own tricks from the larger public, but no the fact that you like something that no one else could see."

In order for leadership to be a viable form of manifesting the predominance of a greater power, then what you exhibit as a work of art must be the privileged condition of a mind that it alone understands what happens in a tower of a puzzle game. In this case, leadership must be a factor of the relationship between attention, perception and the projection of a hidden reality.

Mene, mene, tekel upharsin is the result of expectations beyond the imaginable that people make up after a spectacular magic number.

Leaving aside any theory of fairness and unfairness, leadership is a phenomenon of modeling reality that exists only through the support of a demonstration of magic subjected to a particular concept called "Hide."

And the effect of this phenomenon is discovered through the parallel observation of a series of distinct facts and through the intuition of an egocentric perspective of approaching knowledge.

Mercy For The Thoughts Of A Restless Mind (II)

On May 20, 2013

Decisively and rationally enforce your will, without becoming a slave of your weaknesses.

Some sort of spiritual restlessness, the sign of multiple uncertainties, a soaring and inhibiting force lingered over her whole being, when Mister Hobbs had entered the picture. Any scientist would be puzzled by the measurements in intensity of her cerebral activity, because surely this would point out an abnormal activity and an unnatural tendency towards an aggressive behavior.

How could you not be fully intrigued when you know you were an accomplice to a bank heist, but haven't guessed the subtleties of the whole action?

Laura's scrambled thoughts hardly wait to rebel, randomly struggling in the subconscious. With her ruthless instinct she feels that Hobbs, her diligent accomplice, her trusting ally is planning something. But what ? A hidden desire, a secret plan goes directly through the tempting mazy ways of the ruthless present that she doesn't understand and can't figure out.

Instinctively, with the desperation of a lion, Laura fights the inferno she had slipped in because of her anger. The living inferno whose scenario had been ensured by director Hobbs himself, by installing an action framework according to rules only he could know, thus launching a heavy assault against her. The embarrassment of not knowing everything, of being conned, betrayed and lied to pins the poor woman down, like a disconcerted man that doesn't know what's going on around him.

And in this moment, Laura's accentuated disorientation, the chaos in her mind, allow her to rebel against Hobbs, who lied to her: "What have you done ? You said that you would steal just the diamonds that fit into a thermos, not empty the whole room ! "

Leadership: Do you level the reception path of hidden messages of your creation, beyond your vulnerability to the other's actions of exploring your inner world?

In the great unit of her being, unique in a Universe that couldn't be understood by anyone except the most lucid minds, here the most precious virtues, the highest ideals, the eternal belief in good, suddenly become violent. They devoid reality. Her placid need to find out the truth considerably grows once with enhancing the mystery. Her thoughts swarm around two questions that don't leave her alone: "How? Why?"

And through this hard-to-crack mystery, Laura's dependency to Hobbs grows, because her Ego needs different understandings, different, easier to accept, explanations, different possibilities to receive hidden messages beyond the opposition of the short time she needs in order to make a step forward to normalcy. Her most valuable creation is precisely the reason for the postponement of the decision that attests to her willingness to give up her quest for truth.

The integration of your spiritual dimension in a different direction, other than the one you're willing to reach, to that marked greatness of performers, becomes an almost impossible attempt. That is, if you allow others to treat you like an easy-to-fool factor in a shaping framework revised by that conscience that isn't concerned only with good or evil, but it stands outside these two qualities, through objectivity.

Leadership: Do you weigh with great thought the arguments that make the conclusion of denying a certain attachment to hidden actions and thoughts, without remaining in that suffering without the possibility of traversing into something else?

The others' influence has as its reference point your examination in stressful and uncertain conditions. And the constant measurement of the deviation level from the normal limits you are exposed to, can be an experimental activity similar to a "post-test", whose purpose is obtaining some professional advantages.

Somebody said at a certain point: "Being accepted by those around you is not a reflection of yourself, but of the way in which others project over you." The relative error of an individual measure is the ratio between the absolute error of that measurement and the value of the measured size.

This size measured by others is represented through your Ego, subject to the causalities that fuel blocks and limitations, acting by comparing the life situations you are indirectly or directly exposed to. A deviation command of your Ego, anonymously sent by a foreign conviction power, is enough to envelop you in a thick smoke cloud, in a feeling of loneliness, giving life a "null" meaning.

At an identity level, leadership unwraps itself through an extremely precious self-knowledge, which grants you proactive answers to the persuasive challenges based on your exclusion from your subjectivity, by using up and destabilizing the standard of "living".

Leadership: Can you live as if nothing has happened, under the impression of a real life happening that does not necessarily want to justify your gestures of disobedience in the name of consciousness?

The option through which you indirectly give your consent to receive hidden messages, meant to intimidate and confuse you by reducing the usage of all your potential, is, in fact, a component of one of the ways to lose mental and emotional control. Because the ability to be aware and to assume psychological stages and defining necessities is somewhat limited. And it is gradually reduced as you deny your own inherent elements, as you try to please those around you.

Leveling the reception path of hidden messages received from autonomous, independent personalities, or of messages coming from the mistaken understanding of some situations, obstacles, events or activities, means to grant the title of leading a "Down" property, which highlights your inability to create a difference in status and potential.

This means that you aren't able enough to create a legit power structure, which ensures the relevant evidence of your subjective being. And your subjectivism is directly proportional with the character affinities that can recommend you as a superior man, if you don't expose yourself to eventual professional or personal failures.

Leadership focused on the defining side of human dignity and spirituality cures the defense ability against aggressive external factors, against "Drag You Down" influences. This ability comes from activating the deep layers of the conscience, where they keep all the truth versions that help you know yourself and understand all the struggles, pains and weaknesses. It's important to stand above them, especially focusing on what you can accomplish without depending on others.

A true leader accepts to judge a certain moment in a man's life, sealing him from his past, looking from an outward perspective to previous years, but without expanding his influence on what is happening within him.

Mercy For The Thoughts Of A Restless Mind points out man's inner weakness, that when discovered by those around, becomes a chance to take advantage and claim more and more rights over him. If you don't want to fall in the trap of a false loyalty dilemma, decisively and rationally enforce your will, without becoming a slave of your weaknesses.

Mercy For The Thoughts Of A Restless Mind (I)

On May 19, 2013

Try the definite character of these spiritual moods, through which you become aware of yourself, by applying an auto-update that would enhance the immunity rate against what happens to you.

Incandescent fear, restlessness and eagerness unite and materialize in this woman, suddenly transforming into an unlimited curiosity for knowing as many details in the timely fatality that shakes her entire world, destabilizing all its elements of functional structuring.

Laura Quinn is no longer in control of her heart and mind, but just a persona non grata, an insignificant part in a circle of reaction and discontent, where she continuously and uninterruptedly spins, a circle materialized through a process of decline, by experimenting the deepest moods.

This kind of person that relates to the narrow field of the acceptable, trying to level the margins of an impossibly harsh reality, can only lay at the basis of their own singularity pyramid. Only in rare cases it manifests as a firm entity, as an emission of forces that help development, which spreads fast in all its functional system in order to balance the dysfunction between thought and interpretation, between the two existential branches: "to be" or "not to be".

If we'd find a word, just one, which we would address to her in this embarrassing episode of life, a simple, cordial word, a true savior, then it would probably be: "freedom". Yes, Laura would have been freed from herself, enveloped in the innocent atmosphere of a freedom that doesn't deny under any circumstances evolution, that doesn't deny the existence of a grain of truth in this fully uncertain stage.

A flower reaches the garden of the Inferno, scattering somewhat its petals with normality. It gives away its pollen – all its emotion and sensibility, only to accommodate to the air of mystery surrounding it. But, this way, it's very hard for it to be at peace with itself.

Leadership: Do you include into the great unity of your being the most precious virtues to add value to your potential to regulate the emotions that dominate your life?

Does an inhibiting and soaring relief persist over your whole being? Is your personality exposed to an unnatural tendency towards aggressive behavior? Do the most pretentious virtues, the highest ideals, pale in front of what you have become? Are your thoughts swirling around two questions that won't let you rest: "How? Why?" Can you always be in control of your heart and mind?

When the man's need to find truth considerably rises, when he wants to find that credible source in order to maintain his own Ego, in that moment, uncertainty starts roaming around him. And similar to a lucid evaluation of the conscience, this uncertainty enhances or frees his for or against thoughts about his potential, setting the priorities in constructing his identity.

Always, intensely living this moment of "leap to the truth", when he has to choose between denying and ignoring the implicit presence of his wholeness, man reflects all his power, all his authority upon those around him, so that, indirectly, he sets his own value, by means of how he relates to what he thinks about something unknown.

The most precious virtues of man are: the power to accept reality, the moral strength and the refusal to surrender to the inability to reinvent one's self.

Leadership: Can you remain the reference center of the need to question the "acceptable", according to which it reveals the meaning of becoming your whole being between landmarks of questions and answers?

By means of how man creates a high knowledge about himself, positioned in that plurality of thoughts, emotions, entrapping questions and unclear answers, erupting in angered shouts, his shaping by means of sincerity and self-observation seems necessary.

Basically, the unknown, fear, uncertainty – coming from his life experiences, teach him to have a better knowledge about himself, to comprehend and describe himself by indentifying those elements that trigger motivation, by identifying those factors that maintain his evolution. Landmarks of questions and answers are devoted to the determinism that determines the necessity of human action and demolishes the absurd story of free will, without excluding at any rate neither the reason, nor the conscience of man nor the appreciation of his actions.

In order to "see" the road a leader follows, read his thoughts, if you can ! This is the only way you can measure your true value. And the hardest. Especially if he fights his thoughts.

If in the great unity of your being – the most precious virtues, the highest ideals, the belief in good, pale in front of what you have become, then all leadership will be devoid. Because the leader's Ego always needs different understandings, different explanations that are easier to accept, different possibilities to receive hidden messages beyond the opposition of the short time it needs to adapt.

Leadership: How long can you master the unseen being in yourself without compromising your image that is reflected in unexpected situations?

Self-control is one of the fundamental parts of success – that together with truth, freedom and good must have a balanced contribution in the existence of a man with high ideals. It can be improved by substantially customizing the space which separates thoughts, stimuli and reactions of the man subject to change. Thus, by reenacting a victory over space and time where thoughts interconnect, they spin around discontent, frustrations, tensions and disappointments.

The cost of personal development is a controversy over the necessity to keep his identity intact, to lift the guard up or not in front of the necessity to be flexible in his ways of acting and thinking. A long wandering in remaking the element of "to be". Many times, these can lead to solving, with sincerity and audacity, the conflict with self.

Something has to erupt within you, for you to assume the power to control the unseen being in you, for you to push your limits. You have to push away the fear, restlessness and eagerness in yourself. And only by entering the area of the unpredictable and unknown, balancing the dysfunction between thinking and interpreting, between the two existential ways: "to be" and "not to be" you will be able, better than nobody else, to moderate your tendencies to "qualitatively decorate your interior".

The value that confirms the appreciation or depreciation of leadership is given by that life experience that matures and reminds you to live not as though you would always look in the rearview mirror, but as if it were all a miracle.

Mercy For The Thoughts Of A Restless Mind highlights the permanent character of those moods when man becomes aware of himself – the way he becomes whole through an auto-update – amidst those situations when fear, restlessness, uncertainty subject him to an infinite pressure.

The deepest and most complex effects leadership produces on man are the result of the transformation. When he is overcome by that infinite curiosity to know as many details about himself, with the audacity that defines his whole experience. That is why, self-knowledge, the education of your own thinking, makes up for the essential part of leadership.

If you don't want to turn into a slave of your weaknesses, to wander in a labyrinth of feelings, such as uncertainty, fear and restlessness, then decisively and rationally enforce your will to keep your expectations up and don't abandon the idea of integrity. Thus, in the immense construction of leadership, in its grand architecture, there will be no fixture, no erosion, and no degradation.

Micro-leadership

Take care of what you are in relation to what is asked in exchange for your development.

I needed an overview, a comprehensive approach to an unconventional way of promoting my reflections vis-à-vis the subtle brand of humanity, between the estimated value of self-experience and the absorption of guiding parts from the whole of others' existence. With the purpose of anticipating, eventually, certain relationships and promising links between the test of courage of finding myself at a different level of thinking and the aftermath of my participation to the moment of creating a leap above the entire world.

For the first time, it awakened within me, in the attempt of crossing the desert of unpredictable feelings, that truly clarifying assumption that not the worthiness or unworthiness of man is the cause of the path unmaterialized in a useful guide for orienting him in the desired direction. That it was not his superiority or inferiority that removed the link of drawbacks he has.

Rather, same as German physicist Franz Anton Mesmer gave up the magnet, hypnosis, the art of artificial sleep-walking to base his therapy only on conscious suggestion, I have concluded that the entire cause of man's shortcomings is giving up that part of the territory he dominates best: the skill to bring to attention an idea and a key character, letting himself be driven by the thought "I will be able to go on without them."

Without a single doubt of what I believed were truths or error, supported throughout this prime territory, and possessing on the other hand the clear notion of the force derived from principles, even when I wasn't able to respond as a visionary to all the questions that were being asked about the future, I have let myself led by that secret attraction for the psychology of the whole subjected to the particular. It tended to turn my experiences and attitude into "an absolute whole" or "nothing".

Leadership: Can you make a bigger role by paving the way for your future development between the vector "remember the reason of why you are trying to be better" and the power you try to represent?

People aspiring to the status of an expert in a field are devoted to the valuable activities directed towards those parts of the whole of a possible knowledge, between the bonding of the rigor of your support and promotion, of the extremes of a toilsome journey and the results of your ulterior choices.

But all of these do not represent only the version of a training for a battle with your own limits. Rather, they are a long preparation for the formation of a solid attitude they can call upon when they feel the impulse of overcoming the particular conditions that do not lead to the fulfillment of their potential.

Basically, the leader assumes the identity and interpretation of a character whose destiny is decisively influenced by the actions of his reason to change through successive transformations the very course of life, without injuring his Ego with an attitude of the type: "I am more than I have become".

The power of a leader rests with the ability to bring to mind a key idea and character, without making them a star to guide him throughout life.

Egypt, XIV century BC. What did Ptah, the great royal trepan, said to the future practitioners of medicine who first had to obtain the title of a priest?

*"Children, listen carefully to what I am about to tell you and try not to forget, immediately after, that I have spoken to you about these things. When you will enter the temple, in the hands of the priests, be distrustful as jackals and cunning as serpents, so they do not make you lose yourselves and blind you. But outwardly, be gentle as doves, because only after a man reaches his intended purpose can he reveal his own nature. So, it was and so it will be. Remember these teachings." **

Between the estimated value of self-experience and the absorption of guiding parts from the whole of an external supporting force is always the consideration to "listen carefully". This consideration aims to anticipate, eventually, certain relationships and promising links between the test of courage of placing yourself on a different level of thinking and the aftermath of your participation to the moment of creating a leap above the entire world.

The role of a leader, around the power he represents, is to overcome the limits of representativeness in the context of sharing the experience of being at a level of thinking that does not distort the self-image.

The performance sustained in contexts of positive intervention, before phenomena of superposition that you measure by taking into account the nature of your own being, and especially your abilities of using others' recommendations, suggests the path of your future development between the vector "remember the reason of why you are trying to be better" and the power you try to represent.

"Remember the reason of why you are trying to be better" is the support others give you with the experience of leadership in the opportune moment, and on which is based your entire future manifestation.

This slogan is directed towards that part of you that is just as vulnerable as it is strong, to which is conferred autonomy in relation to what you know, to what you can achieve by assimilating knowledge. And, at the same time, it brings to attention the reality you practice and the way in which you relate to events around you.

And the power you try to represent, in an attempt to detach yourself from what holds you in place throughout the study and practice of leadership, in an attempt to cross the desert of unpredictable feelings, is based on the psychology of the whole subjected to the particular, which tends to turn your experiences and attitude into a "absolute whole" or "nothing."

The whole is what you see in yourself in circumstance that depend on others. The particular is what happens to you after you have traversed the whole.

An "absolute whole" attitude and experience refers to that exploratory way of a life experience that has become a mirror of the self and a continuous self-modeling tool that you must optimize in terms of what you are capable of learning from yourself in a subjective reality.

The whole Micro-Leadership is manageable through pieces connected in series on grounds of a personal nature, through the circumstances and facts that lead to the formulation of certain reservations on commitments that must be honored during evolution. Through the continuous undertaking of the risk of getting lost through the multitude of effects and transformations that you represent. And, above all else, through the adaptation to the new conditions of your responsibilities through an increase of the absorption of opinions, warnings, advice, and leadership experiences from others.

Mirror Images

On May 14, 2016

Establish the future condition of your being, activating the mental "programming" beyond momentary experience.

I tried to look at myself in a zoom-mirror, selectively reflecting only the wavelength of the thought I needed most, a vibration of space-time itself, through a powerful emergence, through an exam of refraction and visual acuity of near and far, without any correction of the impulse of recognizing reality.

With great interest, I would examine myself from all possible angles, along direct reflections, as a consequence of the peculiarities of the conflict between the knowns and unknowns of the equation I was made out of and whose resolution could be explained with the conduction of my own exteriority, facilitating a more complete understanding of a certain message.

The series of shots of mirror images began in the time in which I assumed I was playing the role of a physicist, the role of Griffin, forced to go beyond momentary experience. I added some realities through which I perceived the world, creating multiple mental images resulting from a reflection in the density of matter I was made out of.

If Wells' famous hero, that scientist of only twenty years discovered a general principle of the structure of pigments and refractions – a formula, a four-dimensional geometric expression, why wouldn't I be able to make such a discovery?

Besides, what is a general equation for one who studies molecular physics? What does it mean to reduce the refractive index of a solid to that of air, without modifying any property of matter? What useful information for an application of translucency carries a constant body mass, defined on the unit circle of a refractive surface?

Leadership: Can you calculate your own uniqueness, extracting the value of an unknown from one of the equations of your reflection in a mirror?

The way in which I surprised myself, lost in a movement of thinking under the effect of reflection, on what the body could transmit, was the continuation of a way of knowing and communicating with myself, questioning the theories other scientists postulated. I was experiencing a sensation of the surreal, of floating in a virtual reality. I kept repeating: Could I not become invisible I wonder?

Any form of consciousness, even artificial, is a resultant of the various findings concerning the transformation of perception of the reflection of the self, in an equation given by combinations that can lead to simpler or more complex equations than the initial ones.

All of the together formed a variant of the natural experiment, from the viewpoint of the ephemeral nature of the moment relative to an awareness of my purpose on the verge of a major revelation, only to discover some omitted detail, some impossibility from a physical standpoint, some unity of transforming matter. But everything seemed to be of a normality that prevented the development of any conclusions, of any science.

Uniqueness is what you discover by examining your thinking and trying to control it from all the possible angles of a scholar who tries to revolutionize ideas that are thousands of years old, while fighting the preconceptions in the scientific world.

To calculate my own uniqueness, I had to determine one of the unknowns, extracting its value from one of the equations of my reflection in the mirror. This type of experience satisfied my need for knowledge that I had captured through a percorso di analisi di una imagine prelevata dall'osservazione della realta, in search for an answer.

The main unknown from the equations of my reflection in the mirror was the very condition of availability of my own identity. I always saw myself as being the same, I found that I had not changed, but I didn't manage to experience that powerful emotion in the face of a masterpiece that could dominate my mind, one which could express a trace of genius. All I know is that when I saw myself I was aware that I was not under the control of a superior nature.

I felt like a painter trying to analyze his perceptions of the shadow part of the painting by measuring the relationship between the natural and the fantastical, between human-nature and divinity, seeking to promote various notions in a surreal work, based on the theme of the relationship between virtual worlds, technology, and the future condition of the human being. But which cannot feel beyond the space of the painting.

The renewal of thinking is subjected to the process of evaluating a new idea of the world and reality that causes the visible manifestations of a self-image enriched with archetypal valences.

As the dictionary tells us, the archetype is that deep structure of the psyche, which generates those symbolic images that condense an extended informational content and governs the organization of the human experience.

You can always evolve into an orientation towards that perspectival concept where the phenomenon of the type "scrutinizing yourself in a mirror" is presented in its entirety as a sort of duality. A duality between your nature and the need of projecting your image within the limits of an angle that indicates the direction of a higher knowledge, transcendent.

Leadership is the experience of the moment when you discover the importance of a new approach to reality seen from the perspective of a scientist who looks at his image in the mirror and recognizes in it another version of the answer to the question: "Who is God in the world created by me?"

To look at yourself in the mirror, to search your entire being, is not an ordinary training process, but rather it is a testament of your permanent, feverish, even for a lifetime concern of clarifying the uncertainties of your own being, to understand your essential traits, your value and the role of that reality beyond momentary experience. And beyond the experience through which you perceive the world.

Misty Destiny Of Abandoned Souls

On July 12, 2011

Open the gate that gives you permanent access to the respect and esteem of people, without betraying your guiding principles of leadership.

- Hank, we'll be millionaires ! said in one voice the workers that were near the oil probe. Come on, Hank you must give us the right to make our own decisions.

Knowing the situation in which there were, hours worth as days, and that he cannot tarry decisions by long and endless discussions, Hank Anderson, drilling foreman, team responsible, answered them on a definite tone:

- Take your things and get ready for starting in half an hour. That volcano may erupt at any time. It's too dangerous to remain here, with or without oil.

Throwing him looks full of the deepest contempt, the workers asked for the right to decide for themselves, citing serious reasons to stay there and continue to work.

Leadership: Do you arm yourself with the obligation to respect a condition that defines you as a mediator of destinies, which you must firmly impose when your loyalty to your principles is tested?

Have you seen the movie "When Time Ran Out (1980)"? You remember what Hank has done in this situation? He accepted. Exactly. He agreed and gave them the right to decide on the continuation of their work, irrespective of his views. He allowed to himself to violate his principles by which a leader guide all his decisions and actions, and allowed to abdicate from the solid model of leadership that he has adopted so far. Instead taking advantage of the authority he had and to take action to restrain any hint of resistance from members of his team, Hank has supported indirectly their intention by accepting them to carry out further their activity.

What was the result of Hank's decision? All workers have died after volcano eruption. It is about your attitude towards life, which defines you as a man and not the bad or good things that happen to you. This is the horoscope of the destiny you are going through in a top of events: it calculates the number of victims you represent depending on the side of your conditioning that pulls you down.

I would say, with disappointment, that Hank was indirectly responsible for their death. For almost forgetting them, disregarding in this way his leading role. When you have a responsibility, and you do not assume it, when depends on you the fate of some people, and you do not make the best decisions in their favor, then surely you are the only responsible for what happens. Their whole range of beliefs and desires do not justify your deviation from the obligations that accrue to you by the nature of your function. Betraying your own principles for human desires has no excuse.

The conditioning imposed upon you by the profound note of events, to prove that you are right in what you claim, can be viewed from the point of view of the memory you call upon when you can no longer accept reconciliation with yourself. You feel overwhelmed by what has happened to you, you are limited in expanding your pure consciousness and in the actions you can take. Therefore, the fundamental capacity that plays a vital role in social, emotional and cognitive functioning is a consequence of conditionality the determinism with which you are endowed.

Leadership: Are you willing to pay the amounts secured by the seal of fate if the event you announced was due to a "return to first person" variable that you are not prepared to declare null?

Do you turn in your weapons that make you a true leader? You let people to do what they want? You let them decide for you? When do you have to accept their conditions? And when must they accept your terms?

Leadership is not feasible from cheap "materials", is not made with technologies able to determine the cost reduction of the prodotto finito, given by building up an attitude of acceptance and providing equal opportunities in life. The aspiration to generate a strong impact is incompatible with the idea of you closing in an ivory tower, where you think you are the only one able to face a whole new reality, where no one can be trusted, and people's fate depends only on their ability to refocus.

Once you give up to the will of your team members, once you put your feelings before reason, once you accept without reservation their requirements and requests - from that moment you cannot be considered a leader. You lost your power of influence. For, indirectly you recognize your inability to impose yourself in front of them, indirectly you disarm your weapons and capitulate.

You can be sure that people will be inclined here before to break all your decisions, will not ever comply and will not follow instructions from you, they will never give you the same obedience because you have allowed them to find your weak spot.

A gate can be opened in front of you, but also can close behind you. If you accept the capitulation, the gate that offered you permanent access to people's esteem and respect will close, and you could not ever open it. Do everything possible to rein people's toughness by enrooting in their minds and hearts your undoubted intentions to act in their favor.

It can be said that leadership contains a "return to first person" variable that you are not prepared to declare null, especially when the consequences of events are irreparable and you are the only one able to decide how you want your life and that of others to be.

Returning to first person means to assume that you are not a superhero who can do anything, anytime, to any extent, in any way, even if there is something in you that motivates you to make a big step that exists to complete a complex project written in letters of fire: "destiny".

The Misty Destiny Of Abandoned Soul indicates the signal announcing the end of your career, when people had lost and suffered because of you. It designates the hardest moment of your life - when your true defects emerge, when your leadership qualities are challenged, when you have deviated from the base path of leadership and fell to the lowest level of confidence, when you are guilty of the lack of assuming responsibilities.

Just as a well-chosen suit shows off different qualities of the wearer - so a very good decision capacity, combined with a responsible attitude, highlight a strong character. As a leader, your character will always be tested, and depending on how you "manage" the power of decision, you will bear the consequences.

Momentary Leadership

On April 08, 2017

Stray away from what affects you, without detaching yourself from what you expect to happen.

I was thinking bitterly of the days passing in the silence of a partial, scientific and artistic gaze, encompassing only the strange phenomena of nature, the last machines of death created under the aggressive agent's infectious regime, as an anomaly of genes resistant to any antibiotic. By translating this aggressive agent into a more plastic expression, from the perimeter of authentic writing, I could lean on that apocalyptic scenario that begins with "I got sick of death, but death wants to keep me alive as an exponent of animalism."

These zombies that are surrounded, that death itself seems to fear, cannot be transformed into a symbol of martyrs dedicated to medicine, no way whatsoever, they are a failure of the lack of observation capacity of medical researchers. Completely hopeful, as a last escape from the infernal weave from the insides of a death sentence, I tried to delimit myself from everything that was not presented to me by intuition as a clear and distinct knowledge, in order to create a creative reality that provokes you to ask yourself: So is everything destined to happen?

Enlightened by the selection of a potential, particular, and random significance of this condemnation, raised to the rank of a pearl of consciousness that necessarily wanted itself customized with the addition of a forceful assumption over the existential condition, I set my own principles as a single picture made by a great artist – I could only pronounce my verdict for a specific epistemic obligation. The moment I saw everything in perspective I chose to move on my way. I'm Gerry Lane, and the pencil that now comes to life in my hand belongs to the researcher who is trying to observe something that all other doctors miss: the cure.

I seemed to be framed in a trailer called "live for today for tomorrow never comes", in which the art of survival, guessed by reason and imagination, started gaining the shape of psychological thriller. It was as if it were a painting of an extravagant, disturbing and stupefying fantasy, such as Salvador Dali's "Visage of War", where the constituent elements – a gigantic view of the sand – mingled into an irrational combination of real and unreal.

Leadership: Can you delimit yourself from everything that is not presented to you by intuition as a clear and distinct knowledge for the creative reproduction of a reality based on appearances?

An appearance-based reality is the result of an image that constantly fascinates you with the dose of fantasy it contains, but which also makes you lose the power to abstract, the power to understand by reflection, and does not give you the opportunity to formulate opinions based on sound arguments, according to your responsibilities. How have all my theories and intellectual schemes implemented with accumulated results helped me cancel out a reality that is so contrary to any means of defense and to perceive a positive trend of limitless positive thinking?

Surely. I would get used to the sum of ultimate truths of a singular experience, typical of a "self-made man" emerged in the midst of a merciless savagery. I asked of God, this master of unforeseen twists, the indulgence of separating myself from those holy by inducing new biological effects as well as reducing those adverse in the exaggerated solicitude of an introverted manifestation doomed to a research activity.

Like a wandering hidalgo, I endured the weight of exploring a wilderness from which there was no escape, from which the unmistakable forms of an evil called the end of the world, of a grotesque chaos generating chaos, humiliating and dirty, suffocating and overwhelming with the force to ruin the need for order specific to the spirit of life.

The first principle of prudence that meets leadership reads as follows: "Stray away from what affects you, without detaching yourself from what you expect to happen."

The sense of superior power, from the comprehensive understanding of the causal idea to the lucid and unforgiving analysis of the state of transformation of existence in its totality, seemed to spring from the depths of a living, beyond the horizon my eyes and mind perceived.

I began to see my existence, value, reactions, through the desire to advance into an action game, divided into pain and pleasure, fair and false, inside and outside. Of course, I take into consideration the variant that I only left myself in the company of the unpredictable to test and discover myself.

In leadership, what you expect to happen in a different light than the one you are used to resembles the attempt to make the unbelievable believable: you must be prepared to expect a miracle from a different experience than the one you are already used to.

Momentary Leadership is a reflexive vision whose first feature is an enormous strictness and an creative approach to the mission you confer upon yourself in a brief retrospective of the unusual situations you went through..

This mission will attract the information units you work with: images, shapes, symbols, sorting abilities, of bringing together parts of a whole, of appropriation, of establishing similarities and differences based on comparisons between what happens to you and what is highlighted by those two forms of existence: life and death.

At the same time, this mission comes as a confirmation of a single wish: to test your self-confidence level and to discover yourself as a painting that needs some shading from bright to dark in order for its image to be understood.

Montage (filmmaking)

On November 15, 2015

Find new theories within the practice of creation, following the natural way of thinking conditioned by emotional experience.

Eisenstein tried to transpose parallel montage from the sphere of action into that of meaning, juxtaposing over the frames that portrayed the Mensheviks giving dramatic and tear-jerking speeches a few imagines of hands strumming on harps and balalaikas. But the parallelism was purely literary, and for that reason, basically, un-cinema like, unrealized.

We stop the stringing of examples here… They took Eisenstein to the next step through which he sought the meaning of cinema. This was the "intellectual film" for which he campaigned for several years and on which the idea was based that: "Cinema is, above all else and essentially, montage." Because the very theory of intellectual film itself – whose task was to restore emotional plentitude during an intellectual process – was but a reduction ad paradox of this concept of montage.

And so, once again, the theory was born from the practice of creation. It was always Eisenstein's natural way of thinking: from the emotional experience fund – through intellectual experience – to film – and from this, to theory. Even if his detractors only affirmed the existence of an inverse process in his creation and this too with the purpose of demonstrating its caducity. *

Leadership: Can you make the transition to the emotional experience fund by using intellectual experience, a procedure specific to a creation that claims the term of perfection by practicing the parallelism?

The main aspect that characterizes montage is a creation that claims the term of perfection by practicing parallelism, from the sphere of action to meaning, when reality is revealed in the form of a mysterious experience that gives you the feeling that you have accumulated a lot of experiences during a lifetime. The director is an intrinsic consequence of faith in a compelling reality of the whole man, a reality that no one else foresees, and can be appropriated only by what he experiences at a certain point in life.

No matter how much an idea develops, being a key of the work achieved largely with the contribution of experience accumulated from the "seeking of essence", the scientific process of treating a particular subject – from intellectual activity to the emotional fund – it is manifested in the direction of using a certain style of giving yourself to development and demonstrating your authenticity.

Leadership, in the way you're looking to discover the essence of new knowledge, which cannot be "programmatic", may result in this direction of researching the depths from which art draws its sap, assumed as an objective associated to the experience of creation, which first of all comprises of the emotional experience fund gained in one spectacular event of life.

The story of a director's destiny follows the path of a thinking centered on certainty that translates the relationship between ordinary existence and aesthetic experience sufficiently active in an exceptional visual representation.

Basically, a king of attachment takes places between what you try to express and the meaning you attribute to reality, juxtaposing over it images and representations of the world, as contrasting as possible, from the present or from the past, Remember what Ana Blandiana said: "I have noticed that, as time is laid out, memories are not erased, but rather accentuate their contrasts, they lose the multitude of shades and tones of gray to retain only a strong drawing in whites and exclusive blacks."

The emotional residing from what you are when you put new experiments "on stage", in the middle of information additions triggering of "Wait" type states, in the middle of which is the man in which you are reflected, gradually becomes a sort of compromise between the ability to express yourself and the ability of the intellectual of changing certain perceptions vis-à-vis a certain event, phenomenon, profile or subject of study.

To put these experiments of reflecting one's self in someone else or something else on stage is not only a product of thinking. Montage can be, as such, fueled by the "empathy" type of attitude – a form of guessing reality through affective identification.

Leadership is the coordinate of the momentum of discovering a new reality transposed into a masterpiece of creation that captures a certain emotion and conveys a sense of power and dynamism capable of enchanting, of producing addiction.

Montage highlights the interest given to the reconfiguration of the inner world, by reflecting an exterior image.

An exceptional leader takes on the role of an artist in using role play. He practices his authenticity by imagining his own version of the reality of facts, and playing them out in a content that reflects his style of thinking and feeling. Role-playing is a journey towards a different "forward" of your own person.

And what is a journey, said Ana Blandiana, if not an attempt to see how, otherwise, our soul remains the same? What is a journey if not an experience able to verify, through questions and comparisons, our power to reaction, to answer? Because, no matter how modest we would be, we cannot fail to see that what is truly important is not what we've seen, moving, but what we felt during that movement.

More Inclination Towards Arguments Of The Mind

On June 04, 2013

Guide man's thoughts towards something above your expectations, diverging from that slight contradiction which amplifies his incoherence of thoughts and actions.

Her name is Laura Quinn. I know she hates me, because she needs me and I hate her because she's so arrogant when she's supposed to be full of benevolence. She must have felt something extremely strong, since she's unleashing her own fears. But at the same time I think she sniffed on a lively stimulus which quenches the bitterness she gathered for far too long, which quenches the thirst to satisfy her vanity.

An intense remorse seems to give her the strength to engage in a self-overcoming. A sparkle of rebellion. A strong pressure coming from outside her material comfort area, subordinated to a professional ethic. And in this maximum tension moment, when everything inside her depends on the result of the terrible explosion of reason and feeling, in this moment when the attempt to recover herself after so many failures becomes a highly viable option, an inversion in perspective occurs.

An atrocious craving to reach above herself, to overcome the limits she was constrained to live in seems to take over her. The realization of her will to function according to a norm conditioned by conscience and imprinted by the innate factor of inclinations towards pride, part of the factor of the educational influences from the school of life, corresponds to the ambitions of widening the perspectives of making a career, which buries it in a state of depression, abandonment, helplessness, because there is nothing good to cling to.

Leadership: Is the reality that you find yourself in a sum of your perceptions and attitudes about what you have to do through various extensions that you can add to the quality of life?

In the famous book "Good To Great", American writer Jim Collins outlined the "Hedgehog concept":

"No, hedgehogs are not stupid. They have a penetrating perspicacity that allows them to see through complexity and discern the hidden patterns behind it. The hedgehogs see what is essential and ignore the rest...

Those who ran reference companies tended to be foxes, without ever obtaining the advantage of clarity given by the hedgehog concept, rather being scattered, diffused and inconsistent."

Laura Quinn is a smart and beautiful fox, but she cannot stand to show her cunning, being too disappointed with her path in life. The only extension she can add to her life to recover from the torment of the captivity resulting from her career is an exit from routine, the challenge of joining a risky initiative, the boldness of defying the world and fate.

She has but one task to accomplish for the big shareholders of the bank: a constructive plan to radically renew her attitude to suffering, to the meaning given to life.

The strongest and most violent feeling that can overwhelm man, often darkening his right judgment, is born from his slip into a state of dreaming that prevents him from experiencing his present.

A reaction takes place within her. There the activity of the reactant molecules occurs by absorbing light. Her ensemble drapes a difference nuance; the flame of awakening is lit. The voice becomes more alert. An uncertainty uncovers her intention. Because she's clinging to more and more to this magic word, hungry for answers: "How?" which ensures a strange comfort, wrapping it in an incomprehensible silence.

But, oh, how didn't that crazy thought cross my mind, how did I neglect this rising part of the deck that keeps together the apparently dispersed elements between us? The thought that we must share the faith to succeed, pulsates fiercely inside of me. And while I tremble of emotions because of this thought, she trembles of doubt. What's hidden inside of me mirrors itself more and more in herself. I, Mr. Hobbs, have no remorse, and neither should Laura, because remorse is a precondition for letting us be enslaved by some "them" fancied up with the title of elites.

Leadership: Do you improve your experience of inferring when someone gives you more attention than a passerby who does not know what to look for in their path through life?

With Laura's help I managed to enter to room of diamonds. We managed together. But now she's fear has taken over her. I feel remorse coming from her, a guarded feeling, a hesitation of conscience. I have to maintain the breath of this living being, to immediately fill in that something that I feel is missing, to change her way of being. She still does not understand my true intentions; it is important that her psychological and emotional side has not deteriorated as a result of the impact of exiting the life format she was used to.

I am turned on by her selfishness, cowardice and fear to continue the course we had imagined together. Her nature is controlled by the thirst to dominate this game of contraries, to sometimes defeat me by a defying behavior, other times by an exaggerated selfishness. I worthily hold out to her reproaches. She feels, of course, that my irrefutable and independent wish to complete the plan doesn't start out of greed for money. There's something else in the middle, way above diamonds.

I look at myself, I carefully listen to my heart, and something torments me terribly. I feel I have become the opposite of what father Gabriel Damours once told King Henry the 4th: "You manage to entrap people." Now I was the one entrapped in my own net – the net of my inability to control my accomplice's feelings, that I must admit, were influencing me.

The product of the mind that you make known by accepting to take part in certain events is manifested by your attachment to the effect of life that you embrace as long as you care about its length.

A passerby who does not know how to look at the path of life is a man who cannot name self-discontent against the consistency with which he or she must be able to carry out a grand project. From a spiritual point of view, the form of this individuality is distinguished by the relatively constant way of actively responding to the challenges of the outer world, so by being determined as a difference between "what you want to be and what you really are".

The product of her mind must be the ability to demonstrate her will, her motivation to overcome her fears and suffering, her ability to adapt to various dead-end situations when she has no immediate solution. Mr. Hobbs remains quite reserved for a parallel path to one of Laura's fundamental sides: the defense instinct.

It's extremely difficult to separate the cerebral signal that orders her self-entrapment, away from the basic sounds of the heart which condition openness to new ways to being aware and moving through the world - seeing herself through a different lens. Even a super-expert in persuasion would need to put an enormous work in order to divert that trace of contradiction which makes everything incoherent in her. And it would hardly succeed to direct her actions towards something above her requirements: thinking and the tint of loyalty left to the old lifestyle.

Anyway, I am sure that the man who could recognize her qualities, the only one in the world who could understand her, was me. This woman, even if you grinded her like a shard of glass, you would still admire her for the simple fact that she emanates a certain glow. But such a person whose features harden after the first blast, if you don't manage to change them, they change you.

Leadership is what you want to change in yourself knowing that what others see in you is a direct reflection of your personality in the consciousness of a whole world.

More Inclination Towards Arguments of the Mind looks into the necessity of a new approach of man in accordance with a norm generally accepted by everyone around him. In turn, this approach requires involvement and participation, not blind submissal in the face of the requirements for change – which can temporary disrupt his comfort area.

Just as a system, in order to become cybernetic, must organize its elements in a command sub-system and in a performance system, just the same the transformation of man, which is absolutely necessary to approaching leadership at the top levels, must occur peacefully within himself. And it could occur only by eliminating the confusions that can interfere as demotivating factors in his operating system, becoming that tint of contradiction which amplifies his incoherence in thinking and action.

Know the man and refrain his impulses that initiate unwanted processes that can turn out to be destructive sometimes.

Movement first attracts attention, only then do you think about what is moving

On December 20, 2012

Discovering beauty in simple forms can transform your perspectives on the world, along the lines of a lifelong passion in a never-ending odyssey of creation.

Eisenstein had never learned to draw. He had started drawing following an impression from his childhood: while waiting for the game to start, the engineer Afrosimov would draw animal outlines with a chalk on the dark blue board of the game table. Eisenstein had remained fascinated by the white arabesque of the line that was born under his eyes and that in its movement made dogs, deer, cats appear. The line moved along the invisible outline of an object which, through a miracle, thus gave existence to the table setting. The dynamism of the line was a sensation that fascinated him for years.

Engineer Afrosimov had instilled in him the pleasure of drawing. Later, at the Polytechnic, the arid subject of analytical geometry acquired a special charm for the young student because it translated precisely the movement of lines into mysterious algebraic formulas. The dynamism of "becoming", as opposed to the static, will fascinate him all his life, whether it is the movement of the line or that of the phenomena. It was a fascination for the genesis of things that has its origin here as well, in this early impression in relation to drawing.

Leadership: Can your work, as a complete and authentic representation of an artistic vision, be perceived as a masterpiece of a scene separated from an artistic symbiosis?

He drew, as we know, a lot in his youth. Much and stupid, because, abandoning the primary inspiration, he loaded the drawing with details under the influence of the Russian school of genre painting. School calligraphy according to the model never succeeded. His manner was that of linear drawing. Then, abandoning the drawing, he remained passionate, in his first films, for the mathematical purity of the montage in his movement. The taste for the sequence appeared later, and he explained the strangeness of this delay, through the logic of Engels' thought: " the movement first attracts attention , only then do you think about what is moving ."

An organic being of cinema, for example, could not build itself up as a creative force without borrowing something from the universal elements of expression of the things it surrounds itself with, of art, techniques, or constructive science. And perhaps any of these would have but a truncated being without the contribution of all the others, including choreographic practice.

The order in which these things predominate in importance and value makes room for an infinite diversity of embodiments under which the creator is seen: as a master, or as a visionary. Just as a painting by Rembrandt, for example, a model for what we might call artistic symbiosis, includes harmoniously, in the subsidiary of its expressiveness, certain elements of balance (colors, lines, shapes), in the same way the creation of a director must merge all elements. By this I mean that a director's work is incomparably more complete than a kitsch in which one or more of these constitutive elements of a total expression are completely missing.

Leadership emphasizes the ability to harmoniously combine all the constituent elements of artistic expression - movement, colors, lines, shapes - to create a complete and balanced work, like a remarkable "artistic symbiosis" like Rembrandt's paintings.

In the visual arts, leadership consists in the vision and mastery of integrating various expressive components into a coherent and engaging whole, thus avoiding a "kitsch" that would lack some essential elements of the total expression.

The movement first attracts attention, only then do you think about what is moving, because in cinematography you have to take into account the dynamic visual action. Moving elements capture the viewer's eye and contribute to the pace and energy of the film. A static frame can be boring, while movement creates tension, suspense and emotional involvement for the viewer.

Mr. Finch’s Faithful Companion

On March 22, 2013

Try to recognize in time the essence of your true nature as to not definitively blur the mood of people you interact with.

This time, I want to introduce you to Mr. Gavin Finch, from the movie "Flawless (2007)". He deals with the investigation into the disappearance of diamonds from London Diamond Corporation, the number one in the world at that time on its business sector.

Whenever we meet Mr. Finch, this professional lacking any trace of "soft tissue", we are completely stricken with intolerance and lacing any positive stimuli that could mobilize our reactions. We enter his atmosphere like in a dark and well locked room, where only a vague and relative existence can be perceived.

During Mr. Finch's investigation, every individual is treated as a potential criminal. From place to place, this very rare form of feeling, whose insulating properties increase their density and tighten like after a thunderstorm, a form of zigzag movement that warns any employee of the company. Any healthy breath in the company vanishes as soon as the night shifts.

Only slowly we get used to this form of professional conduct carried to its climax. Because Mr. Finch is deliberately shrouded in some kind of obscurity. It can be described only by some shaded contours that blur the mood of everyone he interacts with.

Leadership has as its main determinant a particular situation which is not determined univocally by the prism of a typical situation, but by the possibility of a change of situation from "Disappointment of Ego" to "Defeat of Ego".

But the end of the movie brings into focus another unique attribute of Mr. Finch, revealing the dark side of his personality. When the main suspect, Laura Quinn, finds the diamonds with a game of plans and counteraplans, Mr. Finch is touched by the holy light, by the luminous radiation of his own and true nature.

A hero of Alexandre Dumas was right when he said: "The pride of our poor human nature makes everyone believe himself more unhappy than another unfortunate weeping and moaning with him."

Seeing the tears accompanied by Laura Quinn's guilt, something inside him lights up, refuses to comply with the shaded space. This bright feeling is revealed by the expression of his face, dumbfounded as if he saw the goddess of goodness touching him with the inspiring rod, sending her force of action. This vivid light thrown at him complements what is not seen, his inner void.

The ego that makes you judge and feel a certain emotion when you are in the face of a rather confusing situation is a "must have" when granting an unconditional forgiveness.

When Laura Quinn tries to confess, only then the manifestation of this Mephisto turned into angel is best seen, taking place in its great splendor. The emotional warmth that she radiates almost moistens even his eyes, the mask of stiffness falling from his face – and only now his image is worthy of being remembered. Finch is no longer the tough, cold cop, but rather an understanding, merciful man, whose Ego is based on the attention received from the sincerity of the grieving woman, finding relevance in small gestures.

His heart opens. Like snowdrops in a hurry, the innermost parts of his being want to come to light and spread spring-like flavored essence. The subtle fluid that dwells deep into his soul begins to thrive, to radiate like in a deep darkness. He cannot remain totally faithful to his dominant-negative nature, but is forced to give a new shape to his sphere of action tangent to his maximum change point.

All seem new and old in life, braided into a single string: myself. The man meets his true self.

Leadership: Is your acceptance of being emotionally equal to others viewed as a moral obligation, or as a choice to "correct your own wrong becoming" in a context of character vulnerability called "serenity"?

The "serenity" on which the character of a high quality person depends is manifested by a strong affection or a strong need to save someone, a strong desire to form and maintain attachment relationships.

Do you keep in mind those positive stimuli that may activate your transformation? Is your leadership closely related to a form of professional conduct carried to climax? Can your personality be described only by shaded contours? Does your personality blur the mood of those whom you interact with?

I remember what the French writer Honore de Balzac once said: "Great men need inferior people more often than it is thought."

One of the main conditions imposed by leadership, which is to acquire the qualities of a truly great man, is to give free reign to the hidden side of your personality, to collect your own baggage of positive traits so as to cancel any negative effects that you will deliberately bear.

This idea can be expressed by the phrase: "Keep the dog away from those stimuli that trigger his barking." If your leadership suffers a great loss, this is because your inner companion directly or indirectly hampers the good quality of relationships with others –the force of the eagerly calling to say "Yes" to any excess of power, the decision to deny your beliefs that can ensure your stability and continuity professionally and socially, but also personally.

To owe yourself the sincerity and full assumption of the role of someone who is a good listener and understanding in any conflict situation, has as its substrate the attempt to transform the vulnerability of its character into a source of power.

Leadership is given by your self-image, which you decide to represent you professionally, be it embarrassing or pleasant. Find in the light of your own wisdom all necessary resources to give you the strength to act in accordance with the "lines" that you get inside your heart. Stop any excesses. Leave the deepest parts of your being to come to light and spread spring-like flavor essence. Give new shape to your sphere of action, which is tangent to your maximum transformation point.

How long can you stay faithful to your negative nature? Can you condition your dog to stop barking or do you encourage him to bark at every passerby?

Leadership: Is your effort to be understanding worthwhile only because it is very possible to be interpreted as a proof of innocence in the face of the challenge called: "a momentary impulse marked by the conditioning of high emotional intensity"?

Rather than accepting a negative dominance on your personality, I propose something "lighter": getting out of this provincial monotony against oneself, which is also the basis of ineffective leadership or even its utter destruction, directly contributing to the formation of that "left force" – the people you cherish, with whom you could band to save what little light is left in you.

Someone confessed on Facebook: "I learned that the real treasures of a man aren't those inside his house, but those inside his soul."

When you measure with others in an attempt to somewhat be greater than them, you become increasingly poor, something rebels against you, something inside you instantly breaks, like pressing a button. And when you lose a part of yourself, you also lose a part of the influence that you could have on them.

Leadership highlights the experience of examining yourself in terms of an attitude that differentiates between what you experience through the consequences of your choices and what you experience in terms of a sense of belonging to a noble cause.

Mr. Finch's faithful companion highlights the effect of accepting a negative dominance on personality, resulting in disapproval of themselves and their own identity, which may lead to failure. The contribution you bring to achieving the foundation of your way of being leads to failure. The contribution you bring to achieving the foundation of your way of being reflects in the lives of those around you.

Do you let yourself be enslaved by the bad influence of your negative side from the perimeter of a shaded area? With what do you fill what is not seen (your inner void) to raise your self-esteem? Do you stay true to your negative nature?

Try to recognize in time the essence of your true nature as to not definitively blur the mood of people you interact with.

Mr. Finch’s Rigorous Interrogation

On March 24, 2013

Maximize the strengths of your personality, keeping your firm position in the area of control where another authority tries to penetrate and dominate.

After the theft of diamonds, London Diamond Corporation uses Mr. Gavin Finch's services, whose hunting dog instinct immediately seizes a great inconsistency between what is real and unreal in the witnesses' testimonies.

The expert gathers evidence, quickly draws up a list of suspects and starts discovering the truth. Radical, he starts a war, a whimsy perpetuum mobile of squeezing information in a vicious circle of demand and offer. But the demand is not at all gentle, and the offer is long in coming.

Small streaks of doubt, tiny clues lead to one common denominator in all this equation with many unknowns: Mr. Hobbs. The only connection with this simple office cleaner can be explained in several ways, but all based on a single variable: time. The robbery occurred during his shift.

We must enter into a research or a physics laboratory to see how Mr. Hobbs lives his life, with all its additions of black and white, following laws that scientists have not managed to study and formulate. Everything that happens in this complex laboratory is explained in his painful, even heartbreaking past in some respects.

Long ago, an experiment failed and an unexpected reaction unprecedentedly released a certain amount of negative energy. Since then, Mr. Hobbs could not recover, an overall change occurred in himself, in the normal behavior of constituents that provided material support to his operation. Everything inside him seems outdated, hardened, a fake that cannot be understood by any rational power. And yet, something keeps him alive !

Leadership: Can you customize the experience of interpreting the role of a man who does not believe in the strength of his real drama, in the context of an influence that joins the decisive events of a double choice?

The dog starts barking. His interrogation acquires a uniform color and becomes darker and darker. On an ironic query, usually adopted by prosecutors in court, Mr. Finch attacks the suspect, sometimes with no scruples, intending to obtain the definite proof of his guilt. It's enough that the defendant have an egress, no matter how small, for Finch's hypothesis to convert to definite proof.

But – quite surprising – nothing flexes in Mr. Hobbs, nothing bothers him while the tendentious vortex surrounds him menacingly. For a moment, the poor man gives the impression of finally being defeated, that until he finds a way out – a secondary reaction to negative stimuli – explosives constantly produced by the implacable investigator. A negative energy is converted to a positive one. In terms of personality, the cat proves stronger than the dog.

Mr. Hobbs has to choose between revealing his plan, with the risk of completely compromising his future, or to maintain a neutral and correct stance on recent events.

If resistivity depends linearly on temperature in linear conductors, Mr. Hobbs' only way to get rid of the hook depends of the strength of the material he is cut out of. Only his sharp mind manages to free him from the interrogation led closely to extreme. His confidence, tact, composure, ability to communicate, strength of character, prudence and rapid response ability become first aid points, with stabilizing role in case of a fall.

Everything is uncertain on the horizon that seems to be postponed. Lonely in the twilight, a man manages to chase his end, to remove any doubt hanging over him. Undaunted, he retains his strong position in the control space where he tries to penetrate and dominate another authority, that of Mr. Finch. *

Leadership: How do you manage a surprise-test in your development process especially when you have to make the effort to break away from the past mistakes that should not be judged by a final judgment?

Are you surrounded by the tendentious vortex of an incriminating verdict? Which are your first aid points with stabilization role in case of a fall? Do you prove stronger than any foreign authority in terms of personality? How can you prove your innocence? Are you a "fake" that cannot be understood by any rational power?

Applying leadership based on your level of thinking and reaction to unexpected events, with work and head for the truth supporting your actions and principles, is worth nothing if the most enduring personal characteristics do not contribute to strengthening relations.

Here's a way to make serious contributions to leadership. By "interrogation", by a surprise-test in your development process, by an assessment test of your abilities, to determine the emphasis of those permanent and general constants that you can rely on and of which others should be aware of before following you.

Leadership needs a force structure, a natural symmetry, a full harmony between the alternatives that can help you conceive a painting, a relevant image of some awkward situations.

The interrogatory proposal and declaration is made after the unwritten rules of leadership, sometimes directly, sometimes indirectly, through some form of testing your "control systems", your performance and skills through an unknown and difficult to influence foreign authority.

Ultimately, I believe that leadership tested on "suspects" does not depart from its mission, and the results of the investigation, sometimes supporting a limited form of rigor, may reveal more clearly the leader's true character and true content of his mentality.

Leadership: Are you dominated by the sense of responsibility that gives the "Guilty" or "Not guilty" verdict in the event of approaching a self-image that has to withstand a strong emotional impact?

Who is most affected? Surely he who cannot afford to explore his own resources and experiences. It's the fear of going to explore one's own difficulties in their depth. In these conditions, leadership becomes more difficult to handle and harder to use, understand and accept.

When someone rushes over you intending to obtain the definite proof of your abilities, the only way to get rid of the hook depends on the strength of the material you are made of. Only your sharp mind manages to rescue you. Your confidence, tact, composure, ability to communicate, strength of character, prudence and rapid response capability are the main help points with stabilizing role in case of a fall. A very small variation of these constant points can blow up everything you've built, everything you assimilated over time.

"Guilty" or "Not guilty", these differentiating factors of an autonomous or fearful self, training defensive or offensive mechanisms, constitute incriminating or exculpatory evidence. Mr. Hobbs's strong emotional impact is not given by his "guilty" status, but by the player status of a chess match in which he continues to have an ace up his sleeve, without waiting for the opponent to move. Basically, he is in a permanent state of calm and euphoria, while his opponent is in a permanent state of tension and rivalry.

Maximize the strengths of your personality, keeping your firm position in the area of control where another authority tries to penetrate and dominate.

To approach a self-image meant to withstand a strong emotional impact means rising to the expectations of the authority of your ability to keep calm in situations when the intrusion of other people into your life (or into your spheres of activity) is major.

Mr. Finch's Rigorous Interrogation designates that stage in the evolutionary process that prevents you to pass to another level. It designates that strange, exciting and mysterious phenomenon, by which you reach a complex of feelings that expose your true identity.

But to really analyze your personality, someone else needs to enter into your own research laboratory. Everything that happens in this complex laboratory reflects how you live your life, with all its additions of black and white that define you.

If an experiment fails, an unexpected reaction will release a certain amount of negative energy that will affect your personality. Everything inside you will seem outdated and hardened. In this case, you risk falling into a psychological complex of guilt and no longer be able to support your own beliefs and values.

Mr. Panaite's Hands

On May 19, 2010

Assign to your leadership the property of balance, by ensuring a psychological compatibility between you and your "hands".

I could never forget the day when I met Mr. Panaite, a middle-aged doctor whose exalted pleasure of practicing the profession of a surgeon has brought him a great success. He was gifted with a bunch of qualities and brilliant merits. He has never failed in any surgery.

I talked to him for more than an hour, during which he shared with me some interesting things concerning the profession of a surgeon He pointed out, in this way, the importance of his "hands" so valuable for a surgeon during the surgery.

- Nicu, my job is wonderful, but full of risks. Every time I enter a surgery, a deadly fear torments me: lest my patient dies on the operating table. Furthermore, I am also justified to fear and of something else: lest the patient's family asks me moral damages, or worse, to prosecute me for negligence and irresponsibility. Only the simple thought that this might happen to me stirs an awful feeling in me. This feeling makes my head spinning with all kinds of thoughts, which can throw a weak man into a boundless despair. Surgery is a dangerous thing. Nicu, its success depends not only of the surgeon, but also of the hands of the entire team.

Leadership: Do you reconsider your position on the extent of the acute sense of failure through a comprehension of your feelings that reverberated into consciousness as a very obsessive thought?

Mr. Panaite explained to me very clearly:

- In case of a surgery intervention, the team that enters into the operation consists of several specialists, carefully selected by the "team leader", or as it said say in medical language, of "first hand". He first chooses a reliable aid, represented by the "second hand". Both surgeons must form a perfect tandem during the surgical intervention, and they are assisted; but they must also equally cooperate with the other team members: the anesthesiologist and the assistants from the operating room, each of them having very well-defined roles. Furthermore, everyone must show a very good self-control, and also a high capacity for rapid reaction.

- These teams, he said to me, are usually formed in time, after a long enough interpersonal acquaintanceship. A newcomer, a younger surgeon, is received only as a "third hand". Moreover, only after he proves that he can integrate into the team that he is compatible in terms of personality and, of course, for professionalism, he becomes the "second hand". The team's success, and therefore, the favorable resolution of the surgical case, depends on the perfect cooperation of the team, of the synchronization of its members, their professionalism, but also rely heavily on the psychological compatibility between them.

Leadership: Do you accept the recognition of a superiority that contradicts its essence through a manifestation of professional conduct that has value only if it penetrates widely in the consciousness and sense of those who assist you in obtaining the desired results?

A superiority that contradicts its essence is a means of personal affirmation that is not crossed by any beautiful story, which is equivalent to the fulfillment of a major obligation without having previously developed a certain conviction about the causes and proportions of unforeseen situations.

It is essential in leadership the balance, which is established according to specific criteria and circumstances, but also depending on your values and your comprehension, and of various aspects related to the stage of your evolution. If you manage to create that perfect balance with yourself and with the reliable people that assist you in the steps you make, between your psychological state and theirs at all levels, especially the relational, behavioral, intellectual, and of aptitude - then you can maintain that benefic balance for your leadership development.

The balance establishes a certain synchronization between the parties: you and your "hands"; it leads to a meeting of your minds that are merging, cooperating by forming a unitary whole, in this way, imprinting that harmony in the teamwork, which bears the mark of performance.

Furthermore, the performance is based on the mental acuity of each participant in the leadership development process – the way they relate one to another, the way they adjust their characteristics and personality traits, the way they are reconsidering their thinking of perceiving things in terms of others - constitutes the support capable for an improvement of the common performance.

Assign to your leadership the property of balance, by ensuring a psychological compatibility between you and your "hands". A leader without good "hands" cannot ensure the complete success of his attempts.

Leadership: Do you contribute to creating a self-portrayal that is sufficiently comprehensive and detailed to capture the relevant aspects of an assumed initiative, while being a projection of the trend of reconfiguring a memorable Brand Experience?

Creating a self-image always starts with what makes you precious (the success of a very important activity), but it can end with what seriously dishonors you (a hidden drama that no one knows).

A leader should not be alone in special circumstances. In any important step which he undertakes, he must have around him, as well as any surgeon, one or two "hands" of trust that would permanently assist him, and that would offer him all the necessary support. As a matter of fact, for which person, however professional he might be in a certain area, would not help him the presence of one, two or even more "hands" of trust, with a solid experience in the area?

The consequences can be extremely sad for the leader who tries to "operate" without being assisted by some precious "hands". Even if he has some prominent virtues and a rich experience, he will not succeed to do everything by himself. His success will depend almost always of someone else. To find one or two aids animated by the zeal to be helpful, but that at the same time to be handy, patient and also quick, it is a vital thing for your leadership.

All the failures of a leader are due to the lack of experience, but also to the lack of some good "hands" to assist and to help him when needed. Moreover, we must keep in mind and the fact that often are met cases when the leader is apparently backed by the skilful "hands" but that can cause him many problems.

A memorable Brand Experience is a weapon in the search of a self-absorbed mission that inspires a new approach to gain an appreciation effect, but which at any time may have the character of an unwanted adverse effect.

Mr. Panaite's Hands are the help given to a corrective measure in an approach where the ethical dimension is doubled by the positive capitalization of learning from the experience of people superior to you.

My child, why are you the only one without a lit candle?

On October 25, 2010

In every ending hides a new beginning, not yet seen by the human eye.

I found this emotional story in a notebook lost on the street while I was walking home. I will share it with you, not only because it is full of teachings, but because it really touches your soul.

One fateful day, while crossing the street, a car hit a little girl hard, who lost her life on the spot. He was only 5 years old, exactly on the day of the accident.

Not even 20 minutes later, a representative of the Police appeared at her parents' door, informing them of the misfortune. The girl's mother was left traumatized and without any hope. There is no greater pain on Earth.

For years after the little girl's death, she couldn't sleep at all, constantly dreaming of her and crying until she passed out. One day, dozing off, he dreamed of an angel who told him: "Stop crying!"

Hearing this, the mother asked him: "Can I talk to her or see her at least once?"

The angel answers her: "Do you want to see her? Then the angel takes the woman by the hand and takes her up to heaven."

Leadership: Do you have to look beyond reality to see the perspective of a new world, even if what keeps you in place is the dream?

Arriving in heaven, a gate opened wide, where thousands of children stood with candles in their hands, forming a whole road.

Seeing this, the mother asks the angel, "Who are they?"

They are the children who reach Heaven every day, the angel immediately answers.

- Is my daughter among them?

- Look carefully, what is there in the dice...

A child came running. She was beaming with joy as if she was meeting her mother after decades.

Leadership: Can you adopt a perspective that values the courage to explore beyond the known, even when the familiar holds you back?

Seeing her, the mother cheered up for a moment.. but in a few seconds she fell to her knees and burst into tears again. Her daughter was the only one who didn't have a lighted candle and her face wasn't lit either.

But the little girl came closer and closer and hugged her mother as if for the last time!

- My child, why are you the only one without a lit candle? the mother asks through tears.

- Dear mother, please, stop crying! Look, I light my candle every night, just like the other children, but your tears put it out! Therefore, my candle is always extinguished, and I am obliged to remain all the time in the dark.

The moral is this. Don't cry all the time for the lost man, be it father, brother, husband or child. Let him rest in peace, don't torment your life because he won't come back no matter what. Instead, you can keep that man's memory alive by remembering him fondly and smiling at his memory. It's a sad story but I hope you learn something from it. Amen! The story must awaken memories in the soul of every person who has lost someone dear!

Leadership can present meaning through the following fulcrum: "Liberation comes when we embrace the memories, not when we allow ourselves to be swallowed up by the pain."

My child, why are you the only one without a lit candle? is the question few know the answer to, and even fewer would have the courage to face its truth. All I can say is that remembering loved ones should not be a source of pain, but a guiding beacon to inner peace and that today's tears can extinguish tomorrow's light. So let's learn to smile at the memories to keep the flame alive.

My Duty Is To Listen To You And Do Everything That Depends On Me

On August 24, 2010

Take into account the qualities with which you amplify your pride of being the "chosen of knowledge", appreciating them to the extent that you display and control your attitude and values in front of others.

Samuel read everything she felt on her face, and had a moment of discouragement.

- Fear ! so be it, he said standing up, proud and almost handsome. Fear ! Because I don't look like some of those frivolous passers-by, who have no idea in their heads, but only their bulging pockets; because I have thought, because I have lived, because I bear on my face the imprint of my deeds and of all the things I have seen; because, instead of laying a bag of money at your feet to buy them, I come with a tried mind, with a soul hardened in all the waters of life, a reservoir full of accumulated knowledge and experience.

And yet, what should attract and impress an intelligent woman more? A weak and childish heart that foolishly surrenders itself at the threshold of life, because it is the first thing that has arisen in its path, or a manly soul that has known everything, weighed everything, power, science, genius and which, of everything that exists in the world, only wants her, he only seeks her, he only accepts her? Wealth and power are to be given to you, to deserve you. I have raised you so high in my eyes that I wish I had mountains of gold to climb above and reach your height. That's how I love you. It seems to me that I alone am worth nothing to you, and that to equal you, I should possess all the gold in the world.

However, I assure you that I am not a man to be despised. I have tried and done things that will seem great to you, if I were to tell you about them. I had in my brain, and maybe I still have plans to change the face of Europe. Well ! I give all this to you. Everything belongs to you. My worth, all that I have been, all that I shall be, are thine; all the more since, I am convinced, I can be nothing without you. I beg you, do not despise me. Other women despised me, I crushed them. But I love you, I will not destroy you; I would die be good to me I swear I'm not proposing a worthless husband. I leave at your feet a forehead that confronted Napoleon face to face. Be kind. Will you?

Leadership: Can the imprint of your deeds emotionally reinforce the pattern of your own self-esteem growth needs, taking into account the testimony of a humble life as a "laborer of the mind"?

This fierce and immeasurable ardor embarrassed and troubled the girl's candid soul more and more. The naive child felt oppressed by this love, like a poor bird on which the shadow of the great eagle's wings suddenly fell.

- But, friend, she said dismayed, forgive me if I don't know how to answer you. I expected so little from what you told me. See how excited I am. I can answer you nothing, except that I only exist because of you, and that, consequently, my life belongs to you. Do what you will with it.

- Is this true? Samuel exclaimed happily.

- Yes, resumed Frederique; my duty is to listen to you and do everything in my power to make you happy.

The testimony of a humble life as a "laborer of the mind" refers to the awareness of the distance between intelligence and docility in love, emphasizing at the same time the feeling that you belong to them.

What Samuel wanted was just to have as much control over this soul and this life as possible. Then he will take care of the rest and gradually transform docility into love. Frederique's submission, therefore, made him almost as happy as after consent.

- You speak to me gently, but you are sad, he still added. Think about it, baby. There are two things in marriage, the man and his social position. In what regards the position, I promise to make it splendid and high for you, exceeding your dreams...

- Oh ! I don't think about the position, said Frederique.

- To the husband then, Samuel gently resumed. Look, my dear child, he said with an effort, your life is so pure and so simple, it is not a big deal to enrich it. You haven't gone out into the world at all and you haven't seen anyone yet... Yes, you did see that young man for a quarter of an hour. Frederique, I would be so wretched if all that he could tell you in a quarter of an hour weighed more heavily than all that I did for you for seventeen years !

Well, what conclusion do we draw from this? That leadership rests on two enduring pillars that complement each other: the quality of being humble and the quality of being superior, especially through a certain belonging to a state of tranquility and peace, of reconciliation with oneself. Just as Dante saw the universal importance of Sacred Poetry, affirming that he "put in his hands both heaven and earth", so a leader must see the importance of self-fulfillment by merging two other basic qualities (representing two faces of the same realities): the understanding of the other's feelings and the ability to control deviant impulses and urges, to which, of course, endless gentleness is added.

Leadership has as a constant reference understanding the emotional composition of the people you come into contact with, treating them according to their mood and needs for closeness, taking into account their feelings of vulnerability and insecurity when you make a decision.

My Duty Is To Listen To You And Do Everything That Depends On Me, especially when I know that my real strength is the experience of knowledge and the empathy that I have shown whenever I have tried to build relationships. And when I have to identify with other people, such as the important people in my life, I try to give an interpretation of myself to those around me, according to my own self.

My Eyes See Things That You Cannot See

On April 09, 2020

Continue to persist in the memory of an image strong enough to not justify your duplication in the real world.

The rose is my image in another variant of reality, passed through the symbolic space of the vast, complex, diversified creation, of which God himself is proud, because His miracles relate to man through art and science. I truly believe in the beauty of the rose, a perfect, rare, pure beauty, so endearing, as I believe in the ideal of similarity that has not been abandoned in contemporary perennial creations, that I am able to say that the whole world is more beautiful just by looking at it with eyes that express what I feel deep inside me.

The day is getting longer. My garden is characterized by sunlight, more and more intense, increasingly shinier. Only one rose catches my eye every morning, Double Delight, for the idea of a demonstration of sacredness. With emotion, full of longing, I like to mirror myself in its beauty, full of reflections of light, as if I were mirroring myself in a dream that never dies, both as a way to freely enjoy the miracles of the Great Creation, belonging to the greatest artist of the Universe, as well as a way to acquire the virtues of double language, the same virtues that prevail over the forces of nature.

You will think that my eyes only notice the excesses of the compositional art, or maybe I only look at pure, sensitive and inescapable beauty, but the eye knows best that beauty is manifested by increasing the sense of responsibility given to approaching a reality within the meaning which I give to the measure of all things. This strange phenomenon, of the similarity between two distant languages, understood only by artists and the Creator, is called Luckonrethys, or the enveloping light of an eternity that fulfills our human purposes – by totalizing an existence that cannot be erased from the war of an artistic destiny.

Leadership: Can you increase the quality of an image or vision that expresses the idea of "Immortality of Creation" by living the experience of being one with the object of your admiration?

A different day is announced today. I will not speak to my rose again, but I will look at it closely, with pride, joy, or pain, in the measure of an astral conjunction, so that I may know whether the outward beauty of its eyes can capture the emotion of my soul, or better yet, the reality of my divine self. The rose does not wonder what reality is, why it exists in an astral space without limitations, but accepts it as it appears before its eyes, transposing it into a work of art, in a magical atmosphere, in an ideal of humanity, in a chance at life, in a call to art.

The Creator and his creation. The idea of resemblance to the object represented aesthetically is still alive through the nostalgia of those who dream of space explorers, strong in spirit, full of faith, keepers of secrets, without, unfortunately, waking up from their dream. And not infrequently, in the absolute freedom of creation, in the version of a new reality of life and thought, we witness a personification that is at the same time a deification of the modern artist, talented, sensitive, thanks to the contact with the life-giving body of the Word.

My dear rose, only God continues to speak to me about you, telling me in all ways conceivable about the attributes of holiness enlarged by the conjugated symbol in Saturn, with the aspiration to link the art of Kabbalah to the artistic mastery existing only in a sacred space, oriented in the direction of the supreme truth, Aminthymeress, or that which is beyond earthly space, beyond death, beyond this reality.

Leadership: How do you share your experience of the unique from the perspective of unwavering faith in an ideal of authenticity understood as a penetration into a reality that omits its temporary dimension?

I continue to talk to the rose, calmly, candidly, with a lot of empathy, with nostalgia, as if I were interpreting some memories of visual sensations still totally unrelated to each other. And whenever I whisper in its ear the most beautiful words, like a confession to heaven, under the guidance of nature, I wonder why I am the only man able to do this in an astral projection anchored in the dream of an existence on the horizon of eternity.

And I continue to speak to it as it becomes part of me, of my dream, like a star shining unceasingly in the sky of a world near God. For the very measure of my own prudence, the determination to be part of something larger than my own person, is the continuation of the supreme dream from which a star is formed, and not some star, but a star which is constantly situated in its very plane. God, as a kind of memory that shines in the infinity of a gaze that avoids the gaze. The rose is the spell of a divine gaze that is lost in the light of my destiny.

Then, I break every rule and every barrier, like a true artist, and I get lost in the words of Umberto Eco, from the novel "The Name of the Rose", so that you, faithful admirers of my art and seekers of good taste, can look upon me with starry eyes and glimpse the answer to the question: "Why am I, and only I, the destiny of a transcendent reality?"

"Jorge stretched out his trembling hands and pulled the book toward him. He held it open, but turned it over so that Guglielmo could see it in the best position.

- Then why did God let this text be lost over the centuries and only a copy be saved from it, so that the copy of that copy, which ended up who knows where, would remain buried in the hands of an unbeliever who does not know Greek, and then lie abandoned in a closed place in an old library where I, not you, have been called by providence to find it, and take it with me, and hide it for so many more years? I know, I know as if I see this written in diamond letters, with my eyes that see things that you do not see, I know that this is the will of God, whose interpretation prompted me what to do. In the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost."

The ideal of modern authenticity is related to the view you attribute to the dualistic interpretation of suggestive reality in the emanating process of creation, living more emotionally rather, by interacting with a form of recognition of a personification growing in the planes of providence.

My Eyes See Things That You Cannot See because you are not yet ready to perceive a form of sensitivity and purity where no one focuses their gaze: towards the horizon of creation. That is, to the divine glory...

My Gaze Is A Silent Language Of The Soul

On June 26, 2024

The will to endure in the eyes of the world gives the shape that your inner meaning gives to life.

The only truth I really know is that I am haunted by people. For years I looked at them with heavenly eyes, through the mirror of an infinite number of reflections, wandering their thoughts and feeling the deep, mysterious sigh of long silences, of unexpressed joys, of unspoken feelings. What happens in their lives, what they reveal in difficult moments, in those moments of maximum tension when the vulnerability of the masks drops to zero, and the barometer of discernment whose needle moves from "subdued" to "free", remains for me an eye-opening experience and a soulful memory.

Nobody knows who I really am, but I've seen everybody. Nothing escaped my keen eyes in my travels through the world. Mysterious, fast, invigorating, my passages are evaluated through the prism of what I discovered: everything is compensated, everything is done first with the heart, and then with the mind. In the end, the biggest secret is to live an amazing story, and then write it so beautifully that I feel the need to re-read it even after thousands of years.

A certain event, a gesture of affection or a sustained action of some solitary hero, make him guilty of the objective, certain and inviolable ordering of the world. Everything is filmed, recorded with selective eyes that, like selectively colored lenses, see only what the soul is prepared to understand. Before people's eyes go out for good, according to the heavenly clock, I have a simple word to say to them: "Life is short, love one another."

Leadership: Can you face the idea that the persistence to become what you want is a catalyst for deep introspection that takes the form of an archive of memories difficult to share with future generations?

In my little passage through the world, during the war, I met some eyes that painted hope on the canvas of despair. Other eyes, as in a swallow's nest, hid their tears under trembling lids. And there were those twinkling, lively eyes of the shaggy-haired boy, Rudy, who, in a moment of intoxicating reverie, painted himself black in an attempt to imitate a world champion athlete.

He desperately wanted to become the fastest runner in the world, a dream for which he trained daily on the wet edges of the streets. On winding roads, just like many people's lives. He seemed permeated by that serene tension of the soul in which life, with its contradictions, appears full of meaning and worth living. Make him an inner Don Quixote, tell him a word about success, "Xegerolo" , and you will find the will to believe in the eternity of the world. His persistence to see himself as invincible became a necessity for his deed to acquire the greatness of the fight for a principle, for truth, for good, for love.

After all, the sign of true existence is the despair that generates spiritual action, from which the heroic hope to move mountains is born.

After a while, however, the roads became entangled and no guide seemed to guide them, except the feeling of nostalgia for the untouched road. Freedom, if there was such a thing, could only be supported by small moments of joy, which I sometimes remember. Just sometimes. As for an artist with grace, he hears the passing noises of the day, but he experiences them intensely as if he were feeling the major vibrations of the universe.

Leadership: Do you realize how life's wounds can become a catalyst for looking beyond appearances, leading to deep introspection that redefines your perception of reality?

My eyes could not overlook the sound of the accordion springing, as if from an enchanted portal, from the hands of an old man whose soul breathed art. Hans was the angel of solace in the dark bunker, his accordion symbolizing hope in dark times. All the things that had passed through his soul were dear to him, otherwise he would not have painted them so well in musical notes. For some of them, he nurtured more than a feeling of love, but also a feeling of gratitude, a special tenderness that could be seen in the way he lit up the spirit of those who listened to him. It is always the depth of the soul that transforms suffering into beauty.

There were those black angry eyes of Rosa, a woman wrapped in thunder, but who hid the purest tenderness in her. Only the tears hidden in moments of solitude could reveal that sentimental delicacy that characterizes those with a pure heart. The wounds of life do not take on a clinical aspect for those who have learned to look beyond appearances. After all, experiencing reality as a dream comes as a kind of justification for the existence of the conscious spirit that it belongs to a gaze that does not serve life, but eternity beyond death.

Anchoring in the ephemeral is the result of a short-sighted ambition. However, this is not the case with Liesel, who, in a place called Strada Raiului, opened her eyes to things that I did not see so well before, and I discovered in her the soul of a believer who searches the secret word: "life". Max, her friend, taught her that every living thing, every leaf, every bird, is alive because they have inside them the secret word for life. That's the only difference between us and a lump of clay. A word. Words are life, Liesel. All those blank pages...are there for you to fill. With life.

Leadership: Can the memories you weave into your life story become a lesson in determination that turns the ephemeral into the eternal, influencing how future generations will shape their own destinies?

"I have seen so many great things. I have participated in the world's greatest disasters and worked for the greatest evildoers. And I have seen the greatest miracles. But, everything remains as I said at the beginning. No one lives forever. When I finally came after Liesel... I felt a selfish pleasure, knowing that she lived her 90 years so thoughtfully. During this time, her stories reached many souls. Some of them I found out in passing Max, whose friendship lasted almost as long as Liesel's life... Almost...

In her last thoughts, Liesel reviewed the long list of those who had merged their lives with hers. The three children... the grandchildren... her husband. Among them, burning like candles, were Hans and Rosa, her brother... and the boy always with lemon-colored hair. I wanted to tell the book thief that he was one of the few souls who made me curious about what it's like to live. But in the end, there were no more words. Just peace...

The only truth I really know is that I'm haunted by people."

George Calinescu said it well: "A true artist knows how to extract from what he experienced, what belongs to everyone and above all to give his experiences the broad scope of the lives of his peers. He knows how to live on behalf of his contemporaries and through them, of man universal."

My gaze is a silent language of the soul when it secretly embraces the hidden beauty of the world. I'm not sure what the point of all this is. But I took in everything with my gaze, not missing anything, not even a sound of an accordion, not even a lively word, not even a hidden tear, not even a passing thought. In the same way, I will capture with my gaze every gesture, every moment that builds a story worth remembering in many, many, many years.

I would like to know your story too, but first I want you to make your life a real masterpiece, a priority for Me. I would like you to be one of the few souls who make me curious about what it's like to live.

My Predominant Intermediary With God

On May 23, 2013

Define and develop the unity of your being, assuming responsibility in front of the guilty in yourself.

God ! If you exist as a decision-maker, now, through these persistent thoughts that cry everything and anything heating my brain, if you exist as a manifestation mechanism of the burning feelings that recurrently weigh on me, giving me insomnias, creating a powerful inner tension inside of me, please stand to save me !

Oh, God ! If through me You have taken the body of a human being, please, I'm begging you, I command you, because now you are me, and I am you, to rip from my insides this torturing pain, that comes enveloped in a sweet appearance, under the name of "eagerness". I am asking you to free me of this sudden shiver of hatred and spite that boils in me and takes away all my strength ! Deliver me from sin; help me to get out of the torture of this fortress called: revenge !

I accused myself. Now the guilty has to answer to the judge and to the court of clean conscience. Hear your sentence ! But nothing happens. The gavel strike of a trial, the ill-boding gong that will instill the dread and will make me collapse in the ruins of life, hasn't awakened anything in me yet.

In the way in which the heart chooses good or bad, pieces of everything that I am now, there is something that bothers me and it doesn't go away. It determines me to step away from the presumable and get closer to the absurd. I hesitate to say, even in my thoughts, the true name of the good man whose presence still lingers in me and doesn't let me carry on with my plan.

An unjust and biasing feeling towards me, a potential resistance towards the impulse of harming, impedes me to admit what I have become. But the feeling of purity, of honor well-rooted in my being, the feeling I always had in my mild existence, is sick of all this suffering. That's why, only by establishing a new direction centered on revenge makes me feel better now.

Leadership: Can you make the transition into the intermediate space between a grandiose image and an image that identifies the idea of defeat, seeking to change the original mode of expression of resistance to the reality you are facing?

In all this moment of immense dissension and doubt that Mister Hobbs goes through, he is at the same time spectator, judge but most of all an actor that plays his part with hatred in the show of other people's lives. Bravely, he still hopes to win the lottery again, but this time he bets less on luck and more on Laura Quinn, his accomplice.

Fiercer than ever, the thought of revenge pulsates through him in the middle of countless contradictions and multiplicities, contrasts, nonsense and perspectives that confuse him even more. Putting him in the situation of arising retorts, arguments, and even observations and critics from himself.

You are wondering if his Ego is playing pranks on him. But no, because just as his Ego tells him to shut down his attack posts, he opens new ones. And in this moment of excessive pressure, when his scale of values is altered, when the boiling temperature grows inside of him, when nerves are tensed up to the point of maximum supportability, only then the whole man in who new impressions are created, appears. Only now his image, unchanged by any reality, appears. Within it the Ego, subject to a harsh judgment, is found to be a hypocrite and most of all, guilty.

Hobbs lives in balance with his Ego. The judge inside of him abdicates from the written and unwritten laws, ceding ground to the active criminal, that this time wants to achieve great deeds, to server its own version of the truth. But this truth, overburdened by negativism and revenge, is a fake, in discrepancy with the unanimously accepted truth.

The feeling of correctness is taken abash by the passionate ripple of a righteous Ego. Out of his ideas about life, honor, forgiveness, care for who he is, Hobbs builds a new vision about himself.

Reason, science, faith are concentrated simultaneously in his new Ego, much loved and accepted like a friend and reformist of his own creation: revenge, the only guide that can lead him to accepting his pas self through the devastating experience of suffering.

Leadership: Is the guard of your own creation trying to chase you away from the your free area of manifestation, associating the reality you are experiencing with a self-image built by responding to the demands of a momentary weakness?

Is there something that bothers you and doesn't go away, making you step away from the presumable and get closer to the absurd? An unjust and biased feeling that harms you and doesn't allow you to admit what you have become? Only by establishing a new direction centered on revenge do you feel better?

The scientific study of the report good-evil/bad, always imprecise and delimited in its natural evolution environment, constitutes the object of our analysis. Investigating this environment in the given conditions of another version of "being", exploiting with no restraints any man that answers to his own conscience, is an essential requirement for reaching excellence in leadership.

The pros and cons of human fall in the net of a risky life, or the human rise to a dignified life, are achieved with difficulty, especially when his values don't unite and don't annul each other in any point. Thus, we are forced to undergo a vast investigation that approaches more likely, the context and the pretense in which he has reached a "minus".

Look towards the living part of yourself, towards the central executive, towards the Ego that knows you and continuously whispers negative thoughts in your ear, trying to convince you that you will succeed to rise above your own pains and suffering only by making others suffer. In this case, the Ego becomes the guardian of your own vengeful creation, trying to chase you away from your free area of manifestation, where the true preferences for life are reflected.

You can follow the way of manifestation of a psychic phenomenon by comparing an attitude that emphasizes your own centrality in the midst of events that are responsible for changes in circumstances that are not favorable to you but correspond to the perception of yourself.

In the somber conditions of human existence, displeased with what it has become by following its evil interests, leadership dries out, it becomes quaint, slipping towards negligence, slipping backwards. Stepping away from objective reality, leadership transforms in an inconsistent and ever sad illusion, that of maintaining everything under control, even if feelings make people boil inside.

Just as the Scottish novelist John Buchan said: "The task of leadership is not to put greatness into humanity, but to elicit it, for the greatness is already there."

By contesting someone's every possibility of "being" in their transition towards self-governing as a way of understanding their possible evolution, we propose, in exchange, as an optimum solution the taking of definite measures in order to extract ourselves from a totalitarian and uncertain domination. Greatness can be the essence of a new doctrine, a new creed, an element that identifies the leader as a single personality, that's not in duality with itself.

If Mister Hobbs, a character of the movie "Flawless (2007)" created his judgment ideal, his God, in antithesis with himself, being reduced to a simple negative of his real image – you, as a leader have the duty to beautify your personality in close relation with the environmental factors, with the objectives that you impose upon yourself, with the existent necessities at a given point, enhancing your self-knowledge and self-image.

Leadership: Can you imagine all the locks of life only in the form of validation of a model of an exemplary man, passing through the great adventure of your liberation from the context that burdens you?

This man within yourself who prepares you spiritually for a wise life, this Ego who leads you instinctively towards certain decisions and choices, your defining authority is the only thing that will always have power over yourself. You are in his hand as soon as he finds out about the crime you committed.

So we can say you are some kind of suspect, always thought to have dark interests and unaware of the situation in which you are. Basically, you interpret the role of that character that takes over the attitude indicated by his own Ego, and maintains it according to his own will, neutral, positive or negative, firm or hesitating, throughout the play with ever-changing decorum. And where moral confusion plays the leading part.

Comparing yourself with what you have become, expressing your necessary responsibility to the guilty side of yourself, you can better define your identity by being for or against extreme reactions. Moreover, you can develop the unity of your being so that it corresponds to the requirements of quality leadership.

The majesty of a man sits in the way that he instructs the Ego to respond with "YES" to any change that cannot be avoided, but which can at any time serve a better knowledge of the strengths and qualities that decide the formula of a sublime creation.

A sublime creation result is obtained by the need to deviate from any foreign influences from the value content of your personality through a grand development from a "beginning" of reflection on the significance of existence – to the finality of how you adapt to the demands of a reality that haunts you.

My predominant intermediary with God points out the Ego that continuously puts a certain pressure on someone, shaping, deforming, and recalibrating his personality in relation to life that becomes unfair at a certain point.

Do you need a sign, a ray of light in which to see the truth in its entire splendor? What is your true identity: is it subject to a harsh Ego, that's no longer entrapped in principles and healthy values, or is it subject to an Ego that identifies itself with good, truth and fulfillment? Aren't you ever suddenly crossed by a pile of questions, a sharp pain, a vision with deeper meanings that run confused?

Define and develop the unity of your being, assuming responsibility in front of the guilty in yourself.

Mysterious Doctor

On June 24, 2011

Improve your connections with other people, by entering in their spiritual space and orienting their emotions in a favorable direction.

Only one doctor could do something for the poor child, but a skilled doctor and fond of science that only cure for the sake of curing. Jacques Mérey because it was his name, looked with sadness that human being completely devoid of intelligence and qualities, curled up in her, coiled on the perished mattress. His heart trembled. A deep sense of compassion and mercy crossed his body, as he never faced such a case. The little girl just turned seven years, but she was worthless because she suffered from mental retardation (her mental capacities were very low).

But the discerning eye of Jacques and his formidable intuition combined with his long experience, immediately realized a crucial detail: the girl's hand, careless and soft that you had thought it is without joints, nursed the dog of the family that adopted her. It seemed that these two inferior beings understand each other, it seemed that among them there is a mysterious force that attracts them. Starting from this gesture of sympathy which she showed to pet, Jacques prepared immediately a treatment plan.

Leadership: Your appreciation for someone is manifested through the nobleness of character modeled by an avid curiosity over what is gained by highlighting the relationship between "Totality" and "Void"?

Bound to triumph. Receiving her adoptive parents' consent, Jacques took the little girl, and the dog, too - that was the only living connection with her, at his home. He hoped that his performance in science will help Eve to regain his senses and intelligence. Basically, he had to penetrate deep in that inferno named imbecility, to seek a hidden intelligence and to bring against her apparent destiny, in daylight.

The poor girl was doomed to a life of struggle and a dramatic end. Even so, remember that someone had dared to confront and change the so-called fate. If you read "Le docteur mystérieux" by Alexandre Dumas, then you probably know that Jacques's confidence in science has made a miracle.

More than four years, he struggles with this deep darkness that it was in little Eva. A continuous treatment, a supervision of each moment, a firm will. Using his science and all "opportunities" of nature, he finally succeeds to heal her completely.

The void is a challenge whose answer probably does not exist, but the same as that "impossible to define" is represented by the difficult to understand aspects of the life we associate it with. And totality includes what we discover at every corner of life, the way we sketch a dream into memory and how we struggle to touch it in a reality which we cannot ignore forever.

Facilitating the relationship between "Totality" and "Void" implies interposing yourself between discovery and its application, depending on the situation created by how you interpret a reality that you do not agree with, but also, one that cannot be denied.

Leadership: Can you estimate the awareness of the reality of other people, by comparison with yourself?

Leadership is individualized through the size and sensitivity of dependence on essential details. A doctor knows this best. His ability to be a catalyst for change, which he developed, based on facts represented by discovering connections between what the nature imperfectly created and what we can do to right the effects of her wrongs, is the result of the enthusiasm and availability to reach deep into the "inferno" and destroy everything that could be more horrible.

The entire force of Leadership is synthesized in the advice: "Look for a hidden intelligence and try to bring it, against its apparent destiny to the light of day."

Something great can be achieved by associating these two elements: interest and determination, in view of bringing efficiency to the communicability of emotions and moods that people need in order to set themselves free from the status of being weak and helpless. And these two elements are produced by a decisive impulse of thought that materializes a thought through inspiration, observation, expression with no reservation and the reversion of roles which favors the process of functionality and learning.

And the procedure used by great leaders through an entire series of pragmatic and conceptual correspondences, is illustrative for adjusting the "intervention" that can answer in a satisfying manner to the real needs of development and training.

Leadership: Do you assure a trusty position from the kind of approach you define as a "controlling authority" to what makes a person somewhat superior to itself?

The power to heal fears, the dedication, the closeness, the attention, the commitment, the calls that come from the conscience, from self-values and conscious living, they all intervene, especially in the difficult situations of relating with others, when you can't wholly put yourself in the shoes of the person who asks for your support, rallying to his troubles, to his spiritual matrix.

Still, indirectly, they find themselves reflected in the manner with which you conduct your own life, when you manage to defeat yourself, to discover yourself, when you manage to accept and be a friend of yourself, when you manage to be compassionate with yourself.

Only by comparison with yourself, you can take on the responsibility of making life better for others, by launching in the real world - through the "art" of constantly recreating and redefining – a new commitment: every person that you meet is a reflection of yourself. And you have the mission to polish yourself permanently and to bring to light more and more pieces of what you can be.

Leadership: Do you connect to people's emotions and help them overcome their limits by a magic leap over their thought processes that make it difficult to accomplish a miracle?

Understanding at the individual's emotional level is essential in leadership. The ability of the leader to recognize people's emotions and to make them increasingly more active is the most important tool for success in his kit of qualities. A good leader does often that doctors do when they find themselves facing an illness they have not met and which they cannot explain to themselves: trying to get into the minds and hearts of the people.

What was that essential detail that Dr. Jacques Mérey has noticed, and which made it possible to find a recovery path for the girl? Undoubtedly, that living connection between her and the dog. And dog's stubbornness to stay beside her it was a positive sign because it was clear that they attached to each other. And this could only mean that Eve still had a dose of "living" in her, so that she was not completely devoid of senses. And for her recovery, Jacques had just to develop her subtle senses and make them increasingly more active.

How deeply can you penetrate the depths of the human being? To influence people you should perceive very well their emotions and feelings and then to accommodate with them. You have to untangle their feelings and help them overcome the barriers imposed by their own limits.

The leader's task, like that of a doctor is to tangle the completion of an important mission with the realization of a revolution in the consciousness of people that changes the course of a battle that seems lost.

Just as X-ray gives doctors the power to see through the skin internal bone structures of the body - just the same, you have to penetrate deeper into the human soul, from where it starts all his happiness or unhappiness, being able to comprehend his emotional structure and to find the most effective combination of changing perceptions and to improve his existence.

If you fail to enter the area of human soul, if you do not reach to be in perfect balance with what they feel, if you do not discover the full range of their feelings, from tenderness to indifference, from sympathy to antipathy, from joy to sadness, then you will not be able to guide their emotions in a positive direction for them. Moreover, you could not improve your relationship with them.

Conclusion: If you want to have a great influence on people around you then you must learn to penetrate deeper into their soul, to understand their feelings, their source of happiness or unhappiness, and especially to guide their actions in a positive way. But, for this it is necessary to improve your relationship with them and, not infrequently, like a mysterious doctor, to apply a targeted "therapy", individual or in group.

No Old Suffering In Twilights

On January 06, 2017

Develop a strong feature of objectivizing existence, creating a new position for your old feelings and attitudes that can be redeployed at any time.

I was a bit mad, with an addiction for the things that were close to me as an experience and as a breakthrough as a discovery, in a solid loyalty only to the suggestions of meaning for which I really deserve to sell my soul. What remained for me to dilate in this reality was, in a symbolic form, an extension of the lucid dream that called me back to myself, at the time I wasted by not knowing who I belong to, to the joys I did not experience around everyone. Requirements for the development of imaginary deceits, which later became haunting.

Existence is the symbolic form of a reality that you cannot manipulate, or rather it is the attempt to manipulate a reality that has become a symbol through the way you represent your being as a Creator. And a narrator who is part of a wider reality, relying on the form of an egocentric attitude, can himself become the symbol of a new philosophy about the world and life in an attempt to manipulate the way of reality to declare itself "more real" than the world fabricated in the work of art.

And as many times I tried to convince myself that I do not need myself, so many times I tried to give a blow to the fate full of "if" and "maybe if it was not so", with all my opposition for all surprises of the unreal which struggle to capture, in a weather good only for twilights, from the distant heavens, only the bonuses of detachment from similar or different situations.

Measurements of the magnetic field of my brain, made with precision still untouched, showed a strong concentration of subjectivity in the sense of aspirations for returning to what matters, to what is authentic and true. Only in this way could I foresee the meaning of a self-experience related to the reality of an indefinite individuality, that is, through a direct or indirect connection with the feelings and turmoil of a world that is too ambiguous to be understood by ordinary minds.

Leadership: Are you ready to run away from a reality that you know and experience, but that you want to interpret differently through the prism of a superior understanding attributed to the symbols from which you can fabricate a different identity and a different consciousness?

And what I understood about myself in the world of my own consciousness is exactly what writer Aldous Huxley finds about himself in one of his novels: "Suddenly, I felt that things were going too far. Too far, even if I was entering an even more intense beauty, with an even deeper meaning. Looking back and analyzing, I was afraid of being overwhelmed, of not disintegrating under the pressure of a greater reality than an ordinary mind could bear to live more and more in the comfortable world of symbols."

Often a higher understanding is generated within the cause of confusion and not from outside. And when destiny applies to the man a low visibility, then a temporarily rescuing from the routine of the faith that comes from an error of one's own conscience, by falsifying the reality produced around a detachment of the self, only then he raises the wings of unspoken thoughts and flies into a new trailer: "I want to save myself from abolition ! "

He does not escape into the heavens of an inner beginning of life, only retrospectively, but begins to bear new realities in the universe that is not anti-human, anti-himself. As you can easily guess, I am under pressure of not being able to adjust to the characters and appearances of this world, but only to the simplest feelings resulting from the experience of telling a story without black and white, without heroes. A story with many mirrors, with many facets, of which only one is my life, on another level of perception of things.

Leadership: Can you engage in changing the reality from which your words absorb their lives, without performing several repetitions of your previous states and experiences?

And I had so much to learn from the story of the old husband who, nervous and eternally concerned with personal wealth, changed his will every week. At one point, he stumbled and drowned in the hot water pool in his room before anyone could see or help him.

What matters for making change, accessible not only to those virtuous but also to those who experience the mysterious nuances of the feeling of kneading, life-consuming, is the very recognition that you are leading a "colossal struggle" that exceeds your powers.

The struggle that tests you, from the primitive tones of the habit of staying loyal to self-loss, to the refined compliment of creating new states of motivation, in the phase of full reflection on existence, is precisely the extraordinary tool of definition and creation of a new position to old feelings and attitudes that can be redeployed at any time.

The reality from which your words suck their life is the struggle you lead in search of a new idea for yourself, wrapped in a canvas of "spectacular" with the feeling of a story that invites reflection on free will, or on the freedom to be anyone you want.

On the other hand, a reality manifested as a stringent necessity of reformulating a unique and all-encompassing conception of what it means to seek a new idea to yourself – which facilitates an extension of the meaning of "identity", is necessary for the purpose of differentiating those phenomena that at the level of self-acceptance have the potential to become the main ones in your sphere of existence.

Within the great container of leadership are produced the individuals who have realized, ever since the first attempt at overcoming existential turmoil, that it does not matter how you perceive glancing back over destiny: "maybe if it was not so". But rather the way you can interpret and respond to all your previous, memorized and updated events. Do you stay loyal to them?

Leadership is the fidelity you owe to the other YOU in a creation whose reality does not belong to one, but to all.

No One Knows What Goes On In The Soul Of A Director

On January 05, 2017

Often, what appears as an external conformation does not reflect the true beliefs and feelings of the individual, especially in terms of a coherent and unitary identity.

Eisenstein, who had been offered specially chosen subjects so that he had to refuse them, is now vehemently attacked because he had not made a film for a long time.

However, the great director's grievances continue. Invited further to the celebration of the 15th anniversary of the existence of Soviet cinema, Eisenstein receives a smaller distinction than his colleagues, who are given higher orders and titles. Among them were Podovkin, Dovjenko, his former students, the Vasiliev brothers, or even his former assistant Alexandrov.

The next day, as president of the conference, he delivers a closing speech. Responds weightedly to attacks. He commits to start the creative work again. In a few years, he will remember with irony the gray atmosphere...in the years after 1930, which tried to include everyone, standardizing creation. Obviously, therefore, that his conformist obedience is not real. No one knows - and should not know - what is happening in his soul. Imperturbable sphinx, his majesty Eisenstein maintains his majesty.

Leadership: Do you manage to maintain your inner resilience, navigating between contradictory and seemingly outwardly conforming demands, so that you maintain your authenticity?

Often, artists, like Eisenstein, are perceived as conformist figures in public, but their inner realities are full of deep convictions and feelings, grievances and desires for free expression, which are rarely visible to the outside. Despite an apparent outward conformity, the artist's creative heart continually fights against the imposed restrictions, refusing to give in completely. This internal struggle is often masked by an imperturbable facade, where "no one knows - and should not know - what is going on in his soul".

Just as Eisenstein had to navigate the contradictory demands of his time, leaving the impression of submission, in reality he maintained an inner resistance, refusing to abandon his artistic vision. Through his apparently conformist speeches and gestures, he subtly expressed his criticism and conveyed hidden messages, demonstrating that his submission was nothing more than a survival strategy in the face of an oppressive creative uniformity.

Leadership: Can you expand the meaning of your confrontations, offering a deeper interpretation of the internal conflict, culminating in a vision that transcends the immediate and exalts your ongoing struggle before the authorities?

In the difficult creative conditions imposed by a life full of trials and dissatisfactions, the artist (the director in this case) may find himself face to face with a difficult choice: to freely express his ideas and feelings through creation, risking attacks and ironies, or to adhere to the line imposed by the "system in vogue", thus sacrificing his artistic integrity for a less noble cause. In this case, the artist is not only faced with a personal struggle carried out in an uncertain atmosphere, between pride and prejudice, but also with a collective struggle, involving the entire artistic community of which he is a part.

An original artist does not submit to the preferences of others except in matters of respect and recognition of his work. Even if the directors use in their work subtle symbols and coded messages to communicate their unchanging beliefs, deep in their individual moral system, outwardly they must conform to official requirements, so as not to trigger reprisals. Considering the duality of artistic existence, we must emphasize that the tensions between individual freedom and social constraints are in fact unavoidable.

Therefore, Eisenstein's story becomes not only the account of a personal conflict, but also a reflection of the universal struggle of artists against the constraints imposed by the authorities. It expands the existential-professional significance of the director, offering a deeper and broader interpretation of his confrontations, and shows how, despite external recognition, his internal conflict and devotion to authentic art remain unwavering.

In leadership, submission is just a survival strategy in the face of creative uniformity. External recognition may mask internal conflict, but devotion to genuine art remains steadfast, bearing witness to inner strength and determination to pursue your potential.

No one knows what goes on in the soul of a director, but everyone watches his masterpiece and does not give importance to the hidden aspects that say nothing about the artist's struggle against the system. One thing is certain: if you want to express yourself fully, you must take the essence of your soul out of you and offer it to the world through a creation that transcends the immediate, giving an undeniable value to your spirit.

No Type Of Sacrifice Frightens Me

On November 26, 2016

Start looking for a sense of expression arising from what you are trying to build, without having at hand all the rights over the content that you are experiencing.

Eisenstein once said: "The first distant rumbles of revolutionary art in the making could be heard all around and throughout the heavens. My attraction for the mysterious activity called art was invincible, predatory, insatiable. No type of sacrifice frightens me."

Ready for any type of sacrifice to penetrate theatrical captivity, Eisenstein feverishly wandered through Moscow. The first sacrifice was trying to understand Japanese hieroglyphics with the purposes of being able to, thusly, remain in the capital. And then, giving up the home in Petrograd in return for a wandering without an obvious exit point, on the streets of Moscow. Up until the meeting with Strauch, Eisenstein had no shelter, no food, which one would receive on a card only if they worked somewhere or if they were students (but the University had not opened yet). 1920's Moscow had a dire shortage of food and warmth.

*Despite these tough conditions, the masses' thirst for culture, the people's enthusiasm for art gave the Moscow life an unusual warmth, an incandescence fueled by the flame of creative passion. Let us remember that in that time, famous Russian writer Ilia Ehrenburg did not lament for the total lack of paper, but rather wrote, as naturally as possible, novels and poetries on the back of old receipts. **

Leadership: Do you dare separate everyday life in an alternative way, following the habit of considering art as something near and accessible that never gets old?

What strengthens the bond between life and art, given on the one hand the conditions of development, and on the other hand the dynamics of social and moral phenomena, is the fact that all circumstances that propel you from one status to another are given functionality. It's about that version of the power that you have to show in the conditions of a decrease in the life of the world, the power to be someone else, which gives you the opportunity to connect to that exemplary personality that must remain in your creation.

Any situation, no matter how inappropriate at a surface level, can be seen in two ways. First, in terms of an alliance with "exaggerated efforts", between what you collect without large possibilities of transposing into a control of usefulness, and what you being to introduce in your own form of perception and knowledge starting from small habits.

Then, in terms of a serious intention of force assimilation of certain hidden parts from the meanings that the mind attributes to certain events, which creates new understandings, new very different teachings, whose sole indicator is that of: courageous confrontation.

Art is the output of the relationship between subject, frame and content. Art is a profile of leadership, a process of looking for a meaning of expression arising from what you try to build without having at hand all the rights over the content you wish to experience. With the consequence of replacing or modifying those initial or interim constants that lead to an exceedance of the limit that you can bear.

To separate yourself from everyday life in an alternative way, following the habit of considering art as something near and accessible, means to reserve your right of making modifications to the experimental content. A man who acquires the ability to rise to a high level of understanding and feelings, a mentality that finds support even in a reality mired by its own limits, is a great artist – the only one able to raise experiences to a high level of artistic approach.

Leadership is the alternative to adopting the psychology and coordinates of a personality who allows himself to have everything, or who crosses epochs to make room for the voices of other times to express their individuality, thoughts and ideas in the modern version.

No Type Of Sacrifice Frightens Me is the motto of every man ready to make any sacrifice in order to penetrate the captivity of art, beyond the limits conditions by the circumstances of life.

Leadership is an artistic approach of the gray nuance of life. Truly great men are accomplished artists because they are capable of maintaining and capitalizing their advantage of changing their nuance throughout their lives.

Not Everyone Can Be A Leader

On March 05, 2009

Be ready to explore your true potential, by developing your ability of taking risks in the attempt to inculcate in others your spirit full of strength and greatness.

As long ago, a military battalion commander who received the mission to defend a town north of Spain to see put in a desperate situation when, suddenly, his army was attacked by a much larger enemy. Noticing the bitterness with which the enemy soldiers pounce upon them, the commander mounted, and ran without saying anything to anybody, leaving his soldiers to handle how they could in front of the enemy.

Soldiers have immediately noticed their absence and the master had no choice, had to choose a replacement, that another commander. Finally, even if they were fewer in number have won the battle thanks to their new commander.

Leadership: Can you assign an attribute to represent you in a defining way without recognizing your vulnerability in an extreme situation that is the demonstrative part of a science without experimentation?

Sometimes leadership is like a ball: we run after a high position, and even when we catch it, we are kicking it away, because we cannot control it. In leadership, just as in football, some leaders, once coming into possession of the "ball" either lose it immediately, or they pass it to others of fear not losing it, or they shoot it - and only very few are scoring.

Just as in football, the essential element constitutes the scoring of the goal which, by establishing the differences of score, is giving a winner and a loser - so the essential element of your talent to lead constitutes on long-term, your ability to recognize the change and attitude towards them.

When and how are you capitalizing your own leadership potential? In the most difficult moments, by transforming your attitude and thinking - from a possible loser into a winner confident in his victory.

Leadership: Can you value your personality by ensuring the link between the image you associate with the idea of conflict and the limits of individual fulfillment associated with a self-image that corresponds to unexpected reactions?

Once you have been promoted into a management position you have to assume the role immediately, to deal with your new responsibilities and take measures if necessary to correct any problems, otherwise you risk being replaced. Indifference and the lack of responsibility are the two diseases that you need to avoid while you are in charge. If you don't constantly looking for ways to inspire trust to those who are under your command, if you are not by their side when they need you more, if you do not motivate and guide them towards a direction favorable to them, you will only draw their hate, anger and despise.

The leader's spirit gives other people strength. A talented leader has the capacity to train people in the direction he thinks, for accomplishing a common goal. To move the people first you have to win them on your side, to convince them that without your help they will not succeed in managing difficult situations.

You will never be able to win the respect, the admiration and loyalty of others if you are not capable of assuming the responsibility for solving the problems they are confronting and if you don't take the required measures in order to limit the problems. You cannot pretend that people do their job and to achieve their performance targets if you neglect your duties. And the most important obligation that you, as a leader, should assume is to inspire people to cultivate trust and desire to overcome themselves.

Leadership: Can you highlight the degree of association between the percentage of visibility growth and the degree of novelty of the outcome that makes you be yourself in as a profound way as possible?

When a leader is not serious and doesn't get involved directly in solving the problems, he is automatically changed from its job and another person is promoted. To lead a group of people is not a game; it's rather a burden, a very high duty that you must commit to. It is a professional and moral duty that you have to respect and to accomplish. It is your duty to be concerned about the people's future, their training and their motivation, guiding them in the right direction. On the other hand, if you become laissez- faire and run away from your new responsibilities, you will be labeled as "inappropriate."

It's a pity for the leader who has no courage, no will and no ambition, who doesn't get involved with all the responsibility in the problems and difficulties faced by those you lead. Such a person will not stay too much in the job he has. Power is held only by powerful leaders, who take a step forward in hard situations and know how to draw people after them.

The greatness of a man is measured by his attitude and his actions. Hence, be ready to explore your true potential, by developing your ability of taking risks in the attempt to inculcate in others your spirit full of strength and greatness.

The degree of novelty of the outcome that makes you be yourself in as a profound way as possible is given by the relationship between the perspective of how you manage your experience at a climax and the vision that inspires people's efforts to attenuate the effects of major changes that tend to occur.

Now We Are Free

On June 08, 2018

Learn to discover the meanings of life in the chiaroscuro of consciousness where the word confesses its attachment to the original thread of a true story, repeated ad infinitum.

My name, which the past leaves to the sun that is eternal, I, Juba, am just a remnant of the gladiator who once entertained the inhabitants of Rome with his suffering, with the strength to fight to the last drop of blood with the humiliation of dying in the name of many paradises that only follow hell. Every part of me testifies to a lucidity that is aware of the act committed against the moral values accepted by the light of pure faith.

Like me, any slave has the right to write his history without asking for a generous reward from God as a kind of commitment to ending a certain stage of life, and the beginning of a new way to follow at a time when angels no longer fly, because where there is no prayer the sky turns to stone. The deeds that the memory of my time and my heart will never erase are directed, with the good and the bad, only to those who are by my side in an adagio of lingering sadness.

There is a moment in the history of the world, an astral second that adds to the uninterrupted time that imagination bathes only in the works of the painters, a micro-matter from an unnamed universe that changes the determination and actions of the common man. The soul of a gladiator, deepening in an astonishing wonder: "What am I looking for here, I wonder?" on a realm of those who do not understand the reality of faith, as in a book in which you can only read, in short, a summary, it drives your body to the victory of a top class of society with great hardship.

What you manage to finish in the Colosseum is only accepted for you as a freedom to say YES, up to a certain point.

Had I been a little wiser than death, which I came across at every step, I would have probably bypassed the conditions and causes of my status and would have tried to force the act of free will to fulfill the commandments of divine power. Even so, my life would have become unbearable, because having a choice between eternity and ephemeralness, I could not catch a world of brave warriors and fighting women who I would accompany with love to the end of it. Only the present matters.

Leadership: Are you enrolling in events that want themselves to be many moments of reevaluating a position to a life that can be deciphered through the dimension of the soul's thrill heard only by faith in immortality?

With the strength that the lucky star gave me, I survived the sublime Quo Vadis behind a bloody story just to write with tears in my eyes those sad and regretful rows, that the sun rays, tangential to the surface of the Earth, dyed in the color of the leaves of the tree that was soothing in the breeze of a summer touch. Too bad my luck was not on the part of whom I owe my life to.

He who will read these lines will perhaps put them in the bosom of a lion heart that, in the same vein as Maximus Decimus Meridius, will break the stone wall of bondage and touch the heights of a notoriety never won by an emperor like Lucius Commodus, to revive a history of victory through struggle and suffering.

I myself envy Maximus for his ability to think, to struggle, to not give up, to believe in a single ideal that preserves his existence in a continuous verification of divinity, conferring him a superiority that in fact says: "If I were the Emperor, I would never behave as such with the slaves."

Leadership: Are you trying to get rid of defeating your anxiety under the action of response forces to produce events upon which only time leaves its mark?

I am leaning over the body which has turned the hero of a tragedy into a legend of fearless fighters, a cornerstone of the edifice upon which was built a bloody history, rethinking the representation of a reality that can be interpreted in different ways. Nothing stands in front of the destiny of a gladiator, even if you have won glorious victories, other than death.

The mortal has settled his affairs with life. As his hands and legs move convulsively, from his throat a deep growl being heard, his eyes almost losing their glow, his lips trying with a final effort to outline the only word that ultimately represents the greatest triumph of life: "FREEDOM".

The story of Maximus Decimus Meridius continues through the bloodshot echo of unimaginable adventures unfolding in a large amphitheater called the Colosseum because it was near a huge bronze statue, Colossus.

I suspect that in order to rule the whole of Rome, Maximus did not have enough skill, was not a genius of the effects of excesses of inspiration, because hitting shields and cracking heads is not enough in government, there is a need for a sort of wickedness neighboring with the madness that guides the masses towards a hysteria due to wrong causes. His purely spiritual satisfaction came from the consciousness of the power he had over his own body built specifically to fight.

As an author of these truthful rows, which praise the most sublime devotion, raised as a stone above the laws of a misunderstood world, by virtue of the rationality manifested in its universality, I do not regret for a moment the death of the hero who created whole legions of fans of a reality that will haunt history forever.

My only dissatisfaction is that I did not have enough time to talk to him more. He had a special way to look and treat people, things, events in immediate proximity, as if he was trying to master their reason in their continuous flow and metamorphosis.

Leadership: Do you consume yourself in a constant pendulum between the ability to rewrite your story and the extreme lucidity that you confess to your inability to give a new meaning to life?

The words exalted by history as a beautiful mausoleum, "My name is Gladiator", are passing through the wires of a chain of memories that always call the intentions of a soul of the chiaroscuro inscribed in the competition with his own limits, to compose together with the outcome of a rebellious destiny a new set of existential configurations. These will always be captured in vivid images by painters and writers, impacting the authentic experiences they offer.

I will never give up the man who always demonstrates his attachment. But it is too late to hope. All I have to do is look at Maximus with nostalgia, as the sunset does, just as heavy as it is beautiful. I shake his hand with awe and respect just before he closes his eyes forever. I feel the slip of his soul in eternity, a message coming from another world of the "Received" type, giving birth to a hope of time that turns the slave into an immortal god. Now you are free !

Good friend, I have always been with you in the Colosseum, in the short moments of the show of life and death, like diamonds that reflect their brightness to the sky, which after so many grinding operations carried out at extreme temperatures are processed in thousands of facets of an unclear understanding of existence, but which always shine, radiate, and are wonderful no matter how chipped they are.

I'm sure you will be resurrected in the distant future, under a different name or appearance. You will probably be met again in the form of the power of an alchemist who fights alongside matter, holding in his right hand the universal book of transmutation, with a blood red braid, as the cloak of gladiators, and in the left hand holding the shield of free consciousness, the mystery of faith in a clean thought.

The science of the gods is mute, but it leaves us with the power of interpreting the mystery of life. The only thought upon which I still have the power to reflect, and which concludes this account, will remain in the memory of time as an authentic profile of the gladiator who rewrites his story:

The soul will never hurt more than when you feel that you were not enough to change a world.

Now We Are Free is the motto of those who struggle to win their freedom of life, paying even with the painful cost of immortality. Get ready at any step to meet some events you did not expect, meant to change your destiny !

Number One

On February 22, 2010

Develop the dominant characteristics of your character, by treating yourself as a source of modeling other people.

Only five have remained alive. And the sharks, which had become „smarter" as a result of the experiments, had flooded almost the entire Aquatica underwater laboratory. They almost lost their hope. Russell Franklin, the main shareholder of the laboratory, who, in the past, had managed to save a group of people from an avalanche in the Himalaya mountains, tries to calm people down:

- We have to find a way to get out of here. First, we have to...

He did not even get the chance to finish, that, all of a sudden, for a moment, one of the sharks made a jump from the pool which connected with the exterior and grabbed him entirely.

The fear amplified. Tom Scoggins immediately started to feel icy shivers down his spine, his heart beats went wild when he saw the horrific scene. Like anyone who feels endangered, a "hold on" type of reaction started in him. Without a doubt, he was in a moment of extreme weakness.

- Jesus, it ate him ! I won't move from here. I won't move. Someone will come to help us. They'll get us out of here, and everything will be fine. I won't move from here, he said, hustling to a corner, overwhelmed with negative emotions, struck with the fear that he would share the same fate as Franklin.

Leadership: Do you exert your power on other people, awakening their positive stimuli

The people with leadership abilities come to light exactly in such difficult moments. Carter Blake, the shark trainer, could not just stand there. Nevertheless, as soon as he noticed Tom panicking, he got closer to him, talked to him and encouraged him, making him understand that, by staying there, he had more chances to die that by following him. Grappling Tom's right hand, he helped him get up, and they continued their escape.

It is very hard for a person to live with no hopes. Others have too much of it. Carter was given to Tom instead of hope because he had the firmness he was lacking. He had something superior in him, he had an extraordinary courage, which he proved countless times, a fact which made Tom to lay his possible salvation in his hands.

Changing does not come by itself, but comes through the involvement of people in action. By the power of his adventurous genius, due to his "win by every means possible" type of attitude, Blake got Tom on the right path, and consciousness gave him the power to continue.

Is your culture of leadership reflected especially in your attitude?

Tom's future and of the other survivors depended totally by one man, Carter Blake, number one in everything: when it came to courage, taking responsibility, firmness, taking initiative, readiness of mind and ingenuity. He was the only one capable of saving them. He was the only one who truly knew his duties. Furthermore, considering himself strong enough, he did not hesitate to put his life in danger for the others, his flair giving him an enormous helping hand in taking the best path to follow.

Just as an amputated arm is replaced by a perfect copy of the missing member, so and you, by your power of influence can replace human weaknesses and hopes to lead them to act in accordance with your thinking and attitude.

Can you take control of people's emotions and to counteract the negative effects of change? Do people trust you? Do you have the power to convince people that by your side they have a "chance"? Do you prove the presence of mind and courage in difficult situations? Do you have the ability to take control of their emotions, to revitalize their energies, and to take them out from that point, often paralyzing, which prevents them from acting?

Number one is the character who has a lot of self-control, who does not lose himself in critical situations and quickly finds solutions to get out of any standstill. He is the one who manages to mobilize people, giving them confidence and courage in order to overcome the difficult moments through which they inevitably pass. Are you such a person?

The degree to which you build yourself as a source of modeling other people (after your thinking and attitude) helps you develop the dominant traits of your character. Consequently, make in such a way that people would perceive you as the most reliable and efficient "component" of their full potential.

Observe Me With A Behind-The-Canvas Sight

On January 01, 2022

It is extremely difficult to penetrate with the artist's soul into the deep source, mysterious even to him, from which springs the creative instinct.

If a new year has begun, then he must begin with the memories of an Osiria rose, so delicate in living his days full of carols, full of emotions generated by events, contexts. Better than ever, I never realized his background of ingenuity and enthusiasm, hidden in every tremor of life that easily releases the warmth of the soul around the holidays.

What keeps awake the vibration of the embracing soul of so many beauties who never speak to people?

It's cold outside. Snow is spread everywhere, day and night, just as a rich sleep spreads over every thought, over every memory of the rose. Only my unexpected presence catches his attention. Through the eye of sight beyond seeing, he feels every breath of air, every vibration and radiation of heat around him, he feels every step that man takes for the present moment, but with an orientation towards the sacred, towards the unseen to the works of God, to those who are born and die.

I know this is hard to see. Unconsciously, of impalpable finesse, the rose conveys a message whose importance is demonstrated only in art: "You must insert a fact of life in a form coinciding with the fulfillment of your artistic incarnation."

The rose feels, reacts to stimuli, just as it feels to an artist whose formidable gift is to turn white into color, feeding on the wisdom of the palette that is loaded with the warm, relaxing light of eye-pleasing paints. Whereas this eye, full of beauty, hyper realistic, as if detached from a lunar landscape, combines abstract minimalist expressionism and the characteristics of elegant refinement in a unique design. There is nothing fundamentally mysterious or invasive about this sense, a wide field of means of expression through sensations, unless I take into account an indiscretion like Astonmedarhos, the manifestation of the freedom to find a similarity in nature.

Leadership: Can your creation contain a simple fact of life in a single image that manages to give birth to the feeling of being the best version of you in terms of unreal perfection?

Without a doubt about the reality of the sentient world, I continue to look at the rose as it does at the white of the snow: through a variable control of the intensity of feelings, through a continuous adjustment of light intensity, just as when the painter tries to pay special attention to capturing the details in the most accurate light possible. This painter strives hard to obtain a true result from his vision, especially if he manages to integrate with the spirit, with the energies of the earth, with the principle of full equality, in a story full of ingenuity and visual genius.

Something else needs to be said. The rose has a wide eye, as if to treat the world holistically. And he looks at me the same way I look at him: as an artistic expression of a recovering universe, always looking for new means of expanding the border area: between real and imaginary.

And as I look at him covered in the blanket of snow, just as he looks at me dreamily with starry eyes, I remember the "methodical" argument that the French esthetician Victor Basch firmly invoked: "It is extremely difficult to penetrate with the soul of the artist in the deep source, mysterious even for him, from which springs the creative instinct. The second argument is that the artist himself, before creating, contemplated and enjoyed himself."

And this is what the rose remembers about its beginnings in white and red, with the help of the auspicious sensations received in front of the landscapes captured by the phenomenon of persistence of the sight beyond sight. He remembers a creator transformed into a special man who, without focusing on the desire to dominate an image in duplicate, in the space-time relationship, manages to restore a certain state of mind from white to color.

Only such a man, in particular, manages to reproduce the intense expression of an emotional feeling, the feeling of unity: of being one with nature. The feeling of being your best version in terms of unreal perfection, in terms of metaphysical transcendence.

Leadership encompasses the artistic vision with which you have become accustomed in trying to adapt to a different way of life, in a context in which you need to emphasize your unique traits (and where the imaginary and the real intertwine).

Observe Me With A Behind-The-Canvas Sight if you want to unravel the mysteries of the spirit descended from other earthly worlds. Only a brilliant artist, who knows how to highlight the color of the light-dark space, serving the purpose of strengthening the effect of the colors of the soul and the feeling in an atmosphere of intimate rigor, has such an eye that can comprise two images in one.

In the worlds beyond this one there are infinitely more ways to feel...

Observe Yourself In Thoughts, Without Being Overshadowed By Them

On October 25, 2021

Stay consistent with what is essential to you: to belong to you, to overcome your need to identify with something different from yourself.

I hear the echo of my mind on the mist of the summer wind. And, most importantly, when you listen to something soothing, it is because your soul is there, in the sun, by the sea, by the sand, barely looking for that special something that will not consume you, a sparkle, a beautiful word, a contoured idea of a thought that crosses your mind and that you can only share with yourself. It all starts with a thought that appears in the field of your consciousness.

Yes. I like peace, just as I like the feeling of space of a galaxy, which is in turn part of the universe, being an important moment for the whole creation that thinking achieves in the wake of an uplifting, brave, stimulating dream, in an attempt to demonstrate their suitability for a clean and quiet environment. And if anything in me is a universe, then silence is just a part of an endless galaxy, with the metaphor of the consciousness of a symbol of the peaceful mind, of the regressive spirit, of the inability to understand the signs of the times.

And when you are seconded by the consciousness of a new universe, self-discovery related to the discovery of a universe that has truly become the universe, you become more adept at understanding the brightness of the sea that reflects the endless colors of sunsets, the image of a new encounter with yourself, the image of a new world, found far from the one for which you were prepared.

Leadership: Is the theme of your creation to find a rhythm of communication through yourself, a kind of accompaniment against the background of which certain sequences from an endless imaginary dialogue with the Other are highlighted?

It turns out that I am a fine observer of my thoughts, illuminated by a ray of sunshine in the endless *stream*of thoughts about myself, sorted and channeled in a single point, Tedudhenthelis, a perfect and omnipresent Here and Now. Just as someone is walking on the waterfront looking at you, so am I sitting on a deck chair watching my thoughts and feelings without judging them. It is a kind of distance that seeks closeness and communicates only through a kind of transcendent, curious, spontaneous empathy. The road to the Other passes through yourself...

But, especially, the picture I fall into, with the silence on the seashore, is all the more interesting as my thoughts are stopped in front of a book by the writer Simona Popescu, in which the following words are written:

"I am now far away, in the future. I speak from the heart of old age. I have memories of what hasn't happened yet. I reversed. It's an old, very old game. It could be called 'the old man rejuvenates'. In fact, it is not the past, the lost time you're looking for – because nothing is passed, nothing is lost – but a meaning in this tangle from which you feed and untangles you, the forgetfulness of a being, old and new, a kind of coral human bud, growing younger and older."

The sea looks at me too, with its thoughts. So are the shells, the sand, the sun, whose thoughts are carried to me by an experiencing of a feeling beyond words, a feeling of life experience that, no matter how long, takes place beyond age. And suddenly, in a flash of thought, I see in my memory the words that really haunt me: "What is important is the work you do with this confessional material that contains a transformation of old age into youth."

Leadership: What trait defines you, depending on what you see in this image in which you yourself create the possibility of being one with the person looking at you from its immanent dimension to the authenticity of a transcendental becoming?

It's pretty clear. I have discovered that I can meditate, have an inner state of peace, even if I think a thousand thoughts about the sea, the sand, the seashells and the sun. And I can become my own observer of my thoughts, identifying with the environment, but not like a chemist lighting a furnace, blowing from the belly, heating the crucible, analyzing and destroying the matter on which the spirit projects its forces and energies. But like a fragment of a kind of soul exchange that I witness from a distance. For my soul lives in the depths of the soul of the sea, of the sand, of the shells.

The symbol of undisturbed innocence, the perfect way to reflect my own emotions, the most complete peace, puts me in control of my thoughts, carries me from one context to another, opening another world connected to infinity.

The sand is unchanged, as are last year's shells. They remained in the same place, without remorse. The beaches have grown, but the sand is the same, the shells the same, only in a larger amount, I would say. And they all tread on the same sand, on the same shells, on the same beach, because time does not change much from one year to another in the work of nature. And in the place where I am lying on the deck chair, I feel the same peace as last year, the same fresh, playful, charming mist.

And if I wanted to be sand for a moment, at least as much as I would try to be a shell, as only alchemists manage to turn lead into gold by activating the strong currents of the spirit, then I would first ask the permission of the sea, because the beach belongs to her. But the old woman is much wiser than I am. Before I found in it the witness of my transformation into a time of shells that had become sand, the sea spoke to me simply as it spoke to the alchemists for hundreds of years:

– Shells and sand have always belonged to me. But man has never managed to learn how to remain consistent with what is essential to him: to belong to himself, to overcome his ego's need to identify with something different from himself.

The authenticity of a transcendental becoming refers to that invisible mirror of your ego that subtly affects you, that widening or extension of the ego, the illusion of ascending above all that is real, that what makes you feel as being someone else is exactly what inspires you (but also hurts you).

Observe Yourself In Thoughts, Without Being Overshadowed By Them if you want to live in the dimension of art. This is what I did when, along with my thoughts, felt so comfortable in the sea breeze and became like the sand or shells that surround me, synonymous with the ageless time that managed to reveal to me another side of my artistic activity.

In this sense, one trait defines me entirely: focused mental attention.

Odyssey Of The Mind

On September 11, 2016

Take into account what you do in relation to what you think, also having the possibility of launching yourself into a total commitment with spiritual facts.

It seemed that my memory narrows, as blood vessels narrow, through laying of harmful substances, with a complex role, which I needed, substances from a certain thing that cannot be separated by the thing itself, of which I had not a single correct idea. I couldn't remember anything different from the mind of an artist who knows how to make the connection between symbolic art and visual image, to the same extent science and imagination, enjoying the idea of Ego always wearing another identity.

The diagnosis could very well have been difficult, taking into account the early disorders of symbolic life, which inspired me or, simply, of which I could not go about without. The importance of destroying my own being in a search for something in particular, by turning off vital momentum, through the failure of launching myself into a total commitment with spiritual facts, become the sketch of a pure phenomenology, the meaning of a latent philosophy.

Of course, the cause was an extension of the indefinite of forgetfulness, the removing of elements of meaning that emphasized the distinctive traits of my identity and the reason of a unique existence. The signs malignant of a serious intoxication with exaggerations and distortions of perception on reality, in the outpouring of the biased tears of mental intensities, fought harder due to the most varied aspects of a pain that persisted in a certain area of battle with myself, because of a large clot of doubt, proved an insurmountable imperfection.

Leadership: Can the memory from which you create your mental figment be accounted for by a creation called "confession through culture" that has its source in an experience of self-presence in the reality of an imaginary world?

The following is written in a book by the writer George Neamțu: "The role of identity is an imaginative view of the self in a certain position, often a rather idealized view of oneself." This is exactly what happened to me, without knowing exactly what it was with me, because everything in me was revolting, fighting, wanting to change.

It is clear that something is not right with me, in discordance with the importance of the phenomenon of dominant transmission of a revelation that generated a symptomatology of the deficit of self-ness, a failure not assumed in the processes of articulating the self. The myth of perfect vulnerability, irrepressible, the one that stimulated the production of chaotic images in my mind, presenting a vague tolerance to scanning from different angles of living, seemed to become the spiritual basis of my entire existence.

It was the obsessive preference for the untold, to the benefit of happenings lived muted, in favor of subtle observations, self-knowledge, insights, inner perceptions. As if my appetite to strew reminders would always be switched on with the verge of veiling into a unique experience, which coincided with exiting the relationship with the world.

In the end, I think that everything I have reported here can best be summarized by the writer Simona Popescu in the novel "Exuvii": "My belief is that identity, personality, lose consistency if they give up the previous steps. We are not just what we are, but also what we were. And the true abysses of the being are hidden in the past, in the alien experiences of the avatars who bore our name."

Leadership: Can you use an ideal image of reality, by modifying the "Odyssey of the Mind" model, so that the message you convey to acquire the connotation of a particular epic creation?

Radiologist Charles T. Dotter tried, in 1964, to dilate stenosis peripheral arteries through atherosclerotic lesions, using progressively larger catheters. The endothelial lesions caused by the catheter could generate embolism or even occlusion. The method was, in this form abandoned, but the insight of using a balloon catheter also belonged to Dotter. (Medical Journal '90)

The data presented by changing personality, from a context of getting closer to the conceptual system of living by analyzing the echo of life, starting from a context of distancing from the rest of the world, demonstrates the success obtained in resolving your own ambivalence.

First, you achieve that symbiosis of elements of meaning that emphasize the distinctive traits of your identity and the reason of a unique existence. Then, you experience the consequence of estimating your own condition through the direct observation of a phenomenon of depth, hidden, invisible, which is not really a state of sociability.

It's an effort of seeking a desired result, as a manifest of your own creativity, later fulfilling the instructions of a synchronized method for an effect of the tendency to modify, improve, improvise, create and forge. And this makes you eager to continuously improve what you already know.

Leadership: Does the image of the reality that defines you in the creation of your thoughts highlight the expressive portrait of an Ego that assumes the role of a "higher court of thought" in a grand version of the conception of the soul, the world and life?

Ambivalence is necessary to recognize the importance of what you learn strictly from yourself, with a leading role in the development of the competence for self-assessment. Leadership, to answer the question "How does the temptation of surpassing yourself start?", use a model of self-assessment, built dependent on what you know about yourself, creating the phenomenon of belonging to a sort of fulminant discovery on the line of solid assumption of reasons for success.

The symbol of the beginning of a path towards maturity and leadership is the result of this ambivalence, which can be seen in the satisfaction you feel when you realize that you can expect so much more from yourself, even when no one can help you.

The one who operates a direct observation on himself is not only a man endowed with the ability of modifying his perception that persists in a certain area of battle with himself. He is rather a man – interesting to point out this aspect – who takes into account what he does in relation to what thinks, also having the possibility of launching himself into a total commitment with spiritual facts.

My conception of the soul is between thoughts of a cultivated, sensitive, creative Ego and inner transformation of the protagonist in a unique creation, in search and acquisition of intellectual beauty.

Odyssey Of The Mind is that form of knowledge derived from your own ideals, aspirations, struggles with yourself, which can be held accountable in the face of reality through subjective means (occurring only in consciousness) and later objective ones.

The one who uses an image of reality, being fully aware of the "Odyssey of the Mind" model, usually manifests that obsessive preference for the untold, to the benefit of happenings experienced muted, to the use of subtle observations, insights, inner perceptions.

It is a kind of maturity in the area of self-knowledge, becoming increasingly deeper and increasingly purer, on the background of the consciousness and sensation that you can ask more of yourself in order to become more than what you are.

Olympic Flame

On March 23, 2018

Learn to connect with yourself, always motivating yourself to maximize what defines others like you.

I listen to "Dj Tiesto – Olympic Flame", from the pure astonishment I experience in the face of a complicated intervention of art in the utterance of a new way of thinking specific to the aesthetics of a confession that is more valuable when viewed from the practical side of the forms of relating to alterity, than when it keeps me in place in a figment of the emotional subconscious.

Many times, I've tried to feel the rhythm of this song in the range of perceptions of myself, within the consciousness of a destiny emancipated from eternity, from which the beginning of an adventure into the great infinity integrated into the visual field of the philosophy of life, transposed into a literature that tends to discover new facets of extraordinary artistic evocation.

I constantly listen to it as much as the artist carefully revisits the painting before translating it onto the canvas, without the fear of telling directly to my mind a single part of the universe known as living – the eternal art of nuanced, intellectual expression, which brings me finally to that imperative, "remember yourself" in the great coverage of the artistic image placed in a fictional plane.

Leadership: Are you under the pressure of the creative act to reconsider the concept of POWER with all its echoes, looking at others as being "Different but equal to you" in a context of authentic living that you have to come back to?

It does not take long for you to discover that my literary genre, demanding great finesse, is subject to the combustion of trance, techno and house, sometimes rock or slow, between allegro and presto, culminating in an andante used to illustrate the unity of an organic world. A world demonstrated and justified by some shadows walking on a cloth with rare fabric, through which the artist sketches in his mind what he wants to draw.

They often go from one point of view to another, the overall picture being the only way to decipher a meaning that often escapes the fierce minds that always forget that genius is a mysterious star that comes out of the natural context of nature and which artists admire without binoculars through a huge window called "perceptual experience" or "optical illusion".

Tiesto is the correspondent of the artist who reveals his own existence in order to make the knowing of the self progress and to place art in social reality, he is my counterpart in the realm of music, and he does not even suspect this. He does not even know me. Yet. Perhaps only when he will be able to compose a new chorus from my writings he will realize just how small the world is.

He is my auditory and visual side, I complete his originality through the meaning I give to the alert rhythm in which sounds seem to be collinear with the points in a universe where the symbol does not need protection.

My writings, covering the tunes of his songs, are imagined by an energetic transfer of the formulas of defining and promoting an invincible art through its uniqueness as a kind of close connection between the thousands of generations that preceded us and the thousands of generations that will come. I did not forget that in another life I was most probably a musician.

Leadership: Is the representation of your own inner experience a good opportunity to attract attention, in a context of great visibility, on the existence of an omniscient and eternal entity?

Beyond the reflection of the sounds propagated in a long string of words, beyond the thoughts that an energetic construct raises, beyond all that is temporary, there is a formless adhesion of the Infinite that announces the intrinsic presence of a diffuse hyper-sign, harmonized in a universal intelligence worthy of an artist who strives to depict an omniscient entity according to the motto: "Man is the measure of all things."

In Greek, Amphisbaena means "which going two ways". I assume this term by converting it into a single signal to be transmitted further, amplified by the lively experience of an experience that defies the passage of time.

As a result, they begin to put on the forefront of creation two different ways of making art: through sounds (the first movement of creative power) that determines the meaning given to the divine sparks inside me, and through the power of generating the ideas they have to always create new universes. Of which, you too reader, are now part of.

A group of sounds has at least one meaning for me, as for Jorge Luis Borges: "Glory be with the One who does not die ! "

Leadership: Is the art of knowing yourself to find your reflection in a form of creation that builds another identity in terms of a multiplication of the present?

Every time I listen to "Olympic Flame", I feel the nostalgia of the book I must write, a true saga between the look cast upon the art world and the genealogy of the self that verifies the fulfillment of the promises made by God to those living out their lives in two different but united worlds, but united by the same creative approach.

I am a writer among musicians, a sculptor amongst painters, a god amongst mortals, a past absorbed in a present that is debating its future, I am Borges' rigorous sand book transposed into Shakespeare's memory. I am Tiesto in a constant search for the deepest meanings of music, translated into a sum of words dressed with the emotions of an experience of sincerity.

All things will remain what they are, the stone will remain a stone, words will remain words. I, among the echoes of another being, will remain the only variant that will make me feel above all, the possessor of infinite knowledge, the creator and his shadow. I will remain the Tiesto of a sound continuously ringing on the axis of time that acts as a bearer of an unexpected quantity of forms of expression of the inner universe.

Undoubtedly, I feel that I will return to a personal approach of the song "Olympic Flame", in an emotionally expressive way, in an original way of making art, individualizing myself with the painter's courage to avoid what is too well-liked. But why it is so, I do not know. The flame must probably be maintained in the great Olympics of the stars in the world of eternity.

I will find myself when I come back.

The great masterpiece of universal creation can be perceived as a continuous twist between two or more particular identities that assume a history of the "eternal" presence in the world.

Olympic Flame highlights your reaction to a situation requiring the choice: to be a continuous present in human mentality or to be a future in the past of your memories?

On Both Sides Of Leadership

On June 12, 2016

Stay devoted to the progress of science and creation, in the context of a position that will present equality to the rest against the rest of the world.

I was trying to find a picture made by a painter who knows how to discover the charm of anonymous corners of nature so that I can see myself closer to a wider science different from "the science of language". To find out the secret of the mysterious contact between the logic of the exception to the rule and generating models of thinking that no one knew about means to cover all possible combinations of a process of evolution that could've constituted a sufficient basis for prolonging the orientation of knowledge, in a complex dimension of my being: towards superiority.

Sometimes, I didn't recognize myself. I seemed to be like a sculptor who tries to create a figure out of a slab of unpolished stone, found by chance on a barren land. Undoubtedly, I was very inventive, but the practice of inventions meant to make visible what was invisible for other minds, rival and suspicious, which tried to understand my reasoning. Through the efforts of reaching a high capacity of expanding the admissible, a colossal step towards a fascinating horizon could be glimpsed.

Any placing surface of a concept in an artistic perspective, based on a thinking that can at any point place a comma where others place a period, symbolizes a space of creation because, as we have seen in the famous world of "3D Illusions", the color is reduced to a visual constraint on the aesthetics of the urban society, mired by the agitated and limited daily life.

In such a case, I felt privileged by the remarkable contribution I could bring to a life of art that captures only the process of processing images with virtual reality content, identifying links between what remains unchanged in time and what changes through the language of things. The art of a painter is the close view of a link between the object of continuous evolution and the object of an intellectual vision.

The superiority of s creation lies in the attention you place on the location of the vision of a reality that overwhelms you in a demonstration of mastery in the handling of all the virtues of science.

As Racine hoped by means of the play "Phèdre" to reconcile tragedy with a number of famous characters through their piety and doctrine, so too was I delving into a level of production of knowledge trying to reconcile two antagonistic forces: Myself and The Rest of the World.

This was my tragedy, the tragedy of a fulminating and unforgiving ascension, like a dive in a water heavier than lead, from which had to come out the depth of my own person, the highest of virtues, and especially the boundless power of rising to the surface. And later, above everyone else.

I could not overlook the duties of a leading mind, opener of ways, based on the heed "Do everything in your power for your transition towards superiority to be as smooth as possible."

To this end, I started doing a sort of extract from an alternation of the two forces: Myself and The Rest of the World, combining the elements of both faiths, which I would use in identifying inconsistencies and causes of risk that could prevent me from reaping the rewards of creative work.

But a true artist still has to make a demonstration of mastery in the handling of all the virtues of science, the most important being the sincerity with which he manifests his adherence to a subject of public debate and openness to the will of God, to recognize in everything, especially in the vile destinies of life, the opportunity to give fruit for eternity.

Leadership: In your efforts to reclaim the masterpiece that of relationships that directs future science do you tend to opt for unity between "the expansion of the admissible" and "the extension of directing knowledge towards superiority" ?

Future Science in the act of creation is related to 3D and 4D technologies, of this I had to be sure before I present my references vis-à-vis the way of tracing the coordinates of a new artistic language development. I do not know the position of others about my way of looking at the art of the future, but my stance towards orienting in a space of expression that does not fit with evolution is to be a servant for a flock that blindly listens without ever wondering why the direction always changes.

Beyond all laws and judgments, I would make regarding matches of modality, places, time, ideas, situations in which we are forced to yield to the conventions of an increasingly aggressive world that tries to impose its limits, maybe we should seek and find a meaning for them in the context of the life we live. Especially in the context of a position that favorably differentiates us from the rest of the world, while also presenting equality.

However, despite the proximity between certain beliefs, which makes us consider ourselves equals, there exists in each of those devoted to progress a special element, inner, original, one that is necessary for us to perceive and highlight if we want to color the painting of a success, the escape from an oppressive daily routine. With the risk of seeming unfaithful to the world.

This element, by its very nature differentiable, this special particularity expressed as a unique content of leadership, in the context of an acute necessity of affirmation as a competitive and dynamic player in a world in constant reconfiguration, is represented by the tendency towards the union between "the expansion of the admissible" and "the extension of the orientation of knowledge" towards superiority.

The science that generates a unique thought is a testimony of the profound conviction with which that characteristic of the mind manifests itself to transform any content of knowledge and even life into an object of art, projecting it in front of your eyes as an unprecedented world.

The Admissible, placed in contact with many things, is a triumph of creation, able to be designated and conceptualized as a presence of an expected positive outcome. It places creation on the highest peak of the existential and professional arc, as an intensification of man's desire to put their knowledge at the world's disposal, in service to society, giving a good example through the way of relating to itself and understanding itself in its possibilities of being.

Today, increasingly often, the example of a creator is reduced to secondary characteristics, due to the tumultuous representatives of the world whose central point of interest is not originality, not the quality or durability of a creation, but only the possibility to sell, regardless of effects.

In this equation intervenes the role of an artist put in the position of a leader. This role is played increasingly often in two ways: the transmitter and the receiver.

The transmitter is the man who supports the expansion of the admissible, truly being a quality of authority in the field. He doesn't necessarily reveal the way in which something needs to be done, such as a work of creation, but rather offers cues about what exactly is being done as a form of personal promotion. The transmitter gets fundamentally close to the idea of valuable consumption as an object of consciousness.

While the Receiver allocates these cues to activate the resources to create, in an attempt to highlight the essential from the content of its art.

The creation that you associate with an image from which you need to inspire yourself to trace a predictable horizon in which science could reach the performance of an epochal discovery has as a first form of manifestation the making of a miracle called "universal language" that transcends any cultural barriers.

On Both Sides Of Leadership, directed towards progress and innovation, is the unity between "the expansion of the admissible" and "the extension of the orientation of knowledge towards superiority", followed by the two positions: transmitter and receiver. An artist put in the position of a leader must be superior in both stances.

The extension of orientation of knowledge towards superiority can be attributed to the attempt of reconciling two antagonistic forces: Yourself and The Rest of the World, in an equation in which the best outcome can be obtained only if you manage to identify the inconsistencies and causes of risk that may prevent you from reaping the rewards of creative work.

One of the obstacles that prevents you from reaping the rewards of creative work is to obtain the element of novelty, without perceiving the direction of the world's development. The highest risk is to create your own style of thinking and creation, avoiding the trends of the times through originality.

On That Side Of The Mirror That We Don't See

The artist of a boundless world concentrates on a small image, then daily repeats a pattern of observing the same image with another abstraction, that is, from an inner observation.

I'm holding a mirror. And do you know what that means? It means that I don't have to hold two mirrors in my hand to see what I can see very well with one. And even the mirror, as it is, small, ennobled, idealized, does not need two people to reflect their face in it to realize how useful it is to the whole world. Because if a single person looks in it, and sees himself differently than the others, then all the other mirrors in the world will be envious of him.

Thus, with all the apparent unity of vision of all mirrors, I assume another reason for admiration for the brilliance of the mirror I now hold in my hand, with its wonderful image effects. How can I see myself in it if I try to explore that side of the mirror that I don't see?

I still persist in considering that all that I observe in myself, according to the art of using the reflection of the mirror as a source of wonder and admiration, as it is expressed in the field of artistic compositions, is the product of the universal capacity of the mind's eye to reach the grace of things holy.

Alas, and if I could mirror myself in her soul, in her joy, see how she looks at me when I look at her with ageless eyes, maybe I would be able to make the chance of space-time dilation fruitful. In the present case, reflection equates to contemplation, unifying and deifying, springing from an Axprissteken– a call for that which has no voice and yet speaks in all that is, a path that leads to the realization of the present moment, to the annihilation of all causality.

Leadership: Can you ensure a better "visibility" of your own sui-generis, regardless of the angle in which you place your Ego on the middle part of an image that leads through the "sensible" to a transparent estimation of reality?

And whenever I look at myself in the little mirror, looking at her with the eyes with which she knows how to look at herself, I reconfirm my availability for a dialogue with myself. And I tell myself only this: here everything lives, everything breathes and desires, as in a poem of light and beauty that the optical ecstasy carries in flight with the angels. No, I am not referring to that quality of the mirror to simply reflect, but to that characteristic feature that began to develop in her: the conscious interpretation of everything she hears from her interlocutors.

Listening carefully to the monologues of the one reflected in her, she says nothing. The mirror is still under the effect of a very strong experience, under the effect of silence. The time will come – she thinks in her terrible silence – when I will reflect deeply on all this, and if I acquire the ADAB (the science that encompasses all the philosophy of the world), I will not be content to learn them from the reflection of others, but from their own mouths.

In fact, this is how I began my monologue, making a parallel with the artist's work, full of a feeling of happiness, youth and freedom: I invested knowledge and affections in certain material, visual configurations, so as to create a double of myself.

In this game of approximations of an ideal place of "conversation" with the work of the mirror, this Enoizaerhos: revelation of something extraordinary that awaits its mysterious destiny, I can tune in to the voice of the universe. Speaking to me like a saint, looking at me through the focus that always keeps the artistic movement alive, with an almost unbearable intensity that leads to a "dilation of the mind's eye", the mirror still has an ace up its sleeve: it can encompass the beauty of the sky of summer with her solar gaze.

Leadership: Can the image gained through honest self-reflection bring out the expression of your individual creativity, as well as a necessity for expanding your vision beyond your limiting beliefs?

I'll say it another way. The mirror looks at me as it looks at the sky, through a whole range of shades, but especially through a perfect optical illusion, so through the technique of forced perspective, so as to create hidden models or images. When she looks at me, with that sidelong look, trying to mask her astonishment and perhaps, the unspoken thought, she seems to see a physicist rising above the world she describes through a coordinate plane with an optical system for rendering an image that seems unreal, creating the illusion of three-dimensionality. The physicist's paradox is thus transposed, when the human mind seeks to understand its own functioning from the inside.

Therefore, the expression of my individual creativity is the transition from one environment to another, from one reality to another. It refers to the influence that an image has on my sensibility, having artistic reception only when the viewer of my image tries through the sensible to penetrate into the intelligible.

I think the mirror recognizes me as the "Man of Lights", the mirror image of the representation of the world that only a physicist like Newton elaborates. According to a secret hidden in Newton's Chest, this Man of Lights believes he can know himself as he believes he can know the world. But, confined within his limits, he leaves aside everything that escapes his consciousness. However, only the mirror can determine how balanced the perception of a double image is, just as astronomers can determine the mass, age, chemical composition, and many other properties of a star by observing its motion through space.

Looking into the mirror, gazing into a world that virtually extends beyond the framework of time and space, I could see a reflected image of the wisdom of divinity and the philosophy of Paradise, formed by the light emitted or scattered by them and reflected by the mirror to the eyes that need it. This effect gives the illusion that I myself exist behind the mirror or (sometimes) in front of it, as an additional optical indicator to show a certain star or constellation, simultaneously with my orientation in this earthly world.

In leadership we will always come across this aspect: inspiration comes from inside or outside the artist depending on the relationship he has with himself, with the unreal world and with his own real world.

I found myself On That Side Of The Mirror That We Don't See before writing this article. Proving an ability to understand logic that no one else possesses, the mirror revealed my last wish, before reflecting not only my face, but only my soul, always young and dreamy:

"I'd like to learn to be like you. I'd like to be the apple of your eye. To see what only you can see in yourself when you look back at me."

On The Other Side Of The Height

On March 08, 2015

Put in work your power of penetration of "Evil" and "Good", taking into account the peculiarity of consciousness that carries the torch of the obligation to report in a broader context.

They had just reached the top of the hill Villejuif, from where Paris appears like a somber sea tossing its millions of phosphoric waves into light. The count stood alone, and at a sign from his hand, the carriage went on for a short distance. With folded arms, he gazed for some time upon the great city. When he had fixed his piercing look on this modern Babylon, which equally engages the contemplation of the religious enthusiast, the materialist, and the scoffer:

-Great city, murmured he, inclining his head, and joining his hands as if in prayer. I believe that the Spirit of God led my steps to thee and that he also enables me to quit thee in triumph; the secret cause of my presence within my walls I have confided alone to him who only has had the power to read my heart. God only knows that. I retire from thee without pride or hatred, but not without many regrets; he only knows that the power confided to me has never been made subservient to my personal good or to any useless cause. Oh, great city, it is in thy palpitating bosom that I have found that which I sought; like a patient miner, I have dug deep into thy very entrails to root out evil thence. Now my work is accomplished, my mission is terminated, now thou canst never afford me pain nor pleasure. Adieu Paris, adieu !

His look wandered over the vast plain like that of some genius of the night; he passed his hand over his brow, got into the carriage, the door was closed on him, and the vehicle quickly disappeared down the other side of the height in a whirlwind of noise and dust.

Leadership: Do you follow that landmark which by itself dictates what you have to do, along with the effort to maintain a balance between what's happening to you and your reaction to it?

There is within the convention between the moral views and self-realization, to the extent in which the man evades the deceitful collapse that may affect in depth the foundation of his destiny, a close relationship between regret, lessons and oblivion. This relationship that is developing specifically at a certain time to a certain cause shakes from the very foundations that landmark of "ahead", revealing the man the certainty to be situated right towards broadening the horizon of life, without departing of his mission.

Before setting the basis for your assessment of your position of power, you must relate to a certain level of representativeness in terms of fulfilling a role of great importance in the evolution of your dimension of an "entity of spiritual nature". This is controlled by a larger separate entity that lives its own life, independent and separate from the lives of various individuals.

Within the "height" you have to achieve, meaning the maximum of power and virtues you can reach in a limited life, making you forget the past and painful memories, you are compelled to act on your own in the name of a noble ideal, in the name of that "what should I be"?

You begin contributing to reaching that height by learning to take into account what exists within you by relating to what has happened to you, in a eulogy brought to the art of changing into a gigantic triumph of Good that, even if through absurdity, cannot be defeated. This good is reconstituted from what truly hurt you, accepting the situation of not resisting the blows of fate, as in a love you regret, but in this manner preparing the stage for a different choice, for a later "explosion" that will guarantee you a maximum, slightly fatalist impact.

The landmark by which itself dictates you what you have to do is a revelation of the spiritual nature that places you on God's side. As somebody else said on the internet, God's greatest gift, the creation in His image and likeness, that is, the subjectivity of man in the personal "I", places man in analogy with the Being of God.

The Miracle of a New Life is the symbolic embodiment of the archetype of the self that can be idealized by supplementing the failures of previous experiences and beliefs. And God is the way to find yourself in a more comprehensive plan of spiritual life.

And only taking into account that peculiarity of conscience carrying the torch of a reporting obligation in a broader context, putting in work your power of penetration of "Evil" and "Good" without clinging to preconceptions, you'll be able to reach at the quality of thought to perceive the greatness that does not just exist in God's creation, but also to grow in His plan.

As regards leadership, we can distinguish two criteria by which we can judge it: the degree of importance of the leader, that is amplifying his own echo so as to bear fruit as long as possible, likely to generate fortuitously certain inconvenience that it may cause some not grant the recommendation "Very Good". And the degree of benevolence or "necessary evil", namely the extent he is able to contribute to the development of other individuals – to the cancellation of their shallowness in thinking and feeling, and placing them on a path of non-collision with true values.

Are you the truth or not, as you follow that landmark by which he himself dictates you what you have to do. This landmark, welcomed, deserved and equitable, even if it requires a critical remark, it is represented by what you transmit, by who you are, by what you believe about God, about the purpose of your Life and about your Soul.

When a great actor forgets his role, the whole piece falls. Leadership requires as its fundamental law of his own exigencies a clear recognition of the distinction between mission and role to help restore the clarity of "brightness" of the ordinary individual – of the possibility to be generous, capable of lofty sentiments - even at the cost of his abandonment.

Departing from someone or something is a necessary experience for a good wave propagation called "Forgiveness" even if it is painful for both sides.

The soul can open the intuitive reality of what you actually represent in a broader continuation of life, by reference to a superhuman norm: "someone always watches you from above".

On The Other Side of The Height is the man who has passed through all stages of development to reach a higher status, but who is forced to abandon the midst, the factor by which he was formed so as to emerge from a new test called "remorse".

One Cannot Reach Knowledge Without Education

On April 15, 2020

Focus on what you can control so that you can regain a sense of control over what is happening to you.

My revelation, however, did not have the blinding light of supreme knowledge, but rather resembled the pestilential, unreal green of the chapel, which made me feel guilty and oppressed. It was not God speaking in me, it was just all my thoughts decanting and becoming clear, making me understand that the deepest doctrine of the Church is not inevitably in contradiction with thought, science and reason. This understanding, however, did not help me at all, because I did not feel God in any other way. I only knew that the Church is the law, the order and the way, indispensable for the common man, who, without education, could not reach knowledge and therefore only had to believe. The corruption of one of its members did not corrupt the Church, because it was built by men, and man is a limited being and subject to all the laws of a finite world. Many congregations, many monasteries may have become too mundane, so they deserved people's ridicule, but I now understood why so many talented people had become monks and given up their former lives.

*Most were content with order and faith and did not need more, but that was not and could not be enough for everyone, and I was one of those who could never be satisfied with that. From here came the incurable feeling of guilt that did not give me peace, that sadness that overshadowed all my happiness. I was asked more than the others. Something in me demanded more of me than others, no matter how hard I resisted. It was a ruthless and unshakable command, but I didn't know where it came from and I didn't want to give up. So be it, I thought, let this be my science and let all my efforts be in vain.

Leadership: Can you imprint a movement on what is immutable and ubiquitous, by revealing a knowledge based on the interpretation of one's own image through ambiguity and concealment?

Everything we think, we say in the same way, even if the words are covered by an authentic Christian mysticism, is due to a supreme knowledge springing from the need to learn from errors and mistakes, that is, from the need to make up for certain limitations inherent in the human condition. We become harsh with ourselves when we do not rise to the advanced level of knowledge that can cause us to change our standard of living, or abandon the condition of spectator in favor of participating in a highly successful story.

It is still thinking, science and reason that show us that everything that surrounds us and shapes our psyche and daily habits, for every bit of existence and uniqueness, is interposed to a decision that can produce an effect of "revelation beyond the fence", if and only if the "fight or flight" reaction intensifies. Basically, revelation is what happens in our minds about a certain change when the deeds we commit accelerate the random movements of singular events and phenomena.

Out of the need to maintain a high level of knowledge at all times, we invest in the education of the mind and soul, but at the same time focus on that unseen intervention by which "Divine Intervention" provides people with self-knowledge and complements natural self-knowledge. Or what is immutable and omnipresent is closely connected with what the mind can capture beyond the reality that is harsh or surprising, too little accepted by many, namely that the highest meaning we can attribute to life is the opportunity to discover the universe of science. The people behind the experiments best understood the rationality of the universe and the true purpose of life.

Or the true purpose of life is not to know happiness or love, but to feed the accelerated expansion of the universe with new creations, ideas, discoveries and inventions, but also with feelings and plans, with momentary feelings and memories. The highest love comes from the area of science, from our spiritual knowledge, and not from that state in which you have the impression that everyone is yours, when in fact you have contributed nothing to its development.

The true education of the scientist is found in the process by which he develops his ability to relate to increasingly large areas of existence, such as entering a reality that is configured from the ability of the self to project itself outward as a kind of substitution of God.

(This is also the essence of the book "Dr. Moreau's Island" written by H.G. Wells).

In Conclusion: Knowledge based on the interpretation of one's image through ambiguity and concealment is a reality based on the example of a life characterized by a lack of real self-acceptance, meaning that you are not able to perceive your true value (it can be gained through a revelation like: "Focus on what you can control so you can regain some sense of control over what's happening to you.")

One Cannot Reach Knowledge Without Education, especially if education is not synonymous with conscious, organized action, carried out in front of a reality difficult to accept, but which once understood frees you from the limits of a world ruled by illusions, and unable to understand anything else apart from their own fears and needs.

A man of science is a follower of the philosophy that man's duty is to reach the image of God through the five universal experiences: creation, discovery, invention, research and transformation.

One Second Dedicated To The Resurrection

On November 22, 2012

Bring the living into the extremely complex structure of the Human within you, well-delimiting those molecular links between "to be" and "not to be".

Before reading the following, please answer a question. What would you prefer to be: an ocean or a pearl?

The "Choice" of Vincent was not guaranteed at birth. He did not have a high genetic factor. There was nothing remarkable about his progress. From his early childhood, he came to consider himself as the others regarded him. A chronically ill person. Frail. Unable to achieve any performance in any field. The rocky border of his life did not offer him any gap that would allow the access to its interior, could not be pierced by any talent, by any particular feature.

While his younger brother, Anton, was a perfect son, of whom any parent would be proud. He had no excuse to fail at something. In particular, he was equally remarked as a brilliant student and an excellent swimmer. Performance after performance at everything, alike an artist invited to take part with all his feelings in all that life offers to him. Full of talent, endowed with authority, with a great curiosity, a strong desire for affirmation, tenacity and perseverance.

Their favorite game was the "Chicken". When their parents were not watching them, they used to swim in the ocean as far as they could. A kind of bet. It was more about who was first to give up and swim back to shore. Certainly, Vincent has been always the "chicken". He was always the loser.

Leadership: Have you practiced the ability to match the role assigned to your life with the skills of the TEST day that says "Start" to a new beginning?

However, one day, when the two brothers played the "Chicken" something happened. Something amazing. Something, which did not let the man to be like before. Anton and Vincent decided to cut the skin of the big toe with a shell, as blood brothers do. A small cut both out blood. In a moment Vincent made the gesture. But Anton - a confusing fact - hesitated. He takes the shell in his hand, looks carefully, and throws it without respecting the deal.

And only then, at that moment of pure awakening, Vincent, like a man, who was blithely under the influence of an irresistible force, realized that through his veins flowed something else. A very rare blood type, a brave and hot blood. As a kind of insurance policy against cowardice. A perfect state of maintenance of his entire Ego.

Suddenly, a new power aroused his entire spiritual content, his beliefs, values and behavior. Through the deepest fibers of his being, of the being, who apparently with all the efforts made, could not achieve only just the hypostasis of a trivial character on the stage of life, entered and has materialized that mysterious fluid of communication between him and someone else. An Alter-Ego. A petty power, only in its infancy, but a Hercules in the cradle.

The difference between them was that Vincent had a high resistance to pain and suffering. While Anton was sensitive to this chapter. One of them will be propelled by pain and suffering, and will pull down the other one.

Leadership is a symbol of the impossible made possible in the equation with two unknowns that turn life into a true art: the happening and how you react to its effect.

A quality, a single one, stuck to the most hidden corners of his being, sewn with the finest thread of trust, with his own defense mechanism - a will, gained through pain and spirit of sacrifice, on the least visible part of his identity. While, in its turn turning into a unique set of qualities that will break down, from one end to another about Vincent's existence, everything will get in their way - circumstances or actions. Covering everything, even the deepest abyss of suffering, and the bitterest fears with which he lived.

A man, who will collect until the dawn of the clear days, the most creative energies, of perfection, into a society, which chooses only the human models of quality. A break between the present and the future. A relaxation of spirit, a spectacular renewal of the relationships with himself.

Vincent reached the final where he aimed, where no one would have predicted this. At Gattaca. In the midst of that privileged class, where only the few, the chosen ones, the extraordinary, were allowed to enter.

Good luck, bad luck, fate or coincidence - so many of us judge in our indignation, those spectacular leaps towards impossible of those "Nobody's". They get to prove more important than all, only through the fact that they manage to lead the events, even if they are against them.

Being thrown by destiny into the depths of the largest ocean, to rise up to the surface, holding your breath, moving only your hands and feet. And, above all, to traverse its immense surface, passing through the strongest storms and hurricanes, until the farthest shore. This is called, dear friends, Summam Successus, the real success, the escape from a space of the impossible. This means to be a winner. This means being "Vincent".

Leadership: Do you manage to get over the hypostasis of the image of "No one", rushing at the first moment of receiving the impossible to identify it as a privilege of being "Vincent"?
